TO THE READER.

TO this Fourth and Laſt Volume properly belong, 1. The Paraphraſe and Annotations upon the Pſalms: 2. Upon the Proverbs: 3. The Sermons. Of theſe, the Firſt, and the Laſt (as many as the Author publiſhed) are as he left them, with very ſmall Addition or Alteration, from his Hand: The other Sermons, Printed after his Death, are carefully Corrected. The Second, on the Proverbs, wherein Death permitted the Author to proceed no further than the Tenth Chapter, is now Printed as it was then Tranſcribed for the Preſs, and the greater part Corrected by his own Hand.

The reſt belong to the Second Part of the Second Volume; viz. The Diſſertations concerning Epiſcopacy, now inlarged with many Additions by the Authors own Hand. To which is annexed the Tract De Confirmatione, perfected by the Author, though not Publiſhed till after his Death. Which was thought fit to be intimated, together with the ſeveral Times when the reſt were firſt Publiſhed, in the following Catalogue.

A PREFACE,

Concerning the Duty, Practice, and constant Usage of Psalmody in the Church. The Benefits thereof. The Design of this Work. The Literal and Prophetical Senses. The Helps toward the Indagation of each. The Interpreters, especially the Greek. The Spirit and Affections of Psalmodists.

1.

THE Duty and Benefits of Psalmody, and the many Excellencies of these Divine inspired Books, cannot fitly be set out by any lower Hand than that which first wrote them.

2. For the former of these, we are sufficiently provided from this Treasury, Psal. 33. 1. Praise (this of Psalmody, vers. 2.) is comely for the upright; Psal. 92. 1, 2, 3. It is a good thing to give thanks, to sing praises, to shew forth thy loving kindness and thy faithfulness, upon the Psaltery —— with a solemn sound; 135. 3. Praise the Lord, for the Lord is good; sing praises to his Name, for it is pleasant; 81. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Sing aloud, Take a Psalm, Blow up the Trumpet: For this was a Statute for Israel, and a Law of the God of Jacob: This he ordained in Joseph for a Testimony, when he went out through the Land of Egypt; and very frequently elsewhere. And the sum of the Testimonies is, that as it is the principal thing we know of the Joys of Heaven, that we shall most ardently love and praise God there, and devoutly contend with the holy Angels, his supreme Ministers, in founding forth the adorable Excellencies of our Creator, Redeemer, and Sanctifier; so we are obliged by our holy calling, and our own many great [a] Interests, to take some Antepast of those Cœlestial Joys in this lower Kingdom of Heaven, and to spend no unconsiderable part of our present Lives in this most blessed and holy Imployment, wherein also those Angels which shall then be our Præcentors are here pleased to follow, and attend our Motions, and invisibly to [b] assist in those Quires where they can find meet Company, the Hearts, [c] pure and [d] whole Hearts, [e] the Spirits and inflamed Affections, and [f] Voices of Psalmodists.

3. As

3. As for the latter, it is no otherwiſe to be fetcht from hence than as the Light commends Beauty to every Eye, and as the Matter it ſelf ſpeaketh; this Type of Chriſt, the Pſalmiſt, having tranſcrib'd this part of his Character, that he hath not thought fit to teſtifie of himſelf, any otherwiſe than the works which he did bare witneſs of him. For this therefore we muſt appeal to Foreign Teſtimonies, and therein not ſo much to the diffuſed Panegyricks which have been largely beſtowed on this holy Book by many of the * Antient Fathers of the Church, as to the Offices of all Churches, Jewiſh (nay Mahometane) as well as Chriſtian, and the more private practices of Holy Men in all Ages.

*See Baſil. To. 1. p. 125, 126. 127. and Athanaſ. Ep. ad Marce lin. throughout.

4. For the practice of the Jewiſh Church, we have 1 Chron. 15. 16. where the Levites are appointed to be Singers with Inſtruments of Muſick, Pſalteries and Harps and Cymbals, ſounding, by lifting up the voice with joy; and to record, and to thank and to praiſe the Lord God of Iſrael, chap. 16. 4. And being thus prepared for the office, David delivered this Pſalm to thank the Lord, into the hand of Aſaph and his Brethren, verſ. 7. Give thanks unto the Lord—— in the words of Pſal. 105. 1. And this not only upon an extraordinary occaſion, to ſolemnize the carrying up of the Ark, but to ſtand every morning to thank and praiſe the Lord, and alſo every evening, chap. 23. 30. וּלְכֹל הָעֲלוֹת, &c. and to, or at every offering up (ſo the LXXII. rightly render it, ὁπὶ πάντων τῶν ὁπτοκαυτώσεων, at all that is offered) of burnt-ſacrifices to the Lord in the Sabbaths, in the New-moons and on the feaſt days, verſ. 31. And thereto the recital of their practice accords, Eccluſ. 50. 15, 16, 18. He poured out the ſweet-ſmelling ſavour—— Then ſhouted the Sons of Aaron, and ſounded the Silver Trumpets, and made a great noiſe to be heard for a remembrance. The Singers alſo ſang praiſes with their voices, with great variety of ſounds was there made ſweet Melody. So again 2 Chron. 5. 12. the Levites arrayed in white Linen, having Cymbals and Pſalteries and Harps, ſtood at the Eaſt end of the Altar, and with them an hundred and twenty Prieſts, ſounding with Trumpets. And as the Trumpeters and Singers were as one, to make one ſound to be heard in praiſing and thanking the Lord, and when they lift up their voice with the Trumpets and Cymbals and Inſtruments of Muſick, ſaying, For he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever, in the words of this Pſalmiſt ſo often repeated; then (in token of God's acceptation and approbation) the Houſe was filled with a Cloud, verſ. 13. the Glory of the Lord had filled the Houſe of God, verſ. 14.

5. This old Copy of the Jews is at once tranſcribed, and confirmed, and recommended to all the World, by the ſignal practice of Chriſt himſelf in his great Reformation.

6. Beſide his many incidental Reflections on this Book of Pſalms, to prove his Doctrine, and give account of himſelf; Luk. 20. 42. and 24. 44. Matth. 16. 27. 21. 16. 25. 41. and 26. 23. Joh. 10 34. 15. 25. and 17 12. two ſignal inſtances are recorded for us: the one at the Inſtitution of the Euchariſt, Matth. 26. 30. ὑμνήσαντες ἐξῆλθον, they ſung a Pſalm (cloſed the whole action with a Hymn) and ſo went out.

7. That this their ſinging was the recitation of the Paſchal Hymn, or great Hallelujah, Pſal. 114. and the four ſubſequent, is not expreſt by the Evangeliſt, yet is much more probable than the contrary opinion of thoſe that conceive it was a new Hymn of Chriſt's effuſion, poſſibly the ſame which is recorded Joh. 17. wherein it cannot be believed that the Diſciples had their parts, as the word ὑμνήσαντες muſt conclude they had in the ſinging this Hymn or Hymns. 'Tis evident our Saviour choſe to retein much more of the Jewiſh Cuſtoms than that of the Paſchal Pſalm amounts to.

8. The

8. The other instance was that upon the Cross (being now at the pouring out of his Peace-offering, Matth. 27. 46. About the ninth hour (the hour of Prayer) ἀνεβόησε φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, λέγων, he (lift up his voice, like a Levites Trumpet) resounded with a loud voice, Eli, Eli, Lamma Sabachthani, the expreſs words (in the Syriack reading) of the beginning of the 22 Pſal. How much more of that or of the inſuing Pſalms he recited, the Text advertiſeth us no farther, than that he concluded with the words of the 31. v 5. So St. Luke tells us, Chap. 23. 46. And when Jeſus had cried with a loud voice, (which belongs to the former paſſage) he ſaid, Father, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit: and having ſaid this, he gave up the Ghoſt.

9. Here we ſee our Bleſſed Saviour, that had not the Spirit by meaſure, that ſpake as never man ſpake, choſe yet to conclude his life, to entertain himſelf in his greateſt Agony, and at laſt to breath out his Soul in this Pſalmiſt's form of words rather than in his own. No tongue of Men or Angels can invent a greater ἐγκώμιον, to ſet out the honour of any Writing, or give us more reaſon to lay up in our minds the words of the Martyr † Hippolitus, that in the dayes of Antichriſt, λειτουργία σιωπήσεται, ψαλμῳδία παυθήσεται, ἀνάγνωσις τῶν γεγραμμένων οὐκ ἀναζητήσεται, Liturgy ſhall be extinguiſht, Pſalmody ſhall ceaſe, Reading of the Scriptures ſhall not be heard. In which three as the Publick Service of God was by the ‖ Antients thought to conſiſt; ſo the deſtroying of all and each of them muſt needs be a branch, if not the whole body of Antichriſtianiſme, a direct contradiction to * Chriſt, who, by his own preſcription, or practice of each of theſe, impreſt a Sacred Character on each.

10. The uſe which the Apoſtles of Chriſt are recorded to have made of this Book bears proportion with theſe precedents.

11. In St. Peter's Speech about Judas and his Succeſſor, the directions are taken from hence, Act. 1. 16, 20. In his firſt Sermon to his Countreymen, his proofs are from hence, Act. 11. 25, 31, 34. So again, chap. 4. 11. And upon the delivery of him and John out of the Rulers hands, the whole company celebrate the news of it, chap. 4. 24. firſt in the words of Pſal. 146. 6. then of Pſal. 2. 1, 2. ſo St. Paul in his Preaching, Act. 13. 22, 33, 35. in his Writings, Rom. 3. 4, 10, &c.—8. 36, 10. 18. 11. 9. 15. 3, 9, 11 and oft elſewhere: and ſo in his Sufferings alſo, Act. 16. 25. At midnight (one of the Solemn hours of Prayer and Pſalmody in the Antient Church) Paul and Silas προσηυχόμενοι ὕμνουν τὸν θεὸν, in their office of Prayer uſed an Hymn or Pſalm (one or more) alſo, and recited ſo loud that the priſoners heard; and this again ſignally accepted and rewarded by God with the earth-quake, and opening of the doors, and looſing of their bands, v. 26.

12. The uſe of theſe in the Publick Aſſemblies, as early as the Apoſtles times, is intimated, 1 Cor. 14, 26. but diſtinctly ſet down, 1 Cor. 2. 4. under the ſtyle of Propheſying, every Man praying or propheſying (according to the importance of that phraſe, 1 Chron. 25. Heman and Jeduthun ſhould propheſy with harps, with pſalteries and with cymbals, v. 1. and the ſons of Aſaph propheſied according to the order of the King, v. 2. and the ſons of Jeduthun propheſied with the harp, to give thanks and praiſe the Lord, v. 3.) and in them, as in praying, all joyned, the whole aſſembly, in heart and voice, had all their common intereſt, women as well as men, every woman that prayeth or propheſieth, v. 5. though in other parts of the office they were not allowed to ſpeak, chap. 14. 34. yet

let us exalt his name together, Psal. 34. 3. young men and maidens, Psal. 148. 12. and so still ‖ ἐν πᾶσι ἐκκλησίαις——ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ἑσπέρας——ψάλλειν τοὺς γυναικείους συστήμασι συνεχώρησαν, saith ‖ Isidore Peluſiote, the Apoſtles of Chriſt wiſely permitted that women ſhould Sing Pſalms in the Churches (and he there mentions it as a moſt ſevere puniſhment to be inflicted on them for their miſdemeanours, τῆς ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ ᾠδῆς πένεσθαι, to be interdicted Singing in the Church, with which he joyns τῆς ἐν πόλει μονῆς, the turning them out of the City.)

‖ l. 1. Ep. 90. p. 29. A.

13. Then for the more private uſe of them, St. Paul's preſcriptions are authentick teſtimony: Eph. v. 18, 19. where in oppoſition to the heathen Orgia, of Bacchus's Enthuſiaſts, he directs to ſpeaking to themſelves in Pſalms and Hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, ſinging and making melody in their hearts unto God; and Col. 3, 16. teaching and admoniſhing one another in Pſalms and Hymns and ſpiritual Songs, ſinging with grace in your hearts unto the Lord. And ſo St. James alſo, chap. v. 13. Is any merry, let him ſing Pſalms.

14. How this Exerciſe was frequented in all after-Ages in the Church, and made a very great part of the Chriſtians devotions, both in the publick aſſembly and more privately in the Family, and yet in the greater retirement, in the Cloſet and the waking Bed, we need not ſeek in the Hiſtories of the Aſcetæ and Recluſe, (many of which ſpent their whole time in this imployment, reciting the whole Pſalter daily, others weekly, none paſt an hour of Prayer without a conſiderable portion of it.) The Fathers of the Church aſſure us, that for thoſe that lived ‖ in Seculo, Pſalmody was the conſtant attendant ſometimes of their †Meals, generally of their Buſineſs, in the ſhop and in the field, that they learnt the whole Book by heart, * καὶ διὰ πάσης ἡλικίας διαλεγῆναι ψάλλοντες, and through their whole age continued ſinging, or ſaying Pſalms; that whereas ‖ the cuſtome of the world had taught all to deceive the wearineſs or length of buſineſs by any kind of ſinging, τὰς ψαλμὰς ἐπιτέτυχεν ὁ θεὸς ὥστε ἡμῖν καὶ ἡδονὴν τὸ πρᾶγμα καὶ ὠφέλειαν εἶναι. God had provided them Pſalms for their pleaſure and profit together, that † whilſt they did in appearance but ſing, they ſhould really be inſtructed, and improved in their ſouls.

The conſideration of theſe things, but eſpecially of the common intereſt of all ſorts and ſtates, Ages and Sexes, in this one great * treaſury and magazine, depoſited with the Church for the inriching and ſecuring of Souls, together with one ſadder reflection, which I had rather the Reader ſhould be told from ‖ St. Chryſoſtome, than from me, have oft ſuggeſted, and at length perſwaded me † to make this attempt, to caſt in my Mite to this Treaſury, my Symbolum toward ſo charitable a work, as is the indeavour that every man may be in ſome meaſure able to ſay with * St Paul, ψαλῶ τῷ πνεύματι, ψαλῶ δὲ καὶ τῷ νοΐ. I will ſing, or recite a Pſalm, with the ſpirit, I will do it with the underſtanding alſo.

16. In order to which what is here attempted to be performed, together with the uſes which every pious Chriſtian may think fit to make of it, I am in this place to advertiſe the Reader.

17. For the firſt, The maine, if not only, ſcope of the Paraphraſe and Annotations hath been to extricate and clear the literal importance of each Pſalm, whether that were more general, wherein all men indifferently were concerned, or more particular; and that again either ſuch as concerned the Pſalmiſt only in

in relation to ſome Matter of Fact in the Story of thoſe Times, or ſuch as had a farther and more Divine Aſpect on Chriſt, the Meſſias of the World, who without queſtion is oft predicted in this Book of Pſalms, and either by Chriſt himſelf, or by his inſpired Apoſtles, acknowledged and atteſted to have been ſignally meant, and ſo to have given the World the moſt eminent Completion of thoſe Predictions.

18. Now becauſe the Expounding of Prophecies is no eaſie task, and eſpecially of thoſe Poetick and Prophetick Writings which have had one immediate Senſe, and Completion in ſome other, and becauſe there is but one Infallible Clue to this Labyrinth, the Applications of ſuch places made by Divine Writers in the New Teſtament; I have therefore made uſe of that as oft as it was to be met with, and then advanced with confidence beyond what the Letter, in its firſt or immediate ſenſe, ſuggeſted: But for all other Paſſages, which by ſome kind of Accommodation, or Anagogy, or Figure, or Moral or Spiritual Senſe, were capable of being thus applied either to Chriſt or his Church, I have not frequently choſen to be thus adventurous, both becauſe I knew this was for the moſt part the Product of Phanſy, wherein all Men are willing to reſerve their Liberty, and neither needed to be directed, nor liked to be anticipated; and becauſe I was unwilling to affix any Senſe to Scripture, which I had not ſome degree of aſſurance that the Holy Ghoſt in the inſpired Writer had reſpect unto, who though he may have deſigned whatever the Words are capable of, and ſo may have intended more Senſes than one, yet cannot be proved to have done whatſoever he might have done. And therefore though I blame not the Inlargements of their Spirits, who extend themſelves to Allegorical and Tropological Deſcants, ſo they be founded in the Literal Senſe firſt ſecured; yet this latter was it which I had in my Aim: and I both found and foreſaw a Competent Weight and Number of Difficulties in that, which as I was intent, by Gods Help to overcome; ſo I was not willing to weaken, by diverting any part of my Forces to what was more eaſie, but leſs neceſſary; conſidering eſpecially that this Book of Pſalms brought home thus plainly (and without any deſcant) to every Mans Underſtanding, would be able to yield him an intire Body of neceſſary Theology, in Directions of Life, Fundamentals of Faith, and Incentives and Helps of Devotion, and copious and various Matter of Divine Meditation, which are ſufficient to recommend it to the Readers moſt diligent revolving, to which then thoſe Anagogies are likely to be conſequent of their own accord, as the reſult of a more paſſionate Delight hovering over the more ſolid Intellectual Joy of converſing with God, and inriching his own Soul.

19. For the fetching out of this Primary or Literal Senſe, oft veiled in Poetick Colours, ſometimes more intricated whether by Ellipſes, or Trajections, but moſt frequently made doubtful by the variety of Notions of which the ſame Hebrew Words are capable, my firſt reſort hath been to the Antient Learned Literal Interpreters in many Languages, as they are lately publiſhed, with moſt advantage, by the great Diligence and unwearied Induſtry of my very worthy and learned Friend Dr. Walton.

20. Of theſe I muſt acknowledge the moſt advantageous Directions to have been afforded me by the Chaldee, Greek, and Syriack; for as to the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick, they do ſo cloſely follow, and in a manner render the Greek, that the chief uſe of them hath been, to ſecure us of the antient Reading of the Greek, which being ſometimes corrupted in the Autograph, is to be recovered by help of theſe Tranſcripts.

21. Of theſe three, the Chaldee, which is not ſo literal as the others pretend to be, but owns the liberty of a Paraphraſt, is yet as commodious as any to direct to the literal ſenſe, the very deſign of a Paraphraſt being truly this, to render that fully in more words which an equal number could not ſufficiently expreſs. Yet hath not this made ſo full a proviſion for us, but that all others Aids have ſometimes been little enough to ſtear us through the difficulty.

22. For the Greek, whether it be truly what the Title aſſumes, the tranſlation of the LXXII. i. e. thoſe ſo many Jews in Ptolemæus Philadelphus his time, who were ſent him by the High Prieſt competently inſtructed to perform that Work, I ſhall not take upon me to determine. For as I am no way convinced with the Arguments of thoſe who affirm that thoſe LXXII. tranſlated no more than the Law of Moſes, as that ſtrictly ſignifies but the Pentateuch, (when yet the Title is inlarg'd (in Chriſts ſtyle, John 12. 34. and 15. 25. and S. Pauls, Rom. 3. 19.) to this Book of Pſalms peculiarly, and to the Prophets alſo, 1 Cor. 14. 21. and when the Antienteſt Fathers of the Church, Juſtin Martyr in his Dialogue with Trypho the Jew, † Irenæus, * Clemens Alexandrinus, and ſo forward till S. Hierome, all uniformly produced their Teſtimonies out of the Prophets and Pſalms as well as out of the Pentateuch, upon the Authority of theſe LXXII. Jews which had thus rendred them) or that what they tranſlated, was by the burning of Ptolemies Library, in Julius Ceſar's time, irrecoverably loſt, (when certeinly many Copies of it had been tranſcribed before that time, which met not with that Conflagration:) ſo neither am I obliged by the relation of the Cells, and other Circumſtances (which Juſtin was told in Egypt, over and above what we find in Ariſteas or Joſephus) to conclude their Interpretation a work of Gods peculiar Conduct, and ſo to aſcribe, as ſome great Lights of the Church have done, their Variations from the Hebrew to the ſame Spirit by which the Originals were firſt indited.

* Strom. l. 1.

23. I ſhall only remember on this occaſion, what is obſerved by Jeſus the Son of Sirach, in his Prologue to Eccleſiaſticus; where taking notice of the Interpretation not only of the Law, but of the Prophets and other Books alſo, and in the next words ſetting down the time of his coming into Ægypt, in the eight and thirtieth year under King Euergetes, the immediate Succeſſor of Ptolemæus Philadelphus, (and ſo may probably be underſtood to ſpeak of the LXXII. not long after the compiling their Interpretation) he tells us withall that there was great Differenec betwixt the Original and the Tranſlation. And allowing it to have place in this of the Pſalms, as well as other Books, (though I think as little in this as in moſt other) 'tis yet certain, that great uſe is to be made of it toward the preſent Deſign of interpreting the Original. And in gratitude for the many Benefits thus received, (but eſpecially becauſe this Tranſlation was the means of conveying the Word of God unto the Heathen, was in many Synagogues uſed by the Jews in and before Chriſt's time, as ‖ Juſtine, and † Tertullian and the * Jews themſelves aſſure us, was conſtantly cited and reſorted to by Philo Judæus in his writings, and frequently honoured by the Writers of the New Teſtament, who retein their Rendrings, even where they differ from the Hebrew, and laſtly, hath reteined that honour in the whole antient Church, which univerſally uſed and followed this Tranſlation which we now have, and that without any queſtion but the LXXII. were the Authors of it) I have payed them a more peculiar Reſpect and Conſideration, very often examined their Rendrings more nicely, and propoſed either my own or others Opinions concerning the Cauſes or Grounds of their Variations: which I acknowledge to be more than was neceſſary to the Work in hand, yet deemed it a πάρεργον, by which the Learned Reader would be gratified, and the more Unlearned not conſiderably diſturbed in his purſuit.

but

24. As for the Syriack, that alſo hath been often conducible to my Undertaking, as departing frequently from the LXXII. where there was reaſon for ſo doing, and more ſimply rendring the Original than the Chaldee, as a Paraphraſt, pretended to do.

25. Beſides theſe, I have had the Directions ſometimes of the Jewiſh Scholiaſts, eſpecially Aben Ezra and Kimchi, and ſometimes of the Jewiſh Arab Interpreter, and of Abu Walid and R. Tanchum; which three I wholly owe to the Favour of my moſt Learned Friend Mr. Pocock, who hath thoſe Manuſcript Rarities peculiar to his Library, and hath been forward to communicate them, and, which is more, his own great Judgment in ſeveral Difficulties, when I ſtood in need thereof. And by theſe and other Helps which were more acceſſible, I at length atteined to that meaſure of Underſtanding of this very obſcure Divine Poem, which is here communicated to the Reader by three Steps or Degrees; Firſt, by ſome light change of the Tranſlation; Secondly, by larger Paraphraſe; and, Thirdly to thoſe, that have the curioſity to deſire the Reaſons of theſe, by way of Annotations.

26. And if what is here communicated prove in any proportion ſucceſsful toward the deſigned End, the giving the Reader the plain Underſtanding of this Book, it will then leave behind it a manifold Obligation to make uſe of it to his own greateſt Advantage, not only by ‖ gathering out of the whole, as from a Panacea, thoſe peculiar Medicaments which may fit him in whatſoever Occaſions; but by allotting himſelf every day of his Life a Dimenſum of Heavenly Meditation and Devotion, converſing with God in thoſe † very Words (they need not be refined, or put into Rhythme, to fit them for his turn; the Antients contented themſelves with the plain Proſe, and found it fitteſt for uſe) with which for this common End, the Uſe and Benefit of Mankind, he ſo long ſince inſpired the Pſalmiſt.

27. Till by ſome better Guidance Men have acquired ſome competent Underſtanding of the Book, this Paraphraſe may poſſibly be Uſeful in their retirements to be read Verſe by Verſe, together with the Pſalm, as Interlinears have been provided for Novices in all Languages: But when the Pſalm is underſtood, and the receſſes competently opened, then this deſigned Help will but incumber the inſtructed Chriſtian, and ſo is in duty to be laid aſide, and changed for the indeavour of drawing to himſelf the moſt proper Juice out of every Line, and then inlarging his Thoughts, and inflaming his Zeal on each occaſion that the Periods of the Pſalm ſhall ſeverally ſuggeſt, and the good Spirit of God excite in him, whether in relation to himſelf or others.

28. To which purpoſe it is much to be wiſhed, that they that allot any conſtant part of their time to private Pſalmody, and to that end have, as the Antients prescribed and practised, gotten the Psaltery perfectly by heart, (quilibet vinitor ——— every Tradesman at his Manual Work having by this means the whole time of his Labour a vacancy for his Devotion) would be careful not only to keep their Hearts in strict attendance on their Tongues, that it may not degenerate into Lip-labour, but also to give them a much greater scope of inlargement, to improve these Impresses, to beat out this Gold into Plate and Wire by Reflections, Applications, Soliloquies, and so to fasten these on the Mind with references to the Texts which suggested them, that they may be so many Topicks and Helps of Memory, to bring back the same with all the Advantages that united Devotions shall beget in them, when they recite the same in the publick Offices of the Church.

‖ See Saint Hierome ad Marcellam Ep. 18. & ad Lætam Ep. 4. 7.

29. I have heard of some Pious Men, which have constantly compleated the whole Work of their private Prayers by inlarging their Meditations on the several Petitions of the Lords Prayer; the profit whereof is probably much greater than of the same, or greater, space laid out by others in the multiplied Recitation of the same Divine Prayer. And proportionably, the reciting a few Psalms daily with these Interpunctions of Mental Devotion, suggested and animated and maintained by the native Life and Vigour which is in the Psalms, may deserve much to be preferred before the daily Recitation of the whole Psalter, whereof the Devotions of some Asceticks is said to have consisted. The danger being very obvious, and easily foreseen, that what is beaten out into immoderate length, will lose of the massiness; and nothing more fit to be averted in Religious Offices, than their degenerating into heartless dispirited Recitations.

30. That our Devotions, unto which the Psalter is set to minister, may not be such, we are, 1. To take care that our ‖ Lives bear some conformity with these Patterns; and, 2. Very sollicitously to attend and provide, that the Psalmist's Effusions have the Psalmist's Spirit and Affection to accompany them, that we borrow his Hand and Breath, as well as his Instrument and Ditties. The Antient Fathers of the Church are very pressing on this Subject. Form thy Spirit by the Affection of the Psalm, † saith S. Augustine. If it be the Affection of Love, inkindle that within thy Breast, (that thou mayst not speak against thy Sense and Knowledge and Conscience, when thou sayst, I will love thee, O Lord my strength.) If it be an Affection of Fear, impress that on thy Soul, (and be not thy self an insensible Anvil to such Strokes of Divine Poesie which thou chantest out to others, O consider this ye that forget God, lest he pluck you away, and there be none to deliver you.) If it be an Affection of Desire which the Psalmist in an holy transportation expresseth, let the same breath in thee, accounting, as S. Chrysostome minds thee on Psal. 42. that when thou recitest those words, Like as the Hart desireth the Waterbrooks, so longeth my Soul after thee, O God, thou hast * sealed a Covenant, betrothed and ingaged thy Soul to God, and must never have a coldness or indifferency to him hereafter. If it be the Affection of Gratitude, let thy Soul be lifted up in Praises, come with Affections this way inflamed, sensible of the weight of Mercies of all kinds, Spiritual and Temporal, with all the Inhansements that the seasonable Application thereof to the Extremities of thy Wants can add to thy Preservations, and Pardons, and Joys: or else the reciting the Hallelujahs will be a most ridiculous piece of Pageantry. And so likewise for the petitory part of the

31. And if it be here objected, Firſt, that there be many things in theſe Pſalms which are not agreeable to every mans condition, and ſo cannot at all times be attended with the ſpirit of the reciter, as the Euchariſtical Pſalms are not proper for him that is in diſtreſs, &c. Secondly, that there are many which have no propriety to the ſpirit of any Chriſtian, as thoſe which are ſpent in calling down vengeance on Gods and the Pſalmiſts enemies, Let them be confounded and put to ſhame that ſeek after my ſoul, Pſal. 35. 4. Let them be as chaffe before the wind, and let the Angel of the Lord chaſe them, v. 5. Let deſtruction come upon them at unawares——v. 8. and eſpecially, Pſal 109. allmoſt throughout: the anſwer will not be difficult. To the firſt, 1. that the very objection is a grant that the Pſalms contein devotions proper to the moſt diſtant conditions of all men, and then that which is no way agreeable to my preſent circumſtances, being yet moſt agreeable and accommodate to ſeveral other men, this is but a ſummons to my charity to ſwell above its own banks, and diffuſe it ſelf to the refreſhing and ſupplying of others wants: and ſo this not any defect, but an advantage in the Pſalms, which will never be complained of by thoſe which begin their Forms as our Saviour directed, addreſſing them to the common Father and Redeemer of all men, and deſire not to incloſe benedictions, but take all others into a principal part of their care, and ſo can pray moſt zealouſly for any thing that any other Chriſtian ſtand in needs of. And yet 2. it will be hard to mention any thing which was ever fit for the Pſalmiſt to ſay, which will not have ſome propriety to ‖ every of us, in whatſoever condition. 'Tis certain (as to the particular inſtance) that he that is in the greateſt diſtreſs, hath yet various matter for, and obligations to Thankſgivings, when his very diſtreſs, which ſeems to ſet him at the greateſt diſtance from it, is the moſt peculiar ingagement to it. God's taking all away, bringing to the boiles and dunghill from the eaſe and ſplendor of the Palace, is Job's ſummons to bleſſing the name of the Lord, as well as the memory of his greateſt donatives: and the Pſalmiſt oft aſſures us of the goodneſs and moſt valuable benefits of afflictions, and conſequently teaches us the duty of bleſſing and magnifying our benefactor for the mercy of thoſe wholſome, be they never ſo bitter, ingredients. And the ſame will be found applicable to all other affections of the Pſalmiſt, which will ſeldome miſs to meet ſeaſonable matter to work on in any mans breaſt, which wants not devotion to diſcern and bring it home to him.

32. To the ſecond Objection I ſhall not need accommodate any other anſwer, than the Reader will find allready given in the Margin and Paraphraſe and Annotation on Pſal. 35. 4. and other the like, that the Hebrew is as capable of the Future as the Imperatiue mood and ſenſe, and ſo the Tranſlation in all reaſon to be changed, יֵבֹשׁוּ —— not, let them be confounded and put to ſhame, but they ſhall bluſh and be aſhamed, they ſhall be turned back, וְיָחְפְּרוּ they ſhall be as chaffe before the wind, and the Angel of the Lord ſhall chaſe them, Their way יְהִי ſhall be dark and ſlippery, and the Angel of the Lord ſhall perſecute them, Deſtruction ſhall come upon him unawares, and his net that he hath hid ſhall catch himſelf, into that very deſtruction ſhall he fall. That David who was a Prophet inſpired by God with knowledge of future events, ſhould thus rather predict and denounce Gods juſt judgments on obſtinate ſinners, and that out of deſigns purely charitative, by denouncing to work repentance, that repentance might fruſtrate and cancel the denunciation, is much more reaſonable for us to reſolve, than that in the ſpirit (when poſſibly without the power) of Elias he ſhould ſo frequently call for thunder from heaven either upon his own or Gods enemies. And in many places, particularly that of Pſal. 109. 'tis reaſonable to reſolve, that it is Chriſt himſelf that ſpeaketh in the Prophet, as being the perſon there principally concerned, and the completion moſt ſignal in many circumſtances there mentioned, the ſucceſſion eſpecially of Matthias in his Apoſtolical and Epiſcopal office. And then there remains no more queſtion or difficulty, how theſe and the like paſſages are to be accommodated to the Chriſtians affection and ſpirit, than how the plain denunciations of the Goſpel are to be entertained by it, Except ye repent ye ſhall periſh: Indignation and anger and wrath upon every ſoul that doth ill: Our God is a conſuming fire: There remains no more ſacrifice for ſin, but a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which ſhall conſume the adverſary: and many the like, which are to be admitted into the very bowels of the Soul, there to perform their work of Melting Contrition, Mortification and Reformation, to bruiſe the Soul and diſſolve it, and purge all the droſs out of it, and ſo refine and prepare it for the uſes of Holineſs. 'Tis ordinarily ſaid, that the Jews were a typical people, the whole divine œconomy toward them is doctrinal and inſtructive to us, not immediately or literally, but by way of Anagogy; the ſeverity required of them toward the Canaanites, is to be tranſcribed by us no other way than by our diſpleaſure and revenges on our Luſts and Sins, ſins, the greateſt enemies either of God or us. And thus our zeal and indignation may be ſeaſonably laid out, yea and our Anathemas (if we ſtill continue them in that form) our ſolemn delivering them up to God's diſpleaſure, judgment and executions, without pleading their cauſe, or ſolliciting any reprieve for them.

33. If again it be objected, That many affections of the Pſalmiſt are much more divinely elevated than 'tis imaginable our dull earthy hearts ſhould keep pace with them, That the Beatitudes belong to thoſe which are much higher advanced than we are, That the profeſſions of love are exuberant, and but reproaches of our lukewarmneſs, not paterns of forms for it: I anſwer, That 'tis moſt true that theſe divine flames are much above the common pitch, and were not meant ſo to our uſe, as to flatter us that we are, or may lawfully aſſume to be ſuch as David was, or as he by theſe pourtraitures deſired we ſhould be. Yet are there other proper advantages to be made of theſe. They that recite the Beatitudes, are to do it with the ſincerity of honeſt hearts, aſpiring to that pitch, and begging God's grace and aſſiſtance to advance them to ſome meaſure of all thoſe practices to which thoſe Beatitudes are pronounced: they that take into their mouths David's forms of profeſſions of love, or faith, or zeal, or reſolute adherence and obedience to God, are thereby to reproach and excite their own defects, to humble themſelves before God, that they cannot pronounce them ſo vigorouſly as they ought, and to pray for that growth and ſpiritual proficiency, that at their next approaches to that part of the office they may performe it with more ſavour, and profeſs with more truth what the Pſalmiſt calls us and teaches us to profeſs.

34. Laſtly, for the ſweetneſs of Gods Law, which is ſo oft proclaimed in theſe Books, the gratiouſneſs of Gods precepts, not only of the promiſes annext to them by way of future reward, but the reſultance of preſent joy and gratefulneſs and agreeableneſs, which diſcovers it ſelf in every part of our obedience to Gods Yoke, more to be prized than gold, yea than much fine gold, ſweeter alſo than honey and the honey-combe, and ſuch as when it is tried to the uttermoſt, the ſervant of the Lord not only willingly ſupports, but unfeignedly loves it; If we are not cordially able to joyn with the Pſalmiſt in theſe and the like expreſſions, then, as we need not be told 'tis for want of the like temper and frame of mind which he had, ſo we muſt hereby be directed, firſt to cure our appetites, and then to taſte and ſee, as the Pſalmiſt adviſes, ſolemnly to make our trials, to gain this part of Chriſtian experience, which is not to be had but in a conſtant ſerious practice of all God's wayes; and then we ſhall not faile to ſee and diſcern how gracious the Lord is, and that there is not any ſuch probable way to the bleſſedneſs even of this life, as that of adhering and keeping faſt to his precepts and directions, in oppoſition and defiance, and abhorrence to all the falſe wiſdom and promiſes of the World.

35. I ſhall not now farther inlarge this περιπλαυν, by inquiring, as I had thought, into the Meaſures and Muſick of this Divine Poeſy. Of which, as it is not eaſie to make any exact diſcoveries; ſo ſome imperfect obſervations, which are the utmoſt I can aſpire to, will not be ſufficient to excuſe the confidence of entring on a diſquiſition which no others have adventured to trace before me, nor found themſelves invited to it, either by the Helps which remain in this kind, or the Profit that probably were to be reaped by it. The only adviſe, with which I ſhall conclude, is, That in general we remember, that the whole Book is originally metrical, and ſo deſigned to conſort and united affections, and therefore ought to be diſtinguiſht, and have its uſe ſeparate from other Scriptures which are read in our preſence, and accordingly we ſit and hearken to them, and indeavour to remember them, and apply them to the increaſe of our ſpiritual knowledge; whereas this, as all the Hymns of the Church, belongs to the whole Aſſembly of both Sexes, not as to Auditors, but to Actors: and therefore in this part of the Publick Service, whether ſaying or ſinging of Pſalms, every perſon of the Congregation is to preſerve his intereſt, with his voice and heart joyning in all, or at leaſt by maintaining his right to all by interpoſing in every other verſe, by way of Reſponſe and alternation. Which that it was the Primitive cuſtom, if we wanted other evidences, the Epiſtle of ‖ Plinie to Trajane would competently aſſure us, where he tells him of the cuſtom of the Chriſtians in their cœtus, Carmen Chriſto, tanquam Deo, dicere ſecum invicem, to ſay one with another by turns a verſe, i. e. a Pſalm or Hymne, to Chriſt, as unto God. Which cuſtome (together with the reverend poſture of ſtanding aſſigned to this office of Pſalmody, and the Doxology at the end of every Pſalm, to teſtify what Pliny diſcovered, that we ſay our Pſalms to Chriſt as to God) upon what deliberations or deſigns it hath been indeavoured to be laid aſide, and the Pſalms, whilſt they are but in Proſe, barely read in the common mode of other Scriptures, and the people denied their parts in them (ſave when they are ſung in very ill Metre) I liſt not to conjecture; but ſhall hope, when we have attained any part of the Pſalmiſts affections, to fit us for the office, it will be thought as fit for our Lips and Hearts, as for our Ears, to turn Pſalmodiſts.

THE

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

BOOK of Psalms.] The Hebrew תְּהִלִּים from הָלַל which in Piel ſignifies to praiſe, or celebrate, or deprædicate, doth import no more, than hymnes or lauds, accordingly the ſinging them is Mat. xxvi. 30. expreſt by ὑμνήσαντες, having ſung an hymn. But being, as they generally were, ſet to be Sung to Muſical Inſtruments (ſee Pſal. cl.) i. e. Sung and Play'd together, which is the notion of ψάλλειν (ψαλτὴς, κιθαρισὴς, ſaith Heſychius, and ψαλτήριον a Pſalterie, was, we know, a Muſical Inſtrument, and ψηλαάσειν and ψάλλειν are in the antient Gloſſaries rendred ψηλαφᾶν and κινεῖν gently to touch, and move, as the Muſician touches the Lute or Harp) therefore the lxxii have not unfitly rendred it ψαλμοὶ, and thence the Latine and we Pſalmi, Pſalms, and the Syriack, ܡܙܡܘܪ̈ܐ from זָמַר to modulate either with voice or inſtrument, to Sing or Play; and this Title is made uſe of by St. Luke in the New Teſtament, Luke 20.42. βίβλος ψαλμῶν, the Book of Pſalms. The lxxii now read not the word βίβλος Book, but either ſimply ψαλμοὶ Pſalms, or ψαλτήριον Pſalterie (which yet properly ſignifies the Inſtrument to which the Pſalms were Sung, ſometimes called נֵבֶל, from whence the Latine nablium, ſometimes עָשׂוֹר a decachord, or inſtrument of ten ſtrings) but the Syriack as well as the Hebrew reteining that title, סֵפֶר תְּהִלִּים and ܣܦܪ ܡܙܡܘܪ̈ܐ Book of Pſalms, and St. Luke citing in that ſtyle, there is little reaſon to doubt, but this was the antient Greek inſcription of it. But this without queſtion prefixt here by † Eſdras, or whoſoever elſe it was, that made this Collection of divine Hymns. For it is ſure that all theſe Pſalms are not the fruit or product of one inſpired brain. David indeed was the Compoſer of many, if not moſt of them, who is therefore called the ſweet Pſalmiſt of Iſrael, נְעִים זְמִרוֹת, ſweet in Pſalms, or the Compoſer of ſuch ſweet melodies, by whom the Spirit of the Lord ſpake, and his word was in his tongue. 11 Sam. xxiii. 1, 2. that Man very highly valued, and advanced by God, a King, and the ſource of the Jewiſh Monarchy, as it was to ſpring from the Tribe of Judah, and withall a Prophet by God inſpired (and accordingly as theſe Pſalms contain many ſignal predictions of the Meſſias, who was to ſpring from Davids loyns, and ſo of Gods dealings under the Goſpel both with his faithful ſervants, and obſtinate enemies, ſo in the Syriack inſcription of them, to the Hebrew Title, the Book of Pſalms, is added ܕܕ̈ܘܝ ܡܠܟܐ ܘܢܒܝܐ of David the King and Prophet.) Unto other his Titles, * St. Auſtin, from the authority of 11 Sam. xxiii. 2. adds, Vir in Canticis eruditus, qui harmoniam Muſicam non vulgari voluptate ſed fidei voluntate dilexerat, that he was eminently ſkilled in Canticles, as one that loved Muſical Harmony with the will of Faith (thereby to glorifie his Creator and Redeemer) and not from any ſenſual pleaſure, ſuch as Men vulgarly take in Muſick. So * St. Hierome alſo, David Simonides noſter, Pindarus, & Alcæus, Flaccus quoque, Catullus, & Serenus, Chriſtum lyra perſonat, & decachordo Pſalterio ab inferis ſuſcitat reſurgentem. Simonides, Pindar, and Alcæus among the Greeks, and Horace, and Catullus, and Serenus among the Latines, were famous for their Odes or Poetick Songs, but David to us ſupplies abundantly the place of all them, ſounds Chriſt upon the Harp, and with the ten-ſtringed Pſaltery praiſeth or celebrates his riſing from Hades. But the moſt illuſtrious title of this Pſalmiſt is, that he was the Father of that line from whence our Saviour Chriſt ſprang, and ſo was fitted above any other, by being the firſt King of that Line, to be, in a ſignal manner, a type of him. But beſide David, ſome others there were, who compoſed ſome of theſe Pſalms; of Moſes there can be no queſtion, the title as well as matter of the ninetieth Pſalm aſſuring us it was written by him. For Aſaph alſo there is ſome probability, when of Hezekiah we read, that he commanded the Levites to ſing praiſe unto the Lord with the words of David, and of Aſaph the Seer, 2 Chron. 29. 30. where Aſaph is ſet down to be, as a Prophet, ſo a Pſalmiſt alſo, and joyned with David as ſuch; and agreeably the fiftieth

* De Civ. Dei l. 17. c. 14.

* Ad Paulin.

לְאָסָף Psalm inscribed לְאָסָף to Asaph, is by the Chaldee affirmed to be עַל יְדוי דְאָסָף by the hand of Asaph, and so some others also. And although ל being a note of the dative case, may possibly signifie no more than that the Psalm was committed to him, as to a singer, or player on instruments, as Psalms are frequently inscribed לַמְנַצֵּחַ to the Prefect of his Musick, and then the Chaldee עַל יְדוי may also refer to that, according to that of 1 Chron. xvi. 7. where David delivered the CV Psalm into the hand of Asaph and his Brethren, (and so 'tis evident the thirty ninth Psalm which is expresst to be Davids, is yet inscribed לִידוּתוּן to Jeduthun, who as well as Asaph is called the Kings Seer, 11 Chron. xxxv. 15.) yet when 'tis remembred, that this is the form of inscribing Davids Psalms, לְדָוִד (ל being there taken for of, not to) and that of the several Psalms, cv. xcvi. cvi. which are in part recited, 1 Chron. xvi. 8, &c. 29, &c. 34, 35, 36, 37. and said to have been delivered into the hand of Asaph, not one of them is now inscribed לְאָסָף, it still remains probable from the force of 11 Chron. xxix. 30. that לְאָסָף denotes Asaph the Composer or Author of those Psalms. As for the others, which are found named in the titles of the Psalms, the sons of Coreh, Eman, Ethan, Jeduthun, it cannot be concluded, that those Psalms were composed by them, it being more probable, that they were to be Sung by them, as of the sons of Coreh seems clear, or that it is upon some other account, that their names are there mentioned, of which something shall be said, when we come to those Psalms. Of some other Psalms there is little doubt, but they were composed long after David, some in time of the Captivity (particularly Psal. cxxxvii. which mentions their sitting by the waters of Babylon) and some at, and after their return, (to which purpose the Syriack understands all the Psalms הַמַּעֲלוֹת of degrees, i. e. of ascending from Babylon) the Authors of which being not specified, there is no ground for any conjecture in that matter.

Of other Mens various opinions concerning the Authors of the Psalms, the Reader may resort to Sixtus Senensis on the one side, who from the authority of Athanasius and Cyprian, &c. ascribes but seventy three to David, those which have his name in their Title, and the rest to Moses, Solomon, Asaph, Ethan, Eman, Jeduthun, and three sons of Coreh; and to Jacobus Peres, who from Origen, Ambrose, Augustine, Hilarie, Cassiodore, makes David the sole author of them all. Of which also see Ludovicus Vives on St. Augustine de Civit. Dei l. xvii. c. 14. Between these two extremes, the middle opinion seems to me most probable, upon the grounds which are here premised, and upon several prejudices, which lie against each extreme, which I shall not here inlarge to insert; but only add, that if there were any (as [a] St. Augustine saith there were) which would allow David to be the Author of none of those Psalms, which were inscribed ipsi David in the dative case, they of all others were most worthy refuting, there being no other form of mentioning David in any of the Psalms, but that of לְדָוִד, which is by the Latine indifferently rendred, sometimes Psalmus David, sometimes ipsi David, who yet sure, if we will believe our Saviour, Luk. xx. 42. was the Author of some of them.

Of this סֵפֶר תְּהִלִּים book of Psalms, there is, among some of the Hebrews, a division into five parts, every of which is called סֵפֶר also, ספר שני, the second book, beginning at Psal. xlii. ספר שלישי: the third Book, beginning at Psal. lxxiii. ספר רביעי: the fourth book beginning at Psal. xc. ספר חמישי the fifth book beginning at Psal. cvii. and every of these five solemnly concluding with some special form of Praising God, Amen and Amen, the three former, Amen Hallelu-jah, the fourth, every thing that hath breath Hallelu-jah, praise the Lord, the last. How antient this division is appears no otherwise, than that it is observed in the Syriack Translation, ܬܘܒ ܫܒܘܥܐ ܒܐܙܡ the second book follows, and so in the rest, but neither in the Chaldee nor lxxii. And the New-Testament, which useth those other forms of citation, the book of Psalms, Luk. xx. 42. Act. i. 20. the Psalms, Luk. xxiv. 44. taking notice also of the more minute division into several Psalms, the second Psalm, Act. xiii. 33. and another Psalm v. 35. doth not acknowledge this partition. Of which also it is St. Hilaries affirmation, that it was received but of some of the Jewish Writers. Aliqui Hebræorum eos in quinque libros divisos volunt esse, some of the Hebrews will have them divided into Five Books, Others, it seems, not so dividing them. Of these Books, see Note on Psal. xl. 6.

In that lesser division (introduced, saith [b] Hilary, by the lxxii. and owned by St. Luke in the New-Testament) into the first, second, and other Psalms, some variety also there is, the ninth and tenth Psalms, which are several in the Hebrew and Chaldee, and Syriack, being united and conjoyned, in the Translation, at least the copies which we now have of the lxxii. and so in the Latine and Arabick and Æthiopick, which follow the lxxii. And so from that tenth Psalm forward, the numbers differ, the eleventh in the Hebrew being but the tenth in the Greek, &c. and so in the rest to Psal. cxlvii. which being by the lxxii divided into two, their cxlvi. and cxlvii. (the latter of which begins at v. 12. Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem, and is [c] now in our Copies inscribed, as some others, ἀλληλούια Ἀγγαίου καὶ Ζαχαρίου, Haggae's and Zacharies Allelujah) by this means the number of cl. is compleated by the lxxii. and those that follow them; as also by the Syriack, who though they joyn not the tenth to the ninth Psalm, yet unite cxiv. and cxv. and so would come short of the number also, if they did not, with the lxxii. divide the cxlvii. After the number of cl. thus made up, some Greek Copies have xii more, but the Syriack sets this mark upon them, there are some who have added xii others, ܠܐ ܡܫܬܟܚܝܢ ܠܗܘܢ we want them not; yet sets down the first of them, as being inscribed to David, and written as in his person, ὅτε ἐμονομάχησε τῷ Γολιάθ, when he entred the lists with Goliah: But this is acknowledged by the Greek inscription (ἔξω τοῦ ἀριθμοῦ) to be without the number, not at all taken notice of by the Latine; (probably the addition of some Greek) and so comes not into our present consideration.

[c] Nihil horum in authenticis lxxii. Translatum libris ita editum reperitur. Hil. Prol. in Psal. p. 332.

Other divisions there are of the Psalms, as into Pœnitential, and Eucharistical, but all will not be comprised under this, or the like divisions. The Syriack take notice, in their Postscript to the Psalms, as of the number of the cl. Psalms, and five books, so of the fifteen Psalms of degrees, and sixty Lauds. Of which somewhat will be said in their proper places.

THE FIRST PSALM.

The ſubject of this firſt Pſalm of the firſt partition, is the diſtant fate of pious and godleſs men, both in this, and the next life.

|| hath not walked לֹא הָלַךְ † ſtood עָמַד * ſate יָשַׁב || Or aſſembly.

1. BLeſſed is the man that || walketh not in the [a] counſel of the ungodly, nor † ſtandeth in the way of ſinners, nor * ſitteth in [b] the || ſeat of the ſcornful.

Paraphraſe.

1. He that aſpireth to any degree of felicity either in this life, or in another, muſt moſt circumſpectly guard himſelf (and by conſtant fervent prayer implore Gods aids) that he be not gained by any example, or invitation of the wicked men of the world, to joyn with them in any forbidden enterprize: Or if he have been thus inſnared, and ſeduced into the beginning of any ſuch courſe, then his ſecond care muſt be, that he abide not one minute in that ſtate of Rebellion, and danger, (wherein the longer he continues, the more he grieves, and repels the holy Spirit of God, and makes his return the more difficult) but by true contrition, and confeſſion, and vow'd amendment, make his ſpeedy return unto God, and ſue out his timely pardon. Or if he have omitted this duty alſo, and continued ſome time in this unhappy courſe, yet at leaſt let him beware that he advance not to ſo high a degree of impiety, as either to deſpiſe the terrors of the Lord, and the chaſtiſements, which he ſends to awake, and amend men, or the Rebukes and Cenſures of Superiours, or the fraternal admonitions of Equals; eſpecially, that he ſpeak not peace to his own ſoul, preſume not of any mercy from God, whilſt he continues in this ſtate, or of more efficacious grace from him, to fetch him out of it; Above all, that he do not aſſociate himſelf with thoſe, which do profeſſly all theſe; For all and every of them are ſo many ways of Atheiſtical mocking of God, and contempt of all goodneſs, and the higheſt degrees of provocation, which muſt expect their doom from God, forſaking and obduration here, and eternal irremediable torments hereafter. (Thus much for the Negative.)

[a] [b]

2. But his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night.

2. And not only ſo, but then alſo (poſitively) he muſt apply himſelf to a moſt ſerious ſtudy and conſideration of the whole law of God, and every ſingle precept thereof, and that in order to a ſincere uniform impartial obedience to it; nay, he muſt advance to a delight in it, diſcerning a moſt ſolid pleaſure, and ſatisfaction in the practice of all holy duties, (of piety, and charity, and ſobriety) and an emptineſs and loathſomeneſs (at leaſt comparatively with thoſe) in all the falſe joys, that wicked men are ſo tranſported with, and upon theſe accounts (both that he may exactly know his duty, in every part of it, and have this pleaſurable taſte of it) he muſt both ſtudy, and practiſe it continually, make theſe two the great deſigns of his whole life.

|| diviſions † yieldeth יִתֵּן * fall || bringeth forth

3. And he ſhall be like a tree planted by the [c] || rivers of water, that † bringeth forth his fruit in his ſeaſon, his leaf alſo ſhall not [d] * wither, and whatſoever he || doth, ſhall proſper.

3. He that doth thus, ſhall flouriſh in the Church of God, after the manner that a tree flouriſheth, that hath the advantage of water brought near it in trenches, to refreſh it in time of drought; For thus ſhall the Spirit of God, promiſed to all ſuch, aſſiſt and enable him to bring forth abundant fruit, and accordingly being thus enabled by this divine ſtrength, he will, upon all opportunities, multiply acts of all divine virtues. And even for outward things, which are not of the eſſence of true felicity, (for ſuch only are exerciſes of virtue, our preſcribed way to a durable felicity) but yet are, here in this world, advantageous acceſſions and accompliſhments thereof, bearing the ſame proportion to the other, that leaves do to fruit, (as leaves accompany, and adorn, and cover the fruits, and withal defend them from heat and cold, and help to the ripening of them, ſo theſe outward acceſſions are many ways uſeful to the exerciſes of virtues.) Theſe alſo ſhall in an eminent manner be preſerved to the pious man. (Godlineſs hath the promiſe of this life, 1 Tim. iv. 8.) he ſhall have them richly to enjoy, 1 Tim. vi. 17. i. e. firſt they ſhall yield him a plentiful contentment and ſatisfaction, 1 Tim. vi. 6. and ſecondly, he ſhall never fail to have ſuch a portion of them ſecured to him, as is perfectly fitteſt for his turn: And in a word, all his productions of all ſorts, his thoughts, his reſolutions, his actions, as well as his external acceſſions, proportionable to the buds, and bloſſoms, and fruit, and not only leaves of the moſt flouriſhing tree, all wherein he is concern'd, ſhall by God's ſpecial bleſſing providence, continually watching over him, be exceedingly ſucceſsful to him.

4. The ungodly are not ſo, but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

4. As for the wicked, they muſt expect a far diſtant fate, who being compared to the godly, are ſo far from being like a well rooted and flouriſhing tree, that as huſks, and ſtraw, and chaff, the moſt refuſe adherents unto fruit, they are unſetled and obnoxious to every blaſt, or in themſelves very empty and unprofitable, and accordingly ſhall be dealt with by God; When a day of winnowing comes, (ſuch are all Gods ſeaſons of judgment, Mat. iii. 12.) then ſhall the ſeparation be made, and their condition be very unlike one to the other; The ſolid fruit we know, abides, but the chaff, and huſks, and duſt is carried away with the wind, Pſal. lxxxii. 13. Job xxi. 18. Iſai. xli. 16. And that is not all, for then, as to combuſtible matter, (good for little elſe) the fire attends that winnowing, and burns up all the traſh, Iſai. v. 44. Pſal. lxxxiii. 14. devours and conſumes it utterly, (which the Greek, and Arabick, and Æthiopick, and vulgar Latine expreſs by adding [from the face of the earth.] And ſo it is with the wicked, when God's judgments come, they violently ſeize on them, helpleſs and comfortleſs, and hurry them hence into a place of endleſs miſery, where the worm never dies, and the fire is not quenched.

5. Therefore the ungodly ſhall not ſtand in the judgment, nor ſinners in the [f] congregation of the righteous.

5. When therefore that final doom comes, which ſhall repeal all the unequal judgments of this life, and repair them abundantly, who have here ſuffered cauſeleſly, when all both good and evil ſhall appear before that dreadful Tribunal, to receive the rewards of all their doings, theſe unhappy Miſcreants ſhall not be

be able to abide the trial, ſhall have nothing to plead for themſelves, their Conſcience ſhall accuſe, and (as being ſelf-condemned) drag them with ſhame and horrour to the place of their execution; or if they ſhall pretend to make any plea, they ſhall certainly miſcarry, and be caſt. The judgments of God, as of him that ſees the moſt ſecret receſſes of the very heart, bringing with him alſo an aſſembly of myriads of holy Angels and glorified Saints, who are able to teſtifie and convince any gainſayer, are managed with that ſeverity of uprightneſs, that there is no hope of eſcaping that vengeance which is juſtly due to them for their impious courſe. They muſt have falſe and partial Judges, from whom to expect abſolution or favour, but this being a moſt pure and juſt Tribunal, they are ſure to meet with neither, or they ſhall have a far diſtant fate from that which belongs to the righteous.

6. For the Lord ſees and beholds with mercy, and, according to the gracious tenour of the Evangelical Covenant, approves, and finally rewards all the good purpoſes and performances of the godly, his humble, obedient, penitent, faithful ſervants; but for others, ſuch as go on impenitently and unreformed, on whom all his wiſe, and compaſſionate, and powerful methods have yet wrought no change, they ſhall all be ſeverely adjudged by him. The courſe of ſin wherein now they go on preſumptuouſly and obſtinately, doth at the preſent moſt directly tend, and ſhall at the laſt moſt certainly bring them to eternal irremediable deſtruction. And all his long-ſuffering and abundant mercy ſhall not then ſtand them in any ſtead, to put off, or abate their torments.

6. For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous; but the way of the ungodly ſhall periſh.

Annotations on Pſal. I.

a. עֵצָה

V. 1. Counſel] The Hebrew עֵצָה from יָעַץ conſuluit, adviſing, or asking counſel, vulgarly ſignifies the reſult of the Conſultation, the way, whether good or bad, which is taken up on that deliberation, and agreeably the Syriack renders it here ܐܘܪܚܐ the way, the Arabick, the Sentence, or reſolution, or determination, conſequent to the conſultation. In this notion we find it Pſal. xiv. 6. The counſel of the poor, i. e. the way, and courſe (viz. of piety) which he adheres to; and Pſal. cvi. 13. Gods counſel is to be interpreted by [his works] preceding in that Verſe, viz. that which he purpoſed to do for them, (as Pſal. cvii. 11. it muſt receive its ſignification from the context, which mentions not works, but words there, and ſo notes the precepts or commands of God) and accordingly this ſame word is once rendred ἔργον, Work, Job xxi. 16. and once ὁδοποίημα way, or courſe of life, which any man takes to, good or bad, Pſal. lxxxi. 12. And ſo it muſt needs ſignifie here, that [יָהַלְךְ walking] may agree with it, which noteth the following or going on in any courſe, that others have traced before us.

b. מוֹשָׁב

V. 1. Seat] Hebrew מוֹשָׁב from יָשַׁב ſedit, literally denotes ſitting, and ſo muſt be rendred, 1 King. x. 5. and 2 Chron. ix. 4. the ſitting of his ſervants, and Pſal. cxxxix. 2. my down-ſitting, and ſo Lam. iii. 63. where yet the Greek have καθέδρας, ſeat, or chair, or place of ſitting, as here, and in moſt other places. And if that be the acception of the word here, then it notes the quiet repoſe, and ſecurity, and preſumption of the ſinner, without any regrets or diſturbances in his courſe, or yet further, as a chair is a ſeat of dignity in a School, or Synagogue, or Sanhedrim, a teaching or inſtructing of others in the courſe, as a Doctor or Profeſſor of impiety. Beſide this, it ſignifies alſo an aſſembly or conſeſſus, ſo called, becauſe many meeting together in conſultation, the poſture of ſitting is there generally uſed, as moſt commodious. So Pſal. cvii. 32. we fitly render it, the aſſembly of the Elders. And thus the interlinear here read in conſeſſu, in the aſſembly, and the Chaldee Paraphraſe בְּסִיעַת in the ſociety or congregation, (for ſo that Noun ſignifies among them, and is by * ſome Learned men thought to ſignifie in that one place, where it is uſed in the Bible, Pſal. lv. 9. רוּחַ סַעֲרָה ventus congregationis, a whirlwind, or aſſociated wind) and then it muſt note aſſociating with this ſort of Atheiſtical Scoffers, and ſo the Arabick evidently underſtood it, rendring it (without any mention of chair or ſeat) and hath not ſate with the ſcorners. Theſe two ſenſes of the word having ſo reaſonable pretenſions to it, I have therefore retained both of them in the Paraphraſe, thereby to ſecure the Reader of the full importance of it.

* See Schindler Pentagl. p. 1205. c. רוּחַ סַעֲרָה

c. פַּלְגֵי

V. 3. Rivers] פַּלְגֵי from פָּלַג diviſit, literally ſignifies diviſions, and may refer to the cuſtoms of conveying water to orchards or gardens. A mention of it we have in Deut. xi. 10. where of the land of Ægypt, 'tis ſaid, Thou watereds't it with thy foot as a garden of herbs: where the vulgar reads, by way of Paraphraſe, in hortorum morem, aquæ ducuntur irriguæ, after the manner of Gardens (the Syriack adds, which want watering) the waters are lead or brought to water it, or literally, by thy foot, i. e. by digging (the work of the foot) thou broughteſt water in trenches for the watering of it. For thus in Ægypt, where they wanted rain, they did to all quarters diſtribute the overflowings of Nilus, by cutting of trenches or ditches, called commata, and diacopi, (ſaith * Hieron. Magius) i. e. cuts or diviſions here. To this cuſtom and uſe of the word פַּלְגֵי we have a reference Prov. xxi. 1. The Kings heart is in the hands of the Lord, we read as the rivers of waters, the interlinear hath pelagi, the Hebrew פַּלְגֵי retained (giving us farther to obſerve, that the Greek and Latine Πέλαγος and Pelagus uſed for the Sea, hath this origination) the LXXII have ῥεύμαι ſtreams, but the vulgar literally diviſions, diviſions of waters, i. e. as the waters that the Gardiners bring by cutts either from ſprings or rivers to their gardens, are by them lead at pleaſure, backward or forward, this way or that way, diverted, or ſtopt, or applied in a greater or leſs plenty to this or that tree, as they direct it, ſo is the heart of the King in Gods diſpoſal, and accordingly it follows, he turneth it whither he will. And this acceptation of the word is moſt commodious for this place alſo, ſpeaking of a fruit tree that flouriſheth exceedingly, for ſuch are ſaid to be planted in a watered garden, Iſai. lviii. 11. and ſo are fat, as there it is ſaid, likely to become very fruitful by that means. And to that incline the LXXII reading διεξόδους, and the Arabick, and Æthiopick, and Vulgar Latine, all to the ſame ſenſe, decurſus, the paſſages, or runnings along of the waters.

* Miſcel. l. 1. c. 10.

d. יִבּוֹל

V. 3. Wither] יִבּוֹל from נָבַל aruit, growing dry or withering, may literally thus be rendred: But almoſt all the ancient Interpreters and Paraphraſts render it by the notion of falling, the Targum (and ſo the Syriack) לָא נָחֲרִין ſhall not fall, and ſo Iſai. i. 30. xxxiv. 4. xl. 7. and the interlinear, non decidet, the vulgar, non defluunt, the LXXII οὐκ ἀποῤῥυήσεται, all ſo concordant in the ſame ſenſe of falling, that learned men think they either read or had an eye to נָפַל cecidit. But the deciſion is more clear from the the Vulgar metonymy, of the cauſe or antecedent, being ſet to note the effect or conſequent alſo, for by this figure the falling of leaves being being naturally consequent to the withering or flagging of them, the verb נָבַל that signifies withering, may fitly signifie that, and be used for falling also, and so most probably here, where לֹא יִבּוֹל shall not wither, is set metaphorically to signifie the continuance of all outward accomplishments to the pious man; their neither losing their sap and verdure, nor yet falling from him; the former notes his contentment, while he enjoys them, the latter Gods defence to secure him in the quiet enjoyment of them; as when the meek have the promise to possess the earth, and they that honour their parents to have long life in a Canaan; which though it must always be understood cum mixturâ crucis, especially now under the Gospel, (or else there could be no place left for martyrdom, or for the exercising the most eminent of Christs precepts) yet in general speaking, the promise doth most fitly belong to, and is frequently repeated for the encouragement of all godly men: That they shall have an antepast of the goodness of God, a comfortable enjoyment (which consists more in a competency, than in the greatest load) of the good things of this life, whilst on the ungodly he rains snares, fire, and brimstone, a sad portion for them to drink, or enjoy here, though there were never an arrear behind of eternal hell.

e. עָשָׂה V. 3. Doth] Of the word עָשָׂה fecit, it may deserve to be noted, that as it belongs to several things, so particularly it is applied to trees, producing or bringing forth fruit, Isai. v. 4. I looked that it should bring forth, לַעֲשׂוֹת grapes, וַיַּעַשׂ and it brought forth wild grapes. So Isai. xxxvii. 31. וְעָשְׂתָה and it shall bear fruit upward. And so very often elsewhere: And accordingly in the New Testament, the phrase is most frequent, καρπὸν ποιεῖν, to make, or do, i. e. to bear, or bring forth fruit, Mat. iii. 8. & 10. So that still the similitude is maintained in these last words of the verse, like a tree planted by the divisions of waters, yielding fruit in his season, not so much as his leaf withering, and whatsoever he bringeth forth, bud. blossom, or fruit, it shall prosper.

f. עֲדַת V. 5. Congregation] That עֵדָה from יָעַד convocavit, signifies an assembly, there is no question. All the difficulty is, who the just are here, of whom this assembly consists, whether they that are mentioned v. 6. under the same title, the godly, that shall be rewarded in that judgment, or the δίκαιοι τετελειωμένοι, Heb. xii. 23. the just made perfect, i. e. that have already received their crown; those Saints, of whom the Apostle pronounceth, that they shall judge the world, 1 Cor. vi. 2. taking in also the Angels, those holy myriads, Jude 15. with whom God is there said to come to execute judgment upon all. To the latter of these we are inclined by the Septuagint, who render it ἐν βουλῇ δικαίων, and so the vulgar Latine, in concilio, in the counsel of the just, for then, as Mat. v. we have mention of two Judicatures, one by κρίσις, the Judgment, the other by συνέδριον, the Sanhedrim or Council, (the great standing Judicature at Jerusalem) so we have here κρίσιν and βουλὴ, Judgment and Counsel, most probably in the same sense, and so the word עֵדָה once more rendred βουλὴ, Council, Numb. xvi. 2. and frequently συναγωγὴ, Assembly, doth certainly signifie that Judicature among the Jews; and so the Chaldee סִיעַד here used, was before taken for a consessus, (as was said v. 1. note[2]) and the Syriack, and Arabick, and Æthiopick, all agree to it, the first rendring it ܟܢܘܫܬܐ Assembly, the two other Council. And then this is the clear meaning of it, that that last doom (or יוֹם day, as the Chaldee here render judgment; from whence we have ἡμέρα. day, in the New Testament signifying judgment) is transacted by a Court of eminently just persons, God the just and righteous Judge, ii Tim. iv. 8. assisted with a Council of Saints and holy Angels, all of them just, and crown'd as such: And therefore there is no appearing for wicked men before that Tribunal, they shall certainly be condemned by them. But the parallel betwixt fruit and chaff may not improbably incline to the former sense, that the ungodly shall not be able to abide the winnowing of the Divine judgment, (the wind of Gods vengeance, v. 4.) nor consequently remain in the company of the righteous, who in stead of receiving damage by the fury of the wind, are only purged and fixt by it.

The Second PSALM.

The second of this first Partition is a most Divine mixture of History and Prophecy, certainly composed by David, and referring visibly to his Person, and both typically and prophetically to Christ, and so understood expresly by the Writers of the New Testament. The first immediate occasion and matter of it, seems to be the instating, and setling of David peaceably and triumphantly in his Kingdom, both of Judah, ii Sam. ii. 4. and after some short opposition, of Israel also, c. v. 4. and soon after that, his taking of Zion from the Jebusites, c. v. 7. and possessing and enlarging it, v. 9. (and bringing the Ark to it, c. vi.) after which Hiram King of Tyre presents him, c. v. 11. and Toi King of Hamath sends his Embassadour to salute him, and bless him, c. viii. 10. Mean while other Heathen Princes assault him, the Philistims, c. v. 17, 22. c. viii. 1. and so likewise the Moabites, c. viii. 2. the King of Zobah, v. 3. the Syrians of Damascus, v. 5. the Ammonites, and Amalekites, v. 12. and so again, c. x. All which were wonderfully subdued by David, and the several Victories recorded in those Chapters. But beside this first immediate, there is a second more remote, but withal as literal (by the confession of the Jews themselves) and more eminent matter of it, a prophetick representation of the Messias, viz. of Christs Inauguration to his Regal, and Sacerdotal Offices, assaulted indeed, and violently opposed, and even crucified by the Jewish, and Roman Magistrates, Act. iv. 25. but then victoriously raised from death death by the power of his Father, Act. xiii. 33. and ſo exalted to his great Offices, Heb. i. 5. and v. 5. and Rev. xi. 27. and xix. 15. in the ſucceſsful exerciſes whereof all our Salvation conſiſts.

2. Paraphraſe.

1. It is to little purpoſe that the Philiſtims, and ſo many other neighbouring heathen nations round about, and unquiet ſpirits at home, raiſe war againſt David, now ſeated in his throne by God; all their deſigns, and enterpriſes againſt him are blaſted by the Almighty, and prove ſucceſsleſs, and ruinous to them. And ſo in like manner, all the oppoſition that Satan, and his Inſtruments, Jews and Romans, Act. iv. 25. make againſt Chriſt, the Son of David, anointed by his Father to a ſpiritual Kingdom, a Melchizedekian, Royal Prieſthood, ſhall never prevail to hinder that great purpoſe of God, of bringing by this means all penitent believers to ſalvation.

1. WHy do the ‖ heathen [a] † rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?

‖ Nations. גוֹיִם, † Conſpire, aſſemble, tumultuare.

b. c. 2. The Princes and Governours of the Nations round about Judea, the Kings of the Philiſtims, and Moabites, and Damaſcenes, and many more roſe up againſt David, the Syrians joyned with Hadadezer King of Zobah, 2 Sam. viii. 5. and in ſo doing oppoſed the Lords anointed, one ſet up and ſupported by God in a ſpecial manner, and ſo in effect rebelled againſt God himſelf. In like manner did Herod, and Pilate, and the Jewiſh Sanhedrim make a ſolemn oppoſition, and conſpiracy againſt the Meſſias, Gods holy child Jeſus, by him anointed, Act. iv. 27. and therein were fighters againſt God, Act. v. 39.

2. The Kings of the earth [b] ‖ ſet themſelves, and the rulers [c] † take counſel together againſt the Lord and againſt his anointed, ſaying,

d. 3. Both of theſe alike reſolving that they would not by any means be ſubject, the Philiſtims, &c. to David, the Jews, &c. to Chriſt, and the divine laws and rites of Religion, by which either of their Kingdoms were to be governed.

3. Let us break their bonds aſunder, and caſt away their [d] ‖ cords from us.

‖ or yokes

4. But God that ruleth all things, and is much more powerful than they, will defeat all their enterpriſes, and magnifie his divine providence, as in the ſecuring of David, and giving him Victories over them all, ſo in erecting and inlarging of Chriſts Kingdom, and making the utmoſt of the malice of men and devils, as means of conſecrating him to that office of Royal Prieſthood, to which God had deſigned him.

4. He that ‖ ſitteth in the heavens ſhall laugh, the Lord ſhall have them in deriſion.

‖ dwelleth יוֹשֵׁב

5. All their enterpriſes, againſt this Government of Gods erecting, ſhall not atatain any part of their deſire, but only provoke God to great ſeverities and terrible vengeances againſt them, remarkable ſlaughters in Davids time, upon his enemies, and under Chriſts Kingdom (the ſtate of Chriſtianity) upon the Jews and Romans.

5. Then ſhall he ſpeak unto them in his wrath, and ‖ vex them in his ſore diſpleaſure.

‖ diſturb, affright יְבַהֲלֵמוֹ

6. Mean while 'tis an eminent act of Gods power and mercy to David, that ſoon after his anointing in Hebron, 2 Sam. v. 3. he overcame the Idolatrous Jebuſites, v. 6. and took the ſtrong hold of Zion, and made it the ſeat of his Kingdom, and placed the Ark of the Covenant there, and thereupon called it the Mountain of the Lord, the hill of holineſs, and there ſetled the Kingdom, long ſince forepromiſed by Jacob to the Tribe of Judah, but never fixed in that Tribe till now. And the like (but exceedingly more eminent) act of power and mercy it was in him, to ſeat Chriſt in his ſpiritual throne, in the hearts of all faithful Chriſtians, poſſeſt before his coming by heathen ſins, and truſting to falſe Idol Gods, parallel to the lame and the blind, 2 Sam. v. 16. (i. e. not improbably the Jebuſuites images, Teraphims, or the like, which could neither go nor ſee, and yet were confided in by them, that they would defend their city.)

6. Yet have I ‖ ſet my King upon my holy hill of Sion.

e. f. 7. Now was that Covenant ſolemnly ſealed, and ratified to David, which he is therefore to publiſh unto all, ſo as it ſhall be in force againſt all perſons that ſhall tranſgreſs it, that at this time God hath taken the kingdom from the houſe of Saul, (Iſhboſheth being now ſlain, 2 Sam. iv. 6.) and ſetled it upon David, who was anointed over Iſrael alſo, 2 Sam. v. 3. given him the Rule over his own people, ſet him up, as his own ſon, an image of his ſupremacy, having at length delivered him from the power of all his enemies, and ſet him victoriouſly on his throne in Sion, which is a kind of birth-day to him, the day of his inauguration, the birth-day of his power, though not his perſon, of his kingdom, though not of the King, and this much more conſiderable than the other. And in the parallel, the Evangelical Covenant is now ſealed to Chriſt, and in him to all faithful Chriſtians, a Covenant to be publiſht to all the world, and the foundation of it laid in the death, or rather the reſurrection of Chriſt, the eternal Son of God, who having taken our mortal fleſh, and therein offered up a full ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction for the ſins of the world, the third day after, was brought forth (as by a new birth) out of the womb of the grave, (ſee Act. xiii. 33.) now never to die again, and thereby hath aſcertain'd unto us (as many as ſpiritually partake of theſe, that die unto ſin, and live again to righteouſneſs) a bleſſed immortal life.

7. I will ‖ declare the [e] decree, The Lord hath ſaid unto me, Thou art my [f] ſon, this day have I [f] begotten thee.

‖ promulgate, or tell of a decree, or covenant.

g. 8. To this is conſequent, as a free, and ſpecial mercy of Gods, the inlarging of this his Kingdom, not only to the Inhabitants of Judea, but to many other heathen nations, the Philiſtims, Moabites, Ammonites, Idumeans, and Syrians, &c. who were all ſubdued by David, through the power of God, 2 Sam. v. and viii. and x. and ſubjected to him. And ſo upon the Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of Chriſt, by the wonderful bleſſing of God upon the preaching of the Apoſtles, not only the Jews, (many thouſands of them, Rev. vii.) but the heathens over all the world, were brought in, to the faith of Chriſt.

8. Ask of me, and I ſhall give thee the ‖ heathen for thine inheritance, and the [g] † outmoſt parts of the earth for thy poſſeſſion.

‖ nations † ends or borders of the land.

h. 9. All theſe neighbouring enemies that riſe up againſt him, ſhall he ſubdue, and ſlay great multitudes of them: And ſo ſhall Chriſt deal with his enemies, Jews and Heathens, ſubdue ſome, and deſtroy the impregnable, and obdurate.

9. Thou ſhalt [h] ‖ break them with a rod of iron, thou ſhalt daſh them in pieces like a Potters veſſel.

i. i. 10. This therefore may be fit matter of admonition to all neighbour Princes, as they tender their own welfare, that they endeavour to profit by others ſufferings, and not fall fooliſhly into the ſame danger;

10. Be wiſe now therefore, O ye Kings, be [i] ‖ inſtructed ye Judges of the Earth.

danger; that timely they make their peace, and enter into League with David, and undertake the Service of the true God, which he professes. And in like manner when Christ is raised from the dead by his divine power, and so installed in his Office of Royal Priesthood, it will neerly concern all those, that have hitherto stood out against him, the Governors and People of Judea, and all others over all the World, that have lived in opposition to God, to repent, and reform at the Preaching of the Apostles.

11. Serve the Lord with [k] fear, and rejoyce with trembling.

11. Set your selves diligently and sollicitously to k.

the service and obedience of God, the God of David, and be extremely careful, that ye displease him not; And especially, when the Faith of Christ comes to be Preacht, and those doctrines of purity, and charity, &c. which he brought into the World, Men must be careful to submit themselves to it, and obey it most circumspectly, and then they will find all matter of joy and pleasure, and even of exultancy in so doing. Christ's yoke is not only an easie, but withal a most gracious yoke, the most happy way to a cheerful, joyous course of living here, and raigning eternally, therefore the serving him most diligently, and rejoycing in that service, are very reconcileable, cannot one be separated from the other.

‖ Suddenly kindled, כִּמְעַט See Psalm lxxxi. 14. ‖ fly, or betake themselves to.

12. [l] Kiss the Son lest he be angry, and ye [m] perish from the way, when his wrath is ‖ kindled, but a little; Blessed are all they that [n] ‖ put their trust in him.

12. In respect of David the anointed King, and so Son of God (v. 7.) It is the necessary course for all the neighbouring Princes, to do, as Hiram King of Tyre, and Toi King of Hamath hath done, the former sending him sumptuous presents by his Embassadors, 2 Sam. v. 11. the latter sending his own son Joram to salute him, and treat of entring a league and confederation with him, c. viii. 10. If they neglect their opportunity, and either associate with his enemies, or stand by unconcern'd, they will suddenly provoke him, and pay dearly for it, be sadly destroyed. Whosoever shall by any opposition or neglect offend him, will experimentally find what a care God Almighty hath of him, and how severely he will deal with all those, that being thus admonished, do not speedily make applications and addresses to him. And so will it as nearly concern all the Jewish, and heathen people, to whom Christ is revealed, to adore, and address to him (as unto the eternal God, coequal with his Father, who alone can protect those, that apply themselves to him) to lay down all their instruments of hostility (their former sins) and diligently endeavour to pacifie him, and to that end sincerely enter into a consideration, and covenant with him, If they shall stand out, and not acknowledge his divine power, now he is risen from the dead, but continue to provoke him still, they will certainly have their portion with his enemies, be destroyed with the Jews, or after the like manner, that the Jews were, when the Romans came in, and wrought a horrid desolation among them, and only the believing Christian Jews, by obeying Christs directions, were delivered out of it. l. m. n.

Annotations on Psal. II.

a. רָגַשׁ

V. 1. Rage] The notion of רָגַשׁ in the Syriack and Chaldee is to convene or assemble to counsel, so Dan. vi. 7. the Presidents and Princes חַרְגְּשׁוּ we read consulted, consilium inierunt, saith the vulgar Latine, συνεβουλεύσαντο, the Greek, and so the Arabick also, and Syriack, they decreed, all agreeing, that it signifies there an assembling and agreeing together in Counsel, and so the context there inforces, the design of it being the making a Decree the result of a Consultation. And thus it will best belong to the Prophetical sense, and refer distinctly to the assembling of the Sanhedrim of the Jews, and Pilate, to the condemning and crucifying of Christ. The word also belongs to any assembling together, such as to the house of God, Psal. lv. 14. we walked unto the house of God בְּרָגֶשׁ in company, the lxxii. read ἐν ὁμονοίᾳ, in concord, and so the Syriack in concord; the Æthiopick, and Arabick, with one or the same heart, but especially to a tumultuous assembly, and therefore the interlinear so renders it even in that place of Daniel, tumultuariè convenerunt, as here tumultuatæ sunt, and Psal. lv. 14. cum strepitu, with a noise, and the Targum to the same purpose there בְּסַרְהוֹבְיָא cum festinantiâ. Yet more particularly it belongs to such a tumultuous convening, as is in war, a going up to assault an enemy. So Josh. vii. 3. of making the people go up against Ai to destroy it, the Targum reads לָא תַרְגֵּישׁ ne cogas omnem populum, make not all the people go up to that service, where the lxxii. μὴ ἀναγάγῃς, lead not up, as a Commander his Soldiers, unless perhaps it should rather be μὴ ἀναγκάζῃς, force them not to go up. Once more the word is used Psal. lxiv. 2. hide me מֵרִגְשַׁת from the gathering together of the wicked, συστροφῆς, say the lxxii. a seditious uproar of the People. The military notion of it is that which more fitly pertains to David, in respect of the warlike assaults of the Philistims, and especially of the conjunction of several of them, the Syrians of Damascus with the King of Zobah, 2 Sam. viii. 5. But the loose notion of it, for a conspiration and complotting of wicked men is most agreeable to the mystical and prophetical notion, that which is fulfilled in the Jews and Romans conjunction against Christ, those being the גּוֹיִם nations (so the word literally must be rendred, see note on Mat. xxiv. 2. & xxviii. [b].) and in the same sense לְאֻמִּים populi, in the latter part of this Verse (as Nations and People are all one) which conspired to put him to Death.

b. יִתְיַצָּב

V. 2. Set themselves] יָצַב indeed signifies to stand, but in the conjugation hithpael, which here is used, it signifies to make himself to stand, and that is certainly to rise up. Thus the Targum understood it, which render it יְקוֹמִין, from קוּם, which certainly signifies to rise up, and so the Septuagints παρέστησαν, and the vulgars astiterunt, which our old Translation imitates, reading [stand up] so the Syriack surrexerunt, arose, and the Arabick insurrexerunt, made an insurrection, do all accord in the rendring of it, and so it refers most fitly in the Historical sense to the warlike assaults of the Philistims, &c. ordinarily expresst in the Sacred style, by rising up against; and so, in the Prophetical also, to the rebellions of the enemies of Christ, insurrections against his spiritual Kingdom.

c. יָסַד

V. 3. Take Counsel] יָסַד in Kal signifies fundavit, posuit, disposuit, to found, to set, to dispose; and then in Niphal the passive, wherein here it is used, it regularly signifies poni, or disponi, and sometimes (when the context requires) to be founded or created. Here it seems to be taken in the first and simplest sense, and being joyned with יָחַד simul, it is no more then to be met or assembled together. Thus it is twice interpreted by the lxxii, συνήχθησαν, they assembled here, and συναχθῆναι, Psal. xxxi. 13. and as it there notes an hostile assembling to take away his life, so it is here also: Accordingly a Jewish-Arabick Translation, in the possession of learned M. Pocock, renders it, All of them assembled themselves in companies, confirming it from בְּהוֹסְדִים יחד עָלַי Psal. xxxi. 13. and my soul enter not, בְּסֹדָם into their Assembly, Gen. xlix. 6. And so it evidently imports imports in the firſt and hiſtorical ſence, their aſſaulting and invading David with their heathen Armies, but in the prophetical, their aſſembling in the Sanhedrim to put Chriſt to death. This the Targum deſigned in rendring it, יִתְחַבְּרוּן בַּחֲרָא which the vulgar tranſlates exactly, convenerunt in unum, they met together, or joyned; either as Soldiers do in an Army, or as Senators in a Councel: in the former way againſt David, in the latter againſt Chriſt.

d. עֲבֹתִים V. 3. Cords.] The עֲבֹתִים ordinarily rendered cords, doth in all reaſon add ſomewhat to the bands, in the beginning of the verſe; and then it is probable that the LXXII are in the right, which here, as xxxix. 10. have rendred it ζυγὸν, yoke. Thus the Syriack, and Arabick, and Æthiopick, and vulgar, all agree, reading it ܢܝܪܗܘܢ jugum eorum, their yoke, and thus the ſence is perſpicuous. Bands are uſeful to tye on yokes, and accordingly we find in the Septuagint ζυγῶ ἱμάντι, Iſa. v. 18. the band of a yoke of an heifer, that which tyes it faſt upon the neck, that it cannot be caſt off, till firſt the band be broken. Thus therefore it here lies, firſt breaking the bands, and then caſting away the עֻבּוֹת yoke. And this is moſt agreeable to the Context, which treats of renouncing ſubjection, which is in all idioms vulgarly expreſſed by a yoke bound on the neck of any; whereas the bands and cords are more agreeable to a ſtate of captivity and impriſonment, which is not appliable to this place: for the Philiſtims, &c. were not priſoners to David, when they were ſuppoſed thus to ſpeak, but ſuch as feared the riſing power of David, that they ſhould be made ſubjects of his Kingdom, or rather that diſclaim'd that yoke of God, refuſed obedience to thoſe Commandments, by which that holy people was governed, would not endure the Jewiſh Laws, which as the ἱμάντες, bands or thongs bound this yoke upon their necks. Accordingly the fore-mentioned Jewiſh Arabick tranſlation thus renders the place, Let us break (or cut) off from us the bands of theſe two (the Lord and his Anointed) and caſt their reins from us, i. e. (ſaith he) their injunctions and prohibitions. And proportionable to theſe were the Jews and Heathens in the Prophetick ſence, which would not endure Chriſts χρηστὸς ζυγὸς, the yoke of purity and ſincere obedience (no ſlaviſh bands or chains, but) an eaſie, nay, gracious yoke, which alone he now impoſed on them, but would not be endured by thoſe hypocrites. As for the origination of the word from עָבַת in Piel, complicavit, conſtrinxit, it very fitly belongs to ſuch a yoke, as Oxen, or labouring Cattel are uſed to: it is made by wreathing and complicating, and it conſtrains and binds together thoſe cattle that are thus yoked. Another interpretation on this third verſe is capable of, ſo as to appertain to David, and to be his ſpeech, and not the ſaying of the Heathen, to this ſence; though theſe Nations conſult and plot againſt us to keep us under, and ſcorn, and rage at our late good ſucceſſes, yet now we will utterly break their yoke in pieces, take the מֶתֶג הָאַמָּה ii Sam. viii. 1. the bridle or government of the Metropolis (for which we have in the parallel place 1 Chron. xviii. 1. Gath and her daughters) out of the hands of the Philiſtims, and ſubdue them. But the former is the more received ſence, and therefore I have adhered to it in the Paraphraſe.

e. חֹק V. 7. Decree.] The Hebrew חֹק from חָקַק inſculpſit, ſcripſit, decrevit, ſtatuit, mandavit, ſignifying proportionably many things, a writing, and ſo particularly a pact or covenant, ſubſcribed by the parties hands, a decree, a precept, a rite, &c. the LXXII here render it πρόσταγμα, an order, an agreement, a precept, or ordinance, or decree; and ſo moſt of the ancient Interpreters accord, the Targum קְיָמָא דַיְיָ Gods oath, or decree, or ſtatute, or his pact, and covenant. All theſe notions are of affinity, and may here moſt fitly be put together. In the hiſtorical ſenſe, it was firſt a decree in heaven immutable, then a pact or covenant with David and his ſeed; Pſal. lxxxix. 3. I have made a Covenant with my choſen; that confirm'd by oath, in the ſame verſe, I have ſworn unto David my ſervant, and I have ſworn by my holineſs that I will (thus ſupport, and) not fail David, but ſettle the Kingdom on him, and his poſterity, till Shiloh or the Meſſias come; and withall a command of obedience promulgate to his Subjects, and of making peace with him, to thoſe that were round about him, ver. 12. In the myſtical ſenſe it principally denotes the Covenant made with and in Chriſt: which Covenant alſo was under Gods oath, an immutable decree, the oath which he ſware to Abraham, Luk. i. 73. and a Law alſo, 1. in reſpect of Chriſt, requiring ſomewhat of him, he was to ſuffer, and ſo to enter into his glory, to be made perfect, or conſecrated to his Royal Prieſthood by ſufferings; and 2. in reſpect of us, ὁ τῆς πίστεως, the law of faith, exacting from us an uniform obedience to him in the exerciſe of all his Offices: and accordingly ſaith Clemens Stro. 2. p. 168. l. 12. ὁ Πέτρος ἐν κηρύγματι ὁμοῦ καὶ λόγου τὸν Κύριον προσεῖπεν, St. Peter in his Preaching ſtiled our Lord Chriſt the Law and word of God; the Law as well as the Word of God; one that revealed Gods whole Evangelical will unto us, as ὁ νομοθέτης, a Law-giver, as there it follows, and came not to deſtroy, but πληρῶσαι, to fill up and complete the ſeveral Laws, which had formerly been given to the World. Here only it may be obſerved, that the adjunct אֶל here joyned with it אֶל חֹק ſeems to be miſtaken by Interpreters: the LXXII ſeem to have read it אֶל God or Lord, and ſo render it τὸ πρόσταγμα Κυρίου, the Ordinance of the Lord, and ſo the Targum דַיְיָ of the Lord, and ſo the Arabick and Ethiopick; the vulgar, Præceptum ejus, the Syriack ܦܩܕܢܐ my decree, i. e. the Lords, v. 4. the precept of the Lord: But if it were thus in the Hebrew, the אֶל muſt have been put after חֹק, whereas here it is before it. Others ſeem to take אֶל for a particle æquivalent with אֵת ſo the interlinear, ipſum Decretum: but it is more reaſonable to take it as vulgarly it is, for a prepoſition ſignifying de, and then it will be beſt rendred, I will tell of a decree or covenant.

f. בְּנִי V. 8. Son.] That David, as a King exalted by Gods peculiar command, ſhould be ſtiled Gods Son, or that the time of his inauguration or inſtating in that power, taking poſſeſſion of his throne, and ſubduing his enemies on every ſide, ſhould be expreſt by the day of Gods begetting, hath nothing ſtrange in it: It is affirmed in the name of God, Pſal. lxxxix. 26. He ſhall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, and v. 27. Alſo I will make him my firſt-born higher then the Kings of the earth; where each King of the earth is lookt on as a Son of God, but he, as being higher then they, his firſt-born. We know an adopted Son is ſtiled a Son, and Salathiel, Mat. i. 12. is ſaid to be begotten by Jechoniah, becauſe he ſucceeded him in the Kingdom, though he were not indeed his Son. And ſo may David be Gods Son, being immediately exalted by him, and indeed all other Kings, who are ſaid to reign by him. And that that the time of his Coronation should be lookt on as his birth-day, and accordingly kept festival, as the birth-day was, that is familiar in all Countreys. The Feast of commemorating the building of Rome, we know, was called Palilia, and this title was by decree given to the day of Caius the Emperour his advancement to the Empire. * Decretum ut dies quo cepisset imperium Palilia vocaretur, 'Twas decreed that the day on which he began his Reign should be so called, and accordingly celebrated. And the Emperour generally had two natales, or birth-days kept, Natalis Imperatoris, and Imperii, the birth-day of the Emperour, and of the Empire: the first to commemorate his coming into the World, the second his advancement to the Imperial Dignity. So Spartianus, in Adriano tells us of the Natalis adoptionis, the day of his adoption (i. e. his civil birth) on V. Ides of August, and then Natalem Imperii, the birth-day of his Empire on the III. And Tacitus of Vespasian, Hist. l. ii. Primus Principatus dies in posterum celebratus, the first day of his Empire was celebrated afterwards. But then, in the mystical sense, some difficulty there is, what Sonship or begetting of Christ is here meant. The Schoolmen, from some of the Ancients, understand it of the eternal Generation of the Son of God, and interpret the [hodiè to day] of an hodiè æternitatis, a day of eternity. But the Apostle S. Paul, Act. xiii. 33. applies it distinctly to his resurrection. He hath raised up Jesus again, as it is also written in the second Psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; and so Heb. v. 5. it is brought as an evidence of Christ's being consecrated by his Father to his Melchizedekian High-Priesthood, which we know was at his Resurrection: Christ glorified not himself to be made an high-Priest, but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, who in the dayes of his flesh, v. 7. being made perfect, became the Author of eternal salvation, ——called of God an high-Priest, v. 9, 10. So Heb. 1. 5. where this Text is again recited, the Context refers it to the exaltation of him in his humane nature, when having purged our sins, he sate down on the right hand of the Majesty on high, being made so much better than the Angels, v. 3. 4. And to this belongs that of St. Hierom ad Paulin. David, Simonides noster, Pindarus, & Alcæus, Christum lyrâ personat, & decachordo Psalterio ab inferis suscitat resurgentem: David our Divine Poet sounds out Christ upon his Harp, and with his Psaltery of ten strings awakes him rising from the dead. Only it must be remembred, that as it was an act of his divine power, by which he was raised, and so his resurrection was an evidence demonstrative that he was the promised Messias, of whom the Learned Jews themselves resolved, that he was to be the Son of God, and that in an eminent manner (so the High-Priest, Mat. xxvi. 63. Tell us whether thou art the Christ the Son of God, and Joh. i. 20. Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, the King of Israel) so this begetting him from the grave to a life immortal, did comprehend and presuppose the truth of that other fundamental Article of our Creed, that he was that eternal word or Son of God, which thus rose. Thus the Apostle sets it, Rom. i. 4. speaking of Jesus Christ our Lord, made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and adding, that he was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the Resurrection from the Dead. Now that this his resurrection, and exaltation consequent to it, is here fitly expresst by Gods begetting him, will easily be believed upon these two accounts: 1. That in respect of his humane nature it was a second (as that from the Mothers Womb a first) entrance on humane life, the grave was but a second womb, from which now he came forth; and it is not unusual to call the resurrection of one of us παλιγγενεσία, a new, or second birth: 2. That Princes, or Rulers, are in Scripture style called Gods, and children or sons of God, I said you are Gods, and you are all children of the most high; and then instating Christ in his Regal Office is the begetting him, and so the saying, Thou art my son, i. e. by saying, constituting him so, the second sort of Natalis, or birth-day, the birth-day of his Kingdom, yea and Melchizedekian Priesthood too (to that the Apostle applies it, Heb. v. 4. 5.) for to both these he was solemnly installed at his Resurrection. The Chaldee of all the Interpreters seem alone not to have understood this mysterie, who render it, Thou art beloved by me as a Son by a Father, thou art pure to me, as if this day I had created thee.

* Sueton in Calig. c. 16.

V. 8. Utmost parts.] That אַפְסֵי from אָפַס finitus, terminatus, consumptus est, signifies the utmost skirts, the extreme parts of that which is spoken of, there can be no question. All that is here to be noted, is, the dubious notation of אֶרֶץ earth, that is joyned with it. For if that be interpreted of the Universe, or whole World, then there can here be no place for the historical sense, respecting David, for it is certain he was never constituted by God the Universal Monarch of the whole World. Yet on the other side, if it be not taken in this latitude, it will fall short of describing Christ's Kingdom, which was to be propagated, and set up in all Nations, those that were most remote from Judea. For the reconciling of which difficulty, it appears necessary to assign to אֶרֶץ land or earth, here, the double notion of which the word is capable. Sometimes it signifies that land of Judea peculiarly (see note on Math. xxiv. 6.) and then the bounds or extreme parts of that land] are the Nations that border on it, or are near situate about it, the Philistims, Moabites, Idumeans, Syrians, &c. for all these were literally conquered and subjected by David. So Psal. lxxii. speaking of Solomon, the Kings (i. e. King David's) son, v. 1. and of the extent of his Kingdom, it is said, v. 8. that he shall have dominion from Sea to Sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth: which though the lxxii. render ὀικουμένης the world, yet certainly belongs not to all the world, in the larger acception, but in this narrower, common both to γῆ, earth, and οἰκουμένη, world, (see note on Mat. xxiv. 8.) the bounds of the Jewish Kingdom, and so is well paraphrased by the Chaldee, from one corner of the great Sea to another corner of it, from Euphrates to the ends or bounds of the land. And so Ps. lxi. 2. when David saith, from the ends of the earth I will cry unto thee, 'tis sure from beyond Jordan (and not in any remote corner of the World) whither he was then fled for fear of Absalom, 2 Sam. xvii. 22. where, though the Hebrew word for [ends] be not the same that here, yet it is exactly æquivalent to it קְצֵה finis, or extremum, and rendred by lxxii. ἀπὸ περάτων τῆς γῆς, from the extreme parts of the land, in the same style as here it is. But then if we look forward to the mystical Prophetical signification, we must be forced to forsake this restrain'd sense, and take it in the full latitude, so as to note all the remotest nations of the World, as well as those that border on Judea, for to all them was this spiritual Kingdom of Christ extended. And it is well becoming the wisdom of the Prophetick pen-man, and the comprehensive richness of the sacred style, to compriſe both these in the same phrase, as it is thus diversely interpretable.

h. V. 9. Break.] The Septuagint and (except the Chaldee Paraphraſt) all the antient interpreters read not here [break] but rule or feed, ποιμανεῖς αὐτὰς, paſces, or reges eos. By this 'tis evident, that they read the Hebrew with other points, than we now do; תִּרְעֵם, ſhall feed them, from רָעָה pavit, and not, as now the Hebrew Copies have it, תְּרֹעֵם ſhall break them, from רָעַע fregit. And St. John reteins the Septuagints reading, and ſo gives it authority, Rev. 11. 27. What is the full importance of that phraſe, to feed with a ſcepter, or rod of iron, is at large explained on that Chap. note o. and in the Addit. Annot. viz. to exerciſe Regal, rather than Paſtoral Power, to bring them to contrition, if it may be, if not, to deſtroy them utterly.

i. V. 10. Be wiſe.] The full importance of the two verbs in this tenth verſe will be thus beſt underſtood. The former of them from שָׂכַל intellexit, prudenter ſe geſſit, doth in Hiphil, in which here it is, literally note the cauſing prudence or underſtanding to any; where any other is mentioned, it is the teaching that other, but here, where there is no ſuch mention, it muſt be reciprocal upon themſelves, and be thus literally rendred, cauſe your ſelves to underſtand, and (that being to be done by ſtudy in matters of ſpeculation, by caution in matters of prudence or practice) ſtudy, or take care to underſtand, endeavour to benefit by others ſufferings, or the dangers you ſee before you, if you do not take heed, or beware. And thus it fitly belongs to the Princes in Davids time, who by the unſeaſonable and coſtly oppoſition of ſo many againſt Davids Kingdom, might now in all reaſon be adviſed to beware of the like attempts: and much more when Chriſt is riſen from the dead, ought all others (who obſerve the practiſes of the Jews in crucifying him, and the fearful judgments that attended them) to beware by their example, leſt by holding ſtill out againſt the faith, they bring on themſelves the like deſtruction. As for the ſecond verbe הִוָּסְרוּ from יָסַר erudivit, caſtigavit, correxit, 'tis here in Niphal, literally erudimini, caſtigamini, corrigimini, be ye inſtructed, chaſtiſed, corrected; and this being underſtood of a real, not only verbal paſſion, and applyed to correction of Manners, and not external bodily diſcipline, it is fully rendred by [be ye reformed.] Thus Lev. 26. 23. And if by theſe things (the judgements foregoing) לֹא תִוָּסְרוּ we render it, ye will not be reformed, where the LXXII. retein μὴ παιδευθῆτε, as here, a word by which reformation is fitly expreſt (1 Tim. 1. 20.) the Samaritane, not hear me, or not obey me; And the latter part of the verſe [but will walke contrary to me] aſſures us of the ſenſe, that being not chaſtned there, ſignifies the real paſſive, their being not wrought on by chaſtenings, not taken off from their hoſtilities to God, not reformed, not amended by them. And as thus 'tis applyable to the heathen borderers of Judea in Davids time, who were now admoniſhed to forſake their hoſtile ways, and to convert to God, and make leagues of peace with David, ſo ſignally exalted by God; ſo doth it moſt expreſly denote the Apoſtles Preaching repentance after the reſurrection of Chriſt, and that in a paſſive forme, as here, σώζεσθε, Act. 11. v. 40. Be ye ſaved, or delivered, where by that converſion, repentance, or reformation is diſtinctly meant. See note on Luke xiii. 6.

k. V. 11. With fear.] The only difficulty in this eleventh verſe ariſes from the trajection or σύγχυσις, here obſervable (which yet in Scripture, eſpecially in the Poetical parts of it, is not extraordinary) the ſeparating of theſe two phraſes [with fear] and [with trembling] one joyned with ſerving, the other with rejoycing in God, and the latter conjunction not very commodious, joy and terrour or trembling being not ordinarily found together. This difficulty is not removed by the deſcant of ſome, which alluding here to Muſical Inſtruments, Lutes or Harps, &c. obſerve that the Muſick ariſes from the tremulous motion of the ſtrings; for beſides many other failings in the parallel, the trembling here is annext to the rejoycing, and not ſet as the cauſe, from whence it proceeds, and in the ἀναπόδοσις. our trembling is neither the cauſe, nor the concomitant of our rejoycing. The Chaldee therefore reads it וְצַלּוּ and pray; the Syriack ܘܐܬܚܙܘ apprehend, lay hold on him, (either of which is much more reconcileable with the trembling, than rejoycing is) Abu Walid Ebn Jannabi, the Hebrew Grammarian, known among them by the title of the ſecond Grammarian, (a Manuſcript in the poſſeſſion of learned Mr. Pococke) ſaith, that the word גִּיל ſignifies indifferently any commotion whether through joy or grief, and makes uſe of this place for the proof of his obſervation, as if it ſhould be rendred [be moved with trembling] and ſo the Jewiſh Arabick Tranſlation renders it, [and fear him with trembling] and confirms his verſion by comparing the Hebrew גִּיל with the Arabick טרב tarb, i. e. commotion (by which alſo Abu Walid renders it) which they uſe in caſe of fear, as well as rejoycing, and ſo he would have the word rendred, Hoſ. 10. 5. The Prieſts thereof עָלָיו יָגִילוּ ſhall be grieved, &c. and ſo R. Tanchum alſo on that place. If this may have place, then indeed the difficulty is quite removed, for then the verſe will run thus, Serve the Lord with fear, and fear him with trembling: But becauſe this notion of the word גִּיל is not ſufficiently proved from this one place (of which the queſtion is) and that of Hoſea, where all the antient interpreters render it rejoycing, and wherein if it ſhould ſignifie grief, yet that is no evidence, that it ſignifies fear here; it will therefore be more reaſonable to adhere to the uſual notion of גִּיל for rejoycing, and a little to alter the order of the conſtruction and connect in ſenſe (though they be ſeparated in words) theſe two phraſes, with fear, and, with trembling, and ſo in like manner the two verbs, ſerve and rejoyce. Examples of this are frequent in this Book. See Pſal. 79. 2. where as the dead bodies of thy ſervants, and the fleſh of thy ſaints, are but an ἐνδιάδυοιν, one thing expreſt in two phraſes, ſo the fouls of the heaven, and beaſts of the earth, being divided in the words, muſt yet be connected in the ſenſe, thus, they have given the dead bodies and fleſh of thy Servants and Saints to be meat to the fouls of the heaven, and the beaſts of the earth. So again in that Pſalm, ver. 4. and very frequently elſewhere, which the attentive Reader will obſerve. Now for fear and trembling, the conjunction of them and the like words is frequent in the new Teſtament, thereby to note a compound of humility, and diligence, and ſollicitude and caution, and fear of diſpleaſing, and that as the moſt proper qualifications of our obedience either to God or Man. Thus, Work out your ſalvation with fear and trembling, Phil. 2. 12. Servants obey your Maſters with fear and trembling, Eph. 6. 5. So of the Corinthians obedience to Paul, 2 Cor. 7. 14. Titus tells that Apoſtle, v. 15. how with fear and trembling they received him (St. Paul's meſſenger to them.) So S. Chryſoſtom, Serm. 31. de Natal. ſaith of the Angels, that they aſſiſt our ſervices μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου, with fear and trembling, and that the Seraphim, κράζουσι τρόμῳ, cry with fear, Holy, holy, holy.—— And ſo Heb. 12. 28. Let us ſerve God, εὐαρέστως, with reverence reverence and godly fear, and that a fear of displeasing and incurring great hazard thereby, For our God is a consuming fire. See note on Phil. 11. c. This then is in all reason the first account that is to be given of these words, that the fear and trembling are here to be joyn'd in sense, and all carefulness, and unwillingness to displease (the best qualification of obedience) resolved to be the importance of them. And then in like manner the [Serve the Lord, and rejoyce in him] will be an ἐνδιάδυοιν (in which figure the holy Scripture abounds) and be in sense best rendred, serve him chearfully or joyfully, and that very reconcileable with the other phrase; our diligence and fear of displeasing will be very happily joyned with our serving him chearfully, there being nothing more pleasant than to serve him diligently, whom we truly reverence, and are most unwilling to displease, and no possibility of being pleased with our own service, if it be not performed with all zeal and diligence. Thus have some understood Heb. xii. 28. λατρεύειν εὐαρέστως τῷ Θεῷ μετ' αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας, to serve God well pleasedly or joyfully with reverence and godly fear: in which sense it would be an exact parallel with this verse, would but the εὐαρέστως bear the passive signification, for then the λατρεύειν εὐαρέστως would be all one with our serving and rejoycing, or our joyful serving, as the reverence and godly fear with fear and trembling. But I suppose εὐαρέστως there must be taken in the active sense, ὡς ὄντιν εὐαρεστὸν τῷ Χριστῷ, saith St. Basil, So as is well pleasing to Christ, and so is not applicable to this place.

λατρεύειν εὐαρέστως. Εὐαρέστως.

I. נַשְּׁקוּ בַר

V. 12. Kiss the son] נַשְּׁקוּ בַר kiss the son doth evidently belong in the first sense to the neighbouring Kings, sending presents and messages of peace to David, in token of reverence and high respect unto him, (in like manner as some of them did, Hiram of Tire, and Toi of Hamath) kissing the hand or feet, being a token of that, as also of subjection and obedience, osculum homagii, a kiss of homage, so Samuel kissed Saul, 1 Sam. 10. 1. when he anointed him King; and that is the reason of the phrase Gen. 41. 40. according to thy mouth or word יִשַּׁק כָּל עַמִּי all my people shall kiss, ὑπακούσεται, shall obey, say the LXXII. (and so the Arabick and the vulgar) مطيعة يكون receive law or judgment, saith the Syriack. And so as literally it appertains to Christ, the son of David, here predicted, and typified by him, and that in a higher sense, than that of which David was capable. For נָשַׁק to kiss is used also for adoration, so 1 King. 19. 18. we find together the bowing of the knee to Baal, and the mouths kissing him; and so it fitly belongs to the Messias, in respect of his divine nature, to which that is truly due, which was idolatrously paid to Baal. The Chaldee here read קַבְּלוּ אִלְפָנָא receive instruction, and the LXXII. ἀφέξασθε παιδείας, apprehend discipline, and the vulgar Latine and the Æthiopick follow them, and the Arabick with a little change, adhere to discipline, and none of the antient Interpreters, but the Syriack, keep to the Hebrew, Kiss the son. This hath made learned men resolve that they read the Hebrew otherwise than now we have it, for נַשְּׁקוּ kiss, נַשְּׁגוּ apprehend, by the changing שׁ into שׂ and ק into ג, and that having done so, they took בַּר (the Chaldee and Syriack for son) for בַּר purity or pure doctrine. But this, I confess, seems not to me so probable, viz. that they should thus miss-read the one, and miss-render the other, (especially when the Chaldee בַּר is elsewhere so evidently and confestly used for son, Ezr. 5. 1. and again 5. 2. and Prov. 31. 2. and בַּר purity is somewhat remote from παιδεία, discipline) when a far more obvious reason may be rendred of it, viz. that they did not so much render, as paraphrase the Hebrew, and so set [receiving instruction or discipline] as that comprehends both Obedience and Faith, (the first of the neighbouring Princes to David, and both of all sincere Christians to Christ) as the most intelligible way of circumlocution to interpret kissing the son.

נָשַׁק

V. 12. Perish from the way] The phrase תֹּאבְדוּ דָּרֶךְ may here deserve to be considered. The affinity with תֹּאבַד דֶּרֶךְ the way of the wicked shall perish, Psal. 1. 6. may suggest this figurative but literal rendring of it, Ye shall perish the way, i. e. your way shall perish, all you have shall be utterly destroyed. Such a kind of construction we have Isai. 1. 30. Ye shall be as an oak נֹבֶלֶת עָלֶה falling the leaf, i. e. whose leaf falleth. The Chaldee exactly follow the Hebrew, and read וְתֶהוְבְּרוּן אוֹרְחָא which the Latine renders, & amittatis viam, and ye lose the way; so אָבַד is primarily used of losing any thing, and so saith Castellio, & perdatis res vestras, and ye lose all you have. And thus, being spoken of enemies assaulting David, the phrase may be used, for being routed, dissipated, scattered, which is the destruction, and bringing to nought of an Army; as Act. 5. 36. διελύθησαν, καὶ ἐγένοντο εἰς οὐδέν, being dissolved and brought to nothing are put together, and 5. 37. ἀπώλετο and διεσκορπίσθησαν, the Generals being destroyed, and his Army being scattered. But the Syriack interpose the preposition מִן from, and so read it, as we do, perish from the way, herein according with the LXXII. ἀπολεῖσθε ἐξ ὁδοῦ, be destroyed from, or out of the way, or as אָבַד signifies tolli, being taken out of the way, i. e. perishing; and sure 'tis nothing extraordinary for the preposition, in Hebrew Poesie, to be understood, when 'tis omitted, and therefore this our vulgar rendering may be adhered to, and preferred before the former, though the sense be the same in all the ways of rendering. Of this phrase Abu Walid in his Dictionary, and R. Tanchum on Josh. 1. take up an interpretation, different from others, by rendering דֶּרֶךְ (in the notion of the Chaldee verb דָּרַךְ calcavit) calcatio, conculcatio, treading on, or treading under feet, to this sense, lest you perish by treading on, or being trodden under his feet. The בִּמְעַט that follows, is by the LXXII. rendred ἐν τάχει, quickly, suddenly, and so is used in other places, particularly Psal. 81. 14. I should כִּמְעַט soon have destroyed their enemies.——

בִּמְעַט

V. 12. Put their trust] חוֹסֵי from חָסָה literally signifies betaking, applying ones self to any, as to a refuge, or place of strength and safety, seeking protection from any, and accordingly trusting, confiding, or hoping in any. The former doth here most fitly agree to the Historical sense, as it respects David, the son which is to be kissed, in the beginning of the verse; for that is it to which the neighbouring Princes are advised, viz. to apply themselves to him by presents, to desire protection from him, and enter league with him. And so also it belongs commodiously to Christ, to whom they must betake themselves as to a refuge, when the desolation breaks in upon the Jews: The Christians that do so, are the only persons that escape, by flying out of Jerusalem to the Mountains, as Christ forewarned them; and so in the sacking, and taking of Heathen Rome, by Alaricus and his Gothish Army, they only escaped, which fled to the Basilica, i. e. to Christ, that was worshipt there. Yet may it in this mystical sense be taken in the greatest latitude, Christ being the only fit and proper object of our trust and hope, though David was not. One thing more deserves here to be taken notice of, the style, or manner of אַשְׁרֵי כָּל expreſſion, If his wrath be kindled בְּמְעַט ſuddenly, Bleſſed are all they, i. e. in prophetick dialect, ye ſhall certainly be deſtroyed. So Rev. 14. 13. Bleſſed are the dead—— for they reſt from their labours——] is but a way to expreſs the diſmal Judgments, that were then falling upon the earth, as it follows verſe 14, 15. So Matth. 23. 39. Ye ſhall not ſee me henceforth till ye ſhall ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord, i. e. till I come in a direful manner, to take vengeance of you. And many other paſſages of Prophetick Scripture there are in the like or the ſame dialect.

חוֹסֵי

The Third PSALM.

a. Paraphraſe. This third Pſalm was compoſed by David in remembrance of that ſad time wherein his own Son, having by ſubtilty withdrawn the hearts of Iſrael from him, 2 Sam. 15. 6. and broken out into open rebellion, v. 12. he was fain to fly from Jeruſalem, v. 14. toward the wilderneſs, v. 23. and went up by the aſcent of Mount Olivet weeping, and his head covered, (a ſign of mourning) and barefoot, v. 30. then probably pouring out his ſoul to God in ſuch a manner of ſadneſs, and yet truſt and dependence on him, as was afterwards metrically decyphered in this Pſalm, and appointed to be ſung ſolemnly, to perpetuate the memory of this his forlorn condition, not to ſet out his wars or victories, (as * other Kings are wont to have their triumphs deſcribed, and ſongs of victory compoſed) but his fears and flight only. And this is alſo in ſome degree typical of our Saviours ſadneſs and agony, and prayer in the garden, Joh. 18. 1. which is all one with Gethſemane, Matth. 26. 36. Mar. 14. 32. and that on Mount Olivet, Luk. 22. 39, 41. the very ſame mount, to which David went up, when he poured out the ſubſtance of this prayer.

Annotations on Pſal. III.

מִזְמוֹר a. Tit. A Pſalm] The word מִזְמוֹר here uſed of this and many other Pſalms, cometh from זָמַר that ſignifieth cutting off, and metaphorically ſinging, either with the voice, or inſtruments, or both. Pſalmi dicuntur qui cantantur ad Pſalterium quo uſus David, 1 Chron. 15. ſaith S. Auguſtine: By this name are called Tom. 8. p. 21.

called thoſe that are ſung to the Pſaltery, which David uſed, 1 Chron. 15. Of the rendring it Ψαλμὸς, Pſalm, and its difference from ὕμνος and ᾠδὴ, hymus and ſongs, ſee Annotat. on Epheſ. 5. 3. But it ſeems not here to be taken in any narrow ſtrict notion, but to be a word of a very comprehenſive latitude, neither appropriated to any part of compoſition or ſpecies of Muſick. For indeed זְמָרָא in Syriack and Arabick is generally uſed for Muſick, (and ſo alſo for feaſting and dancing at which Muſick was uſed) and the Αὐλητὰι, Minſtrels, Matth. 9. 23. are by the Syriack ſtiled נַבְּצֵי and ſo זַמָּר is a Muſical Inſtrument, and all the ſorts of them, (and not only the Pſaltery) which are carefully reckoned up, Dan. 3. 5. are there contained under that ſtile, זְנֵי זְמָרָא Inſtruments of Muſick. And ſo the Talmudiſts, though they diſtinguiſh exactly betwixt Inſtrumental and Vocal Muſick, yet make זְמָרָא the generical name to both of them, זְמָרָא דְפוּמָא vocal or oral Muſick, and זְמָרָא דְמָנָא inſtrumental Muſick. Proportionably the Arabick and Syriack inſcribe all the Pſalms through the Book by this ſtile. And the Chaldee render it by שְׁבָח a general comprehenſive word, uſed for ſinging, lauding, praiſing, without any relation to either the compoſition or Muſick. Now in this Book of Pſalms there is this variety: ſometimes מִזְמוֹר is uſed alone, as here, and in many other places; ſometimes שִׁיר ſong or canticle is added to it, as Pſal. 30. 1. and in ſeven others; ſometimes it hath שִׁיר ſong going before it, as Pſal. 48. 1. and in four more. And of theſe ſeveral complications S. Hilary in his Prologue on the Pſalms hath thus expreſt his ſenſe, Pſalmus eſt cum ceſſante voce pulſus tantum organi.—— 1. A Pſalm is, when the voice ceaſing, the ſound only of the Inſtrument is heard. 2. A Canticle is, when the quire of Singers uſing their liberty, and not obſerving the Inſtrument, ſing with loud voices. 3. A Canticle of Pſalm, when the Inſtrument going before, the voice of the quire follows to the ſame tune. 4. And 4. A Pſalm of Canticle, when the quire of voices going foremoſt, the Inſtruments follow and obſerve them. And anſwerable to theſe four kinds of Muſick, are, ſaith he, the Titles of the Pſalms. And this interpretation is mentioned by S. * Auguſtine on Pſal. 67. with an [acutioribus & ociоſioribus relinquimus, We leave it to thoſe that are more acute, and have more leiſure, and * neſcio utrum poſſit iſta differentia demonſtrari, I know not whether this difference can be demonſtrated.] It is therefore more probable, that as מִזְמוֹר was reſolved to be taken in the wider and more comprehenſive ſenſe, ſo may שִׁיר alſo; and without this niceneſs of critical or curious obſervation, all theſe four words and phraſes, Pſalm, and Canticle, Pſalm of Canticle, and Canticle of Pſalm, be uſed promiſcuouſly for the very ſame thing, according to the account frequent with Kimchi, that the ſame thing is expreſt in two words, by the figure (very ordinary in the Hebrew idiom) called ἐνδιαδυοῖν. Accordingly the Chaldee ſometimes read it, שִׁירְתָא וְתֻשְׁבַּחְתָּא Pſal. 48. 1. A Song and Praiſe, and תּוּשְׁבַּחְתָּא וְשִׁירְתָא Pſal. 77. 1. A Praiſe and Song, i. e. a Pſalm of benediction and praiſe to God; and ſo the LXXII. alſo, ſometimes ᾠδὴ Ψαλμοῦ, A Song of Pſalm, ſometimes Ψαλμὸς ᾠδῆς, A Pſalm of ſong, and ſometimes ᾠδὴς Ψαλμὸς, A Songs Pſalm: All ſure to ſignifie the ſame thing. And this as it is the eaſieſt, ſo all things conſidered, ſeems the moſt probable account of this matter. To this is added, לְדָוִד with ל the ſign of the dative caſe, and that accordingly rendred by the LXXII, τῷ Δαβὶδ, to David, and underſtood by ſome in S. Auguſtine de Civ. l. 17. c. 14. as a note that it was made by ſome other, and preſented to him. But this is well refuted by that Father from Pſal. 110. 1. where the Title is as here, לְדָוִד, and yet the Pſalm is by Chriſt himſelf affirmed to be Davids Pſalm or Prophecy, Matth. 22. 43. The truth is, the phraſe in the Dative Caſe is well capable of another ſenſe, viz. that it was inſpired to David. But there is no need of that expedient neither, it being very ordinary in Hebrew to uſe the Dative for the Genitive Caſe, and ſo of the ancient Interpreters the Syriack and Arabick underſtood it, and probably the Latine alſo, rendring it Pſalmus David, a Pſalm not to, but of David.

V. 2. Selah] Concerning the word סֶלָה the variety is ſo great among the Learned, that it may well be left uncertain what is to be reſolved of it. The Radix סָלַל and which is all one סָלַל ſignifies ſtravit, conculcavit; and from thence מְסִלָּה regularly comes to denote a way or path, and is moſtly rendred ὁδὸς, δίοδος, ἔλος, a way, a turning, a path, ſometimes ἀναβασις, an aſcent, 2 Chron. 9. 11. From hence Conradus Kircherus hath not improbably rendred סֶלָה (which we retain in the ſame ſound and letters Selah untranſlated) ſtratam; adding that it is ſet by Poets, Ut pes in ea eat & progrediatur longius, that the foot in the Metre and Muſick may proceed farther, and ſo the modulation of the ſong be compleated, which without it would be ſomewhat abrupt and imperfect. This I ſuppoſe alſo the meaning of thoſe that reſolve it meerly ſubſervient to the Muſick or Melody, and to have no influence on the ſenſe, but to remain, as to that, perfectly unſignificant. From hence therefore it is conſequent, that in Tranſlations where the Metre and Muſick is loſt, this expletive, which only refers to thoſe, ſhould be omitted alſo, and not inſerted in the rendring; which accordingly we ſee obſerved by moſt of the ancient Interpreters. In this firſt place where it is uſed, all but the LXXII. omit it, and they render it διάψαλμα, which, ſay Phavorinus and Suidas, is no more but μίλυς διαλλαγὴ, a note of ſome change in the ſong, not the beginning of ſome other Tune or Muſick, as ſome miſtake them, for when it concludes a Pſalm, (as it doth this) and when it is ſo oft repeated, (as it is thrice in this ſhort Pſalm, being yet not once mentioned in many other the longeſt) there is no place for this, but either ſome diviſion, a little to lengthen out the Tune, agreeable to Kirchers opinion of it, or an elevation of the voice, (according to the notion of ἀνάβασις, aſcent) as it is commonly underſtood from סָלַל in the notion of exaltavit. For διάψαλμα regularly ſignifies no more than a Muſical note, and every ſuch note we know is in propriety of ſpeech ἐναλλαγὴ μίλυς, a change of the modulation, as Wiſd. 19. 18. it is ſaid, ἐν Ψαλτηρίῳ φθόγγοι τῷ ῥυθμῷ τὸ ὄνομα διαλλάσσουσιν, in a Pſaltery the notes of the Muſick or Tune change the name, i. e. they vary every foot, and every ſuch variation hath a ſeveral name, Hypate, and Nete, &c. And this was all, I conceive, that either the LXXII. meant by διάψαλμα, or thoſe Gloſſaries in their Periphraſis of it: The other ancient Interpreters either, as I ſaid, omit it wholly, (as the vulgar (with the Arabick) and from thence our old Edition of the Pſalms, underſtanding it aright to be no more than a note of the Muſick, and therefore never taking any the leaſt notice of it in their verſions) or elſe render it by another expletive, as the Chaldee by לְעָלְמִין for ever, and ſo ſometimes the Syriack, which is another evidence that it is a word without any ſignification, ſave only to fill up the Metre or Muſick. In one place, Pſal. 9. 27. it hath הִגָּיוֹן prefixt (at the end of a period) higaion Selah, which which the LXXII. render διάψαλμα, and the Chaldee יְרַנְנוּן צַדִּיקַיָּא לְעָלְמִין the juſt ſhall rejoyce for ever; What the full importance of it is, will be ſoon diſcerned by remembring that הִגָּיוֹן and הֲגִיוֹן and the like, from הָגָה meditatus eſt, muſſitavit, garrivit, ſignifies not only meditation, (from whence the interlinear hath meditatio Selah) but alſo a Song or Melody, either a mournful one, an Elegy, (for ſuch were ſung) Ezech. 2. 10. rendred by the vulgar carmen, from the LXXII. μέλος, by the Chaldee הֲגִיגָא ſorrow or ſadneſs, or elſe a joyful one, Pſal. 92. 3. where the LXXII. read it ᾠδὴ, Song, the Chaldee רְנָנָא loud noiſe, from רָנַן vociferatus eſt, and ſo 'tis rendred by the LXXII, Pſal. 5. 1. κραυγὴ, cry. And ſo that alſo being joyned with Selah, denotes no more but the loudneſs of the voice or Muſick, which was required to the chanting of that note. For though the Chaldee thought fit to deſcant in their Paraphraſe, and allow it this intimation, that the judgments of God ſo remarkable on the wicked, were to be lookt on, and acknowledged by all good men, with great thankfulneſs and admiration, both of his Power and Providence; Yet the Vulgar, and Syriack, and Arabick wholly omit it, and the Septuagints ᾠδὴ being all one with κραυγὴ, cry, or loud voice, belongs only to the Note in the Song, and the loudneſs of it.

c. לְזַ V. 7. Cheek-bone] לְחִי and לְחִי here (as ordinarily in Arabick) ſignifies ſimply maxilla, the cheek, (the Verb in Arabick denotes checking, blaming, rebuking, Lahab allaho, God hath put him to ſhame, and Lahi lalo, confuſion be to him) and then ſtriking of that is an expreſſion of the greateſt reproach: So 1 King. 22. 24. when Zedekiah ſmote Micaiah on the cheek, ſaying, (by way of ſcorn) Which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me to ſpeak unto thee? So Job 16. 10. They have gaped on me with their mouth, (i. e. made mowes at me by way of deriſion) they have ſmitten me on the cheek reproachfully. And Lam. 3. 30. He giveth his cheek to him that ſmiteth him, he is filled with reproach. And ſo Matth. 5. as an expreſſion of that patience of contumelies that Chriſt now requireth of us, Whoſoever ſhall ſmite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other alſo. And ſo it is here but a proverbial phraſe to ſignifie putting to flight, for that is the moſt ſhameful and reproachful to an Army, to aſſault and not prevail, to be put to flight and diſcomfited. The Septuagint here read πάταξας πάντας τοὺς ἐχθραίνοντάς μοι μαλαίως, and from thence the Vulgar have adverſantes mihi ſine cauſâ, thou haſt ſmitten all that are my adverſaries without a cauſe, and 'tis generally conceived, that either they miſtook the Hebrew word, took לְחִי for an abbreviature of לְחִנָּם in vain, or elſe that their copies are corrupted, μαλαίως for μάσπας, i. e. maxillas, ſaith Schindler and others after him. But firſt the abbreviature or apocope hath no example. 2. There is no ſuch word as μάσπας. Μαδύας indeed there is, both in Heſychius and Phavorinus, μαδύαι γνάθοι, it ſignifies cheeks, but that a word ſeldom to be met with in Authors, never in all the Books of Scripture, the Septuagint generally uſing σιαγόνας for it. 3. It is certain the Vulgar Latine read μαλαίως not μαδύας, or elſe could have had no tentation to render it ſine cauſâ; And ſo did the Arabick and Æthiopick too, which render it (both of them) in vain, though the Chaldee and Syriack following the Hebrew render it cheeks. On theſe conſiderations it may ſeem more reaſonable to pay the LXXII. and thoſe other Tranſlations that due reſpect, as to think that they did not really miſread, or miſtake the Hebrew, but rather (as it is ordinary with all Interpreters) endeavoured to expreſs the meaning of the proverbial phraſe by more intelligible circumlocution, and this all but the Latine (which it ſeems did here follow, but did not well underſtand the Septuagint) have done happily enough. For what is ἐχθραίνειν μαλαίως, or which is all one, adverſari, or inimicari fruſtra? Why, literally to oppoſe or ſet upon in vain, i. e. uneffectually, to gain nothing by all their oppoſition, i. e. to be conſtantly repell'd and put to flight, turned back with ſhame in all their hoſtile Enterpriſes: And that is all that can be pretended to be meant by the phraſe in the Original, [Thou haſt ſmitten all mine enemies on the cheek] thou haſt put them to ſhame, or to flight reproachfully. And the ſame is the importance of the latter part of the verſe, thou haſt broken their teeth, the weapons by which Lions tear their prey, Pſal. 58. 6. and the breaking of which in that place is explained verſ. 7. by their falling away like waters that run continually; In their keeneſt and moſt terrible onſets they are diſſipated and put to flight; and that both the Hebrew and the Greek denotes alſo, שִׁבְרֵת ζωλεύσεις, breaking them into ſhivers or ſmalleſt pieces, which applied to an Army is the utter diſcomfiting of them.

The

The Fourth PSALM.

*Maſter of the ſtringed Inſtruments.

TO the [a]* Chief Muſician on Neginoth, a Pſalm of David.

Paraphraſe.

The fourth Pſalm was compoſed by David, poſſibly on the ſame occaſion (or a like) as the third, and by him commended to the Præcentor or Maſter of his Muſick, to be ſung to the ſtringed Inſtruments, the Pſaltery and Harp, &c. a.

1. [b] Hear me when I call, O God of my Righteouſneſs, thou haſt enlarged me when I was in diſtreſs, have mercy upon me and hear my prayer.

1. O merciful God, the only Author of all that is any way good in me, and the continual defender and ſupporter of my innocence, againſt all that have riſen up againſt me, I beſeech thee at this time to lend a favourable ear unto my Petitions: Thou haſt conſtantly given me relief in all my ſtraits, extricated me out of all my difficulties, be thou pleaſed now to make good thy wonted mercies toward me, and grant me deliverance at this time alſo. b.

2. O ye ſons of Men, how long will ye turn my [c] glory into ſhame? how long will ye love vanity, and ſeek after leaſing?

2. O you that calumniate me and my government, and by defamations endeavour to ſtir up the People againſt me (ſo did Abſalom II Sam. 15. 3.) will ye never give over ſo great a wickedneſs? will ye ſtill go on in lying and falſe ſpeaking? c.

3. But know that the Lord hath ſet apart him that is [d] godly for himſelf, the Lord will hear when I call unto him.

3. This you are to know, that God hath ſeparated me of his great mercy, and ſet me upon the Throne to be his Vicegerent upon earth, and conſequently to be employed in his ſpecial ſervices, and by ſo doing hath engaged himſelf to preſerve me in it, Pſ. 89. 21. which is my ground of moſt confident aſſurance that he will hearken to my prayers, and deliver me out of your hands. d. f.

*Be angry.

4. [e] * Stand in awe and ſin not, commune with your own heart upon your bed, and [f] be ſtill.

4. If you are diſpleaſed at my being King, ye are now to remember, that being ſet on the Throne by God, this diſpleaſure of yours cannot be ſeparated from Rebellion againſt God himſelf; Let this be matter of ſerious ſad examination, and diſcuſſion of conſcience to you, and ſo work compunction in you, perſwade you to quit your hoſtile deſigns, and yield ſubjection where it is due. e.

5. Offer the [g] Sacrifices of righteouſneſs, and put your truſt in the Lord.

5. And then upon your change you may moſt ſeaſonably render ſolemn thanks to God for your time of repentance, and eſcape out of ſo deſperate an enterpriſe, bleſs and praiſe him, and adhere to him conſtantly for the future. g.

6. There be many that ſay, Who will ſhew us any good? Lord [h] lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.

6. Some are apt to be diſcouraged, and deſpair in this diſtreſs, the appearance of the Enemy is ſo formidable, and our preparations for reſiſtance ſo ſmall; But I have a ſure fortreſs that cannot fail, the favour of God eſpouſing my cauſe, and ſupporting me, and this is all that remains for us to take care of, by continual ardent prayer to invoke his help, and chearfully to depend on it. h.

7. Thou haſt put gladneſs in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine encreaſed.

7. This ſecurity of thy favour alone, is matter of greater exultation to me, then to worldlings is, or can be moſt plentiful harveſt, wherein yet they are wont to rejoyce to profuſely (and on confidence thereof to be ſo ſecure for the time to come, Luk. 12. 19.) that the greateſt joy is proverbially ſtiled, the joy in harveſt. i.

*Together, alſo יַחַד

8. I will * both lay me down in peace, and ſleep, for thou Lord only makeſt me dwell in ſafety.

8. I therefore as well as they will have my rejoycing alſo, as they in confidence of their full barns, ſo I in my reliance on the ſole providence of Heaven; In which confidence I can ſleep ſecurely, repoſe my ſelf in him, to whom alone all my ſafety is due, and whoſe only guard is, without all ſollicitude or preparations of mine, abundantly ſufficient for me. k.

Annotations on Pſal. IV.

8. Tit. Chief Muſician.] The Hebrew נָצַח ſignifies to urge or preſs to the performing any work or task, and properly belongs to the ἐργοδιώκτης, the overſeer and follower of workmen of any kind. So 2 Chron. 2. 2. where Solomons workmen are numbred, there are alſo MMM מְנַצְּחִים עֲלֵיהֶם which the LXXII. there rightly render ἐπισάτας αὐτῶν, Præfects over them, and v. 18. ἐργοδιώκτας, taskmaſters, and c. 34. 12. ἐπίσκοποι, overſeers, (though v. 13. and Ezr. 3. 8, 9. the Copies have ἐπὶ τῶν ποιούντων, over the workmen only) and where the ſame thing is ſet down again, 1 Kin. v. 16. they are called הַמְנַצְּבִים אֲשֶׁר עַל הַמְּלָאכָה, and in the LXXII καθεσταμένοι ἐπὶ τῶν ἔργων, ſet over his works. The word is uſed more particularly of Muſicians. To this purpoſe ſee 1 Chro. 15. 21. where after the appointing of Singers with inſtruments, &c. v. 16. 19, 20. Mattathiah, &c. are appointed לְנַצֵּחַ, we render it, to excell, but in the margin, to overſee, i.e. to take care of, and order the Muſick (as Neh. 12. 42. Jezrahiah is the Overſeer הַפְקִיד of the ſingers.) And from hence is the word לַמְנַצֵּחַ here, to the Maſter, or Ruler, or Præfect. Of whom, or over what he was præfected, is here alſo expreſt בִּנְגִינוֹת over the Muſical Inſtruments. Thus נגן ſignifies, and thus we have נְגִנִים, Pſal. 67. 25. the minſtrels or players on Inſtruments differenced from the Singers foregoing. And then the whole phraſe לַמְנַצֵּחַ בִּנְגִינוֹת

בְּנִגִינוֹת put together, here ſignifies perſpicuouſly [To the Præfect of the muſical Inſtruments] ſuch there were, more then one, among Davids Officers, that waited on the Ark, 1 Chron. 15. 21. And to one of theſe this Pſalm was committed by David, to be ſung and plaid to in divine ſervice. The ſame we find again, Hab. 3. 19. לַמְנַצֵּחַ בִּנְגִינוֹתָו To the Præfect or Maſter of my ſtringed Inſtruments. From this ſenſe of this word נָצַח urſit, coegit, inſtitit, there is a ſecondary uſe of it for finire to end, and from thence we have לָנֶצַח Pſal. 103. 9. rightly rendred εἰς τέλος, unto the end, and again, vincere and triumphare to overcome and triumph. And from thoſe two notions the LXXII. have taken their riſe of rendring it here, εἰς τὸ τέλος, to the end, and νικῆσαι, to overcome in the Concluſion of Habakkuk (in like manner, as Aquila hath νικοποιῷ, here) and 1 Chron. 15. 21. ἐνισχύσαι, to prevail, but have loſt the ſenſe in all theſe places, and only hit it 2 Chr. 2. 2. and 18. and 34. 12. where, as hath been ſaid, they render it ἐπισκέπτας, overſeers, or præfectis, ſet over the workmen, and ἐργοδιώκτας, taſkmaſters, and ἐπισκόπους, overſeers.

b. עַנֵּנִי V. 1. Hear me.] The Hebrew עַנֵּנִי is certainly the Imperative, and ſo is uſed Pſal. 27. 7. and therefore muſt be rendred [hear, or anſwer me] and thus the Chaldee underſtood it, and paraphraſe it, In time of my prayer, קַבֵּל מִנִּי receive from me, by which alſo they render שְׁמַע hear or hearken, in the latter end of the verſe. But the LXXII. and from thence the other Antient Interpreters, ſeem to have read עָנָנִי in the Preter tenſe, and ſo render ἐπήκουσε μου, he hath heard me, and accordingly the Greek Fathers, St. Chryſoſtome eſpecially, have obſerved Gods ſpeed in hearing the prayers of pious men, even before they have made an end of them, μὴ τῆ τάχει τῆς εὐχῆς τὴν αὐτησιν λαβεῖν, for it is not, ſaith he, When, or After I had prayed he heard me, but ἐν τῷ ἐπικαλεῖσθαί με, when I prayed in the preſent, he hath heard me already in the time paſt, ἔτι λαλοῦντός σου ἐρῶ, ἰδοὺ πάρειμι, whilſt thou ſpeakeſt or ſayeſt, I will ſay, Behold here am I, as he cites it from Iſai. 58. 9. concluding, that it is not our multitude of words that is wont to perſwade with God, ἀλλὰ καθαρὰ ψυχὴ καὶ ἔργων ἀγαθῶν ἐπίδειξις, but a pure ſoul, and the ſhewing forth of good works. A Doctrine of moſt comfortable truth, but not founded in the Hebrew reading here.

c. כְּבוֹדִי V. 2. My glory.] The Hebrew עַד מָה כְּבוֹדִי לִכְלִמָּה how long my glory into ignominy] is elliptical, but eaſily ſupplied, and made intelligible, thus, How long will you reproach my glory, by [glory] meaning his regal power and majeſty which God had beſtowed on him. This the LXXII. render ſomewhat otherwiſe, ἕως πότε βαρυκάρδιοι, ἵνα τί ἀγαπᾶτε, How long are ye heavy hearted, why do ye love vanity? By this phraſe βαρυκάρδιοι, poſſibly explicating (as in a periphraſis) the great hardneſs of heart in Abſalom and the like, who would defame ſo worthy a perſon, as David, approved and anointed by God, and would not be overcome or melted with his goodneſs; or perhaps reading the Hebrew ſomewhat otherwiſe than now we do, לְכְלִמָּה עַד מָה כְּבוֹדִי לֵב חֹאֲהֵבוֹן to which their rendring will be literal, and the variation not very great, reading לְכְלִמָּה in two words, and converting כ into ב; which way ſoever it is, 'tis evident the vulgar Latine follow them uſque quò graves corde ut quid—and the Arabick and Æthiopick to the ſame purpoſe.

d. חָסִיד V. 3. Godly.] The acception of חָסִיד in this, and ſome other places, deſerves here to be obſerved. It ſignifies ordinarily a pious, or charitable, and beneficent perſon. But when it is ſpoken of Man, referring to God, it notes one that hath received favour or mercy from him, and is all one with κεχαριτωμένος, one that hath found favour with God. ‖ So Pſal. 16. 10. Thou ſhalt not ſuffer חֲסִידְךָ him, that is ſo favoured by thee, to ſee corruption. So Pſal. 30. 4. Sing unto the Lord חֲסִידָיו ye that have felt his mercy and bounty. And ſo here David, ſeeing fit, in his plea againſt his enemies, who blaſted him as a Man of Blood, and a guilty perſon, to inſiſt on Gods election, and advancement of him to the Kingdom, (noted by חָפְלָה hath ſeparated to a function, the Chaldee reads פְּרַשׁ, in the ſame ſence, as ἀφορίζειν, in the New Teſt. denotes ſetting apart to the Apoſtolical Function, Act. 13. 2.) and ſo referring to theſe words of Gods Teſtimony, 1 Sam. 13. 14. The Lord hath ſought him a Man after his own heart, and hath commanded him to be Captain over his people, he chooſes to uſe that more modeſt form of חָסִיד an Eleemoſynary, or beadsman, that God hath advanced and choſen to this great dignity. This is in a like ſtyle ſet down, Pſal. 78. 70. He choſe David alſo his ſervant, and took him from the ſheep-fold, From following the Ewes great with young he took him, that he might feed Jacob his people, &c. and Pſalm 89. 20. I have found David my ſervant, with my holy oyl have I anointed him. Of this ſee more Pſal. 86. note a.

e. רִגְזוּ V. 4. Stand in awe.] What רִגְזוּ ſignifies here might be ſomewhat uncertain, had not the Apoſtle Eph. 4. given us the meaning of it, רָגַז denoting commotion either of the body or mind, doth in the latter acception import two things eſpecially, fear and anger, thoſe two principal commotions of the mind. In that of anger we have it, Gen. 45. 24. where we render it falling out, or quarrelling, and 2 Kin. 19. 27, 28. in both which we render it rage. So Prov. 29. 9. And ſo Gen. 41. 10. the Hebrew קָצַף (affirmed of Pharaoh, viz. that) he was wrath, is by the Chaldee rendered רְגַז. And this is much the more frequent acception of it in the Old Teſtament. And thus the Septuagint underſtood it here (and with them the vulgar Latine, Syriack, Arabick, and Æthiopick) rendering it ὀργίζεσθε, and from thence in the ſame words the Apoſtle makes uſe of the place Eph. 4. 26. Ὀργίζεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε, Be angry and ſin not, i. e. when ye are angry take care that ye do not ſin, which that it is no allowance of ὀργὴ, anger there, but only a ſuppoſing it preſent, and a forewarning of the dangerous effects of it, See note on Eph. 4. 9. and that is more evident by comparing it with this Text, where their diſpleaſure againſt Gods Anointed, David, the firſt riſe of their Rebellion, was certainly a great ſin in them.

f. דֹּמּוּ V. 5. Be ſtill.] The Hebrew דֹּמּוּ from דָּמַם ſiluit, conquievit, ceſſavit, ſignifies in relation to actions as well as words, and ſo denotes a ceſſation from what they were before doing, which to thoſe that were before about any ill, is repentance, to thoſe which were up in arms, ſubmiſſion, or quiet ſubjection. And thus 'tis rendered here by the Septuagint καταννύγητε, (and to that the vulgar agree) compunction, or contrition, as that is taken for amendment, the effect of godly ſorrow, and ſo the Arabick more explicitly, Let it repent you, and the Chaldee, that paraphraſes that part of the verſe at large [Say your prayer with your mouth, and your petition with your heart, and pray upon your bed, and remember the day of death] inſtead of דֹּמּוּ reads כְּבַשׁוּ יִצְרְכוֹן ſubdue, quiet, tame your deſires or concupiſcences, and then connects with that the ſubſtance ſtance of all the following verſe thus, Subdue your concupiſcences, and then it ſhall be reputed to you for a ſacrifice of righteouſneſs—— Agreeably whereto ‖ St. Chryſoſtome, Δικαιοσύνην προσφερε τοῦτο μέγιστον θῦμα ἐστιν, ἀυλὴ θυσία δικαία—ὁ τὰ πρόβατα θύειν—ἀλλὰ τὰ δίκαια πρᾶττειν—ὅπου περ ἦς, θύειν ἀνάγκη, θυσίαν ἀνάγκη ἱερεὺς ᾖ θυσιαστήριον, ᾖ μάχαιρα ᾖ ἱερεῖον γινόμενον, Offer righteouſneſs, this is the greateſt gift, this is the acceptable ſacrifice to God, not to ſlay ſheep——but to do what is juſt; Whereſoever thou art, thou mayeſt offer this, thy ſelf being the Prieſt, the Altar, the Knife, and the Sacrifice.

V. 5. Sacrifices of righteouſneſs.] וּבִטְחוּ זִבְחֵי צֶדֶק ſacrifices of righteouſneſs here do moſt probably ſignifie the peace offering, or oblation of thankſgiving for deliverance. We have the phraſe again, Pſal. li. 19. where it is contradiſtinguiſht to כָּלִיל the holocauſt. And there is reaſon for this appellation, becauſe the ſin was firſt to be atoned by the ſin-offering, and thereby the perſon reſtored to ſome ſtate of righteouſneſs, ere he attempted the other. And withall, it was lawful for a Gentile worſhipper, a proſelyte of the gates to preſent a ſin-offering, but the peace-offering, זֶבַח תּוֹדָה the ſacrifice of praiſe, none but the גֵּר צֶדֶק proſelyte of righteouſneſs might be allowed to bring. And ſo it is fitly recommended here, as a conſequent of reformation.

g. וּבִטְחוּ זִבְחֵי צֶדֶק

V. 6. Lift up.] The Hebrew נָסָה lift up, is here rendred ἐσημειώθη, by the Septuagint, and ſo by the Latine, ſignatum eſt, referring to a banner, or ſtandard, or inſigne, in Greek σημεῖον, in Hebrew נֵס which is wont to be exalted, or lifted up, from נָסַס evexit, exaltavit. Indeed נָסָה the word here uſed is not ſo uſual in the Hebrew tongue: but inſtead of it נָשָׂא with שׁ and א, and ſo the Chaldee here hath it; And therefore the LXXII. had ſome ground for their change, and no doubt meant to ſignifie by it, the great ſecurity which is enjoyed by Gods favour (meant by the light, i.e. chearfulneſs, pleaſantneſs of his countenance towards us, as they that favour others, look pleaſantly on them,) viz. the ſame that from an inſigne or banner, the ſtrongeſt military preparations, and thus it lies very conſonant to what went before. Davids viſible ſtrength, and military preparations were ſo ſmall, comparatively with thoſe of his enemies, that they that look't on, were ready to deſpair of victory. But as Eliſha in the Mount to his unbelieving intimidated ſervant, ſhewed him a viſion of Horſes and Chariots round about them, and ſo more on their, than on the enemies ſide, ſo David here to thoſe fearful objectors oppoſes the favour of God, as a banner or inſign, that hath a whole Army belonging to it, i.e. all ſecurity attending it.

The Fifth PSALM.

‖ Praefect for ſucceſſive voices.

TO the ‖ chief Muſitian upon [a] Nehiloth, a Pſalm of David.

Paraphraſe. a. This Fifth Pſalm was indited by David on conſideration of his many enemies, eſpecially his undermining Son Abſalom, who by flattering the people, and ſlandering him, ſought to get the Crown from him. And by him it was committed to the Maſter of his Muſick to be ſung by the whole Quire in parts, one voice following another.

‖ underſtand my ſighing, or cry. ‖ Supplication שַׁוְעִי Heb. בְּעוֹתַי Chald. רְחִישׁוֹ. LXXII. Orationis. Lat.

1. Give eare to my words, O Lord, ‖ conſider my [b] meditation.

1. O merciful Lord, vouchſafe to hearken to my prayer, to weigh the groanings of my ſoul, and relieve my wants. b.

‖ diſpoſe or prepare, wait or ſtand ready for, or before thee, אֶעֶרֹךְ לְךָ Heb. אַסְדַּר קְרָמָךְ Chal. παρασήσομαί σοι. LXXII. aſtabo tibi Lat.

2. Hearken to the voice of my ‖ cry, my King and my God, for unto thee will I pray.

2. Thou art my King to defend, my God to vindicate the power, which thou haſt communicated to me. To thee therefore it belongs to grant my requeſts, and all that remains for me, is to addreſs them conſtantly and importunately to thee.

‖ direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up.

3. My voice ſhalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord, in the morning will I

3. The Firſt-fruits and prime care of the day ſhall be to addreſs and preſent my heart, and prayer before thee, with my eyes fixt on heaven, after the mode of an earneſt petitioner, that waits, and never means to move, till his requeſts are granted. And thou O Lord anſwerably wilt be pleaſed, I doubt not to make the ſame ſpeed to receive that addreſs of mine, to hearken to, and grant my prayer.

4. For thou art not a God that hath pleaſure in wickedneſs, neither ſhall ‖ evil [c] dwell with thee.

4. Of this I have full confidence, when I conſider how impoſſible 'tis for thee to favour Rebellion or any ſort of wickedneſs, ſuch as mine enemies now practice againſt me, (‖ that is the part of falſe and Idol Gods, i.e. of Devils) or to abett, or indeed endure, or not oppoſe them that deſign ſo great a wickedneſs. A ſtranger if he undertake not ſome degree of Proſelytiſme, if he renounce not his Idolatry, is not permitted to abide, or ſojourn, or even to be a ſlave among thy people. How much leſs then ſhall any wicked man be endured in thy preſence? c.

6. And therein as in the Court and Palace of thy Sacred Majeſty, to proſtrate my ſoul before thee, with all poſſible humility, care and reverence.

7. But as for me, I will come into thy houſe in the multitude of thy mercy, in thy fear will I worſhip || toward thy holy Temple.

8. And it ſhall be a ſpecial part of my requeſt unto thee, O Lord, that by the conduct of thy grace I may be directed and aſſiſted in keeping ſtrictly and cloſe to all thy commands; that thoſe that hate me moſt, and obſerve me moſt diligently, on purpoſe to get ſome advantage againſt me, may find nothing to quarrel or accuſe in me. To which end, Lord, do thou give me a clear ſight of my duty, and incline my heart to walk exactly, and ſo acceptably before thee.

2. הַנְּחִילוֹת

Tit. Nehiloth] The word הַנְּחִילוֹת being an ἅπαξ λεγόμενον, but this one time found in the whole Bible, we can but divine at the ſignification of it, having no certain guide to rely on for it. Lexicographers ſay, 'tis an eminent Muſical Inſtrument, and the word being of affinity both with נַחַל a torrent, or running river, and with נְחָלָה a bee, it is by ſome deemed to have the name from the one or the other, as imitating the murmurs of either of them: Some have derived it from חָלַל perforavit, and then it muſt ſignifie a hollow wind-inſtrument, Thus indeed חָלִיל ſignifies a pipe, or flute, or timbrel, and the verb חָלַל to play on a pipe, &c. but נָחִיל is no where uſed in this ſenſe. The regular way of deriving it, and that which is allowed by Lexicographers, is from נָחַל hæres fuit, hæreditate aut ſucceſſione accepit, and is oft rendered by the LXXII. μεριζω, διαμεριζω, καταμεριζω, dividing or diſtributing into parts, but moſt frequently κληρονομεω, ſucceeding to by inheritance. And in this notion it may poſſibly ſignifie a ſong or hymn, divided to be ſung in parts, as in Quires it is ordinary, one ſort of voices ſucceeding where the other ends, and ſo dividing it betwixt them, taking it up one from the other, the Tenor from the Trebble and the like. That in this notion the LXXII. underſtood it, is probable by their rendring it ὑπὲρ τῆς κληρονομιᾶσης, for the inheritor, i. e. for that kind of Muſick that inherits, or takes up ſucceſſively, one part of the quire from the other, and ſo the Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick, all which muſt be conceived to have rendred the phraſe intelligibly, and yet 'twill be hard to aſſign any other ſenſe of their rendring, [pro eâ quæ hæreditatem conſequitur, and de hæreditate] ſave this. And then the Chaldee's לְשַׁבְּחָא עַל חַנָּנִין to be ſung on, or by the Quires, agrees very well with it alſo, one part of the Quire ſinging one verſe, the other another, and ſo ſucceeding and taking up one from the other, and dividing it betwixt them, which is the obvious notation of נָחַל. And ſo this notion ſeems to agree to the ſenſe of all the Antient Tranſlators, But 'tis yet moſt probable, which Kimchi hath reſolved on Pſal. 3. that Nechiloth was the name of a tune; and then 'tis as probable, that this tune took its name from Heritage, or ſomewhat of that kind, in the ſong that was firſt ſet to that tune, and ſo all the Antient rendrings will be ſalved by that means.

V. 1. Meditation.]

b. חֲנִינִי

V. 1. Meditation.] חֲנִינִי from הָמָה gemuit, ſonuit, regularly ſignifies ſighing or cry, not a loud ſonorus voice, but ſuch as complaints are made in; ſo Iſa. 38. 14. אֲהֻגֶּה I mourned, the Chaldee reads נְהֵמִית I ſighed as a dove, and ſo the LXXII. here render it κραυγὴν, cry, and ſo the Latine and Æthiopick, and Arabick; And though it ſignifie alſo Metaphorically the ſpeech not of the mouth, but of the heart, (οὐ τὸν τόνον τῆς φωνῆς, ἀλλὰ τῆς διαθέσεως τὴν διάνοιαν, ſaith ‖ Chryſoſtome, not the lifting up of the voice, but the diſpoſition of the mind, as when God ſaid to Moſes, Why cryeſt thou unto me? when he ſaid nothing) and ſo is moſt frequently rendred μελετάω, to meditate; yet when it is ſo rendred, it is oft in the ſence of ſpeaking, as Pſal. 35. 28. γλῶσσά μου μελετήσει, my tongue ſhall meditate, we rightly render it, ſpeak of righteouſneſs, and ſo Pſal. 37. 30. the mouth of the righteous μελετήσει, ſhall meditate, certainly that is, ſhall ſpeak wiſdom. So Pſal. 71. 24. Prov. 8. 7. Iſa. 38. 14. 59. 3. 13. and elſewhere 'tis φωνέω, to ſpeak, Pſal. 115. 7. and even βοάω, to cry, or roare as a Lyon doth, Iſa. 31. 4. and elſewhere μέλος and ᾠδὴ ſong or melody, both of them ſounds uttered and not kept in the mind. And to this agrees the Chaldee alſo, rendring it רְגוּגִי either in the notion of deſire, or of fremitus of making a noiſe, both which רָנַן ſignifies in the Chaldee.

c. יְנֻרָךְ

V. 4. Dwell.] יְנֻרָךְ from גור peregrinatus eſt, is beſt rendred ſojourn, or make a ſhort abode. From hence is גֵּר and גִּיור a gueſt, or ſtranger, which the Greek have transform'd into γειώς & γηωεὰς, and it belongs to a Proſelyte, one of any Heathen Nation, that lived among the Jews. Of theſe ſome renounced Idolatry, and undertook the ſeven Precepts of the ſons of Adam and Noah, and theſe were גֵּרֵי שַׁעַר ſtrangers, or proſelytes of the gate, and ſuch might live amongſt them, others undertook their whole Law and were Proſelytes of righteouſneſs. And to theſe Rules of not admitting any ſtrangers, but on one of theſe conditions, the Pſalmiſt ſeems here to refer. The wicked man רָע is all one in effect with an Heathen Idolater, and therefore as ſuch an one muſt not dwell, or ſojourn among the Jews, (the Captive Slave, if after a years abode he renounce not his Idolatry, was to be ſlain,) ſo לֹא יְנֻרָךְ רָע the wicked man ſhall not ſojourn with thee, ſhall be ſo far from being favoured by thee, that he ſhall not be allowed the leaſt abode in thy preſence. רָע

d. לְפָנַי דַּרְכֶּךָ

V. 5. Thy way.] The Hebrew לְפָנַי דַּרְכֶּךָ muſt literally be rendered [thy way before my face] yet the LXXII. have ἐνώπιον σου τὴν ὁδόν μου, my way before thy face, and thence ſome learned Men are perſwaded that they read otherwiſe than we do לְפָנֶיךָ דַּרְכִּי But 'tis more reaſonable to believe that they did thus (by way of periphraſis, not literal rendring) endeavour to expreſs the meaning of it, it being the prime aime of that Prayer which petitions Gods clear revelation of his will, or making his way ſtraight before us, that we might thereby be directed and aſſiſted to walk exactly, and ſo approve our wayes to God. This latter indeed comprehending the former, Gods directing and aſſiſting, preſuppoſing his illuminating grace, the revelation of his will: and therefore it is duly here uſed by the LXXII. the more fully to expreſs it, and the end of it. And herein the Arabick and Æthiopick and vulgar Latine, as they are wont, follow the Septuagint, and therefore our Paraphraſe hath taken notice of both. In the former part of this verſe the Chaldee ſeems to have much miſtaken, reading שׁוּרַרַי my enemies, (which comes from שָׁרַר obſervavit, becauſe enemies are ſpyes, and obſerve critically what they may find fault with) in a very diſtant ſenſe, תּוּשְׁבְּחָתִי my praiſe, as if it came from שור and denoted a canticle or hymn of praiſe, but herein as the context doth reſiſt, ſo doth not any one of the antient verſions favour them. שׁוּרַרַי

Paraphraſe.

The ſixth Pſalm was pen'd by David on ſome occaſion of ſpecial humiliation, for the * confeſſion of his ſins, and averting Gods wrath: This he directed the Maſter of his Muſick to be ſung † upon the Harp of eight ſtrings (ſuch as is mentioned 1 Chron. 15. 21.) and fitted it for it.

TO the ‖ chief Muſitian on Neginoth † upon Sheminеth, A Pſalm of David.

1. O Lord rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chaſten me in thy hot diſpleaſure.

1. O God of mercy, which art ſlow to wrath, and long-ſuffering to ſinners, and deſirous to be reconciled, I confeſs and lighteſt far more in their reformation than their miſery, I beſeech thee not to deal with me, as moſt juſtly thou mighteſt, in wrath and fury, but in mercy to withdraw thy heavy hand of puniſhment, which I have ſo juſtly provoked, and now lie under.

2. Have mercy upon me O Lord, for I am weak, O Lord help me for [a] my bones are ‖ vexed.

2. O Lord I have by my ſoul ſins wounded my ſoul, and brought it down into a moſt languiſhing terrible condition, provoked thee to withdraw thy grace, and give me up to the effects of thy diſpleaſure, This is a ſad diſeaſe, and of the worſt condition, even of the ſoul, wherewith thou art pleaſed alſo that my body, or outward condition ſhould bear conſent. And in all this 'tis I that have thus diſeaſed my ſelf, diſturbed and miſerably waſted the health of my ſoul, which conſiſts in an exact conformity of my deſires and actions to thy will. And now there is no remedy left but one, that of thy pardon and gratious forgiveneſs, pouring thy wine and oile and healing balſom into my gaping wounds, and this moſt ſeaſonable mercy I beſeech thee to beſtow upon me. 2.

אֵימָתַי רְוַח לִי

Chald. how long wilt thou defer to give me ſome refreſhing?
† Confeſs or praiſe thee, יוֹדֶה לָךְ

3. My ſoul is alſo ſore vexed, but thou, O Lord, how long?

3. The diſquiet and torment hereof doth pierce my ſoul, there are the ſharpeſt arrows of thy diſpleaſure fixt, and afflict me exceedingly, Lord that it might be at length thy ſeaſon to aſſwage thy wrath, to ſpeak peace to me, to afford me ſome † refreſhing which I cannot hope from any other hand.

4. Lord be thou pacified and reconciled to me, and by that means reſcue me out of this ſad condition, wherein I am involved, under the weight of my ſin and thy diſpleaſure. And though there be in me no means to propitiate, but only to avert and provoke thee, yet let thine own mercy, and free bounty of grace have the glory of it; reflect on that, and from thence work this deliverance for me.

4. Return O Lord, deliver my ſoul, O ſave me for thy mercies ſake.

5. For ſhouldeſt thou now proceed to take away my life, as it were a moſt direful condition for me to die before I have propitiated thee, ſo I may well demand, what increaſe of glory or honor will it bring unto thee? will it not be infinitely more glorious for thee to ſpare me, till by true contrition I may regain thy favour; and then I may live to praiſe, and magnifie thy mercy, and thy grace, thy mercy in pardoning ſo great a ſinner, and then confeſs thee by vital actions of all holy obedience for the future, and ſo demonſtrate the power of thy grace, which hath wrought this change in me; Neither of which will be done by deſtroying me, but only thy juſt judgments manifeſted in thy vengeance on ſinners.

5. For in death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who will ‖ give thee thanks?

6. The ſadneſs of my preſent condition, under the weight of thy diſpleaſure, and the grievous effects thereof, is ſuch, as extorts thoſe groans from me, which (inſtead of eaſing) do only increaſe my torment. The night which is the appointed ſeaſon of reſt, is to me the time of greateſt diſquiet, my agonies extort whole rivers of tears from me, and the conſideration of my horrible ſins, the cauſes of them, gives me not one minute of intermiſſion.

6. I am weary with my groaning. All the night make I my bed to ſwim; I water my couch with my tears.

7. The tears which the thought of thy continual diſpleaſure and puniſhments inceſſantly draws from me, have corroded, and even exhauſted the animal ſpirits, that maintain my ſight, make mine eyes very dim, above what is proportionable to my age, and ſtill there remains a ſucceſſion of new ſorrows, to mind me of my ſucceſſive ſins; one enemy after another ſtill riſeth up againſt me.

7. Mine eye is ‖ conſumed becauſe of †grief, it waxeth old becauſe of all mine ‖ enemies.

8. Whilſt I thus bemoan my ſelf before ſo gracious a God, I cannot but with confidence look up; and expect his ſpeedy return unto my Prayers, and conſequently aſſure my ſelf, that all the deſigns of my rebellious enemies ſhall be utterly fruſtrated by him.

8. Depart from me all ye workers of iniquity, for the Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping.

9. He that hath promiſed not to deſpiſe a broken heart, to comfort the mourner, he whoſe title it is to be the hearer of prayers, the vindicator of the innocent, will certainly make good theſe promiſes to me at this time, in pardoning my ſins, and averting theſe puniſhments from me.

9. The Lord hath heard the voice of my ſupplication, the Lord ‖ will receive my prayer.

10. And therefore I am moſt confident that all my oppoſers ſhall be diſcomfited, and ſent back ſucceſsleſs in their preſent deſign, and how confident ſoever now they appear, they ſhall very ſuddenly be routed and put to confuſion, and utterly diſappointed in their enterprize.

a. עַצְמַי

V. 2. My bones.] The chief difficulty in this verſe will be removed by conſidering the meaning of עַצְמַי which we render my bones, and ſo indeed it often ſignifies from עָצַם robuſtus or fortis fuit, but not only ſo, but in a greater latitude, the members of the body, and then the body it ſelf, nay the ſubſtance or being, and not only the body, as Job. 11. 5. עַצְמוֹ his bone, or body, is by the Chaldee rendred לְגַרְמֵיהּ himſelf, in oppoſition to his goods and family, which had been toucht ſharply, Chap. 1. And ſo among the Rabbines עַצְמָם, is oft uſed for ipſimet, themſelves (ſee Note on Rom. 6. a.) It being an ordinary figure among the Hebrews, to expreſs a thing by the names of the parts of it. Thus Pſal. 35. 10. All my bones ſhall ſay, Lord who is like unto thee, where certainly the bones which ſay, and praiſe God, are to ſignifie the Pſalmiſt himſelf his tongue, and heart, and every part of him. And ſo here being in conjunction with [I am weak] and my ſoul is ſore vexed, v. 3. it is but a Poetical expreſſion, my bones, i.e. every part of my body. Now the word נִבְהֲלוּ which we render vexed, from בָּהַל in Niphal, ſignifies any ſudden commotion, or diſturbance, or trembling, and ſo being joyned with weak אֻמְלַל languiſhing from אָמַל to be ſick or faint (and ſo weak in the notion of ἀσθενῶν, in the New Teſtament, See Note on Rom. viii. m. and Gal. 4. a.) it muſt ſignifie a ſore affliction, perhaps literally a diſeaſe, a terrible ſhaking fit, as of a Paralytick, and this being founded in, and ſo including alſo his ſin, the malady of the ſoul, which is likewiſe called ἀσθένεια, weakneſs (ſee 1 Cor. 8. Note 6.) the whole verſe is the doleful deſcription of him that hath committed any waſting ſin, and being caſt down under Gods puniſhments for it, is paſſionately ſuing out Gods pardon, the only means poſſible to recover or heal him again.

V. 10. Let all my enemies.] All the Antient Interpreters underſtand this laſt verſe of the diſcomfiture and confuſion of Davids enemies: יְכֻהָתוּן ſaith the Chaldee, they ſhall be confounded] both in the beginning and end of the verſe; and the Syriack inſtead of the latter hath ܢܬܒܗܬܘ periſh] and the LXXII. their [ἀισχυνθείησαν, let them be made aſhamed] is to the ſame purpoſe: and whereas ſome Copies have for יָשֻׁבוּ ἐπιστραφείησαν. which might incline to the rendring it of their converſion, or repentance (whereto the Latine convertantur may ſeem to ſound) yet Aſulanus's Impreſſion and others have ἀποστραφείησαν, let them be repulſed, and others more largely ἀποστραφείησαν εἰς τὰ ὀπίσω, let them be turned backward, and ſo the Arabick reads it, which muſt needs belong to their flight. That they put it in that mood of wiſhing, is ordinary with them, when yet the Hebrew is in the Indicative future ſenſe, יֵבֹשׁוּ, they ſhall be put to ſhame, and ſo forward. And this ſurely beſt connects with the former verſe, the Lord hath heard; the Lord will receive my prayer; and then as an effect of that, All mine enemies ſhall be confounded, &c.

The

The Seventh PSALM.

‖ A Pſalm or Song.

‖ [a] Shiggaion of David which he ſang unto the Lord concerning the words of Cuſh [b] the Benjamite.

Paraphraſe.

a. b. The Seventh is ſtiled by a peculiar title, not elſewhere uſed in this Book, which yet ſignifies no more than a Song or Pſalm of David, a pleaſant delightful ditty, being indeed a cheerful commemoration of Gods continued kindneſs to, and care of him, and a magnifying his Name for it, together with a confident affirmation or prediction, that his enemies ſhall but bring ruine on themſelves, by deſigning to miſchief him: and this he ſang unto the Lord on occaſion of ſome malicious words, delivered by ſome ſervant of Saul, ſtirring him up againſt David, 1 Sam. 26. 19. (The Chaldee Paraphraſt miſunderſtands it as an interpretation of his Song made on the death of Saul, to vindicate his no ill meaning in it, v. 3.)

1. O Lord my God, in thee do I put my truſt, ſave me from all them that perſecute me, and deliver me.

1. Thy many continued deliverances and wonderful protections, which aſſure me of thy ſpecial kindneſs toward me, make me to come to thee with affiance and confidence, and to appeal only to thy peculiar favour, and thy almighty power, ſo frequently intereſſed for me, and upon this account to importune and depend on thee for my preſent reſcue from all my perſecuters and oppoſers.

2. Leſt he tear my ſoul like a Lion, renting it in pieces, while there is none to deliver me.

2. Shouldſt thou withdraw thy aid one hour, I were utterly deſtitute; and then as the Lion in the wilderneſs prevails over the beaſt he next meets, ſeiſes on him for his prey, kills and devours him infallibly, there being none in that place to reſcue him out of his paws, the ſame fate muſt I expect from Saul, my rageful implacable enemy.

3. O Lord my God, if I have done this, if there be iniquity in my hand,

3. I am accuſed to Saul as one that ſeeks his ruine, 1 Sam. 24. 9. reproached by Nabal that I have revolted from him, 1 Sam. 25. 10. and that ſhews me that by many I am lookt on as an injurious perſon. But O Lord, thou knoweſt my integrity, that I am in no wiſe guilty of theſe things, I have not done the leaſt injury to him; I may juſtly repeat what I ſaid to him, 1 Sam. 26. 18. What have I done, or what evil is in my hand?

‖ that did it to me, or have deſpoiled——

4. If I have [c] rewarded evil to him ‖ that was at peace with me: yea, I have delivered him that without cauſe is my enemy.

c. 4. I have never provoked him by beginning to do him injury, nor when I have been very ill uſed, returned any evil to the injurious: he is my enemy without any the leaſt cauſe or provocation of mine; and being ſo, I yet never acted any revenge upon him, but on the contrary in a ſignal manner ſpared him twice, when he fell into my hands, 1 Sam. 24. 4, 7. and c. 26. 9, 23. If this be not in both parts exactly true,

‖ cauſe my honour to dwell יִשְׁכֹּן

5. Let the enemy perſecute my ſoul and take it, yea, let him tread down my life upon the earth, and ‖ lay mine honour in the duſt.

5. I ſhall be content to undergo any puniſhment, even that he that now purſues me ſo malitiouſly, obtein his deſire upon me, overtake, and uſe me in the moſt reproachful manner, and pour out my heart-blood upon the earth.

‖ in, or over, See Note c. † raiſe up for me the judgment וְעוּרָה אֵלַי the Chaldee read סַהֲיֵב לִי ſpeed or haſten for me. ‖ for that עָלֶיהָ

6. Ariſe, O Lord, in thine anger, lift up thy ſelf ‖ becauſe of the rage of my enemies, and † awake for me to the judgment that thou haſt commanded.

6. But thou knoweſt my guiltineſs, O Lord, to thee therefore I appeal for my relief: be thou gratiouſly pleaſed to vindicate my cauſe, to expreſs thy juſt diſpleaſure againſt my malitious adverſaries and calumniators, and ſpeedily exerciſe the ſame juſtice, in taking my part againſt thoſe that injure me, which thou ſeverely commandeſt the Judges on the earth to diſpenſe to the oppreſſed.

7. So ſhall the congregation of the people compaſs thee about, ‖ for their ſakes therefore return thou on high.

7. This ſhall be a means to make all men admire thy works, to addreſs, and repair, and flock unto thee, acknowledge thee in thy attributes, and enter into, and undertake thy ſervice; and let this be thy motive at this time to ſhew forth thy power and majeſty, to execute juſtice for me, and to that end to aſcend ‖ thy Tribunal, where thou ſitteſt to overſee, and to judge the actions of men.

8. The Lord ſhall judge the people: Judge me, O Lord, according to my righteouſneſs, and according to mine innocency that is in me.

8 Thou art the righteous Judge of all, do thou maintain the juſtice of my cauſe, and vindicate my perfect innocence in this matter.

† Wickedneſs ſhall now conſume or deſtroy the wicked, and thou ſhalt eſtabliſh

9. † O let the wickedneſs of the wicked [d] come to an end, but eſtabliſh the juſt, for the righteous Lord trieth the heart and reins.

d. 9. God will now ſoon bring to nought the malitious deſignments of wicked men, their ſins will ſuddenly provoke and call down his judgments on them. In like manner he will ſhew forth his juſtice in upholding and ſupporting the innocent, ſuch as he ſees upon trial to be ſincerely ſuch: for as all righteouſneſs belongs to him, the doing of all eminently righteous things, bringing his fierce judgments on the obdurate, and upholding and vindicating all patient perſevering righteous perſons, when they are cauſeleſly accuſed or perſecuted; ſo 'tis his property alſo to diſcern the ſecreteſt thoughts and inclinations, and accordingly to paſs the moſt unerring judgments upon both ſorts of them.

10. ‖ My defence is of God, which ſaveth the upright in heart.

10. To thee it peculiarly belongs to deliver and vindicate thoſe whom thou diſcerneſt to be ſincere or inwardly upright, and accordingly my truſt is fixt wholly on thee, and my reſort is only unto thee, beſeeching thee to ſhew forth thy power and fidelity for the preſerving and ſecuring me.

11. God

11. God is a moſt righteous Judge, 'tis impoſſible he ſhould favour the practices of unjuſt men by whom his purity is continually affronted and provoked, ‖ though through his long ſuffering, deſigned for their reduction, he do for a while ſpare, and not preſently conſume them.

‖ See note c.

11. God † judgeth the righteous, and God is angry with the wicked every day.

† is a righteous judge, ſo שׁוֹפֵט צַדִּיק is rendred by all the antient Interpreters.

12. Till the wicked return and repent, God ſeldom ceaſeth to warn, and threaten, to prepare and ſharpen (as it were) his ſword for ſlaughter, to bend his bow, and make ready the arrow upon the ſtring, ſhewing him from time to time, what ſeverity he is to expect, if he do not at length reform, and that 'tis meerly the compaſſion of this lover of ſouls to his creature, that he thus gives him time and warnings, and adds terrors alſo, if by any means he may be brought home timely to repentance. (Another ſenſe of this verſe ſee in note c. at the end.)

12. If he turn not, he will whet his ſword, he hath bent his bow and made it ready.

13. On his farther continuance in this wicked courſe, God ſtill continues his decree to bring final vengeance on him, in caſe he will not amend by all theſe warnings; and yet is he a while longer pleaſed to ſpare, if yet he may gain and reduce them.

13. He hath alſo prepared for him the inſtruments of death, he † ordaineth his [c] arrows ‖ againſt the perſecutors.

† will make or hath made יִפְעָל

‖ or purſuing, or burning arrows.

14. And if ſtill all Gods longanimity and mercy prove ſucceſsleſs, if it be perverted only into a means of incouraging him in miſchievous, ungodly, treacherous deſigns, attempts and actions.

14. Behold he travaileth with iniquity, he hath conceived miſchief, and brought forth falſhood.

15. The infallible conſequent is, that the miſchief and ruine which he deſigns to others, ſhall not ſeize on them, but on himſelf, and bring perpetual deſtruction upon him.

15. He hath made a pit and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made.

16. All his attempts againſt other men, his oppreſſions and violences ſhall, when he leaſt looks for it, like an arrow ſhot up againſt heaven, come down moſt ſadly and piercingly upon his own head: this is all the fruit he is likely to reap of his miſchievous machinations.

16. His miſchief ſhall return on his own head, and his violent dealing ſhall come down on his own pate.

17. This is a ſignal illuſtrious demonſtration both of the omnipotence and juſt judgments of God, (mixt alſo with exceeding patience and longanimity toward ſinners) and challenges from every pious heart a grateful acknowledgement, all lauds and praiſes moſt juſtly due to his ſupreme Majeſty.

17. I will † praiſe the Lord according to his righteouſneſs, and will ſing praiſe to the Name of the Lord moſt high.

Annotations on Pſal. VII.

a. שִׁגָיוֹן

Tit. Shiggaion] Whence the word שִׁגָיוֹן comes, or what literally it imports, will hardly be defined. The uſe of it here, and Hab. 3. 1. (the only places where 'tis read in Scripture) giving us no farther light, than that in all likelihood it ſignifies a Song or Canticle. Here 'tis rendred Ψαλμὸς, a Pſalm, by the LXXII; there ᾠδὴ, an Ode or Song; and ſo the vulgar Latine here, Pſalmus David. And that ſo (moſt probably) it ſignifies, we may conclude from the conſequent אֲשֶׁר שָׁר which he ſang, the verb in the Hebrew, from whence is the ordinary noun שִׁיר a Song or Canticle. And ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſe, תַּרגּוּמָא דְאוֹרִיתָא דִי שַׁבַּח The Interpretation of the Ode which he ſang, adding by way of explication, כְּטַל דִי אֲמַר שִׁירְתָא when he ſpake a Song—— But the origination of the word doth not readily give it this ſenſe; for the Radix שָׁגַג or שָׁגָה both in Hebrew and Chaldee, ſignifies ignoravit or erravit; and from thence in the place of Habakuk, Aquila and Symmachus render it ἀγνοημάτων, ignorances, and Theodotion ἐκουσιασμῶν, voluntary ſins; and the vulgar Latine have forſaken the LXXII. and render it ignorantiis, ignorances; and the Chaldee making a long Paraphraſe of it, brings it about to that ſenſe of כְּשׁלוּתָא error or ignorance. Only the Arabick reteins Song or Canticle, and the Syriack leaves out all mention of it both here and there. The Hebrews conjecture is not improbable, that this word was the beginning of an old Hebrew Song, to the tune of which this was to be ſung, and ſo was intituled by it. But becauſe there is no ſuch word in uſe among the Hebrews for any thing elſe but a Song, and becauſe from thence regularly comes the plural שִׁגְיוֹנוֹת in Habakuk, 'tis moſt probable that as שָׁגָה ſignifies delectatur, is pleaſed or delighted: (Thus Prov. 5. 19. הִשְׁגֶּה we render, be raviſht, the vulgar, delectare, be thou delighted, and the Syriack, be thou fed; and ſo Prov. 20. 1. שֹׁגֶה qui delectatur, whoſoever is delighted, ſaith the vulgar, uſeth it luxurioufly or voluptuouſly, ſaith the Syriack) ſo from thence שִׁגָיוֹן may be an old word for a Song, in reſpect of the delight and pleaſure of the Muſick of it. And thus Abu Walid underſtands it here, from the notion of delight, or rejoycing.

Tit. Cuſh] What is meant by Cuſh the Benjamite, is made matter of queſtion: many, from S. Hierome, applying it to Saul a Benjamite, and (as ſome add) the ſon of Kiſh, and the words delivered by him, 1 Sam. 22. 8. (but there is great difference between כּוּשׁ Chuſh and קִישׁ Kiſh, and yet more between the ſon of Kiſh, and Chuſh himſelf;) and others to Chuſhi the Archite, (but his name is written with ח and ſo very diſtant, and was Davids friend, not enemy;) others to Shimei a Benjamite, that is known to have curſed David, 2 Sam. 16. (but that was in the buſineſs of Abſalom, and the time of his rebellion, to which this Pſalm hath no propriety, but to the matter of Saul.) But that which is moſt probable is this, that Cuſh was ſome ſervant of Saul, which had raiſed ſome malitious ſlander on David, as if he ſought to take away the Kings life; and either his name Cuſh, or elſe ſo ſtiled here from the name of the Nation, Æthiopia, ordinarily ſtiled כּוּשׁ, becauſe the Æthiopians being ſervants of all Nations, the word כּוּשׁ Æthiopia taken for one of that Country, as Canaan for a Canaanite, might proverbially be taken for a ſervant. Thus Amos 9. 7. where the Hebrew reads, Are ye not to me as the ſons of כֻּשִׁיִּים Æthiopians? the context inclines to interpret it, it, ſervants; for to that ſenſe it follows, Have not I brought up Iſrael out of the land of Ægypt, redeemed them thence, and ſo bought them to be my ſervants? Now that the ſervants of Saul are fitly called Benjamites, may appear both by Sauls being ſo, and their reteining to him, and by the expreſs words 1 Sam. 22. 7. Then Saul ſaid to his ſervants, Hear now ye Benjamites —— That ſome one or more of Sauls ſervants, to incenſe their Maſter, ſhould calumniate David, is eaſily believed: And to this David refers 1 Sam. 26. 19. in his words to Saul, If they be the children of men that have ſtirred thee up againſt me, curſed be they before the Lord —— And ſome eminent paſſage to this purpoſe no doubt there was, though it be not ſet down in Scripture.

c. V. 4. Rewarded] This verſe, by the ambiguouſneſs of ſome words in it, is variouſly interpretable. The moſt literal, which I ſuppoſe is the ſafeſt rendring of it, will thus be collected. Firſt the word גָּמַל which we render return, ſignifies not only to recompenſe, but ſimply to do either good or evil to any: and accordingly it is oft rendred by the Septuagint in the good ſenſe, ἐυεργετεῖν, ἀγαθὸν ποιεῖν, to do, not only to repay good; Sometimes 'tis ſimply ἐνεργέω, to work, ἐπιχειρέω, to attempt, ἐργάζομαι, to do; And whether it be of good or evil, the Context muſt direct and reſtrain it. So likewiſe שָׁלַם which we render [was at peace] beſides that vulgar ſignification for peace, which generally belongs to the Noun, ſignifies very frequently to give, and to retribute, and is then rendred in the good ſenſe, δίδωμι, and ἀνταποδίδωμι, to give, and recompenſe, very oft; and in the ill ſenſe ποιέω and ἐκδικέω, to puniſh and repay, and the like; and ſometimes ſimply to do, to perform, and is then πληρόω, ἀναπληρόω, τελέω, ὁλοτελέω, ποιέω, to fulfil, to perform, to do. This is obſerved by the great Grammarian Abu Walid, out of ſeveral examples, that both גָּמַל and שָׁלַם have a double ſignification, of doing a thing firſt, as alſo by way of retribution or return, whether in good or evil; and accordingly he gives a twofold ſenſe of theſe words, [If I have returned like to him that did evil to me firſt] and [If I have done evil to him that was at peace with me.] Thus then the ſenſe of the former part of the verſe ariſeth אִם גָּמַלְתִּי שְׁלֻמִי רָע If I have done evil to him that did it to me, or, If I have repaid, or returned to him that did or returned me evil, i. e. If, when to my good, or at leaſt blameleſs, innocent behaviour, Saul repayed nothing but evil, I have upon that provocation done or repayed injury to him. This is thus far plain, whether either or both the words be taken ſimply for doing, or reſpectively for returning, repaying of evil; for 'tis certain, when evil is returned to good, this is called repaying of evil, as much as when it is returned to evil. And thus the LXXII. underſtood and render it, εἰ ἀνταπέδωκα τοῖς ἀνταποδιδοῦσί μοι κακά, If I have repayed evil to them that have repayed evil to me; and ſo the vulgar, and the Æthiopick, Si reddidi retribuentibus mihi mala, If I have returned evil to them that retributed evil to me; both of them to the ſenſe of repaying in each place; whereas the Syriack hath it, If I have repayed evil to him that did evil to me, and ſo the Arabick, If I have retributed to them that have done me evil. With this coheres (and is not with any reaſon to be disjoyned) the latter part of the verſe, וְאֲחַלְּצָה and have, or, and if I have —— חָלַץ here is an ambiguous word, oft ſignifying, and rendred ἐξαιρεῖν, ἐξάγειν, ῥύειν, to take out, or lead out, or ſnatch out, and ſo to deliver; but it primarily ſignifies detrahere, ſpoliare, adimere, exuere, to take off, to deſpoil, and ſo from thence is the Noun הֲלִיצָה a garment, which is wont to be put off or changed: (The Jewiſh Arab. expreſſeth it by נצל which ſignifies two contraries, to put on, and to take off, or away.) In this ſenſe the Syriack expreſly uſe it, Act. 19. 37. where ἱεροσύλους, Church-robbers, are rendred by this word ܒܙܙ that robb'd or ſpoil'd the Temple, and Col. 2. 8. nequis ܢܒܙܘܟܘ Let no man deſpoil you, (In this notion the Septuagint render it Job 36. 15. θλίβων, to oppreſs; and thus the Chaldee underſtand it here, וְרַחֲקִית (from רָחַק preſſit, afflixit) and if I have afflicted them; and ſo the Syriack alſo, if I have oppreſſed:) and thus the ſenſe is perſpicuous and current, without any diſturbance or confuſion, If I have returned evil to them that dealt ill with me, or if I have deſpoiled him that without cauſe was my enemy, Then —— And in this peculiar notion of deſpoiling an enemy, in which it is moſt frequent, it ſeems to have ſome reference to Davids dealing with Saul. In the Cave he took not from him his garment, but the skirt only; and that only as a teſtimony of a greater kindneſs, the ſparing his life. In the Camp finding him aſleep, he only took away his ſpear, and that upon the ſame ground; and having evidenced his integrity, returned it carefully again. The LXXII. have much changed this laſt part of the verſe, rendring it, ἀποπέσοιμι ἄρα ἀπὸ τῶν ἐχθρῶν μου κενὸς, Let me fall away from my enemies empty, (and from thence the vulgar and Arabick and Æthiopick have their rendrings:) and unleſs they thought the true ſenſe of the words ſufficiently expreſt in the former part of the verſe, and thereupon took liberty to give a various deſcant upon the latter, (as the LXXII. are oft obſervable to do) I profeſs not to give an account of it. Other conſiderable variations they have in this Pſalm: v. 6. for בְּעַבְרוֹת in the rages or burnings, from עָבַר in Hithpael irâ exarſit, (and ſo rendred by the Chaldee בְּרוּגְזָא though applyed to God, and not to the enemies) the LXXII. read ἐν τοῖς πέρασι, in the ends or bounds, (taking it for בְּעֲבָרִים which ſignifies thus, from עֲבַר tranſiit) the extream parts or borders, which being taken by an enemy, give him a great advantage over the inhabitants; as Ehuds taking the Foords of Jordan toward Moab, Judg. 3. 28. (מַעְבְּרוֹת Foords from the ſame Radix) was the ſure means of ſubduing Moab, and deſtroying all the inhabitants at that time. Where yet one thing may be obſerved, and learnt from them, that בְּ being in the beginning of the verſe uſed for in, may moſt probably ſignifie ſo here alſo, and be rendred in, or over; and ſo the Chaldee reads over my oppreſſors, and the Syriack, and Arabick, over the necks of my oppreſſors; and perhaps the LXXII. were willing to expreſs this by ἐν τοῖς πέρασι, lift up thy ſelf in or over their bounds or borders, as a phraſe to expreſs his ſubduing of them; chooſing purpoſely not to repeat the word anger or fury, becauſe that had been ſufficiently expreſt in the former part, as far as referred to God, to whom the Chaldee apply it alſo in the latter place, and the other antient Tranſlators do not at all mention it. So v. 9. in ſtead of אֱלֹהִים צַדִּיק the righteous Lord, they read ὁ Θεὸς, God, and keep the other word divided to begin the next verſe, Ἄρχα ἡ βοήθειά μου, righteous is my help from God ——

So v. 11. where the Hebrew hath וְאֵל זֹעֵם and God is angry every day, the LXXII. read אֵל it ſeems in the original notion for fortis, ſtrong, (and ſo doth the Chaldee alſo וּבְתַקּוֹף in fortitudine;) but not only ſo, but then again read it לֹא nor, and then then make up this large paraphraſe, in ſtead of [God is angry] κ) ἰσχυεὶς ὁ μακρόθυμος καὶ ὀργὴν ἐπάγων. and he is ſtrong and patient, and doth not bring forth or looſe anger every day; which the Arabick follow exactly, the Syriack as far as the אַל nor, is not angry every day, and the vulgar to the ſame ſenſe, nunquid iraſcitur? is he angry every day? And conſidering the context, and the intire deſign of this and the following verſes, this may well paſs for a perſpicuous paraphraſe of it, and not any contradiction to the rational, though it agree not to the literal notion of it. So verſe 12. אִם לֹא יָשׁוּב if he turn not, they read in the ſecond perſon plural by way of paraphraſe, ἐὰν μὴ ὑποστρέψητε, if ye turn not; and ſo the Latine and Arabick and Æthiopick. In this place Aben-Ezra's gloſs may deſerve to be remembred, who applies אִם לֹא יָשׁוּב if he return not to God, referring to לַמָּרוֹם שׁוּבָה v. 7. return thou on high; that as that belonged to Gods aſcending the throne of judgment, ſtanding up to exert his vindicative juſtice, ſo his not returning here, ſhould ſignifie his μακροθυμία, his not appearing in this manner in vengeance.

V. 9. Come to an end] How יִגְמַר is to be rendred both for the notion and ſenſe, will deſerve to be conſidered. The word גָּמַר complevit, finivit, uſed ſometimes for good, ſometimes for ill, muſt here be in the latter ſenſe, and then muſt be rendred either filled up ſimply, or elſe deſtroyed or conſumed. In the former ſenſe the LXXII. read συντελεσθήτω, let it be accompliſht or filled up, and ſo the Syriack and Æthiopick; but the Chaldee יִשְׁתֵּיצֵי, from שצא agreeing in ſignification with נָתַץ deſtruxit, let it be deſtroyed; and ſo the Latine, conſumetur, ſhall be conſumed: and both theſe may well have place, being one conſequent to the other; when iniquity is filled up, when 'tis come to the full meaſure, attained its end, ſaith the Arabick, then Gods judgments come, it ſhall be deſtroyed. But the Interlinear have another underſtanding of it, Conſumet malum impios, Evil ſhall conſume the wicked; and in conſent therewith, Abu Walid obſerves the verb גָּמַר to be uſed tranſitively ſometimes, and inſtanceth in this place, giving it the notion of excidere, and conſumere, as well as perficere. And this rendring may deſerve to be preferred before either of the former. Now for the tenſe it is certainly in the future, and not in the Imperative mood; yet thoſe two are ſo promiſcuouſly taken the one for the other, that the Interpreters for the moſt part render it in the Imperative, let it be——The thing from thence obſervable is, that in Sacred ſtyle, eſpecially in the Prophetick Dialect, the uſe of the Imperative mood muſt not be always thought to denote a wiſh, or, when it is of ill, to be a curſe, but only a prediction. And this may be of uſe frequently in Interpreting this Book of Pſalms, wherein thoſe many paſſages which in ſound paſs for wiſhes of ill, or curſes, are but predictions of the ills that ſhall befall wicked men. To יִגְמַר is here annexed the particle נָא now, either as an expletive, or to denote the approach of the deſtruction ſpoken of.

V. 13. Arrows againſt the perſecutors] The Hebrew דָּלַק ſignifying two things, to perſecute, and to be ſet on fire, (ſee note on Pſal. 10. a.) the LXXII. renders לְדֹלְקִים here by καυμάτοις, and the Latine by ardentibus, and ſo the Syriack (and the reſt) ſeems to take it, לְיָקְדִין; I ſuppoſe it ſhould be, לְיָקְדִין from דָּקַל ferbuit, ebullivit. But the Chaldee reſtrain it to the other notion, of perſecuting, by the addition of צַדִּיקַיָּא the righteous, he will make his arrows againſt the perſecutors of the righteous. And this may probably enough be reſolved on as the ſenſe of the place. And yet the words are capable of a yet farther rendring, thus; חִצָּיו לְדֹלְקִים יִפְעָל Sagittas ſuas fecit in ardentes, or in perſequentes, he hath made his arrows for burning or perſecuting ones, as that ſignifies, he hath made his arrows burning or purſuing arrows. Thus the prepoſition ל may either be a pleonaſm, as it is not unuſual; or rather may ſerve to help the conſtruction of the verb, with a double accuſative, as it doth Exod. 27. 3. לְכָל כֵּלָיו תַּעֲשֶׂה נְחֹשֶׁת All the Veſſels thereof thou ſhalt make braſs. So Abu Walid thinks, and renders it, he maketh his arrows bright; the Jewiſh-Arabick Tranſlator, ſwiftly purſuing, perſecuting arrows. And thus burning arrows, as burning darts, may well ſignifie ſharp, and terrible arrows, which yet being but made or ordained, or (in the preſent) in fieri, in making, or ordaining, and not yet ſhot or ſent out of the bow, as terrible as they are, they ſtill denote Gods ſparing a little longer, mean-while preparing for it, and giving fair treatable warnings, of what will come at laſt, if they reform not.

The

The Eighth PSALM.

TO the chief Musitian upon [a] Gittith, A Psalm of David.

Paraphrase. 8.

The eighth Psalm was composed by David for the magnifying of Gods wonderful goodness, as more general in the fabrick of the world, and his dignations to mankind, in making him Lord of that great work of his, so more particular to himself, in using him as his instrument, to discomfit Goliah of Gath, the proud boasting Gyant, the Champion of the Philistims; and in the Prophetical mystical sense, his more admirable mercy to men, in exalting our humane nature above all the creatures in the world; which was eminently compleated in our Saviours assumption of our flesh, and ascending to, and reigning in heaven in it. This Psalm he committed to the Prefect of his Musick to be sung or plaid.

1. O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy Name in all the earth? who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

1. O thou Lord, Creator and sole Governour of heaven and earth, which hast pleased to be known to us men in a peculiar relation of care and special kindness, to ‖ instruct, and reveal the knowledge of thy will to us, How art thou to be admired, and praised, and magnified by men and angels, and by all both in heaven and earth? whose superlative greatness and super-eminent Majesty is infinitely exalted above all the most glorious creatures. This is most true of thee in thy divine invisible nature, true also in thy strange vouchsafements to me at this time; but above all is most admirable matter of observation and acknowledgment to us vile sinners, if considered in the great mystery of our redemption, the descension first, and then exaltation of our Saviour, (to which this Psalm is distinctly applied, Matth. 21. 16. 1 Cor. 15. 27. and Heb. 2. 6, 7, 8.)

2. Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength, because of thine enemies, that thou mightst still the enemy and the avenger.

2. It is thy blessed and gracious will to give strength to me, a Child, as it were, to subdue this proud Gyant, and in him to discomfit the host of the Philistims. As in the œconomy of the world, thou wert pleased to chuse us men, which are poor mean impotent creatures, to be principal instruments of thy service and glory, to acknowledge thy power, and magnifie thee in all thy glorious attributes; and to that end to send thine eternal Son out of thine own bosom, to reduce us, when we were fallen, and call us to this dignity of thy servants; which mercy thou hast not vouchsafed to those which are much higher than we, the Angels, those glorious creatures, who when by pride they fell, were never restored by thee. And in like manner among us men, thou art pleased to make choice of the meanest and lowest, the most humble-spirited persons, and oft-times very children in age, to sing Hosannahs to the Son of David, (See Matth. 21. 16. and note d.) to acknowledge and promulgate thy Majesty and might; when the great, and wise, being oft also the proudest men of the world, (such were the Jewish Rulers and Pharisees in Christs time) are not thus chosen, or honoured by thee. And this hast thou done on most wise and glorious designs, that they whose pride makes them resist and despise thee, and thy precepts, may be thus visibly punisht, finding themselves despised, and rejected by thee: and above all, the Devil, that proud and rebellious enemy of God and goodness, is by this means subdued, and brought down; first cast out of a great part of his kingdom in mens hearts, (none but the proud obdurate sinner being left to him) and at last utterly confounded and destroyed, 1 Cor. 15. 27.

3. [b] When I consider the heavens the work of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou hast ordained;

3. When I look up and behold those glorious Creatures, the Heavens, and the innumerable hosts of Angels, which behold thy face, and attend thee there, the first fruits of thy creation, and in the outworks, the visible parts of those Heavens, observe those radiant beauties, the Sun, Moon, and Stars, all much more excellent Creatures than are any here below, set each of them in their sphere by thine eternal decree, on purpose to wait on, and minister to us; b.

4. What is ‖ man that thou art mindful of him, and the son of † man, that thou visitest him?

4. It is in my thoughts a miracle of super-abundant mercy to poor miserable mankind, that was at first formed out of the vilest materials, the dust of the earth, and is still of a very frail, infirm, mortal condition, that thou shouldest thus vouchsafe to advance, and dignifie, and take care of it, above thy whole creation. And for me particularly at this time, a youth of a mean parentage, and the most despicable of all my brethren, 'tis admirable thou shouldst inable me to do so great a service for thy people. But above all, this is eminently applyable to Christ, that mean despicable son of man, scorn'd, and scourg'd, and crucified, yet not forsaken by God, or left in the grave, but exalted by a glorious resurrection, (Heb. 2. 6, 9.)

† or a little while: See Annot. on Heb. 4. c.

5. For thou hast made him † a little lower than the Angels, and crowned him with glory and honour.

5. Thou hast at first created man in a lower condition, than that of the Angels; yet hast abundantly recompensed that lowliness of his present state: whilst he lives here, those glorious Spirits minister to him, and at length he is assumed to participation of their glory. Nay, our humane nature, by being assumed by Christ, is thereby extolled above all Angels. And for me at this time, thou hast advanced me to the imployment of an Angel, by thy chastising, and subduing this vaunting Champion by my hands. And in the diviner sense, Christ the Son of God, being for a while humbled to our flesh, and for the space of three and thirty years submitted to a lower condition than that of Angels, is yet by this diminution exalted, by suffering in our flesh on earth, advanced to the greatest dignities in Heaven, made supreme Ruler and Judge of Men and Angels, (Heb. 2. 7.)

6. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet:

7. All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field:

8. The fowls of the air and fish of the sea, and † whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas.

6, 7, 8. This vile clod of earth, man, thou didst at first invest with a sovereign power over all inferiour, sublunary creatures, Gen. 1. 26, 28. all beasts, and fowls, and fishes, and plants, to be commanded, and injoyed by him. And in the like manner thou hast given me power over the chief of these, over the Lion and the Bear, 1 Sam. 17. 36. and over this gyantly Philistim. And, in the mystery, thou hast given to Christ, a man on earth, a power over all these inferiour creatures, for them all to be absolutely subject to all his commands, to still the sea, remove mountains, &c. and so likewise the victory over all his enemies, over men, and devils, and over death itself; and in thy time this victory shall be so compleated, that there shall be nothing left of opposition to his Kingdom, and absolute Sovereignty, which shall not be wholly subdued unto him. See Heb. 2. 8. and 1 Cor. 15. 27.

† The Chaldee read, לִוְיָתָן Leviathan that passeth

9. O thou omnipotent Lord, and our moſt gracious Maſter, how glorious is thy Majeſty in all that thou haſt and ſhalt do among us? The whole world ſhall never ceaſe to glorifie thee for theſe things.

9. O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy Name in all the earth?

Annotations on Pſal. VIII.

a. Tit. Gittith.] The Titles of the Pſalms are known to have great difficulty in them, and accordingly the explications muſt be very uncertain. Many of them refer to the names of inſtruments; and divers of thoſe may well be unknown to us. Beſides, the names and titles of ſuch kind of compoſures, as they are very various in all languages, ſo are they inexplicable to all thoſe that are not acquainted familiarly with the Poetry and Muſick of each Nation. The ſeveral ſorts of matter give ſeveral names to Poeſies; as Panegyrick, Elegy, Hymn, and Anthem, &c. The particular matters do ſo in like manner; as on Cuſh the Benjamite, or when he fled from Abſalom, &c. So again the occaſions or ſeaſons for which they were provided to be ſung.

Next, the meaſure of the verſe is conſiderable, from whence it is an Ode, an Epode, &c. So the Mood, either Dorick, or Ionick, &c. among the Gracians; a Pavin, or Almain, &c. among us: So the key, a ſong in Gammut, in D Sol Re, and the like: And laſtly the tune, of which there be innumerable names taken from the firſt known Ditty, that was ſet to each. This ſhews us in general how difficult, or rather impoſſible it muſt be, for thoſe that are not acquainted with the Hebrew Poetry or Muſick (of which we have now ſmall remainders) to paſs any certain judgment on thoſe things which wholly depend on this. Accordingly ſo it is in the particular now before us, what is the meaning of גִּתִּית here, and in ſome other places: The Chaldee on one ſide, and the LXXII. and thoſe that follow them on the other ſide, have pitcht on very diſtant rendrings of it. The Hebrew גַּת and גִּת ſignifies a winepreſs, and from thence the LXXII. and Latine and Æthiopick have their verſion, ὑπὲρ τῶν ληνῶν, pro torcularibus, for the winepreſſes; as if this Pſalm of Thankſgiving were appointed to be uſed peculiarly in the Vintage, as a time wherein Gods mercy to man in the fruits of the earth were to be acknowledged, and from thence, by way of aſcent of the ſoul, his other ſublimer mercies, which with the eye of faith and prophecy David ſaw afar off, under the times of the Goſpel. But the ſame גַּת Gath is alſo the name of a City of the Philiſtims, and גִּתִּי Gittite, a man of that City, and from thence the Chaldee deduceth the word, and renders it גִּבָּרָא דְּאִיתֵי מִגַּת. This is ordinarily rendred citharа quam attulit de Gath, a Muſical inſtrument which he brought from Gath. But of any ſuch we find no mention elſewhere in Scripture, nor the leaſt ground of ſuſpicion among their writings, that Gittith ſhould be the name of an Inſtrument. Kimchi, that recites the names of them, hath another notion of this. It will therefore be the more pardonable boldneſs to propoſe a ſlight conjecture on this paraphraſe of the Chaldee; viz. that the word גִּבָּרָא may have been by the Tranſcriber lightly varied from גִּבָּרָא a ſtrong man, or gyant. Thus we have in the Targum 2 Sam. 21. 20. גִּבָּרָא בְּגַת a gyant of Gath. And then why ſhould not the whole Paraphraſe of the Chaldee גִּבָּרָא דְּאִיתֵי מִגַּת be rendered, the gyant (i. e. Goliah) which was of Gath, or from Gath? However thus much we have gained from their Paraphraſe, that הַגִּתִּית may ſignifie that or him, דְּאִיתֵי מִגַּת that was from Gath; and then ſure we may thus ſafely interpret עַל הַגִּתִּית, viz. that this Pſalm was made on Goliah the Philiſtim of Gath, or Goliah the Gittite, 2 Sam. 21. 19. and 1 Chron. 20. 5. ſet here without name, only he that was from Gath] (though compoſed ſome time after Davids incounter with him, and victory over him) that mighty Gyant that proudly and ſcornfully defied all the hoſt of Iſrael. And to this the Pſalm at leaſt in ſome part ſeems to belong, being a meditation of Gods power and wiſdom, in ſubduing the proud by weak deſpiſed Inſtruments, Children and Sucklings, as it were; and this enlarged, and farther conſidered and obſerved both in Gods dealing toward mankind in general, and toward particular men, toward young David at this time, and toward Chriſt in his ſtate of exinanition. Againſt this conjecture 'twill be obvious to object, 1. That two other Pſalms, LXXXI. and LXXXIV. are alſo intituled עַל הַגִּתִּית upon Gittith, and yet are not either of them applyable to this matter of Goliah the Gittite; and 2. That there alſo the Chaldee Paraphraſe is the ſame; and 3. That as there we read בְּנוֹרָה cithara, ſo 'tis ordinarily reſolved by Lexicographers, that Gittith was a Muſical Inſtrument, and that ſo called from גַּת a Winepreſs, becauſe it was uſed to be played on in the time of Vintage, which was a Feſtival time. To all this I have but one thing to ſay, viz. That the learned Hebrews, that ſet down the Muſick of the Antients, do not ſet down Gittith for an Inſtrument, but much otherwiſe. Witneſs Kimchi, before named, on the third Pſalm; where having once for all, ſet down the Inſtruments of the Jewiſh Muſick, that were uſed in the Houſe of the Sanctuary, Cymbals, Cornets, Trumpets, &c. he adds, that theſe Muſical Inſtruments were divided into Melodies, which were known among them, i. e. there were ſeveral tunes well known among the Jews, that were skilful in that art, (to which they plaid on theſe Inſtruments) and Gittith was one of them. Here now is evidently a great difference betwixt theſe Inſtruments themſelves, and the ſeveral Melodies or Tunes that they plaid upon them; and Gittith is with him expreſly the name of a Tune, and not, as was ſuppoſed from the Chaldee, an Inſtrument brought from Gath. Now of Tunes it is well enough known, that they take their names from the Songs which were firſt compoſed to that Tune, ſometimes from the matter of the Song, and ſometimes alſo from the firſt words, or elſe from ſome principal words in it. And if ſo, then why may not this eighth Pſalm be the firſt which was made to this Tune, and from the matter of it be here inſcribed עַל הַגִּתִּית upon the Gittite, or Philiſtime of Gath; and then all other Pſalms, afterward ſet to that tune, called after the name of the firſt, and ſo the Lxxxi. and Lxxxiv. be inſcribed עַל הַגִּתִּית to ſignifie them to be ſet to the ſame tune with this, which was made on Goliah the Gittite? If there be ſmall probability in this, it remains that we return to that which was firſt ſaid, that the difficulties of this kind are inexplicable. And this may ſtop, though not ſatisfie, our curioſities.

V. 3. When

b. כִּי V. 3. When I consider.] כִּי in this place is by the Chaldee rendred מְסוֹל because or for, and by the LXXII. ὅτι, because, and so in the rest of the Antient Interpreters, this being the most frequent use of it. Yet 'tis certain the Hebrew particle hath four significations; and in one of them denotes a condition (and is best rendred If) and also time, and is fully rendred, when. So Gen. iv. 12. כִּי the Chaldee read אֲרֵי if, or, when thou tillest the ground; and so 2 Sam. 7. 11. It came to pass כִּי when the King sat in his house, for which 1 Chron. 17. 1. they read כַּאֲשֶׁר, and we render, as, i. e. when he sate. And thus the context inclines it here, When I consider,——What is Man.—— i. e. I have then by that consideration all reason to cry out by way of admiration, What is man—And thus the Jewish Arabick Translation renders it, When I see the heavens, &c. I say, What is Man——

The Ninth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

a. TO the chief Musitian upon ‖ [a] Muth-Labben, A Psalm of David.

‖ or the death of the Champion.

The ninth Psalm is a solemn thanksgiving for Gods deliverances, and by the Title may be thought to reflect on the death of Goliah of Gath, the great Champion of the Philistims, vanquisht and killed by David; but the Psalm made some space afterwards, when the Ark was placed in Sion, and the Philistims were utterly destroyed, v. 6. and yet in some other time of distress, v. 13. and of absence from Sion, v. 14. and committed to the prefect of his Musick.

1. I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart; I will shew forth all thy marvellous works.

1. O Lord of all power and mercy, which art pleased to interpose thy omnipotence for me, and thereby to inable thy feeble servant to pass through many great difficulties, I do with all the devotion of my soul acknowledge and proclaim this, and all other thy great mercies.

† exult, leap for joy אָעְלְצָה ἀγαλλιάσομαι LXXII. exultabo. Lat. Syr. Arab. æth. † be galled, or lamed. ‖ from thy face, or sight. מִפָּנֶיךָ † pleaded עָשִׂיתָ See note on Psalm 232. a.

2. I will be glad and † rejoyce in thee; I will sing praises to thy name, O thou most Highest.

2. This is matter of infinite joy, and transporting delight unto me, without the least reflection on my self, (who am meer nothing) to magnifie thy sublime and most powerful Majesty, and attribute all my successes unto thee.

b. 3. When mine enemies are turned back, they shall [b] † fall and perish ‖ at thy presence.

3. By thee are our enemies put to flight, and flying they meet with gall-traps in their way, and so are lamed, overtaken, and killed in the pursuit. (This befell the Philistims on the discomfiture of their proud Champion, 1 Sam. xvii. 51, 52.) And to thee only is it to be ascrib'd; 'tis thy Majesty that hath done the whole work intirely for us: thou foughtest against them, and thereby they were thus worsted, and put to flight, and destroyed.

4. For thou hast † maintained my right and my cause; thou sattest in the Throne judging right.

4. When in the duel between that Champion and me, and so in many other battels with my Enemies, the cause was committed to thy sacred judgment, thou wert pleased to take my part, to defend me, and to judge on my side, and with perfect justice to plead, and decide the controversie betwixt us, give the victory to thy servant.

5. Thou hast rebuked the heathen, thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name for ever and ever.

‖ גָּלִיתָ דָּשִׁיעָא ‖ the wicked Goliah; Chald.

5. By the death of the ‖ impious prophane Goliah, the Philistims Champion, thou hast put their whole host to flight, and made this victory a foundation of utter extirpation to that Nation of the * Philistims.

* עַחְחִיר פְּלִשְׁתָּא the peoples of the Philistims, Chald.

c. ‖ consummate to the end, or for ever. † extirpated. נֶחְשֵׁת

6. O thou enemy, [c] destructions are come ‖ to a perpetual end, and thou hast † destroyed Cities, the memorial is perished with them.

6. They are now finally destroyed, their Cities rased to the ground, and (unless it be in the stories of their ruine) no remainders of them discernable: and all this must be attributed to thee, O Lord.

d. ‖ And the Lord shall endure for ever, he shall sit, he hath—

7. [d] ‖ But the Lord shall indure for ever: he hath prepared his throne for judgment.

7. d ‖ A signal evidence of thy power and immutability, of thy sitting in heaven as on a Throne, or Tribunal of judicature.

8. And he shall judge the world in righteousness; he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness.

8. From whence thou shalt from time to time dispense and administer, and dispose of all things here below, with all exact justice and uprightness.

* for seasons, or, opportunities, in distress. לָעִתּוֹת בַּצָּרָה

9. The Lord also will be a sure refuge for the oppressed * in times of trouble.

9. And this as to the punishing of the proud obdurate oppressor, so to the seasonable support of all that are not able to relieve themselves; when their tribulations, and so their exigences, are greatest, then have they in thee a sure sanctuary, to which they may opportunely resort, and be confident to receive relief from thee.

10. And

10. And accordingly all that know any thing of Religion, that have either learnt from others, or experimented in themſelves theſe thy faithful all-righteous diſpenſations, in the œconomy of the World, thoſe glories of thine, reſulting from the conjuncture of all thy attributes, of power, and juſtice, and wiſdom, and mercy, &c. will thereby be firmly grounded in their truſts and reliances on thee, (without applying themſelves to any of the ſinful aids and policies of the World for ſuccour) laying this up for an anchor of hope, that God never forſook or failed any pious man in his diſtreſs, that by prayer and faith made his humble and conſtant applications to him.

10. And they that know thy name, will put their truſt in thee: for thou, Lord, haſt not forſaken them that ſeek thee.

11. Let us therefore all joyn in magnifying the power and mercy of God, and to that end aſſemble to the Sanctuary, where he is pleaſed to preſentiate himſelf, giving all men knowledge of the ‖wonderful acts he hath wrought for us.

11. Sing praiſes to the Lord, which dwelleth in Sion; declare among the people his doings.

12. The Blood of humble, pious, helpleſs men, that is ſhed by oppreſſors, hath a cry that goes up to heaven, Gen. 4. 19. and is moſt pretious with God: he will never ſuffer it to go unpuniſht, but will act ſevere revenges for it; purſue and find out the guilty perſons, and pour his plagues upon them.

12. When he maketh inquiſition for blood, he remembreth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the †humble.

13. On theſe grounds I continue to make my addreſſes to thee, O Lord, beſeeching thee to behold in mercy the low and afflicted condition of thy ſervant at this time; and as thou art wont to interpoſe thy ſeaſonable reliefs, when there is moſt need of them, to raiſe thoſe that are brought loweſt, ſo to reveale thy ſelf to me opportunely at this preſent.

14. That I may ſhew forth all thy praiſe in the gates of e the daughter of Sion: I will rejoyce in thy ſalvation.

15. The evil machinations of godleſs men bring nothing but certain ruine on them: the miſchief that they deſign to others, falls conſtantly on themſelves.

15. The heathen are ſunk down in the pit that they made; in the net which they hid is their own foot taken.

16. And this is a notorious act of Gods righteous judgment on them, that their acts and attempts of hurting others are all converted to their own ruine.

16. The Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth: the wicked is ſnared in the work of his own hands. ‖Higgaion, Selah.

17. The wicked ſhall be turned into Hell, and all the Nations that forget God.

18. For though God for a while permit his meek and obedient ſervants to be oppreſt, and triumpht over, and in the eye of the World to be forgotten, forſaken, and periſh; yet if they conſtantly adhere to him, and contentedly wait his leiſure, without flying for relief to any unlawful means, 'tis certain he will at laſt return to them, and reſcue them out of the oppreſſors hands.

18. For the needy ſhall not alway be forgotten; the expectation of the †poor ſhall not periſh for ever.

Annotations on Pſal. IX.

a. Tit. Muth-Labben.] The Title of this Pſalm (as of the former) hath been matter of much queſtion and uncertainty, in both parts of it, עַל מוּת and לַבֵּן For the former, many of the learned Hebrews incline to read it, as one word, עַלְמוּת. So Abu Walid, who ſaith that, perhaps, from that notion of the word, wherein it ſignifies occultari, it might be a certain way, or kind of ſtill, bidden, or low Muſick or Melody. And ſo the Jewiſh Arabick Tranſlator interprets it, an bidden low ſlender tune. To this the LXXII. agree, who rendring it τῶν κρυφίων, appear to have read it עַלְמוּת, in one word, and either עַל before it, or elſe ſupplying the want of that præpoſition by τοῦ, Then for Labben, the Jewiſh-Arabick tranſlator would have it to be from Ben, the name of one of the Præfects of Muſick, mentioned 1 Chron. 15. 18. as if the Pſalm were for Ben, or thoſe belonging to Ben, to ſing. And thus, it ſeems, Kimchi's Father took it. To this interpretation that place in the Chronicles ſeems ſomewhat favourable, where, as v. 18. of thoſe of the ſecond degree are reckoned Zachariah, Ben, Jaziel, Shemiramoth, Jehiel, Unni, Eliab, Benaiah, Maaſiah, &c. ſo ver. 20. eight of the ſame perſons are repeated again (which number muſt reaſonably be ſuppoſed to contain all the reſt) as ſingers to ſound with Pſalteries on Alamoth, where the Hebrew עַל עֲלָמוֹת is reteined by the LXXII.

περὶ ἀλαμωθ, and most probably signifies the name of a tune known by that title: and so indeed || Kimchi among the known tunes of the Hebrews names Alamoth for one. And so this is no improbable account of this title. Yet in a matter where there is not ground for any more then conjecture, it may not be amiss to set down some other descants. First then, it will be found no news, for the antient interpreters to put into one, those words which were, and ought certainly to be divided in the Hebrew. An example we have in this very particular, Psal. 48. he shall be our guide עַל מוּת unto death. The Chaldee render, as if it were one word, עָלְמוּת youth, in the days of our youth: where yet the Masorites read in two words עַל מוּת till death; and so there the LXXII. render it in sense, though not in words, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνας, for ever, (for by that they might more probably express עַל מוּת till death, than be thought to have read עוֹלָמוֹת secula, as some learned men conjecture.) And thus Kimchi reports of his Father, that in his opinion Almuth were two words, yet to be read as one. And if they were two, [עַל מוּת upon the death] then all the difficulty will be, what is meant by לַבֵּן Labben. That some of the Hebrews will have read by way of Anagram, backward, נָבָל as if it were on the death of Nabal: but that sure is but phansy, though I see it taken up by a very learned man. The LXXII. render it τοῦ υἱοῦ, of the son, simply: And some account may be given of that, not from those that will understand it of the death of Christ, the Son by way of eminence, but in a far different sense, so as to understand it of one whose father was not known; in which notion the Latine conceiving אִישׁ הַבֵּנִים, 1 Sam. 17. 4. to be literally [a man, or one of the sons] have rendred it vir spurius, a bastard. And though the LXXII. there read in a distant style ἀνὴρ δυναλὸς, a mighty or strong man, a gyant; yet I suppose this is but consequent to the same notion. For it is by the Hebrews observed from Gen. 6. 2. and 4. that the gyants, i. e. great or mighty men, were begotten by those unlawful conjunctions or promiscuous use of women, and so generally lived without observation of any Laws of chastity, or marriage, (which is the meaning of corruption and violence, v. 11.) and so might well be thought to be meant by that phrase [men of the sons] as that signifies a spurious offspring, whose father is not known (as generally 'tis observable of any gyant in Scripture, that he hath no other extraction taken notice of, but either that he is a son, or of the sons of the gyant, 1 Chron. 20. 4. and 6. or a brother of such a man, as of Goliah, v. 5.) somewhat like this we find ii Sam. 21. 16. where Ishbibenob is said to be of the sons of the gyant, and in the Chaldee בְּבְנֵי גִּבָּרָא of the sons of the strong man, without naming any father. And it is not improbable that the name it self Ishbibenob, was a light variation from that phrase אִישׁ בִּבְנֵי a man of the sons, as a known title for a gyant. And if this be appliable to לַבֵּן Labben here, then it may signifie the Gyant of Gath, Goliah, and give ground of conjecture either that this Psalm was composed (though long after) in remembrance of, or reflexion on Goliah) his death, as the Chaldee, v. 5. (and Kimchi, who is not of this mind for Labben, doth yet acknowledge the matter of the Psalm to agree to Goliah) or else was set to the tune of one that had been composed on that subject, for so Kimchi, as was said, among their known tunes, names Alamoth for one, which sure refers to this place. Besides this, one farther interpretation there is, of which the word may be deemed capable, and that concurring to the same end, to determine Goliah the person here referred to. For בֵּין in Hebrew and Chaldee signifies inter or in medio, between, or in the middle, and may fitly denote a Champion, or Combatant, that stands forth, and is in the middle, to challenge the enemy. So 1 Sam. 17. 4. when Goliah comes out to challenge the Israelitish host, it is, אִישׁ הַבֵּנַיִם vir intermedius saith the Interlinear, a man, or one in the midst came out from the Camp of the Philistims; and the Chaldee in like manner גִּבָּרָא מִבֵּינֵיהוֹן a strong man, or gyant, or champion from among them. And many like passages there are in Authors, of combatants standing forth betwixt the Camps: So he whom Manlius Torquatus killed in Livie, l. 7. This || Homer expresses in like style, by ἐν μέσσῳ, in the midst, Ἀνδρὶ δὲ μ' ἐν μέσσῳ καὶ Ἀμφίλοχον Μενέλαον.

i. e. saith Eustathius, p. 291. l. 23. μεταξὺ τῶν δύο στρατευμάτων, betwixt the two Armies, which, saith he, after Homers time, μεταίχμιον φασιν, or μεσαίχμιον, they express by one word, which signifies between the Armies, and is, saith he, † afterward more fully described by ὀλίγη δ' ἦν ἀμφὶς ἀρούρα, there was a little plain or field about them. Agreeable to which is our style of duellers, challenging to the field. And in reference to this it may possibly be, that Goliah should be here noted by אִישׁ לַבֵּן, or simply לַבֵּן the man between, i. e. the Champion. And then מוּת לַבֵּן the death of this (here called Labben) will be no more than the plainer words express, 1 Sam. 17. 51. כִּי מֵת גִּבּוֹרָם that their strong man or champion was slain or dead: which the LXXII. render τέθνηκεν ὁ δυνατὸς αὐτῶν, their mighty man (as v. 4. they rendred אִישׁ הַבֵּנַיִם the man between) and the Syriack, and the Arabick, their gyant. Of him then this title may be understood; and the Psalm either have been composed for some anniversary commemoration of his death, or else set to the tune of some that was thus composed. But this is but conjecture in a matter of great uncertainty.

V. 3. Shall fall.] The notion of כָּשַׁל here is military, being spoken of enemies in war, and it refers to those that either faint in a march, or are wounded in a battel, or especially that in flight meet with gall-traps in their way, and so are galled and lamed, rendred unable to go forward, and so fall, and become liable to all the ill chances of pursuits, and, as here, are overtaken, and perish in the fall. And thus 'tis by the Chaldee יִתְקְלוֹן (חָקַל being lightly varied from this) impingent, stumble or light on any gall-trap, or other sort of scandall. But the LXXII. both here and in most other places render it ἀσθενῶν, being weak, and so the Latine infirmabuntur, and the Arabick and Æthiopick all to the same sense; meaning no other then this of being galled, and so made unfit for progress: See Psal. 27. 2. ἠσθένησαν καὶ ἔπεσον, they were weak, or wounded, or galled in their March, and then they fell, as a consequent of it. And thus must it be rendred here, not falling, but being gall'd and lame, precedent to falling. And so in St. Paul, Rom. 14. 21. σκανδαλίζεται ἢ ἀσθενεῖ, offended and made weak, are in the same sense for him that is gall'd and discouraged, or hindred in his Christian course. See note on 1 Cor. 8. b.

V. 6. Destructions]

c. חָרַב

V. 6. Deſtructions.] The Hebrew חָרַב vaſtatus eſt, hath many nouns derived from it: חָרְבָה deſolation, deſtruction, and alſo a fight, or war; חֶרֶב a ſword; and מְחֹרָב a ſouldier. And accordingly the LXXII. render חָרְבוֹת here ῥομφαίας, ſwords, and ſo the Syriack, and Latine; the Arabick read it weapons, and the Chaldee paraphraſe it by armies and Caſtles. But the ordinary rendring is to be preferred (though the other need not be deſpiſed) and ſo the ſenſe will be, that the Philiſtims deſtructions are completed to the uttermoſt; (as εἰς τὸ τέλος, to the end, by which the LXXII. render לָנֶצַח here, is duly tranſlated, 1 Theſſ. 2. 16.) and then that which follows, and thou haſt deſtroyed Cities] muſt not be applyed to the enemy, in the beginning of the verſe, but to the God of Iſrael, who deſtroyed them. And thus the Jewiſh-Arabick tranſlator applyes it. The enemies Countrey deſolation hath fully ſeiſed on, made a full end of it; The People of their Cities thou haſt cut off, till, or ſo that their memory is utterly periſhed.

In the end of the verſe where the Hebrew hath הֵמָּה with them, the LXXII. it ſeems read הֲמָא a noiſe, or tumult, and ſo render it μετ' ἤχου, with a ſound; and ſo the Latine and Arabick and Æthiopick after them: But the Chaldee have מִבַּיִן from them; and the Syriack leave it out as redundant, being conteined in זִכְרָם their memorial, precedent.

d. יְהוָה לְעוֹלָם

V. 7. But the Lord.] The rendring of this Verſe is beſt learnt from the Chaldee, who make three parts of it. 2. וַיהוָה לְעוֹלָם i. e. literally, And the Lord for ever, they render, The word of the Lord for ever, by way of Ellipſis, to be ſupplied by addition of ſome verbe, is, or abideth for ever. 2. יֵשֵׁב he ſhall ſit, which they paraphraſe, his habitation in the higheſt heavens. 3. כּוֹנַן —— he hath prepared his throne, or tribunal for juſtice. The two former of theſe the LXXII. confound, and put into one, and ſo the Syriack and Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick after them: but the more diſtinct reading, which the Chaldee follows, is moſt literal and full, and with reaſon to be preferred.

e. בַּת צִיּוֹן

V. 14. Daughter of Sion.] The word daughter, applyed to a city or nation, ſignifies the people or inhabitants of it, the city being as it were the parent from whence they ſpring; and accordingly the Chaldee here expreſſes it by כְּנִישַׁת צִיּוֹן the aſſembly of Sion, from כָּנַס and בָּנַשׁ congregavit.

f. מוֹרָה

V. 20. In fear.] מוֹרָה here is by the LXXII. rendred νομοθέτης, a Law-giver; and ſo the Syriack and vulgar and Æthiopick follow them, and the Arabick with a little change, a doctor or teacher of the Law, probably referring to מוֹרֶה a doctor or teacher, coming regularly from יָרָה docuit. The Chaldee render it דַּחֲלְתָּה fear, as if it were מוֹרָא from יָרֵא timuit. And ſo between theſe, the generality of interpreters is divided. If the former be accepted, the ſence will well bear it, thus; Set them a teacher, an inſtructer, that, as it follows, they may know themſelves to be but men, learn humility and piety by this means, and Gods judgments or puniſhments may be this teacher: as 1 Tim. 1. 20. delivering to Satan to be buffeted, and afflicted by him, is ἵνα παιδευθῶσι, that they may be taught not to blaſpheme. If it be the ſecond, then 'tis; Put them in fear——i. e. bring them to the acknowledgment and fear of thee, and that by thy puniſhments alſo. But 'tis ſure the Hebrew מוֹרָה according to its punctation here ſignifies a Razor; ſo Judg. 13. 5. וּמוֹרָה and a razor, מַסָּפָר ſay the Chaldee, ſhall not come upon his head, and 1 Sam. 1. 11. in like manner. Now this in the Prophetick ſtyle is frequently uſed for the execution of Gods vengeance: See Iſ. 7. 20. The Lord ſhall ſhave with a razor that is hired, even the King of Aſſyria, and Ezek. 5. 1. take thee a barbers razor, thereby to ſignifie Gods judgments upon Jeruſalem. And this, and nothing but this, is the importance of the word, thus pointed; and then it will fitly be rendred, in prophetick dialect, ſet them, or thou wilt ſet them a razor, bring ſome ſharp puniſhment upon them, that ſo they may know themſelves to be but men.

מוֹרָא

The

The Tenth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

The Tenth is a Psalm of Davids, joyned by the LXXII. to Psalm ix. but in the Hebrew divided from it: and it is a complaint made to God of the riotous oppressions of wicked men; and an humble relyance on him for his repressing them.

1. WHy standest thou afar off, O Lord? why hidest thou thy self in times of trouble?

1. O thou all-seeing Lord, thou art sometimes pleased to withdraw thy self a while from the aid of suppliants, and in times of the greatest streights (which are the fittest ‖ opportunities) to suspend thy interpositions, and permit oppressors to prosper, and we silly creatures are often posed thereby, discern not the causes which move thy wisdom to it.

‖ Ἐν εὐκαιρίαις, Lxxii. See Psal. 9. 9.

‖ or, In the pride of the wicked the poor is set on fire.

2. ‖ The wicked in his pride doth [a] persecute the poor: Let them be taken in the devices which they have imagined.

2. That wicked men should make use of their worldly power to injure and beat down those that are not able to resist, is nothing strange, their pride incites them to it: But it is thy property to resist the proud, and defend the needy, and to bring ruine on godless men, by the same means by which they designed it to others. Be thou now pleased thus to reveal thy self.

* and the covetous blasphemes and provoketh God.

3. For the wicked boasteth of his hearts desire, * and [b] blesseth the covetous, whom God abhorreth.

3. For 'tis to the great dishonour of thy Name, that the wicked is thus permitted to prosper in his designs: he boasteth and placeth a pride in it, that without any check he can do what he please. And so the covetous designer, that for the inriching himself oppresses and injures others, either perswades himself that God sees not at all, or that he meddles not with the Government of the World, or else makes God an accessary, and favourable to it; every of which is indeed an horrible blasphemy, and must needs provoke him exceedingly.

‖ The wicked in the haughtiness of his look. † saith, God will not require, or consider, or search out all his devices, or will not seek; all his thoughts are, there is no God.

4. ‖ The wicked through the pride of his countenance † will not [c] seek after God; God is not in all his thoughts.

4. For thus the impious atheistical worlding resolves within himself, that all his designs are so subtilly and closely managed, so politickly laid, and secretly wrought, that no God in heaven shall ever be able to discover them, much less to frustrate or punish them.

‖ I shall not be moved for ever and ever (that not on mischief, or) from doing mischief. † iniquity, or falseness.

5. * His ways are always [d] grievous: thy judgments are far above out of his sight: as for all his enemies he puffeth at them.

5. He pursues his own wicked courses very constantly and industriously. As for Gods laws, or the judgments due from him to sinners, he never considers or lays them to heart: and so being confident of his own wit and strength, and setting all his thoughts on the mischieving his opposers, and never dreaming of any check from any, he despiseth, and contemns them all.

d. * His ways shall travail, or bring forth at every season.

6. He hath said in his heart, ‖ I shall not be moved; [e] for I shall never be in adversity.

6. And resolves in his own thoughts that he will never give over his oppressive and wicked ways, upon any apprehension or fear, whether of God or man.

7. His mouth is full of [f] cursing and deceit and frauds, under his tongue is mischief and † [g] vanity.

7. On this account he makes no scruple to take and break oaths, to imprecate all curses on himself, for the confirming of that which is most false; and so he may cheat and injure others, cares not what maledictions he calls down upon himself; and thus is he always employed. His tongue serves him for no other use, but to oppress and defraud others.

f. g.

* or, fields. ‖ insidiously watch.

8. [h] He sitteth in the lurking places of the * villages; in the secret places doth he murther the innocent: his eyes ‖ are [i] privily set against the poor.

8. And all advantages he makes use of to catch and kill; he is always upon some secret design of rapine and blood; and innocent poor men that never provoked him, or were his enemies, are the special persons at whom his treachery is directed.

9. He lieth in wait π secretly, as a Lion in his den; he lieth in wait to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor ω when he draweth him into his net. α [k].

9. For these he lies in ambush, as a Lion in expectation of his prey, on purpose to tear and devour them; lays his toils to insnare them, with all the subtlety imaginable; draws them into his power; and then useth the utmost ‖ violence upon them, rends them and preys on them.

10. He coucheth β and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall by his strong ones.

10. And as a Lion is then most couchant, when his aims are most bloody, and designs that insidious posture to that very end; so doth he put on the guise of the greatest meekness and humility, on purpose, that, as a Lion again, he may make use of it to the greatest advantage of seising on his prey (oppressing any that are weaker than he) whensoever it comes within reach of him.

11. He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten; he hideth his face, he will not see it.

11. All this while he perswades himself that God takes no notices of these oppressions of his, is confident never to be called to any account for them.

13. This thy longanimity in forbearing of wicked men, and permitting them to proſper, makes them blaſpheme thee, as one that either doth not ſee, or will never puniſh their violences. v. 3.

13. Wherefore doth the wicked * contemn God? he hath ſaid in his heart, Thou wilt not require it. * provoke, See v. 3. note b.

14. But they will one day find themſelves in a ſad errour, and diſcern to their coſt, that God hath ſeen all the oppreſſions of their lives, and will repay indignation and anger and wrath upon every Soul that hath gone on in this enormous atheiſtical courſe; and on the other ſide take a ſpecial care of all helpleſs men, that rely and truſt on him, and commit themſelves by patience and piety to his cuſtody.

14. Thou haſt ſeen it, for thou beholdeſt miſchief and ſpight, to requite it with thy hand: the poor committeth himſelf unto thee, thou art the helper of the fatherleſs.

l. 15. For thou, Lord, wilt ſhew forth thy vengeance, and bring to nothing the oppreſſors power: viſit him and his deeds, till they be utterly deſtroyed.

15. Break thou the arm of the wicked and the evil man; l * ſeek out his wickedneſs, till thou find none. * thou ſhalt ſeek his wickedneſs, not find it.

m. 16. Thus will God vindicate himſelf to have the governing of the world in his hands: and though wicked men and oppreſſors proſper for a time, and this tempt men to ſome doubts, and atheiſtical diſputes; yet the concluſion will clear the doubt, (and confirm all, that conſider it, in the adoration of Gods power and juſtice) viz. the utter extirpation of wicked men out of Canaan, the emblem of Heaven.

16. The Lord is King for ever and ever; the m heathen are periſhed out of his land.

17. Thou haſt, O Lord, by promiſe obliged thy ſelf never to reject any humble ſuppliant that wants, and waits for thy help: the ardency of humble addreſſes to thee is thine own gift; and then thou canſt never reject or deſpiſe thoſe requeſts, which are thus, by thine own ſpirit and appointment, directed and brought to thee.

17. Lord, thou haſt heard the deſire of the humble, thou wilt prepare their heart, thou wilt cauſe thine ear to hear.

18. And this gives ſecurity and confidence to the moſt helpleſs and deſolate, that thou wilt in thy good time interpoſe thy aids and thy vengeance, to relieve the oppreſt, when he is duly qualified for that mercy, and to ſubdue and confound the atheiſtical tyrannizing oppreſſors, and ſhew them how ſmall reaſon they had, to rejoyce and boaſt of Gods not ſeeing or conſidering their actions.

18. To judge the fatherleſs and the oppreſſed, that the man of the earth may no more * oppreſs. * tyranpize לַעֲרֹץ

a. יְדַלַּק V. 2. Perſecute] דָּלַק ſignifies two things, (as was ſaid note on Pſal. 7. e.) to perſecute, and to be ſet on fire: and though we render it in the former ſenſe, and ſo apply it to רָשָׁע the wicked, in the active ſenſe, [the wicked perſecutes the poor] yet the antient Interpreters generally render it in the paſſive, and apply it to עָנִי the poor, that in the pride of the wicked he is ſet on fire, i. e. brought into great tribulation; ἐμπυρίζεται, ſay the LXXII. in the ſenſe that S. Peter uſes πύρωσις, 1 Pet. 4. 12. for a great perſecution and affliction, that fell on godly men. And thus the ſenſe will very well bear it in this place, and the matter be little varied, which way ſoever the rendring be; it being all one, whether the wicked in his pride perſecute the poor, or the poor be perſecuted, and afflicted, and oppreſt in, or through the pride of the wicked. The Chaldee exactly follows the Hebrew, and is as ambiguous as that, but is tranſlated in the paſſive ſenſe.

b. בֵּרַךְ V. 3. Bleſſeth] Some incertainty there is in rendring this latter part of the third verſe. The LXXII. beſides that they take רָשָׁע the wicked from the beginning of the next verſe, and joyn it with this, [Παροξύνει ὁ ἄνομος Κύριον, the wicked hath provoked the Lord] they alſo render בֵּרַךְ paſſively, εὐλογεῖται, is bleſt, and בֹּצֵעַ ἀδίκων, the injurious; and ſo the Syriack and Latine. But the Chaldee varies from them, and keeps nearer the Hebrew. The chief difficulty is in the rendring of בֵּרַךְ; which though in Kal it ſignifies to bleſs, yet in Piel, as here 'tis uſed, it is obſerved ſometimes to ſignifie in a contrary ſenſe, to curſe, or blaſpheme. So evidently Job 1. 5. Peradventure they have ſinned וּבֵרְכוּ and curſt God in their heart; the Targum read וְאַרְגִּיזוּ and provoked God: ſo again v. 11. and c. 11. 5. and 9. Curſe God and die: ſo 1 King. 21. 10. of Naboth, בֵּרַכְתָּ Thou haſt blaſphemed, or curſed God, נְדַפְתָּ ſaith the Targum, Blaſphemed before God: and ſo again v. 13. And thus the Arabick word to bleſs, as Mr. Pocock cites it out of Nehayah, ſignifies alſo to reproach or rail at; and many other words of contrary ſignifications are noted by him, Not. miſcell. ch. 2. And ſo moſt reaſonably it muſt ſignifie here; and then the meaning will be clear בֹּצֵעַ in the Nominative Caſe, as in the beginning of the verſe רָשָׁע had been, and no ellipſis to be ſupplyed, ſave only of the copulative [and] (which is much more frequent and eaſie than what is neceſſary to the common way of interpreting it) thus, וְבֹצֵעַ בֵּרַךְ and the covetous (or in the LXXII. their rendring ἀδίκων, the injurious, or oppreſſor) blaſphemes נִאֵץ יְהוָה and provoketh the Lord.

c. יִדְרֹשׁ V. 4. Seek] What יִדְרֹשׁ here ſignifies is matter of ſome queſtion. The Syriack renders it מֵחֲקַר from עָקַב to ſearch or examine; the Latine renders it perpendere, to perpend or weigh, the Chaldee יְחַבַּע which ſignifies to require, (and thus it is uſed in the notion of avenging or puniſhing, Gen. 9. 5. and here v. 13.) the LXXII. ἐκζητῆσαι, and ſo the Latine to ſeek, the Arabick to ſearch. It ſignifies alſo to interrogate, in order to learning, ſo to aſk, as when we conſult, or take any thing into ſerious care or conſideration; and then if the לֹא יִדְרֹשׁ be applyed to the wicked, (as generally the Tranſlators apply it) the rendring muſt be, the wicked in the haughtineſs of his looks will not conſult, or ſearch after, or conſider God. And then the chief difficulty will be in the latter part of the verſe, אֵין אֱלֹהִים כָּל מְזִמֹּתָיו i.e. literally, No God all his thoughts: which being elliptical, muſt be ſupplyed either by addition of [is in] God is not in all his thoughts; ſo the Syriack underſtands it, בכלהון No God in all his thoughts, and to the ſame purpoſe the LXXII. and Latine, Latine, and Arabick, [illegible] God is not before him: or else by the addition of [seen or known] God sees not all his thoughts or devices, (And thus the Chaldee expounds it, but yet with a farther addition, (necessary to connect it to the former words) וְיֵימַר בְּלִבֵּיהּ and will say in his heart, All my devices are not manifest before the Lord:) or yet more promptly, and with less change, There is no God, are all his thoughts; so the Jewish-Arabick seems willing to supply it, rendring it, In all his thoughts he saith there is no God; and this is agreeable to Kimchi and others. In this variety of conjectures how the ellipsis may be best supplied, it may not be amiss to propose another rendring of the whole verse, by addition but of one word in the beginning, viz. [saith] (than which no word almost is more frequently understood) thus, The wicked in the elation of his countenance (as that is an indication of his heart, and therefore the Chaldee reads בְּגַבְהוּת רוּחֵיהּ in the pride of his spirit) saith, בַּל יִדְרֹשׁ אֵין אֱלֹהִים בָּל מְזִמֹּתָיו God shall in no wise (so the double negative בַּל אֵין signifies) require (in the notion of punishing) or (in the other vulgar notion) consider all his devices. Thus the words flow very naturally, and the ellipsis is much more intelligible, and easily supplyed, than any other way: and to this sense the context inclines; Thy judgments are far out of his sight, v. 5. and he hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hideth his face, he will never see it, v. 11. and this the interpretation of his blaspheming God, foregoing v. 3.

d. יְחִילוּ

V. 5. Grievous] יְחִילוּ is here by the Chaldee rendred מְצַלְחִין are prospered, as if it were from חִיל to be strong, or prosper, by the LXXII. βεβηλῶνται, are polluted, or profaned, as from חָלַל to violate or pollute, or profane, and so the sense will well enough bear; His ways are always polluted, or defiled, as the Atheists always must be, who considers not, nor dreads Gods judgments. But the radix חול, from whence it regularly comes, signifies properly to be tormented, after the manner especially of women in labour, and accordingly 'tis frequently used for bringing forth: so Isai. 54. 1. חָלָה and יָלְדָה are words of the same importance as travailing and bearing; so Jer. 4. 31. כַּיְחוֹלָה, as of one that travaileth; so Psal. 29. 9. The voice of the Lord, or thunder יְחוֹלֵל, makes to bring forth (speaking of the hinds, which are said to bring forth with difficulty, and to do it with more ease, when being frighted with thunder, their wombs open;) and so very frequently in other places, where the LXXII. render it ὠδίνω, to be in travail. And thus it seems to learned men to signifie in this place. See Schindler Pentaglott. p. 539. D. who renders it parient, enixè urgebunt vias suas, they shall painfully, industriously urge, or press their own ways, (so we had יָחִיל אָוֶן travailing with iniquity, Psal. 7. 14.) or rather in the singular of the person, his ways shall travail or bring forth at every season; [his ways] in opposition to [Gods ways or judgments] following, which are said to be far above, not considered by him. In this verse the punctation may possibly lie thus, Thy judgments are far above; over against, or before him (מִנֶּגְדּוֹ) are all his enemies, (his eyes and thoughts pursue them only) he puffeth (breatheth out threatnings and reproaches) at them. This way the Hebrew suffixes do more clearly answer one the other.

e. אֲשֶׁר

V. 6. For I shall never] The particle אֲשֶׁר which doth also sometimes signifie quod, in the notion of quia, because; and so our ordinary rendring supposes here, and takes רָע evil, not for sin, but punishment; and then אֲשֶׁר לֹא בְרָע is not amiss translated, [for not in evil, i. e. for I shall not be in evil, or adversity.] But all the antient Interpreters understand both אֲשֶׁר and רָע otherwise. The Chaldee joyn it with the former part of the verse, thus, I shall never be moved אֲשֶׁר לָא בְרָע from doing evil. The LXXII. and Latine and Arabick all seem to design the same sense, [illegible] I shall not be shaken or moved — without evil; and the Syriack by way of Paraphrase, ܕܠܐ ܒܥܝܢ ܒܝܫܬܐ be meditates mischief. All which inclines us to understand אֲשֶׁר in the notion of ut, that, in which 'tis frequently used, Gen. 11. 7. לְמַעַן לֹא אֲשֶׁר (as here) ut non, that they hear not, and in many other places: and then the meaning will be perspicuous, he saith in his heart, I shall or will by no means be moved for ever and ever, that not (i. e. so as not to be) in mischief, or so as not to be doing some ill, (as בְּרָע Exod. 32. 22. signifies being set on wickedness, the same that ἐλάλησεν ἐν τῇ γλώσσῃ, 1 Joh. 5. 19.) which there the Chaldee have fully paraphrased, I shall never be removed from doing ill, and the LXXII. more briefly, and imperfectly, [without ill] which yet is equivalent to [that not with ill] and so to be interpreted, which the Syriack meant to express more fully, [they imagine evil] meditate evil, i. e. evil, and nothing else, have no kind of check in so doing.

f. אָלָה

V. 7. Cursing] The Verb אָלָה signifies to swear, (and sometimes to forswear) but so to swear, as was usual among the Jews, with imprecation joyned with it, (as when Matth. 26. 74. 'tis said of Peter that he cursed and sware, i. e. sware with an imprecation) praying for evil against themselves in case they sware false. And in this sense the Noun is here taken, for that oath with imprecation; and being rendred [cursing] it is not malediction, or exoration of others, but of himself, in case he performed not his oath: and מִרְמוֹת deceit joyned with it, (which the LXXII. render πικρίας, bitterness, as if it were מָרָה which signifies that, and the rather because ϰαὶ δόλου following was sufficient to express deceit) denotes the perjury, and so really imprecating all curses on themselves, which in order to gaining to themselves, and oppressing of others, they are without any regret frequently guilty of.

g. אָוֶן

V. 7. Vanity] The Hebrew אָוֶן signifies not only sorrow, and hard travail, or labour, from whence the LXXII. render it πόνος here, but also violence, rapine, injury, iniquity, Job 11. 14. Prov. 30. 20. and Psal. 5. 5. and so 'tis to be rendred in this place, and the Greek πόνος to be understood in that notion, wherein πονηρὸς, wicked, doth come from it, meaning primarily him that doth πόνον inferre, injures, oppresses any other. See Matth. 5. 39. Note g. πόνος.

h. חַצְרוֹם

V. 8. Villages] חָצֵר a Court, open without walls, signifies also a Village, as that differs from a walled Town, and City, and so also any place, without dwelling or building in it, a field, &c. and in Arabick green grass; and so Psal. 103. 15. the life of a man is כְּחָצִיר as the herb or grass. And this is more proper for the turn in this place, speaking of ambushes, or laying of wait, for which the Villages (in our ordinary use of the word for little Towns) are not so commodious as the green grass, wherein one may lie and be hid, or the fields, which are far from any houses. The LXXII. read here μετὰ πλουσίων, with the rich, reading (as 'tis most probable) עָשִׁירִים, with the change of two letters ח. ר into others of a near sound with them, ש. ע.

i. צָפַן

V. 8. Privily set] צָפַן signifies to hide, or lay up in secret; but withal to watch, or insidiously to lay wait. So Prov. 1. 11. נִצְפְּנָה we render it, let us lay wait for blood. So Psal. 56. 7. יִצְפְּנוּ we render, they hide themselves, but the sense directs to this end of hiding, to lay wait. And so here undoubtedly doubtedly it signifies, as both the antecedents and consequents demonstrate. The LXXII. render it ἀποβλέπων, and so the Latine and Syriack, noting the intentness of his looking, or watching, as for a spoil or prey; the Arabick, shall look upon, or observe; and so belong to the same sense, which the Chaldee more fully expres by יִשְׁתּוֹן insidiabitur, lie in ambush, or secretly observe.

k. וְדָכָה V. 10. He croucheth] This passage may a while deserve to be examined, as it lies in the antient interpreters. And וְדָכָה is from דָּכַךְ comminuit, contrivit: the Chaldee read יִתְבָּר conteret, and the interlinear atteret; but both seem to use it in the reciprocal sense. But tis possible it should be rendered transitively, and he teareth him in pieces, and so connect, and be joyned with the end of the former verse, as the expression of Lion-like cunning, and cruelty there described, thus, [he catcheth the poor by drawing him into his net, and rends him into the smallest pieces.] Thus the LXXII. seem to have understood it, rendring it ταπεινώσει αὐτὸν, he shall humble (as from דכה humiliavit) him, i. e. the poor, and joyning it with ἐν παγίδι αὐτῶ, in his net, in the former verse; and the Syriack leave it out, as being before sufficiently expresst by catching him in his net: whereas they that with the Chaldee set it at the beginning of this tenth verse, do 1. omit the copulative ו unrendred, or turn it into a jod; 2. understand it in the neutral sense, he croucheth, as from דכה, which indeed may be so taken, but is not received by the Chaldee, or Interlinear, (the chief fautors of that interpretation) both which take it in the notion of דכך conterit; 3. are fain to insert a ו copulative before the next word, and render וְיִשְׁחַ, and humbled himself.] All which are removed, and the matter laid clear and current in this uniting, and rendring of it, [he doth catch the poor by drawing him into his net, and teareth him in pieces.] And then the tenth verse will be perspicuous also,

וְיִשְׁחַ יִשַּׁח, he shall stoop, (so יִשַּׁח from שחח, curvatus est, most properly signifies,) וְנָפַל and fall: thus the LXXII. render it, κύψει καὶ πεσεῖται, he shall stoop and fall; and the Syriack, ܢܟܦ ܘܢܦܠ be humbled, and fall; and the Latine, inclinabit & cadet, he shall bend himself and fall; and so the Arabick and Æthiopick; and so the similitude with the Lion enclines it, who lies down, is couchant, or, as in the Apologue in Horace, Ep. l. 1. 1. feins himself sick,

> ——Vulpes ægroto cauta Leoni
> Respondit——tua me vestigia terrent, > Omnia te advorsum spectantia, nulla retrorsum.

by that means to secure himself of his prey, or to fit him to seize on it. So saith the Jewish Arabick Translator: This is a description of the fashion of a Lion; for when he means to leap, he first coucheth, that he may gather himself together, then he rouzeth himself, and puts out his strength, till he tear his prey: therefore when he speaketh thee fair, beware of him, for this is but his deceit. Then follows בַּעֲצוּמָיו חֶלְבָּאִים, to prevail, or, that he may prevail over the poor. The LXXII. render it, ἐν τῷ αὐτὸν κραταιωθῆναι ἀπὸ πενήτων, in his prevailing over the poor, and so the Latine and Arabick and Æthiopick; and so עָצַם may signifie to be strong, and that comparatively, stronger than another; so Gen. 26. 16. עָצַמְתָּ thou art stronger than I: the Chaldee expound it by תַּקַפְתָּ from תָּקַף which signifies to overcome, to prevail over another. And thus is עָצַם generally expounded by the LXXII. ἰσχύω ὑπὲρ, and κατισχύω, and ὑπερισχύω, all words of prevailing and overcoming. And then the preposition ב seems best to be rendred by pro, or propter, or ad (so 'tis acknowledged to signifie, and ἐν in the LXXII. is frequently taken for εἰς) as the end for which he coucheth and falls: that as the couchant Lyon lies still, and then rouseth himself, when his prey comes into his reach, and so seises upon it; so he, by the like art of humility and secrecy, may break forth upon the poor man, and devour him. The Syriack here have a way by themselves; after [he shall be humbled and fall] wherein they follow the LXXII. they read instead of בַּעֲצוּמָיו, ܒܟܠ ܡܫܟܚ ܘܡܟܐܝܐ ܒܥܛܡܘ ܕܚܠܫܐ diseases, and sorrows are in his bones; questionless respecting that of the Lion, expresst by the Apologue in Horace, in feigning himself sick, that he may by that means obtain his prey. And so this serves to confirm this interpretation, which yet without that help is coherent, and facile in every part; whereas our ordinary rendring joyneth the singular נָפַל fall, with the plural חֶלְבָּאִים poor; and though the margin reads חֵל בָּאִים in two words, and the interlinear render it congregatio attritorum, the army, or congregation of afflicted ones; yet neither any of the antient interpreters acknowledge that reading, nor can there be place for it here, this word חֶלְבָּה being used twice more in this Psalm (though no where else) to signifie the poor, v. 8. and 14. It is more reasonably suggested in favour of that interpretation, that it is an elegance both in Hebrew and Arabick, to use the verb singular with the nominative plural, especially when the verb is placed first, as here it is; and therefore I acknowledge that to be no objection against the ordinary rendring in case the former of the notion of וְדָכָה, and בַּעֲצוּמָיו be of no force; Of which, as of a conjecture only, the Reader may pass his judgment; And if he shall prefer the ordinary rendring, then the main difficulty will be in the phrase וְנָפַל בַּעֲצוּמָיו And 1. the ו will not be barely either conversivum, or copulative, but as Eben-Ezra oft compares it to the Arabick ف denoting the consequence of one thing to another, so as to imply [that] or [untill] and so 'twill be rendred; he humbleth himself and the poor fall, or that, or untill the poor fall——Then for עֲצוּמָיו that may be rendred assaults: So Abu-Walid saith it is here a Noun, signifying contention, or assault, and applyes this notion to it in other places of Scripture, and in the Mishnaioth, and so doth Kimchi in his Radices; and in his commentary on this Psalm he puts both together, strength and contention, rendring it, בחוקף ריבו ומלחמותיו by the strength of his contention and warlike assaults. But then thus also it will be as well applyable to the other interpretation, which understood וְנָפַל of the assailant, he falleth with his fierce assaults חֶלְבָּאִים (understanding the præposition ב) on the poor; and in this sence Abu-Walid compares נפל with the Arabick وقع to fall, and to fall on, in sence of assault.

I. תִּדְרוֹשׁ בַּל תִּמָּצֵא V. 15. Seek till thou find none] To be sought and not be found] signifies proverbially that which is lost or destroyed utterly. So Psal. 37. 36. I sought him but he could not be found] is but another phrase to signifie what went before [he passed away, and lo he was not] So Job 20. 8. he shall flee away as a dream, and shall not be found] all one with, He shall perish for ever, they shall say, where is he? v. 7. So Ezek. 27. 21. though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou thou never be found again. So Rev. 16. 20. the mountains were not found, i. e. they were deſtroyed. So Chap. 18. 21. Babylon ſhall be thrown down, and ſhall be found no more at all. So Pſal. 69. 20. I looked for comforters but I found none] to expreſs a heavy, diſconſolate condition. So Jer. 1. 20. the ſins of Judah ſhall be ſought for, and ſhall not be found] is a prophetical expreſſion to note the taking away of ſin, viz. by pardon and remiſſion, which is the blotting them out, for ſo it follows, for I will pardon them, &c. And here it is taken in the ſame manner, not for the pardoning, but deſtroying, and ſo beſt connects with breaking the arm of the wicked (deſtroying him and his oppreſſions together) precedent, and the heathens periſhing out of the Land, v. 16. The Chaldee more fully expreſs it, Let their impiety be ſought for, and not found; and ſo the LXXII. and the Latine, and the Arabick, his ſin ſhall be ſought, and he ſhall not be found becauſe of it. Other like phraſes there are, As Pſal. 28. 5. thou ſhalt deſtroy, or pull them down, and not build them up. They ſhall fall and not be able to ſtand; Shall lye down, and not riſe, and the like.

V. 16. Heathens] What גוים nations or heathen] ſignifies in this place, is manifeſt by the former verſes, eſpecially the fifteenth immediately foregoing, where the ſubject of the diſcourſe is the wicked and evil man; who as there they are to be broken, and ſought and not found, ſo here of the גוים 'tis ſaid, that they ſhall periſh. 'Tis therefore to be reſolved, that the nations or heathen are here, as in many other places of the Pſalmiſt, the wicked men among the Jews, and not only the Idolatrous Gentiles ſo called. So Pſal. 59. 5. Awake to viſit the nations, or heathen, i. e. the wicked tranſgreſſors, in the end of the verſe, thoſe of the Jewiſh nation ſent by Saul to ſlay David. So v. 8. thou ſhalt have all the heathen in deriſion, ſpeaking of the ſame men. That the Greek ἔθνη, parallel to this, ſignifies not the Gentile Nations onely, but ſometimes, when the context enforceth, peculiarly the Jews, ſee Annot. on Matt. 24. ᵉ. and proportionably ἐθνικὸς, an heathen] is uſed for a deſperate obſtinate ſinner, Matt. 18. 17. m. גוים

The Eleventh PSALM.

Paraphrase.
The Eleventh Psalm is a declaration of Davids full confidence in God, in despight of all discouragements, and was by him composed, and committed to the prefect of his Quire.

TO the chief Musitian, a Psalm of David.

a. 1. My full trust and confidence is in God, not in any strength or preparations of my own: and therefore their advice is very unreasonable, that as in a state of destitution and despair, counsel me to retire to some remote place of solitude, for fear of mine enemies forces; as when fearful birds flie to the tops of Mountains, out of the fowlers reach.

1. In the Lord put I my trust: how say ye then to my soul, flee as a bird to [a] || your mountain.

2. They are daily discouraging me, with the approach, and preparations of mine enemies, and the closeness, and unavoidableness of their designs against me.

2. For loe, the wicked bend their bow, they make ready the arrow upon the string, that they may privily shoot at the upright in heart.

b. 3. Assuring me, that within a while all my preparations and Forces will be routed, and then 'tis not my righteousness will give me any support or security.

3. || If the [b] foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?

|| For the strong holds will be demolished.

4. But my full reliance and confidence in God, arms me against all these temptations to fear and despair. Let the strength, and preparations of my enemies be what they will, and my condition as low and destitute, in the eye of man, as is possible; yet I am sure God sits in Heaven, as in a sanctuary, and on a throne: so that I have my double appeal, and resort, to his mercy and his justice; the former to secure the righteous, the latter to subdue and destroy the wicked oppressor: and from these two I have grounds of assured confidence, that that all-seeing Majesty, that knoweth and judgeth the actions of men, will not fail to judge on my side, to secure me, and destroy my proudest adversaries,

4. The Lord is in his holy Temple, the Lords throne is in Heaven; his eyes behold, his eye-lids try the Children of men.

c. 5. For as it is most infallibly certain, that God doth overlook and sentence all and every action of all sorts of men, both good and bad, and approves, and justifies, and acquits, and withall maintains the cause, undertakes the patronage of the sincerely upright person, and though he permit him to be under some temptations, and seeming destitutions for a while, yet finally delivers him, and vindicates his integrity, and suffers not any thing which is truly ill to befall him, but converts all into good to him; so on the other side, he abhors violence and injustice, and permits not that finally to prosper, save to the destruction and endless mischief of the Authors of it.

5. The Lord tryeth the righteous; * but the wicked and him that loveth violence [c] his soul hateth.

* or, and the wicked, and he that loveth violence hateth his own soul.

d. 6. Be their Forces and preparations never so strong, God can and will defeat them all: when man cannot intrap them, or overcome them by his policy, God will do it for him, bring them into some trap or other, that shall keep them fast enough from injoying their projected prey, from hurting the righteous; and this oft so unexpectedly and so strangely, as that it shall be acknowledged the immediate work of God, as much, as if it came down in a showre of rain, visibly from Heaven. And so when men cannot by their own strength resist them, God will destroy them by his interposition, and that so observable to pious considering spectators, that it shall be attributed to him as immediately and signally, as was the destruction of Sodom by fire and brimstone, or of the Ægyptians by means of the strong East-wind, Exod. 14. 21. which drowned them, c. 15. 10. and secured the Israelites. Thus shall God finally deal with the wicked oppressors, though he bear patiently with them for a while.

6. Upon the wicked he shall rain Snares, [d] fire, and brimstone, and || an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their Cup.

|| a tempestuous wind shall be רוח זלעפות

7. For as God is most just and upright in himself, and perfectly abhors all the injustices and oppressions of wicked men; so doth he think himself obliged to favour and protect innocence, wheresoever it is, and accordingly considers and regards, and with his own eye of special watchful providence, defends, and secures all those that walk uprightly.

7. For the righteous Lord loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright.

Annotations

Annotations on Pſal. XI.

V. 1. Your mountain] where the Hebrew now reads הַרְכֶם צִפּוֹר to your mountain a Sparrow, all the antient interpreters uniformly read, to the mountain as a Sparrow: לְטוּרָא דֵּיךְ צִפְּרָא ſay the Chaldee, εἰς τὸ ὄρος, ὡς στρουθίον, and ſo the reſt, and ſo the ſenſe exacts, and ſo it is poſſible the reading antiently was, without the הַר כְּצִפּוֹר ים to the mountain as a Sparrow, as Pſal. 102. 7. we have כְּצִפּוֹר as a Sparrow upon the houſe top. However, if it be, flie Sparrow to your Mountain, the ſenſe will be the ſame, as a Sparrow to the Mountains (your) being redundant in ſenſe) ſo the Jewiſh-Arab, to ſome of the mountains. a. הַרְכֶם צִפּוֹר

V. 3. If the foundations] It is not certain, what הַשָּׁתוֹת ſignifies here. The word is once more found, Iſa. 19. 10. where we read purpoſes, and in the margin, foundations, and by ſome learned men 'tis rendred nets, by others, more agreeably to the context, dammes, or pool-heads. The Radix שת poſuit, denotes promiſcuouſly to make or prepare, or raiſe, whether a damme, a work, a fortreſs, and rampart of any kind, or a family, or an Army, &c. From the firſt of theſe (wherein 'tis uſed, Iſa. 26. 1. God ſaith יָשִׁית he will found or caſt up Salvation for walls and bull-warks) the noun may here ſignifie a refuge or place of ſtrength, ſuch as were ordinarily built on hills, which were mention'd v. 1. from the ſecond is Seths name, Gen. 4. becauſe, ſaith Eve, God שֵׁת hath prepared me another ſeed for Abel; hath given me, ſaith the Chaldee; ἐξανέστησε, raiſed up, ſay the LXXII. In the third ſence 'tis uſed Pſal. 3. 6. for laying ſiege, incamping, raiſing an army, אִתְכַּנְּשׁוּ aſſembling, ſaith the Chaldee, in a militarie manner: ſo Iſa. 22. 7. שֹׁת יָשִׁתוּ ſhall ſet themſelves in array. And it is moſt probable that here in a diſcourſe of enemies and hoſtility, it ſhould be uſed either in that firſt or in this third ſenſe, either for fortreſſes or ſtrong holds, or elſe for other forces and preparations military. It is thought alſo capable of another notion, for laws, the foundations of Government, and the defences, or bulwarks of every mans right, which, by another word מוֹסְדֵי, are ſo ſtiled, Pſal. 82. 5. ſpeaking of Judicature perverted, All the foundations of the earth are out of courſe. But the context here ſpeaking of David and his enemies, and uſing another word, doth not ſo well allow of this. To that of fortreſſes the ſtory agrees not, for David had none ſuch. To the latter of forces or preparations military the LXXII. (and the other interpreters following them) beſt agree, ἃ κατηρτίσω καθεῖλον, they have deſtroyed what thou haſt prepared; and the Syriack yet more fully ܐܝܟ ܕܐܬܩܢ ܐܢܬ ܗܘ ܐܒܕܘ what thou haſt prepared, they have diſſipated. The Latine not ſo fully, yet to the ſame ſenſe, qua perfeciſti deſtruxerunt, they have deſtroyed what thou haſt done, i. e. (the preter for the future) they will ſoon ſcatter and diſſipate all thy preparations; and when they have done ſo, פָּעַל מַה פָּדִיק what hath the righteous done? i. e. what can or will he do? His righteouſneſs will ſtand him in little ſtead. And thus it is fitly a part of the ſpeech of the diſtruſtful friends of David, that diſcouraged him, and bid him flie to the hills, places of ſtrength or ſafety, v. 1. (and it may be farther obſerved, that in Scripture ſtile we frequently read of the foundations of the mountains, or hills, Deut. 32. 22. Pſal. 18. 7.) and ſo ſtill inſiſt here, telling him that the enemy will deſtroy all his forces, and then a righteous man or cauſe, without any other defence, will ſoon be taken, and ruined. And therefore this is moſt probably the meaning of it. b. הַשָּׁתוֹת פָּעַל מַה פָּדִיק

V. 5. Soul hateth] The different ſignifications of the particle וְ have made this verſe capable of ſeveral interpretations. For if as a Copulative it be rendred [And] then the firſt part of the verſe runs thus, The Lord trieth the righteous, יְרָשָׁע and the wicked, i. e. examines the actions and thoughts of both: and this ſeems moſt probable, as beſt connecting with v. 4. his eye-lids try the children of men, i. e. all men in the latitude, righteous and wicked, good and bad. And then, as a conſequent of that, it fitly follows, And he that loveth violence hateth his own ſoul, i. e. doth inſtead of oppreſſing others, miſchief himſelf; he is ſure to have the worſt of it; when God comes to examine it, his unjuſt dealing will be the greateſt cruelty to his own ſoul: and for this the וְ before אֹהֵב חָמָס he that loveth violence may be indifferently rendred, [and] or [but] but moſt fitly [and.] This ſenſe the LXXII. have imbraced ὃς δὲ ἀγαπᾷ ἀδικίαν μισεῖ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ψυχήν, but he that loveth iniquity hateth his own ſoul; and from them the Latine, qui autem diligit iniquitatem, odit animam ſuam; and ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick: and there is only this prejudice againſt it, that שְׂנָאָה is in the feminine, and ſo more fitly agrees with נַפְשׁוֹ his ſoul in the nominative caſe. On the other ſide then, if וְ in the firſt place ſignifie [but] then it will disjoyn רָשָׁע the wicked, from the former part of the verſe, and make it begin the latter part; and then our ordinary rendring of it, which is favoured by the Chaldee, will be moſt commodious, ſo as to make an oppoſition betwixt the fate of the righteous on one ſide, and the wicked and violent on the other; that God trieth the one, and then trying muſt ſignifie either permitting to be tempted and afflicted for a while, or elſe (as δοκιμάζειν, to trie ſometimes ſignifies) approving the former, and abhorreth and deteſteth, and ſo will ſeverely puniſh the latter. And the only exception againſt this underſtanding of it is, that יִבְחָן trieth, is in the 4th verſe uſed in another ſenſe, for a judicial examination of mens actions, ſuch as is common to the ſons of men indefinitely, i. e. to all ſorts of them, good and bad, and not peculiar to the righteous; as in the notion either of tempting for a while, or of approving, it muſt be. In this uncertainty I thought it beſt, that the Paraphraſe ſhould not be confined to one, but inlarged ſo as to take in both of them.

V. 6. Fire, brimſtone] This verſe is beſt divided, by making the pauſe after פַּחִים ſnares, thus, Upon the wicked he ſhall rain ſnares; putting all that follows [fire and brimſtone, and wind of tempeſts or tempeſtuous winds] into one alſo, of all which together it is affirmed, that they are the portion of his Cup. And thus the LXXII. read it, πῦρ καὶ θεῖον καὶ πνεῦμα καταιγίδων μερὶς τοῦ ποτηρίου αὐτῶν, and ſo the Syriack and Latine; and thus there is no elipſis to be ſupplied, but only of the verb, are, or ſhall be, thus, Fire and brimſtone and a tempeſtuous wind ſhall be the portion of their Cup: which laſt phraſe [portion of Cup] is proverbial in Scripture. Gods gifts and diſpenſations, good and bad, are ordinarily expreſt by a Cup poured out, and given men to drink; thus 'tis very frequently in Scripture. And even the Hea-then c. פַּחִים d. כּוֹסָם then had the ſame expreſſion of their Gods; Δοιαὶ μὲν κρατῖρες —— in Homer, there be two Cups of the Gods, one of good things, another of bad. And then מָנָה portion from מָנָה numeravit, to tell out, ſignifies either a payment, or that which is deſtin'd to any, as his μοῖρα, or portion, in a diviſion. מָנָת

The Twelfth PSALM.

Paraphraſe. The Twelfth Pſalm is ſpent in meditation of the malice and wickedneſs of men, and the relief which is to be expected from none but God. It was compoſed by David, and committed to the Maſter of his Muſick to be ſung, or played on the harp of eight ſtrings.

TO the chief Muſitian upon ‖ Sheminith, a Pſalm of David. ‖ the Eight, ſee Pſal. 6.

1. It is a ſad ſight or meditation, to conſider how wicked the World grows, very few pious men to be met with any where; ſo few, that one may rely on, or truſt, that I have reaſon to complain, that even truth or fidelity it ſelf is departed out of this earth of ours. And this may well drive one to his one ſure hold, the help and aſſiſtance of God; on which alone I rely, and in that I reſt, and beſeech him in his good time to afford it me.

1. Help Lord, for the Godly man ceaſeth; for * the faithful fail from among the children of men. * or, fidelities אֱמוּנִים ai ἀληθεῖαι LXXII. and ſo Syr. Ar. Arab. Æthiop.

2. Among men there is nothing but falſeneſs and diſſimulation; fair words perhaps, but no reality in them.

2. They ſeek vanity † every one with his neighbour: with flattering lips and ‖ with a double heart do they ſpeak. * one with another אִישׁ אֶת רֵעֵהוּ ‖ with a heart. בְּלֵב וָלֵב

3. But God ſhall deſtroy theſe falſe deceitful perſons, and all ſuch Atheiſtical deſigners, which if they can by any policy attain their ends, never apprehend or fear any revenge from God, and make no ſcruple to profeſs ſo.

3. The Lord ſhall cut off all flattering lips, and the tongue that ſpeaketh proud things.

4. Saying, our tongues ſhall gain us whatſoever we want, ſupply all other defects of right, &c. who can hinder us from making our utmoſt advantage of theſe, to acquire whatſoever we can by the uſe of them? why ſhould we ſtand ſo ſtrictly to conſider, whether what we ſay be true or no? So we may advantage our ſelves by it, to whom ſhould we be accountable for that?

4. Who have ſaid, with our tongues will we prevail; our lips are † our own, who is Lord over us? † with us, אִתָּנוּ

a. 5. To ſuch Atheiſtical oppreſſors and deſpiſers as theſe God will at length ſhew forth his power, and juſt vengeance: the prayers and ſighs of the injured, and the loud cry of his proud vaunting oppreſſors impieties, will excite and raiſe up the Lord of hoſts, to the reſcue of the one, and infliction of vengeance on the other. Thoſe that cry to him, and relye on him, he will certainly hear and relieve effectually; or he that ſcorns his all-ſeeing eye and juſt providence, ſhall be ſcorned and rebuked by him.

5. For the oppreſſion of the poor, for the ſighing of the needy, now will I ariſe * ſaith the Lord; I will ſet him in ſafety [a] ‖ from him that puffeth at him. * will the Lord ſay, יֹאמַר ‖ he will ſpeak freely to him, or puffe at him, or it ſhall ſpeak out to him.

6. This God hath promiſed, and then there can be no doubt of his fidelity in performing it. The ſilver that is moſt perfectly refined, is not freer from droſs, than his words from all mixture of deceit. He cannot lie, nor will he ever fail thoſe that relie and truſt on him.

6. The words of the Lord are pure words, as ſilver tried in * a furnace of earth, purified ſeven times. * a cruſible, or fining pot עֲלִיל

b. 7. He will undoubtedly perform his promiſe, keep his word inviolable, and ſo, I am confident, ſupport and defend every godly perſon from this ſort of wicked Atheiſts, how often, or how confidently ſoever they ſhall riſe up againſt him.

7. Thou ſhalt [b] keep them, O Lord, thou ſhalt † preſerve ‖ them from this generation for ever. † preſerve him. תִּצְּרֵנוּ ‖ * of the ſons of men.

c. 8. And it ſhall be matter of obſervation, and withall of aſtoniſhment to wicked men, to be witneſſes of this act of Gods juſtice, to ſee thoſe whom they moſt extremely vilified, to be now exalted by him, and made evidences and inſtances of his Governing the World, and taking ſpecial care of thoſe that depend on him, how vile and abject ſoever they are in the eyes of men.

8. The wicked walk on every ſide, when the [c] vileſt * men are exalted.

Annotations on Pſalm XII.

a. יָפִיחַ V. 5. Puffeth] Of יָפִיחַ it is queſtion'd, whether it be the right reading, or no; for all the antient interpreters read it in the firſt perſon: παῤῥησιάσομαι, ſay the LXXII. fiducialiter agam ſaith the Latine, and I will teſtifie ſaith the Chaldee, and ܐܦܥܒܕ ܠܗ ܒܓܠܝ ܦܘܪܩܢܐ I will work ſalvation openly ſay the Syriack. And ſo all theſe ſuppoſe it to be אָפִיחַ (not יָפִיחַ) I will——as in the antecedents, the Lord ſaith, אָקוּם I will riſe, and אָשִׁית I will ſet; whereas our Engliſh Tranſlation, that read and render it in the third perſon, do 1. ſuppoſe a very unuſual elliptis, to be ſupplied with no leſs than three words [from him that] and 2. apply the following [לוֹ him] in the ſingular to [the poor and needy] both which are in the plural [עֲנִיִּים and אֶבְיוֹנִים] and ſo cannot not accord with it. If we ſhall take it in the firſt perſon, then for the nature of the word, it is acknowledged, that פּוּחַ ſignifies two things: 1. flavit, ſufflavit, to blow, and puffe, and ſo to ſcorn or deſpiſe; and 2. by a metaphor, to ſpeak boldly, freely, confidently, (as ſometimes alſo 'tis ſimply to ſpeak.) This latter notion ſome of the antient interpreters follow: παῤῥησιάζομαι ἐν αὐτῷ, ſay the LXXII. and fiducialiter agam in eo, the Latine, I will ſpeak or deal boldly with him; and the Chaldee with ſome change, I will teſtifie evil againſt the wicked: the Syriack (as was ſaid) and Arabick expreſs it by addition only of [palam openly] to the precedent phraſe [I will work ſalvation openly.] In either of theſe rendrings the ſenſe will not be amiſs; either I will ſpeak freely to him (i. e. to the unjuſt Atheiſtical oppreſſor, mention'd in the former part of the Pſalm) or, I will puffe at him. If the former ſhould be it, then ſpeaking freely to him, muſt ſignifie rebuking of him, and that as an act of Gods vindicative juſtice, which he now promiſes to execute upon the oppreſſor, when at the ſame time he will redeem the oppreſſed: if the latter, then puffing at him is contemning or ſcorning his proud language foregoing. And with either of theſe accord the conſequents, The words of the Lord are pure words——i. e. his promiſes of deliverance to the poor, by rebuking, or contemning the oppreſſor, are very faithful, ſuch as he will undoubtedly perform. Thus much on ſuppoſition, that the word were אָפִיחַ in the firſt perſon. But if we leave this conjecture, and retein יָפִיחַ in the third perſon, and render it, he ſhall rebuke him, or in the firſt notion, he ſhall puff at him (as 'twas Pſal. 10. 5.) i. e. ſcorn, or contemn him, then ſtill this will return to the ſame, if it be ſo underſtood as to belong to God; and ſo it may, if it be in conſtruction connected with יֹאמַר יְהוָה, the Lord will ſay] thus, The Lord will ſay, I will ariſe, and ſet them in ſafety; he will puffe at him, contemn, and ſcorn, or rebuke him. But it may alſo be in the third perſon, and yet not be referred to the Lord, but perhaps to the immediate antecedent יֶשַׁע ſalvation or deliverance, thus אָשִׁית בְּיֶשַׁע I will ſet him in ſafety, or give, or work Salvation, יָפִיחַ לוֹ It ſhall ſpeak, or ſpeak aloud to him (ſo as Hab. 2. 3. יָפִיחַ לַקֵּץ it ſhall ſpeak at the end) i. e. ſhall give him the effect, and ſhew him the accompliſhment of my promiſe. This perhaps the antient interpreters ſaw, (but only thought it more perſpicuous and intelligible, to render it not literally in the third, but by way of Paraphraſe, in the firſt perſon) eſpecially the Syriack, whoſe rendring [I will work Salvation openly] comes perfectly home to it. And to this fitly connects, v. 6. The words of the Lord, &c.

b. V. 7. Shalt keep them.] 'Tis not ordinarily obſerved to what the ם in תִּשְׁמְרֵם refers. That תִּשְׁמְרֵם 'tis a connotation of the whether perſons, or things in the plural, that God will keep, there is no doubt; and 'tis ordinarily applyed to the perſons. The Chaldee renders it לְצַדִּיקַיָּא the juſt; the LXXII. ἡμᾶς, us, and ſo the Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick; the Syriack ܢܲܛܪܲܢ them, and ſo our Engliſh, them, both there, and in the next תִּצְּרֶנּוּ words, where yet it is תִּצְּרֶנּוּ thou ſhalt keep him, in the ſingular. But that which removes all difficulty, is to underſtand the [them] of the words of the Lord, in the precedent verſe, ſo as שָׁמַר to keep, is to obſerve and performe, whether ſtatutes, or promiſes, as ordinarily 'tis uſed. And then the [him] following, will certainly be the godly, or juſt man, to whom thoſe words or promiſes are made. And this may be reſolved on to be the meaning of the verſe, Thou, O Lord, ſhalt keep, or performe thoſe words, thou ſhalt perſerve the juſt man from—— The Jewiſh Arabick tranſlator takes a great liberty here, rendring תִּצְּרֶנּוּ in the latter place, as in the firſt perſon plural, and thus expreſſes the whole verſe; O Lord, as thou haſt promiſed to keep them, ſo keep us from a generationthat is thus conditioned.

V. 8. Vileſt men.] The meaning of this laſt c. parcel of the Pſalm is very obſcure. The LXXII. render it, κατὰ τὸ ὕψος σου ἐπολυώρησας τὰς υἱὰς τῶν ἀνθρώπων, according to thy height thou haſt highly or greatly regarded the ſons of men; and from thence the Latine verbatim, ſave that they have turned ἐπολυώρησας, thou haſt regarded, into multiplicaſti, thou haſt multiplyed. Of this rendring of the LXXII. I ſuppoſe this account may be given; 1. that the tranſcribers miſtake σου for σ, and that we are to read it κατὰ τὸ ὕψος σ ἐπολυώρησας, according to the height or degree, wherewith thou haſt taken care for the ſons of men, or according to the height of the care which thou haſt taken—— 2. that the LXXII. for זֻלּוּת read רוּלִית with the change of ר for ז, and י for ו. This word we find Pſal. 30. 1. where we rightly render it [thou haſt lifted up] but the LXXII. have ὑπέλαβες, thou haſt taken up, or taken care of, in the ſenſe of πολυωρεῖν, to take ſpecial care of. And then their meaning is plain, [according to the height wherewith thou haſt taken care of the ſons of Men.] But then ſtill this is nothing to the reading זֻלּוּת, which now we have. In the next place then, the Chaldee paraphraſe renders it, as a blood-ſucker which ſucks the blood of the ſons of Men, for תּוֹלַעַת, reading תּוֹלָעָה, תּוֹלַעַת a worm, from a third notion of רום for vermibus ſcatet, and underſtanding by זֻלּוּת either the vileſt parts of the body, to which thoſe blood-ſuckers are faſten'd, to ſuck out the corrupteſt blood, (as the Syriack renders it obſcenities) or poſſibly taking the word in that notion of זוּל, wherein it ſignifies abſorbere, deglutire, as here Abu-Walid and others interpret it for devouring of men. Paſſing by all theſe, as remote from the meaning of the place, the plain ſenſe of it will be beſt gathered, by obſerving the importance of זֻלּוּת vilitates, literally, baſeneſſes, but that to be explained by the adjunct, ſons of men, ſo as to ſignifie the vileſt perſons; probably not thoſe which are really ſuch, but in the eſteem, and repute of men; ἐξουθενημένοι, 1 Cor. vi. 4. thoſe that are deſpiſed and made nothing of among them. Such was David, to whom particularly R. Salomo applyes it, who was exalted from a very low and mean condition. And then, whether we read כְּרָם ſecundum, or juxta exaltationem, or with a light change בְּרָם in exaltando, the ſenſe will be clear, The wicked walk about, or on every ſide (as thoſe that would view a thing throughly do uſe to do, go round about, to view it in every appearance of it) at the exalting of the vileſt of the Sons of Men, i. e. when thoſe that are moſt vilified by them, are by God exalted, and ſet above them. Thus ſome Greek Copies render it, ὅταν ὑψωθῶσιν οἱ ἐντελεῖς τῶν υἱῶν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, when the mean or vile of the ſons of Men are exalted. So that now the onely queſtion is, what is meant by the סָבִיב wicked walking round about: and that, I ſuppoſe, will דֹּשְׁנִים beſt be anſwered, that by this expreſſion is ſet out their ſeeing evidently, and being witneſſes of it, and obſerving withall, and wondring, and perhaps grieving at it, as that which they did not fear, or look for, and now that they ſee it, find themſelves pitifully defeated; and thus it beſt agrees with the context, Thou ſhalt keep, O Lord, &c. from this generation for ever, v. 7. i. e. thou ſhalt preſerve theſe good men that are thus despised, from their proudest enemies, that thus vilify them, and then follows, The wicked walk on every side —— they see, and observe, and wonder at it, but cannot help it. But if indeed נדלות should signifie those that are really base and vile, then the meaning must be, when vile and base persons are exalted, then wicked and injurious men bear all the sway, swarm every where. And this also hath some affinity with the former part of the Psalm, v. 1, 2, 3. but doth not so properly connect with the immediate antecedents.

The Thirteenth PSALM.

Paraphrase. The Thirteenth is a complaint, and prayer in time of great distress, and withall a confident chearful appeal to, and relyance on God's mercy, compiled by David, and committed to the Præfect of his Musick.

TO the chief Musitian a Psalm of David.

1. Blessed Lord, thou art pleased to withdraw the wonted declarations of thy favour and loving kindness from me, to exercise me for some space, to defer the gracious acceptance of, and answer to my prayers: I cannot but think it very long that thou art thus pleased to withhold the *blessing beames of thy countenance from me.

1. How long wilt thou forget me, O Lord, for ever? how long wilt thou hide thy face from me?

* נר splendor, Chald.

2. I am in continual thoughts of sadness, by black melancholick reflections on my present destitutions; not knowing what to do, which way to turn, whilest I discern thy wonted favours withdrawn from me, and a sad effect thereof, the prevailing of mine and thine enemies against me. O Lord, be thou pleased in thy goodness to set a speedy period to this.

2. How long shall I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart daily? How long shall mine enemy be exalted over me?

a. 3. Thou, Lord, art my only preserver and deliverer, my sole almighty refuge, to whom I may successfully resort: be thou at length pleased to restore thy favourable countenance, to hear and answer my prayers, to grant me some refreshing and reviving in this black state of sadness, which will without thy support soon bring me to my last; Lord, let me not for ever lye under it.

3. Consider and hear me, O Lord my God; [a] lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep || the sleep of death;

|| death, or so, or, in death, המות

4. If thou continue thus to withhold the merciful revelation of thy self, this will be matter of triumph to them that oppose me, and so thy Ordinance in me. If they continue thus prosperous, and I thus improsperous, they will think themselves conquerors over that cause which thou dost own, and so that either thou art not able, or willing to support thy servants: And this will be matter of great rejoycing and boasting to them, if thou please not to check it speedily.

4. Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him, and those that trouble me rejoyce when I am moved.

5. I know thou wilt do, and am assuredly confident, that as I have constantly relyed on thee for ayde, so I shall have the pleasure and comfort of being timely delivered by thee.

5. But I have trusted in thy mercy; my heart shall rejoyce in thy salvation.

b. 6. I have had so frequent and constant experiences of his goodness and mercy toward me, that I cannot doubt of the continuance of them; and therefore I have nothing to do, but thus to comfort and stay my self in him, and praising him for what I have already received, place my chearful assistance in him for the future.

6. I will sing unto the Lord, because he hath [b] † dealt bountifully with me.

† rendred good, or deals well.

Annotations on Psal. XIII.

a. האירה

V. 3. Lighten mine eyes] what is the meaning of this phrase, האירה עיני lighten mine eyes] may perhaps be best judged by Jonathans speech, 1 Sam. 14. 27. who being very hungry and ready to faint, dipt his rod in an honey-comb, and eat of it, and the Text saith, his eyes were enlightened, i. e. he was refresht by it. Dimness of sight is a frequent effect of long fasting, and then eating is the proper means of repairing that decay; and so this effect is by metonymie set to signifie that refection, which causeth this. See, saith Jonathan, v. 29. how mine eyes אורו have been enlightened, because I tasted a little of this honey, i. e. how I have received refreshment by eating this. There indeed the LXXII. render ἴδον, mine eyes have seen, either reading ראו from ראה, to see, or more probably, thus to express the meaning more perspicuously; for his eyes seeing] was an evidence of their being inlightened, and his being thus refresht from his hunger: and so before, v. 27. ἀνέβλεψαν, say they, his eyes received sight, or saw clearly. This was litterally applicable to David when he came to Nob, 1 Sam. 1. for then being threatned by Saul, and advised by Jonathan to flie, he was so distrest by hunger, that he was fain to eat the Shewbread. And so again in the time of Absalom's rebellion. David and his Forces were hungry, and weary, and thirsty in the wilderness, 2 Sam. 17. 29. had not Shobi, and Machir, and Barzillai refresht, and so enlightened their eyes, v. 27, 28. But it may also by an easie Metaphor be applyed to the political state. When in any time of affliction, expresst frequently by darkness, and gloominess, the person is relieved or refreshed, his eyes are said to be inlightened, in proporcion to that refreshment, that hungry fainting persons receive by meat. So Ezra 9. 8. the restitution after captivity, giving them a little reviving in their bondage, is ſtyled, Gods lightning their eyes. And ſo it is in this place, in the midſt of that ſadneſs that now lay on David, parallel to a fainting fit of hunger in the body, or to captivity in a ſtate, which if it were not ſpeedily relieved, would end in death quickly: See more of this Pſalm 19. note c.

b. גָּמַל

V. 6. Deals bountifully] גָּמַל ſignifies to retribute, whether good or ill, or ſimply to do either; and which it is, the context muſt direct. Here all interpreters agree of the good ſenſe. The Chaldæ add טָבְתָא good; the XXII. read wayyatheeli, and the Latine, bona tribuit, given me good things, and ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick; the Syriack, ... hath delivered me, and ſo we find it, Pſal. 116.7. 119.17. and in many other places, and 'tis indifferently uſed either with עַל on, or ל to, after it; and ſo 'tis beſt rendred here, hath deals well with me.

The Fourteenth PSALM.

TO the chief Muſitian a Pſalm of David.

Paraphraſe.

The fourteenth Pſalm is a ſad reflection on the wickedneſs and univerſal defection of his ſubjects, the men of Iſrael, in the conſpiracy and rebellion of Abſalom, 2 Sam. 15. looking only to God for deliverance from them. It was indited by David, and committed to the Prefect of his Quire.

1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart, there is no God. They are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doth good.

1. This wicked Nation is now made up of ſuch, as have caſt off all fear, and care, and even acknowledgment of God: whatſoever they do with their mouthes, (which perhaps are not let looſe to that boldneſs) their actions, as far as they are interpreters of their thoughts, evidence an Atheiſtical principle of belief within them, that † God hath not the governing and judging of the doings of men; for ſuch are their dealings, ſo falſe, ſo deteſtable, and ſo univerſally ſuch, that a man cannot judge more favourably of them, than that they never expect to be accountable to God for what they do.

† לית שולטנא דאלהא באורעא God hath not the power on the Earth, Chal.

2. The Lord looked down from Heaven upon the children of Men, to ſee if there were any that did underſtand and ſeek after God.

2. Should God from his throne of Majeſty and tribunal of juſt judgment ſurvey, and examine all the inhabitants of the whole Nation, making inquiſition for thoſe that conſider and make conſcience of duty, and indeavour to approve themſelves to his pure eyes;

3. They are all a *gone aſide, they are altogether become † filthy; there is none that doth good, no, not one.

*Grown ſpure, *putrid.

3. He would find a moſt lamentable appearance, an univerſal deteſtable decay of all juſtice, all Duty, both toward God and Man, baſe rotten converſation, and no conſiderable degree of piety, or humanity, or any thing that is good in any. (This, as it was obſervably true of Iſrael, that people of God, ſo eminently owned and favoured by him in Davids time, and in their behaviour toward him: ſo had it a farther † prophetick truth in it, in reſpect of the Univerſality of them at the time of Chriſt's appearing in the World, and in their actions toward him, and his Apoſtles after him, to the Jews of which Age St. Paul applics it, Rom. 3. 10.)

a.

† ברוח נבואה The Pſalm was by the ſpirit of Prophecy delivered by David. Chald.

4. Have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge, who eat up my people as they eat bread, *and call not upon the Lord?

*They have not called. לא קָרָאוּ

4. 'Tis ſtrange the conſpirators ſhould thus go on in their Atheiſtical folly, and never be wrought on by all the evidences of Gods power and juſtice among them, *never brought to any degree of ſenſe or remorſe, but ſtill go on in their preſumptuous (and withal aſſiduous, conſtant) courſe of injuſtice and cruelty. And the effect is yet more ſad; others that ſee them go on thus, follow them into their impieties, do not adhere (as they ought) to God, depend on his ſupport, but joyn and comply with the conſpirators.

* וְלֹא־קָרְאוּ gavmi, LXXII.

5. There ||were they in great b fear, for God is in the generation of the righteous.

||They feared a fear, but.

5. When they appeared powerful, and threatned all that would not go along with them, the Men of Iſrael were univerſally terrified, and joyned themſelves to the rebel forces; but this moſt cauſeleſly and impiouſly, never conſidering, that God is more to be feared than Man, and that he will never fail thoſe that ſtick faſt and conſtant to him.

6. You have ſhamed the counſel of the poor, becauſe the Lord is his refuge.

6. But alas, they laughed at thoſe that made conſcience of their duty, thought it a ridiculous thing for any to conſult, whether it were lawful or no, when there was ſo much viſible danger in it, to adventure on hazards, and expect ſecurity from heaven, was a reproachful thing; their worldly wiſdom was their only counſeller, and that adviſed them to joyn with thoſe, whoſe ſtrength was moſt viſible: And that made the defection ſo general.

7. † O that the ſalvation of Iſrael were come out of Sion. When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob ſhall rejoyce, and Iſrael ſhall be glad.

† Who ſhall give from Sion the ſalvation of Iſrael מִי יִתֵּן מִצִּיּוֹן יְשׁוּעַת

7. O how happy a thing were it, that God, whoſe ark (the place of his ſpecial reſidence and exhibition of himſelf) is in mount Sion, would return us to a peaceable ſtate of attending his ſervice there, that he would bring all back to Jeruſalem, that have been driven from thence by occaſion of this rebellion of Abſalom. When that deſired work ſhall be compleated, it will be matter of univerſal joy to all the tribes both of Iſrael and Judah. See 2 Sam. xix.

Annotations on Psal. XIV.

a. סָר V. 3. Gone aside] The word סָר is not vulgarly understood. That סוּר signifies recessit, declinavit, there is no doubt; And this is commonly applyed to a way or path, declining from the right way, or going in a wrong. But that seems not to be the notion of it here, but another, taken from wine, when it grows dead, or soure; thus Hos. 4. 18. סָר סִבְאָם their drink is gone aside, or grown soure; and accordingly wine that is thus dead, is in Greek called οἶνος ἐξεστηκὼς, wine that is gone out of it self, and by Cicero, vinum fugiens, wine that is fled. And that this is the notion that belongs to this place may be judged by that which next follows; נֶאֱלָחוּ from אָלַח to be rotten, or putrified, and that properly belongs to flesh, which is corrupted and stinks, and so the proportion is well kept between drink and meat, the one growing dead or soure, as the other putrifies and stinks, and then is good for nothing, but is thrown away: in which respect the LXXII. have fitly interpreted the latter by ἠχρειώθησαν, are become unprofitable, or nothing worth. In this notion it is fitly applyed to any kind of defection or Apostacy from any piece of known duty, as here of allegeance to their Prince set over them by God.

a. פָּחַד פַּחַד V. 5. In great fear] That fear is oft taken for the object of fear, dangers or threats is an ordinary observation. φόβος ἀπειλούμενος ὑπὸ τυράννου, fear, i.e. danger, threatned by the tyrant, in Alex. Aphrodis: So when Menander saith of a fair-tongued woman, that she is ὑπερβάλλων φόβος, an exceeding fear, i. e. danger. Of this see Annot. on Luk. 1. 9. This is most visible, 1 Pet. 3. 14. τὸν φόβον αὐτῶν μὴ φοβηθῆτε, fear not their fear, i. e. whatsoever evil persecuting enemies can threaten to bring upon you. And this seems to give us the best understanding of this phrase, שָׁם פָּחֲדוּ פָּחַד there they feared a fear, i. e. they apprehended some danger, and by that were hurried into this defection from their lawful Sovereign in the former part of the Psalm. The Psalm seems to have been indited upon the defection of Israel from David to Absalom: It was begun by the young Mans depraving his Fathers Government, and flattering the people with an expectation of great reformations from him; but when by these insinuations he had gained the hearts of a great part of the people, and was now proclaimed King in Hebron, then many others, for fear of this his growing power, came in, and joyned with him: and that was the cause of the Universality of the defection of the Tribes of Israel; they that were not corrupted by his flattery, were yet by fear brought over to him, and where ever he moved, all were so far wrought on by this fear, and debauched from their duty, that in fine, the Story taketh not notice of any that made opposition against, or refused to joyn with him. And so this shews us the fitness of the connection of this passage with the former verses. David complains of Israel, that they were universally guilty of this defection, v. 3. none adhered to that duty of Allegiance that they ought, those that were in the Conspiracy, devoured and destroyed every day the subjects of David, whom he calls his People, v. 4. and by this means carried all before them: The reason was, they feared a fear, or a danger, fear possest them, and inclined them to a general compliance with Absalom's party: and so that is the most probable perspicuous meaning of the place. Now as this Psalm, besides the literal Historical, had also a Mystical, Prophetical sense, and as such, is signally referred to by the Apostle, Rom. 3. as a testimony (prophetical) of the universality of the defection of the Jews from God in that Age: The Scribes and Pharisees conspired against him, and by fear gained the People to the like complyance; they that did believe, durst not profess it, for fear of them; his Friends kept their kindness to him secret, but the Persecuters did oppose him openly, and so the voices of the People were brought to joyn with the Rulers, to require him to be Crucified. In the Apostles times it was thus also? The fear of the Persecution from the Jews kept many from receiving the faith of Christ, many that had received it, from assembling with them; Heb. 10. 25, 26, 38. and generally this was the ground of the Gnostick Heresie, or rather Apostacie, the fear of persecutions; and so in the Revelation, c. 21. 8. the fearful Gnosticks and unbelieving Jews are joyned, as in the sin of denying the faith, so in the punishment of it. And so this is the account that is visible to be given of those testimonies, Rom. 3. 10. some taken from this Psalm, and the rest which follow, v. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. out of several other parcels of the Psalms: All which (from that place of the Apostle, in all probability) some Christian Transcribers of the Copies of the LXXII. have here put together, over and above what is to be found either in the Hebrew, Chaldee, or Syriack; for that the Translators before Christ's time should here interpose those Additions, it is not imaginable. In this verse also the LXXII. have made an addition to these words [there they feared a fear] annexing, οὐκ ἦν ὃν ὁ φόβος, where there was no fear, or danger; and it is uncertain, whether the Transcribers transferred it by memory from Psal. 53. 6. where the same phrase is, with that addition, לֹא הָיְתָה פַחַד no fear was] or whether the LXXII. (after their Paraphrastical manner, frequently observable in them) added these words, either the more to expres the nature of the fear, viz. that it was a meer worldly, and so causless fear, or else to fit the words to connect with what follows, ὅτι ὁ θεὸς ἐν γενεᾷ δικαίᾳ, because, or for God is in the generation of the righteous, thus; The generality of the people was moved with fear to joyn with Absalom; but this a Panick, causeless fear: if they had called on God, v. 4. and adhered and relyed on him, they had not needed to fear any evil; for God is present among such, to protect them, and to convert all their temporary sufferings to their advantages. But this sense is as fully contained in the Hebrew words without this addition, if only the כִּי that follows be rendred not [for] but [but] which is not an unusual signification of it; Gen. 65. 8. it was not you that sent me hither, כִּי הָאֱלֹהִים but God, and if it be so rendrend here, the sense will be perspicuous: There they feared a fear, the generality of them fell off; but God is in the generation of the righteous; by the help of God I have been susteined, though the generality of my Subjects, through flattering insinuations first, and then through fear, was fallen off from me. Here only it is to be remembred, that the generality (though set in very comprehensive phrases, All gone out of the way, none that doth good, no not one) is not so to be interpreted, as to belong to all, and every Jew at that time; for it is certain some, though very כִּי very few in comparison, adhered to David, 2 Sam. 15. 17, 18. and went out to fight with Absalom, 2 Sam. 18. 1. And so in the Prophetick sense, as it belonged to the times of Christ and his Apostles; when though 'tis said they were all gone out of the way —— Rom. 3. yet, as elsewhere appears, a remnant there was, which still adhered to God, believed in Christ, and remained stedfast in his Doctrine: See Rev. 7. 4. But these phrases must be interpreted so, as general expressions are wont to signifie, i.e. so as to admit of some exceptions, or else be applyed only to the men of Israel, who universally went after Absalom, 2 Sam. 18. 6. whilst David's forces were raised only of his own servants, men of Judah, and the Cherethites, Pelethites, Gittites, which came after him from Gath, 2 Sam. xv. 18. and flying from Jerusalem he was relieved by the Ammonites, &c. c. 17. 27. and Ittai the Gittite, of Gath a City of the Philistims, subdued by him, was one of his three Chief Commanders, c. 18. 2. And so this perspicuously applies the whole Psalm to this particular matter of Absalom's Rebellion.

The Fifteenth PSALM.

A Psalm of David.

Paraphrase.

The Fifteenth Psalm is a description of a pious Man, such as shall be admitted into Gods presence, to serve him here in the place assigned for his Worship, and to be rewarded with heaven hereafter; and seems to have been composed by David in reflection on the time of his restitution, or coming back to the Ark, and the Tabernacle, from which he had been driven for some space, as at other times, so on occasion of Absaloms Rebellion. See 2 Sam. 15. 27.

1. Lord, who shall abide in thy Tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy Hill?

1. Let me take boldness to interrogate and demand of the Lord of heaven and earth, what kind of person it is, that may have assurance and confidence of his favour, so as to be accepted in the number of those that perform his solemn Worship here, and rewarded with eternal bliss in heaven hereafter. And the Answer will, I suppose, certainly be this,

2. He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth from his heart:

2. He, and none but he, that is just and blameless in all his actions, that lives and goes on in a course of righteousness, steddy and constant, neither offending against the rules of justice, nor mercy; but on all occasions and opportunities that offer themselves, abounding in the exercises of both, and withall hath care that his tongue should not offend in delivering any thing, which he is not sincerely perswaded to have perfect truth in it.

3. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour:

3. He that makes strict conscience of detracting, or calumniating, of doing any kind of wrong, that carefully abstains from speaking or acting any reproachful word or deed against any.

4. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned, but he honoureth them that fear the Lord: he that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not:

4. He that indeavours to, defame and discountenance, all sorts of wickedness, that instead of complying with the disallowable practices of the world, represents them in their own ugly colours, and deters all men from imitating such examples, and on the other side, desires to bring virtue, and piety, and conscience of all kind of duty, into a creditable esteem and reputation, and pays an hearty honour and respect, and gives all manner of incouragements to every good and godly man, and attracts all to the imitating such, and that he may do so, demonstrates by his own actions, how dear a price he sets upon it; and consequently, if by any promissory oath he have bound himself to the performance of any thing, that comes to cost him never so dear (proves unexpectedly most mischievous, or dangerous to his estate, or even his life it self) he doth yet most strictly oblige himself to the discharge of it, knowing there is no ill so great, as that by which his soul is wounded, as it is sure to be most dangerously by any breach of oath.

5. He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doth these things shall never fall.

5. He that hath not admitted any covetous desires into his breast, that will not, for the enriching himself, lessen any other Mans possessions; as doth the Usurer, and taker of bribes in Judicature, the one grinding the face of the poor borrower, the other selling the right, the estate, perhaps the life of, an helpless, but innocent person: but on the contrary, lends freely to him that wants that charity, and so is as helpful to him as he may, (free loanes being oft the most advantageous charities, assisting mens wants, and obliging their diligence, that they may be able to repay) and to him that is unjustly assaulted or impleaded, gives all timely succour that justice can afford, which justice in that case is an eminent charity also. These few things, though they be not an enumeration of all the duties of a Man, are yet so comprehensive and significative, contain so many branches, especially of our duty to our Neighbour, and that uniformly performed, is so sure a sign of faith, and love, and fear of God, and all other duties of piety, that I may conclude this mans title very good both to the priviledges and dignity of Gods servants here, and to the eternal reward of such hereafter.

Annotations on Psal. XV.

a. לְהָרַע

V. 4. To his own hurt לְהָרַע doth certainly signifie to do hurt, from רַע which in Kal signifies to be evil, but in Hiphil, to doe evil. To whom this evil is done, is thought fit to be expreſt by the Chaldee, he ſwears, ſaith the Targum, לְאַבְאָשָׁא to the afflicting or hurting himſelf. But the LXXII. inſtead of לְהָרַע to hurt, ſeem to have read לְרֵעֵהוּ to his fellow, for they render it τῷ πλησίον suum to his neighbour; and ſo the Syriack and Latine and Æthiopick: which yet, ſuppoſing the oath to be a promiſſory oath, made to ſome other, (as the context inclines it, the whole Pſalm from v. 3. referring to works of juſtice toward other men,) is no conſiderable change of the ſenſe: for if he do not ἀθετεῖν (as it follows) caſſate his oath made to his neighbour, (the word which conteins all other men (ſee Pſal. 12. 2.) to whom we have any relation, Superiors as well as equals) then is he this juſt man that is here ſpoken of. Only the Hebrew reading ſets off his juſtice with ſome advantage, by mentioning the greateſt temptation to breach of oaths and promiſes to others, viz. when the performance brings miſchief on our ſelves; for then is the tryal of the mans virtue, and not when either he deſigns to gain, or not to loſe any thing by it. The particular occaſion of Davids ſpecifying in this, may, I ſuppoſe, deſerve here to be conſidered. The Pſalm was moſt probably penn'd after the quieting the rebellion of Abſalom, in relation to his return to the Ark and Tabernacle, from which he had been for ſome time ſeparated. Now in that rebellion he had taken notice of the fear of worldly ſufferings, that had ingaged many in that Apoſtaſy, (ſee Pſal. 14. 5. note [h]) and in reference to them, that for fear of men made no conſcience of their allegiance to David, their lawful, but perſecuted Soveraign, he thus moſt fitly ſpecifies and ſets it down, as a principal part of the character of a truly pious man, that whatſoever his ſufferings by that means are likely to be, he makes conſcience of performing all oaths that ly upon him, and ſo in the firſt place that of Allegiance to his Sovereign, (which that Subjects took in thoſe days, appears by Solomons words, Eccleſ. 8. 2. Keep the Kings Commandment in regard of the Oath of God) as that which is moſt ſtrictly incumbent on him, how dear ſoever it be likely to coſt him. Aben Ezra and Jarchi have another gloſs, that לְהָרַע here ſignifies to afflict the ſoul, (which the LXXII. render κακῶσαι ψυχήν, to hurt the ſoul, to uſe it ill) as that belongs to ſome vow of ſelf-denial, or pœnance, Num. 30. 13. But this is not ſo probable in this place, the antecedents and conſequents belonging to acts of Juſtice and Charity to other men.

The Sixteenth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.
The ſixteenth is a ſpecial, pretious, memorable Pſalm, of Davids compoſure, full of confidence in God (through Chriſt, whoſe reſurrection is therein Prophetically repreſented,) and of reſolved adherence to him, and humble dependance on him.

a. ‖ [a] MIchtam of David. ‖ Davids Jewel, or Sculpture.

1. O moſt powerful and moſt gracious God, I am by thy wiſe providence permitted to fall into a great diſtreſs, from whence I am no way able to reſcue or relieve my ſelf: in thee is my full affiance; to thee I reſort, for the ſeaſonable interpoſition of thine hand to my preſervation and deliverance.

1. Preſerve me, O God, for in thee do I put my truſt.

b. c. 2. When I conſider thy dealings toward me, I have nothing to do, but to admire thy grace and free undeſerved mercy in them; which as I cannot merit, ſo I acknowledge I have nothing to retribute to them, but that which is thine already, all that I have coming firſt from thee.

2. † [b] O my ſoul, thou haſt ſaid unto the Lord, thou art my Lord; my [c] goodneſs extendeth not to thee. † or, I have ſaid.

d. 3. All that I can do to expreſs mine infinite obligations to thee, is to devolve that love and gratitude, due to thee, to all thy pious ſervants upon the earth, to value them, and eſteem of them, above all the greateſt men in the world, upon that one account of being beloved, and prized, and ſet apart by thee. And this I heartily do, and proclaim to ſuch, that all my joy and delight is in them.

3. * [d] But to the Saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, in whom is all my delight. * To the Saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, all my delight is in them.

e. 4. If others fall off from the true God, and betake themſelves to the worſhip of Idols, the falſe heathen gods of the Syrians, Moabites, &c. round about them; yet will not I by any means be brought to partake in their unhumane deteſtable Sacrifices, of the blood not of Beaſts, but Men, nor ever ſwear by any of their falſe gods, nor pay any reſpect unto them.

4. ‖ Their [e] ſorrows ſhall be multiplied that haſten after another God; their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer, nor take up their name into my lips. ‖ Let their Idols be multiplyed; let them haſten after another, or endow, or preſent another.

f. 5. The true and only God of Heaven and Earth is he whom I worſhip; his ſervice is profeſt, and, by his own direction, ſet up in that Kingdom which is fallen to me, as my portion, whilſt other Princes of the world live in ignorance of him, and follow their deteſtable Idol-worſhips. 'Tis he that hath honoured and bleſt me exceedingly, giving me a Kingdom, and ſuch a Kingdom: from his ſpecial providence alone it is that I enjoy all that I now enjoy.

5. The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance, and of my [f] cup: thou * maintaineſt my lot. * holdeſt, ſee note f.

6. † The

† The portions.

6. † The ſ lines are fallen to me in pleaſant places, yea, I have a goodly heritage.

6. I have all joy and pleaſure in that condition wherein thou haſt placed me here, (though it be mixt ſometimes with afflictions and preſſures:) the greateſt Prince in the World, which rules over Heathens, and knows not the true God, is not fit to compare with me. g.

7. I will bleſs the Lord, who hath given me counſel: my h reins alſo ‖ inſtruct me in the night ſeaſon.

‖ chaſtiſe.

7. And for the afflictions that God is pleaſed to permit to fall upon me, and the many ſad thoughts, in reflection thereon, which poſſeſs and exerciſe me whole nights together, I have all reaſon to bleſs and glorifie his name for them, to think it all joy (Jam. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 13, 14.) that I am thus exerciſed; theſe being the moſt regular and effectual means to inſtruct and admoniſh me, and cure the follies and faults that I have been guilty of. h.

8. I have ſet God always before me: becauſe he is at my right hand, I ſhall not be † moved.

* caſt down. מוֹט

8. And when the ſadneſs or ſharpneſs of my preſſures ſeem moſt to threaten my fall, even utter deſtitution and deſtruction, I have yet my reſerve and refuge, which will ſecure me from all ſuch black deſpairing thoughts. The remembring of God, who is always preſent with me, ready to ſupport me under afflictions, and in his time to deliver me out of them, is to me an anchor of the firmeſt hope, that I ſhall never be finally forſaken by him, caſt down by the enemy, or deveſted of that dignity to which my God hath inveſted me,

9. Therefore my heart is glad, and my i glory rejoyceth; my fleſh alſo ſhall reſt in hope.

9. This is full matter of joy to my heart, and of boaſting to my tongue, and of all kind of aſſurance to every part of me. i.

10. For thou wilt not leave my ſoul in k hell, neither wilt thou ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption.

10. For thy promiſes to me are firm, and oblige thee not to forſake me ſo, as that I ſhall be either killed by Saul, or oppreſt finally by him or any other. Thou haſt deſigned me to be King, and therein favoured me exceedingly, (ſee note on Pſal. 4. d.) and all the malice of men, though they bring me never ſo low, ſhall not finally prevail againſt me. (And this having a firſt literal, but lower completion in Davids perſon, was more fully and ultimately to be fulfilled in the ſon of David, the eternal Word of God, the Meſſias of the World, who in the dayes of his fleſh, though he were crucified by the Jews, ſhould yet by the power of his eternal Godhead be raiſed again from the dead, and that within the compaſs of three days, before his body ſhould naturally tend to corruption. See Act. 2. 10. and xiii. 35.) k.

11. Thou wilt ſhew me the path of life: in thy preſence is fulneſs of joy; at thy right hand there are pleaſures for evermore.

11. Thou ſhalt protect me, and keep me alive from the malicious deſigns and machinations of mine enemies, and refreſh, and comfort me abundantly with thy favour and love, and ſpecial care of me, and by continuing me in that Throne, whereto thou haſt advanced me, give me continual matter of rejoycing. (And this was moſt eminently completed alſo in Chriſt, when by the power of his Father he was more then preſerved from death, reſcued from it, when he was under it, raiſed from death to life, and exalted in great triumph to his everlaſting Kingdom in heaven; and ſo applied, Acts 2. 28.)

Annotations on Pſal. XVI.

a. מִכְתָּם

Tit. Michtam] From כָּתַם ſignare, notare, inſculpere, to ſeal, to note, or ingrave, is מִכְתָּם any pretious thing; either ſuch, as for ſecuring of it is ſealed up, as a σημάλιον, or for preſerving it from forgetfulneſs, is ingraven in Marble, &c. Hence it is, that the Targum renders it here גְּלִיפָא תְּרִיצָא a right Sculpture, (גְּלִיפָא from the Greek γλύφω, to engrave) and the LXXII. συλλογεσφία, an inſcription on a Pillar; not reading it מִכְתָּב as ſome conjecture, from כָּתַב ſcripſit, to write, but מִכְתָּם from כָּתַם inſculpſit, to ingrave, to denote it a Pſalm fit to be ingraven for everlaſting memory ἐπὶ σήλας ἑστάμεν, on an eminent Pillar, ſaith Apollinarius, to be written in golden letters (as כֶּתֶם alſo ſignifies the fineſt gold, Pſalm 45. 9.) and preſerved in our hearts for ever. And this eſpecially, as containing a ſignal prophecy of the reſurrection of Chriſt, recited from hence, Acts 2. 25, 26, 27. (three verſes cited from this Pſalm, v. 8, 9, 10.) and again, Acts 13. 35. As when Job delivers that notable ſpeech, applyed by the antients generally to the Reſurrection (though, as this here, capable of a firſt interpretation, which was to be verified in his own perſon, in raiſing him from his preſent calamitous eſtate,) I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that I ſhall ſtand in the latter day upon the earth; —— he introduceth it in this form, Oh that they were printed in a Book, that they were graven with an iron pen and lead, (i. e. the Sculpture filled up with lead, that the letters might continue the longer legible) in the rock (or flint, or hard ſtone, marble, or other the moſt durable matter) for ever; which is juſt the συλλογεσφία, the inſcribing on a Pillar here, in order to the preſervation, and ſpecial obſervation of ſuch ſpeeches, which had their farther completion to be expected in Chriſt, over and above what belonged to them in relation to the preſent condition of the ſpeakers.

b. אָמַרְתְּ

V. 2. O my ſoul] Where the Hebrew copies read אָמַרְתְּ thou haſt ſaid, in the feminine, and the Chaldee paraphraſe אַנְתְּ נַפְשִׁי מֵלִילְתְּ thou, my ſoul, haſt ſaid, 'tis evident the LXXII. and Syriack, and Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick, read לְיְהוָה אָמַרְתִּי in the firſt perſon, I have ſaid, for ſo they render it εἶπα τῷ Κυρίῳ, Dixi Domino, I have ſaid unto the Lord.

c. טוֹבָתִי בַּל עָלֶיךָ

V. 2. My goodneſs] There is difficulty in this phraſe טוֹבָתִי בַּל עָלֶיךָ The literal rendring is, My goodneſs in no wiſe to, or, with thee, which the LXXII. (and ſo the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick) render paraphraſtically, τῶν ἀγαθῶν μου οὐ χρείαν ἔχεις; thou haſt no need of my good things. But the Chaldee read טוֹבָתִי לָא מֵהֵימְנָא בַּר מִנָּךְ my goodneſs is not given but from thee; and the Syriack more ſimply, my good is from thee. In which readings either the negative particle ſeems to be omitted (for ſo the Syriack reads it ܠܝܬ ܠܝ &c. and my good from—— without any) or elſe to be doubled (for ſo 'tis in the Chaldee,) and that is all one as if it were omitted, the two negatives or [non niſi] being all one with the bare affirmative. In this variety, the ſafeſt way of reconciling the interpretations, is, to ſuppoſe ſuppoſe them on all ſides to be rather paraphraſtical explications, than literal rendrings. The LXXII. by reading, thou haſt no need of my good things, whether my good works, or my liberalities, thought to expreſs the ſenſe of [my goodneſs not to, or, with thee,] i. e. tend not to thy avail or advantage, are not prized by thee; and the Chaldee and Syriack, by another phraſe, ſeem to have meant the ſame thing, My good is all from thee, I am ſo far from meriting any thing of thee by any good works of mine, that indeed thoſe good works are not mine, but thine only, as flowing, and being given to me by thee. And both theſe together ſeem to make up the full ſenſe; my goodneſs, or (as טוֹב and the Greek ἀγαθωσύνη critically ſignifies) my liberality is ſo far from meriting from thee, or being any conſiderable return unto thee, that it is thy right, and ſo a meer mercy received from thee.

d. לִקְדוֹשִׁים

V. 3. But to the Saints] The difficulties of this third verſe may beſt be removed, by obſerving the dependance of לִקְדוֹשִׁים to the Saints, on what preceded v. 2. That began with אָמַרְתְּ לַיהוָה I ſaid, or thou (my ſoul) haſt ſaid unto the Lord, with which fairly connects לִקְדוֹשִׁים to the Saints; i. e. I ſaid, or (again) my ſoul thou haſt ſaid to the Saints. What Saints he ſpeaks of, he ſpecifies in the next words, אֲשֶׁר בָּאָרֶץ הֵמָּה who they, i. e. (by an Hebraiſme) they who are on the earth. Then regularly follows in conſtruction, וְאַדִּירֵי and to the excellent, Gods choſen people, dignified and advanced by him. To the Saints —— and to theſe I ſaid, כָּל חֶפְצִי בָם all my delight is in them. To the firſt part of this interpretation the LXXII. accord, τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς ἐν τῇ γῇ, to the Saints that are in the earth; only they add αὐτῶ inſtead of הֵמָּה (which they ſaw to be a pleonaſme, and unſignificant,) and thereby more diſtinctly connect it to the foregoing words, thus, I ſaid unto the Lord, my goodneſs, &c. To the Saints on his earth, or to his Saints on the earth, &c. One ſpeech apportion'd to the Lord, that of an humble reflection on himſelf, another to the Saints of the Lord, ſavouring of charity and kindneſs to them. But for the latter part of the verſe, the LXXII. ſeem to have read it otherwiſe; not וְאַדִּירֵי וְאַדִּירֵי and to the excellent, but הֶאְדִּיר in Hiphil, he magnified (as the word is uſed, Iſa. 42. 21.) for ſo they read ἐθαυμάσωσι πάντα τὰ θελήματα αὐτῦ ἐν αὐλοῖς, (applying it to God) he hath magnified all his pleaſures (as if it were חֶפְצוֹ his, not, my pleaſures) in them. But the Chaldee and the Syriack agree to the vulgar reading throughout, and ſo the ſenſe and context require. The Jewiſh Arabick tranſlator would have the words of theſe two verſes thus diſtinguiſhed; I ſaid to the Lord, thou art my Lord; not unto you, or from you, ſaid I to the Saints, &c. i. e. my good is not from you, but from the Lord.

e. עַצְּבוֹתָם

V. 4. Sorrows] In what notion עַצְּבוֹתָם is to be taken, is uncertain among the antient interpreters. From the two notions of עָצַב, one for doluit, to grieve, the other for elaboravit, to labour, or form, or make any thing, there are two ſignifications of the Noun: the firſt for ſorrow or pain, and in that ſenſe the LXXII. here take it, rendring it ἀδύνειαι αὐτῶν, their weakneſſes, and the Latine, infirmitates (in the notion of weakneſs for ſickneſs or pain) and ſo the Syriack ܚܠܫܐ (and to the ſame ſenſe the Arabick) their pains. The ſecond for an Idol, or Image, ſo Hoſ. 8. 4. their ſilver and gold they have made עֲצַבִּים images; the Chaldee render it טָעָוָן the LXXII. εἴδωλα, idols. So Sam. 5. 21. and Mich. 1. 7. And thus the Chaldee underſtand it here, and render it צַלְמַנֵּיהוֹן their Idols. And this is moſt agreeable to what follows, מָהֲרוּ, אַחַר either let them haſten a contrary way, or after another, (i. e. another God, for which the LXXII. have μετὰ πᾶσαν, either reading אַחַר afterward, for אַחֵר another, or elſe meaning by μετὰ πᾶσαν ἐπείγονται, haſtening after theſe) following, or worſhipping of Idols) which ſure refers to their idol-worſhip, or in another notion of מָהַר in Kal to endow, or ſend gifts, or preſents (ſee Kimchi in Radic.) for ſo to endow another] is, in the prophetick ſtile, to marry the daughter of a ſtrange God, Mal. 2. 11. and by that means to be brought to their Idol ſacrifices, Num. 25. 2. And to give gifts to another] is in like manner to preſent the falſe Gods, as Ezech. xvi. 18. thou tookeſt thy broidred garments, and coveredſt them, (the idols, v. 17.) thou haſt ſet mine oyl and incenſe before them, my meat alſo, &c. and ſo to this fitly connects, their drink-offerings will I not offer; and ſo doth alſo the not taking their names into his lips, viz. as that literally ſignifies, the avoiding the names of falſe Deities, and ſubſtituting, as the Jews did, words of deteſtation in ſtead of them; or elſe not ſwearing by them, as נָשָׂא שֵׁם to take the name ſignifies to ſwear by it, in the third Commandment, Exod. 20. 7. and Deut. 5. 20. and ſo Pſal. 24. 4. נָשָׂא נַפְשִׁי to take his ſoul, is to ſwear by his ſoul, and Pſal. 50. 16. and takeſt my covenant into thy mouth, the Chaldee render it וְתֵימֵי בִּשְׁמִי וְתִדְבַּר קְיָמִי and ſweareſt by my name, and remembreſt my covenant. But Abu Walid prefers the notion of מָהַר for haſtening, and ſo doth Kimchi alſo in his Comment on this place, though in his roots he reject it.

f. כּוֹס

V, 5. Cup] The frequent and proverbial uſe of the word כּוֹס cup, or pot, among the Hebrews, may here deſerve to be taken notice of. It ſignifies by metaphor any thing that befalls any man, good, or bad, So Matt. 20. 22. Can ye drink the Cup that I ſhall drink of, i. e. indure the afflicted condition that expects me? and ſo c. 26. 39. Let this Cup paſs from me, i. e. the ſorrow that was then approaching. For as thoſe that are of the ſame family, or at the ſame table, drink of the ſame Cup, the wine in the pot, or cup is diſtributed among them, and every one hath his part, or portion of it, one the top, another the middle, another the bottom of it; and if there be any bitter mixture in the cup, (as in the myrrhate wine) then he that drinks the bottom, is ſaid to ſuck out the dregs of that cup:] ſo in the diſtributions and diſpenſations of Gods providence, every man hath his portion, either ſweet or bitter, and this, from this analogy, is called the portion of his cup, that part, which in the diſtribution comes to him; ἀπὸ κυπέλλου, ſaith Apollinarius, the lot, or part, or portion of his cup. So Pſal. 11. 6. See note d. And thus it is moſt fitly joyned with מְנָת חֶלְקִי portion of mine inheritance, or diviſion, (from חָלַק diviſit) i. e. of any poſſeſſion or land, divided among many, diſtributed in like manner, as the cup among the gueſts, every one his portion. And thus doth David (raiſed by God to be the King of the Jews, that people to whom God had in a ſpecial manner revealed himſelf, and by whom he was worſhipped) very fitly ſay, that God in oppoſition to the many falſe heathen gods, was the portion of his diviſion, worſhipt by that people over whom he was King. As for תּוֹמִיךְ גּוֹרָלִי] that follows in the end of the verſe, it is beſt rendred, thou holdeſt my lot,] meaning thereby thou giveſt me mine inheritance, the portion of worldly wealth and greatneſs, that I have, comes all from thee. For the old way of ſortition was was by ſtaves, or rods, as appears by the choiſe of the tribe of Levi to the ſervice of the altar, Numb. 17. 2. Take of every one of them a rod, &c. and write his name upon the rod, and Aarons name upon the rod of Levi, v. 3. and the mans rod whom I ſhall chooſe, ſhall bloſſome, v. 5. and Aarons rod bloſſoming, Levi was choſen. And by this means 'tis ſaid, that the Land of Canaan was divided, Joſh. 18. The ſeveral ſhares or portions, and alſo the names of the ſeveral tribes being written on ſtaves or rods, Eleazar the Prieſt having put on the Urim and Thummim, took up in one hand a rod of ſhares, in the other a rod of tribes, and thereby aſſigned to all their portions. So that for God to hold in his hand the lot, is, in reference to that cuſtome, to give, or aſſigne a portion to him whoſe lot it is. See Schindlers Pentagl. p. 342. B. And to this critically agrees the word תּוֹמִיךְ here, from חָמַךְ to hold, or take into the hand. And by this of ſortition by rods I ſuppoſe may be explained that of Pſal. 125. 3. The rod of the wicked ſhall not reſt on the lot of the righteous, (the word גּוֹרָל here) i.e. the wicked ſhall not continue to proſper in this world; that portion which is promiſed and aſſigned good men, felicity in this world, (though with a mixture of perſecutions, yet godlineſs hath the promiſe of this life,) ſhall not be laſting or durable to the wicked, leſt the righteous be thereby tempted to do as they do, to put their hand unto wickedneſs, as there it follows.

h. חֶבֶל V. 6. Lines] From חָבַל to bind, is חֶבֶל a cord. With cords they uſed to meaſure their grounds in ſurveighs, Amos 7. 17. thy land ſhall be divided בַּחֶבֶל by cord, and Zach. 2. 5. in his hand was חֶבֶל מִדָּה a cord of meaſure, or meaſuring cord; ſo 2 Sam. 8. 2. And from hence, by metonymy, it comes frequently to ſignifie any ſpace or portion of land, that belongs to any. So Deut. 3. 4. כָּל חֶבֶל אַרְגֹּב the LXXII. render it πᾶσα τὴν μερίδα Ἀργόβ, All the territories of Argob; the Syriack read, all the tract; the Vulgar, all the region; the Chaldee, all the places of the Provinces of Argob. So Zeph. 2. 6. Woe to thoſe that inhabite חֶבֶל הַיָּם the LXXII. render it χοινώνια θαλάσσης; the Vulgar, funiculus maris, the cord of the Sea; but the Chaldee, סְפַר יַמָּא the ſhore of the Sea, and ſo the Arabick; but the Syriack, the Maritime tract, or region by the Sea ſide, i. e. Paleſtine. This therefore is the fitteſt rendring of the word, not literally, lines, but in the figurative ſenſe, portions: and ſo the Targum reads it, עֲדָבִין lots, or portions; and ſo we read it Joſ. 17. 14. חֶבֶל אֶחָד not, one line, but one portion, as that is all one with one lot, foregoing; and ſo v. 5. חַבְלֵי עֲשָׂרָה ten portions.

h. V. 7. Reins] This verſe hath ſome obſcurity in it, which perhaps may be beſt removed by conſidering the importance of וְיִסְּרוֹנִי כִּלְיוֹתָי my reins inſtruct me. From כָּלָה in the notion of hoping, כִּלְיוֹת expecting, deſiring, comes the nowne כִּלְיוֹת reins or kidneys, as the ſeats of deſire. Theſe by metonymy ſignifie not only deſires, but the ſecret or inward thoughts: as Pſal. 7. 10. when God is ſaid to try the hearts and reins, i.e. all the deſires and thoughts of the heart of any; ſo Jer. 12. 2. thou art neer in their mouth, and far from their reins, i. e. frequently ſpoken of, but ſeldom conſidered, or thought of by them. And in this ſenſe, I ſuppoſe, it is to be taken here, for thoughts of the heart. Then for וְיִסְּרוֹנִי יָסַר it ſignifies to chaſten, to puniſh, to rebuke: ſo 1 King. 12. 14. my father יִסַּר chaſtened you with rods, but I אֲיַסֵּר will chaſten you with ſcorpions: ſo Pſal. 6. 1. neither תְיַסְּרֵנִי Chaſten me in thy diſpleaſure: ſo Deut. 22. 18. the Elders of the City ſhall take him, וְיִסְּרוּ and ſhall chaſtize him. And thus, I conceive, it is to be taken here, not for inſtructing ſimply, but for chaſtizement which is deſigned for inſtruction. The Chaldee reads יְדָאֲנִי לִי which the Latine renders, caſtigant me, but 'tis hard to gueſs, how that word ſhould ſo ſignifie, unleſs from the notion of רדה, to deal as with a child, to lead gently: but the Syriack read יְנַדְּבוּנִי; (which makes it reaſonable to conjecture the Chaldee reading to be miſtaken יְדָאֲנִי for יְרָדְאֲנִי from רדא to chaſten) my reins chaſten'd me; and ſo the LXXII. have ἐπαίδευσάν με, chaſtened me, the Latine corripuerunt, rebuked, the Arabick, commonuerunt me, and Apollinarius paraphraſes it by ἐδαμάσθην, I was tamed, wich is relative to chaſtizement. And then the meaning will be, my thoughts puniſh me, I have many afflicting thoughts in the night ſeaſon, when I conſider, and reflect upon my preſent ſtate of diſtreſs, the difficulties that incompaſs me. For it is certain this Pſalm was made by him in a time of diſtreſs, and that makes him begin with calling on God for preſervation: and though the following verſes are ſpent on another ſubject, yet what now ſucceeds, v. 8, 9, 10. is all to this matter; his confidence that he ſhall not be left in שְׁאוֹל which we render hell, being an evidence, that he conſiders himſelf, as in that melancholy ſtate at the preſent. So Job 19. 27. where he refers to his preſent calamitous condition, his expreſſion is כָּלוּ כִלְיוֹתַי בְּחֵקִי my reins within my boſome fainted, or are conſumed. And then we may probably reſolve, what יָעַץ ſort of counſel it was, that, in the beginning of the verſe, he ſaith God hath given him, and for which he praiſes or bleſſes him, even ſuch as beſt agrees with chaſtiſing, ſuch as he gives thoſe children which he loves beſt, and for which our Saviour and his Apoſtles command us to rejoyce, and bleſs and glorifie God, and of which David himſelf acknowledgeth, that it gave him underſtanding (which is the meaning of counſelling here, and accordingly the LXXII. render it συνίειν, making him wiſe or intelligent;) and that is affliction: not that the Hebrew יָעַץ ſignifies puniſhing, or indeed any thing but counſelling; but becauſe affliction ſent from God is expreſly a doctrine, or leſſon, or counſel, or admonition to them that are thus afflicted, and a means very proper to bring them to the moſt wiſe and ſober thought, that in time of proſperity have forgotten themſelves, and ſo wanted ſuch kind of counſel.

i. כְּבוֹדִי V. 9. Glory] Where the Hebrew reads כְּבוֹדִי my glory, and the Chaldee אֵיקָרִי my honour, (and the Syriack in the ſame word יְקָרִי) the LXXII. renders γλῶσσά μου, my tongue, and ſo the Latine and Arabick, and Æthiopick; and ſo Apollinarius, γλῶσσά τε γλῶσσα, my tongue rejoyced. This ſome learned men attribute to their reading לְשׁוֹנִי my tongue, inſtead of כְּבוֹדִי my glory, words which have little affinity one with another in the letters of them. 'Tis more reaſonable to reſolve, that David in a Poetick writing ſhould uſe the word כָּבוֹד glory, by metonymy, for thoſe parts whereby God is glorified or praiſed; i.e. either the ſoul, or eſpecially the tongue. So Pſal. 36. 12. that my glory may ſing praiſe to thee, the LXXII. there render literally ἡ δόξα μου, my glory; but ſure it ſignifies either the ſoul, or tongue. So Pſal. 57. 8. Awake כְּבוֹדִי the LXXII. render literally ἡ δόξα μου, my glory; but in all reaſon, that ſignifies my tongue, ſo as to connect with ſinging, præcedent, and the Harp and Pſaltery, following. So Pſal. 108. 1. I will give praiſe even with my glory, i.e. my tongue: and ſo, I ſuppoſe,

Pſal. 149. 5. Let the pious or holy ones rejoyce בְּכָבוֹד, ἐν δόξῃ, ſay the LXXII. in glory, i. e. in or with the tongue, that ſo it may connect with what follows, Let them rejoyce in their beds, Let the praiſes of God be in their mouths. And thus no doubt it ſignifies here; and the præcedent mention of the heart] reſtrains it in this place to the tongue. And this being diſcerned by the LXXII. it was no fault in them to render it (according to the ſenſe not letter) γλῶσσά μου, my tongue.

k. לִשְׁאוֹל

V. 10. Hell] That שְׁאוֹל ſignifies the condition or ſtate of the dead, there is no queſtion, and ſo לִשְׁאוֹל in, or rather to that ſtate: and in that ſenſe the leaving his ſoul in it, or to it, is applyed by the Apoſtle St. Peter, Acts 2. 27. to the abiding of Chriſt in the ſtate of ſeparation of his ſoul from his body, from whence he aroſe or returned the third day, and ſo was not left in it, or to it. And in this ſenſe both St. Peter there, v. 29. and S. Paul, c. 13. 36. duly reſolve, that this verſe, of not being left in ſcheol, and not ſeeing corruption, was not applyable to David, for that he was dead and buried, and his Sepulchre remained with them till that day, c. 2. 29. and again, he fell on ſleep, and lay with his fathers, and ſaw corruption. This then being ſuppoſed, in reſpect of the grand and principally deſigned ſenſe (the prophetical myſtical, completed onely in Chriſt, and not in David) there may yet be a firſt, but leſs eminent ſenſe, wherein it was alſo true of David, that his ſoul ſhould not be left in ſcheol, nor this holy one of Gods (ſo David is oft called) ſee שַׁחַת corruption, viz. ſo as שְׁאוֹל ſometimes ſignifies extreme diſtreſs, here in this life: ſo Pſal. 116. 3. מְצָרֵי שְׁאוֹל, the diſtreſſes of ſcheol] ſignifies exceeding great diſtreſſes, interpreted by what follows, I ſhall find trouble and heavineſs: and ſo as (in like manner) שַׁחַת, which we render corruption, from the LXXII. διαφθορὰ, doth ſometimes ſignifie no more than great weakneſs, Dan. 10. 8. (where 'tis oppoſed to vigor, and expounded by having no ſtrength;) ſometimes a pit, as that differs from death, Ezek. 19. 4. where the Lion taken in their pit, בְּשַׁחְתָּם (where the LXXII. render ἐν τῇ διαφθορᾷ αὐτῶν, in their corruption,) was carried into Ægypt, taken, but not killed; and ſo Prov. 28. 5. Jer. 15 3. And then the meaning is, that he ſhall be certainly delivered by God from all thoſe diſtreſſes. Or again, as שְׁאוֹל ſignifies death, or final deſtruction, or deprivation of that ſtate wherein any one is; as when of Capernaum 'tis ſaid, thou ſhalt be brought down to Ἅιδης, (the Greek for שְׁאוֹל) which we render hell, Mat. 11. 23. the meaning is, that it ſhall be deſtroyed from being a City; and in proportion with that, to be left לִשְׁאוֹל in or to ſcheol, and to ſee corruption (in the ſenſe that the word is uſed, Pſalm 107. 20. when 'tis ſaid of God, that he ſaved the Iſraelites מִשְּׁחִיתוֹתָם ἐκ τῶν διαφθορῶν αὐτῶν, out of their corruptions or deſtructions) will ſignifie to be killed by his enemies, &c. to be turned out of that Kingdom, which God had deſigned him. This Saul earneſtly endeavoured, but prevailed not: the ſame did Abſalom afterwards: But Gods promiſe to David, that he would bring him to the throne, and ſet of his ſeed on the throne after him, was certainly to be fulfilled, and in ſtrength of that, he thus reſolved, that his ſoul ſhould not be left in this diſtreſs, to be ſwallowed up by it, or left ל to it, to be thus deſtroyed: neither of which import either his not coming to the grave, not dying at all, for, as St. Paul ſaith of David, after he had ſerved the counſel of God in his generation, he fell aſleep, and was laid with his fathers; nor that he ſhould riſe from the dead again, without rotting in the grave, for there he did thus continue ſaith the ſame Apoſtle, and ſaw corruption, and his ſepulchre is with us to this day, ſaith St. Peter, Act. 2. 29. And ſo this more eminent completion of the words, reſpecting reſurrection from the dead, is reſerved onely for Chriſt, who lay not in the grave ſo long, as that by the courſe of nature his body ſhould putrifie, which it would have done, if it had continued in the ſtate of death above three days, according to that which Lazarus's ſiſter ſaith of him, by this time he ſtinketh, τετραήμερος γάρ ἐστι, for he hath been dead four days. To the ſame purpoſe the laſt verſe of the Pſalm is applyed by St. Peter, Acts 2. 28. and ſo, though it have one literal ſenſe belonging to David (ſo as the way of life] may denote means uſed by God for his preſervation, and Gods preſence or countenance] his favour and providence, and his right hand] the regal power conferred on him, and ſecured to him by God;) yet it muſt be reſolved to have another, more principal, ultimate, and withal more literal ſenſe alſo, reſpecting the raiſing of Chriſt to life, aſcenſion to Heaven, the place of Gods peculiar preſence and viſion, and the ſetting him at Gods right hand, in equality of power and glory with him, and that ſimply to indure for ever; which cannot, but in a limited ſence, be affirmed of David. Theſe three verſes being ſo expreſly applied by the Apoſtle to this prophetick ſenſe, there can be no doubt of it: But the former part of the Pſalm, no way appearing to be throughout interpretable of Chriſt, yet fitly belonging to David, it was neceſſary thus to aſſign a firſt literal ſenſe to the whole Pſalm, wherein it might connect and accord every part with other, and not ſo to ſever the three laſt verſes from the reſt, as that thoſe ſhould belong to Chriſt only, and not to David, whereas the former part (at leaſt ſome branches of it) belong to David only, and not to Chriſt.

The

The Seventeeth PSALM.

A Prayer of David.

Paraphrase.

The Seventeenth Psalm is an earnest request by David commenced to God, for deliverance from all his oppressors and persecuters.

1. Hear ‖ the [a] right, O God, attend unto my cry; give ear unto my prayer, that goeth not out of feigned lips.

‖ or, O God of righteousness, or righteous God.

1. Thou, O God, art a most righteous Lord, the refuge and defence of all innocent persons: be thou pleased to attend to, and grant my humble request, to receive with favour the affectionate prayers that I now address unto thee. a.

2. Let my sentence come forth from thy presence; let thine eyes behold the things that are equal.

2. By thee I desire my cause may be heard and sentenced, and that according to the justice of it, thou wilt undertake the patronage thereof, to plead for me, or to judge on my side, and to protect me against mine adversaries.

3. Thou hast proved mine heart, thou hast visited me in the night, [b] thou hast tried me and * shalt find nothing: I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress.

* hast not found; have thought, and my mouth hath not transgrest.

3. For thou, Lord, knowest the sincerity of my heart, thou art the searcher of the secretest thoughts and depths of the most deceitful breasts; and accordingly thou hast examined me to the utmost. In the night, when the darkness hath concealed me from the eyes of men, (and so taken off those disguises, which men put on their deeds of the day, their more publick actions) and at once offered me all the temptations and occasions of doing, or at least thinking ill, which perfect secrecy can suggest, thou hast still been present to my greatest privacies, to discover, if there were any close evil, any insincerity in my heart. Again, thou hast tried me with afflictions, as the Metallists try their Gold, (and many that appear very pious men in times of prosperity, in time of persecution fall away, are found to be mere dross, when they are cast into the fire, put to this sharper trial.) And in both these ways of probation, I hope, I have approved my self to thee, that my tongue and my heart have gone the same way, and so that there is no deceit or insincerity in me. b.

4. Concerning the works of men, by the words of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of [c] the † destroyer.

4. As for the practices of the world, thy commandments have kept me from any communion with them: when opportunity offered me temptations, when I might have had security from the eyes of men, (when Saul fell too into my hands, that I had nothing to restrain me from using violence to him, but only thy command to the contrary, in making him King, and when I was perswaded and incited to it, 1 Sam. 26. 8.) yet in pure obedience to thee, I have carefully kept my self from this, or any other disloyal or unlawful practice. c.

5. [d] ‖ Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not.

‖ By holding up my goings in thy paths, my feet have not tript, or shaken.

5. Thou, by thy special grace, joyned with thy directions what was my duty to do, hast upheld me in those ways which are acceptable in thy sight; and by the strength of this mercy, and these aids of thine, I have been constantly supported, and kept steddy from stumbling or falling. d.

6. I have called upon thee, *for [e] thou wilt hear me, O God: incline thine ear unto me, and hear my speech.

* because thou hast heard me.

6. And as oft as I have made my humble addresses to thee, thou hast not failed to grant them. This gives me full confidence now to come unto thee for thy support and relief. O merciful God, be thou pleased to continue thy wonted dignations to me. e.

7. † Shew thy marvailous loving kindness, O thou that savest [f] by thy right hand them which put their trust in thee, from those that rise up against them.

7. And 'tis not my innocence I depend on, (for though in this matter of my dealings with them that are mine enemies, I can clear my self, yet my many other sins make me uncapable of using any such plea; but 'tis thy mercy and pardon to sinners that I confide in, and thy mere pity and compassion to those that want thy relief. Be thou pleased then to exercise these thy mercies toward me, in that high and wonderful degree, that thou art wont to do to those that place their full affiance in thee. Thou, Lord, art the deliverer of all such, thy title it is to be so, and thy customary goodness, solemnly and constantly to interpose thy power for such, against the malice and machinations of all their adversaries: vouchsafe the same wonted mercy of thine to me at this time. f.

8. Keep me as ‖ the apple of the eye, hide me under the shadow of thy wings;

8. Let thy watchful and tender providence sense and secure me from all dangers, after the same manner as nature hath provided eye-brows, and lids, and five tunicles, for guards to sense and preserve the black (that most tender part) in ‖ the middle of the eye, that wherein the visive faculty is placed (and best represents the seat of Majesty, or regal power, which hath the oversight and government of the whole body;) or as any bird preserves her young ones from the vulture by covering them under her wings. ‖ the orbicular apple, which is in the midst of the eye. Gould.

12. [k] † Like

k. † His likeness is as of a Lion, he desires to ravine, and as of a young Lion lying in his den.

11. Just as an hungry ravening Lion, when he comes in view of his prey, or as a young Lion not yet got out of the den, when any innocent sheep, or other beast of the field comes within reach of him.

12. [k] † Like as a Lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young Lion lurking in secret places.

13. And unless thou, O Lord, shalt be pleased to interpose to stop them in their course, to bring them down, to appear as a champion with a sword in thy hand thus timely to deliver me, I shall certainly be destroyed and devoured by them.

13. Arise, O Lord, || [l] disappoint him, cast him down; deliver my soul from the wicked, † which is [m] thy sword.

14. From * men which are thy [n] hand, O Lord, from men of the world, which have their portion in this life, || and whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasure: they are full of children, and leave the rest of their substance to their babes.

Be thou therefore pleased, I beseech thee, thus to do, hasten to my defense, and rescue me from these wicked men; These men, I say, the rich and great men of the world, who have all their good things allowed them by thee in this life, and so here have all riches and plenty, and having a numerous posterity, have wealth also sufficient not only to enjoy themselves, but also to leave abundantly to their children (as having no care of charity or mercy to others, on which to exhaust any thing.)

† or, by the sword.
* the men by thy hand O Lord, from the men——
|| and from thy treasure, or with thy good things, thou fillest their belly; they have plenty of children, and leave the remainder of their riches to their little ones.

15. Meanwhile I will adhere to thee, and constantly perform my duty, and thus waite, till thou shalt be pleased graciously to reveale thy self unto me; not doubting, but thou wilt, in thy good time, stir up thy power for my rescue: and then I shall be abundantly provided for, I shall want nothing.

15. † As for me, I will behold thy face in ° righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness.

† I will through righteousness behold thy face: I shall be filled at the awaking of thy glory.

Annotations on Psal. XVII.

a. צֶדֶק

V. 1. Right, O God,] It is not agreed among the antient Interpreters, to what the word צֶדֶק righteousness belongs and connects. The Latine reads, justitiam, righteousness, (and so the Arabick) and that connects it with [hear,] Hear the Justice, or righteousness, or right; and so Apollinarius, Κλῦθί μου ἐνδικίαν, hear my just cause. But the Chaldee hath בִּצְדָקָה in righteousness, and then it coheres with [hear] again, Hear in justice, or righteousness, O Lord. But the LXXII. joyn it with [Lord] Κύριε τῆς δικαιοσύνης μου, O Lord of my righteousness, as in the beginning of the fourth Psalm; where though it be צִדְקִי my righteousness, not צֶדֶק righteousness, yet these may be all one; and so the LXXII. might think fit to render it more explicitely (not reading otherwise than we have it, but) thus expressing their understanding of it, whereas the Syriack more exactly (joyning it, as they do, with Lord) read ܩܕܝܫܐ ܕܙܕܝܩ O holy Lord; as Lord of righteousness, is righteous Lord, and righteousness in God is all one with holiness. And this seems to be the fittest rendring of it, according to the sense, O righteous Lord, or more literally (but to the same purpose) יְהוָה צֶדֶק O Lord of righteousness. The Jewish-Arabick translator reads, O Lord of Justice or equity.

b. צָרַף

V. 3. Thou hast tried me] Some difficulties there are in this v. 3. First, what is meant by trying. But that is soon resolved; viz. that צָרַף signifies exploring, such especially as is of metalls by fire, Psal. 66. 10. and of men by temptations, or afflictions, Isai. 48. 10. and accordingly the LXXII. here render it, ἐπύρωσας, hast cast into the fire, in the same notion in which we have πύρωσις, 1 Pet. 4. 12. for tribulation or affliction, and that as a special season to try the sincerity of those, who have in times of prosperity made greatest professions of piety, but oft fail, when they meet with pressures in his service. This tryall as of Gold in the Fire, is here thought fit to be added to that former of visiting him in the night, when the eyes of men being shut out, his thoughts and actions were most free, and undisguised, and such as come from the very heart; which cannot so surely be said of his day-actions, which are oft awed by the eyes of men. And God by examining him by these two wayes, visiting his night-thoughts, and trying him by afflictions, must needs know if there be any insincerity in him. The next difficulty is, what is the full importance of בַּל תִּמְצָא thou shalt not find:] and that may be discerned by remembring what was noted Psal. 10. note l. תְּחִרוּשׁ בַּל תִּמָּצֵא to be sought and not found, proverbially, for that which was not at all, but was lost or destroyed utterly. In proportion with which, for God to try, and not find, is a phrase to signifie sincerity and uprightness, without any such mixture, as is wont to be discovered by trying (i. e. melting any metall) without any dross, i. e. hypocrisie, in him. This the LXXII. have expresst by οὐχ εὑρεθήσεται ἐν ἐμοὶ ἀδικία, iniquity hath not been found in me: and to the same sence the Syriack, and Arabick, and Latine, not much mistaking the sense, for ἀδικία, iniquity, is that dross which is wont to be discovered by tentation, but yet probably reading the verse otherwise than now the punctation will permit, and 1. taking the verb זַמֹּתִי cogitavi, from the latter part of the verse, and reading it with other points זָמְתִי my thought (which is oft used in the ill sense, and so sometimes rendred ἀνομία, iniquity, Lev. 19. 29.) and 2. removing the other words בַּל יַעֲבָר פִּי my mouth shall not transgress, with which the verse concludes, to the beginning of the following verse, Ὅπως ἂν μὴ λαλήσῃ τὸ στόμα μου τὰ ἔργα τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, that my mouth may not speak the works of men. But the reading which we retein is surely the true, and is so acknowledged by the Chaldee Paraphrase, which explaining בַּל תִּמְצָא by לָא אַשְׁכַּחְתָּא שְׁחִיתָא thou shalt not find corruption, renders זַמֹּתִי בַּל יַעֲבָר פִּי I thought, my mouth shall not transgress] חַשְׁבִית בִּישׁוּתָא לָאֶעְבַר פּוּמִי I have thought ill, my mouth hath not transgresst. This therefore being resolved to be the reading, the last difficulty is, what will be the meaning of the Hebrew phrase. And 1. for the word זָמַם, though it be oft taken in an ill sense, and so understood here by the Chaldee, yet 'tis sometimes in a good sense, as Prov. 2. 11. (where מְזִמָּה from that verbe is by us duly rendred discretion, by the LXXII. βουλὴ καλὴ, good counsel, and so by the Syriack, a good mind, and by the Arabick, firm counsel;) and and sometimes indifferently neither good nor bad, and so in that place 'tis rendred by the Chaldee וּדְיַרְהִי thought simply. And thus I conceive it signifies here: for if it were evil (as the Chaldee supposes) that he thought, how could he be acquitted by Gods proving of his heart, where that evil thought would have been found, and have accused him rather? The more certain meaning then of the words will be this, I have thought, and my mouth shall not transgress it, i. e. my mouth and thoughts shall, or (as the future is oft taken for the past, oft for the present) do go, or have gone together. The deceitful man, or the hypocrite thinks one thing, and speaks another; but the sincere and upright (such as David here avowes himself to be, and appeals to Gods strictest scrutiny to judge if he be not) hath his tongue and heart going still together, and not one outgoing (so עֹבֶר signifies præteriit, transiit) the other. This sense is acknowledged by the learned Sebastianus Castellio, who renders this latter part of the verse, non deprehendes me aliud in pectore, aliud in ore habere, thou shalt not find me to have one thing in my breast, another in my mouth. And so this is the full meaning of that which is by the Psalmist, after his manner, more concisely expresst. עֹבֶר

c. V. 4. The destroyer] From פָּרַץ to break, or break through, is the noun פָּרֶץ a thief or violent person, and so here it may signifie all the violent wicked practices of the world. The Chaldee read חַצִּיפָא the strong man, or violent person, probably to denote the sword-man, such as Abishai, that exhorted David to kill Saul, 1 Sam. 26. 8. But the LXXII. as if it were פֶּרֶץ rupture, render it σκληρὰς, rough, ἐφυλαξάμην ἀπὸ ὁδῶν ἀνομίας. I have taken heed of (so I suppose ἐφυλαξάμην is there to be rendred) the rough, or harsh wayes; not in the sense wherein the Latine seems to have understood them, custodivi vias duras, I have kept the hard wayes, but as φυλάττειν is to take heed of, and so to avoid, to which the Syriack agrees, thou, say they, hast kept me from the evil wayes. פָּרֶץ

d. V. 5. Hold up my goings] The chief doubt in this verse is how תְּמֹךְ shall be rendred. That it is the infinitive mood from תָּמַךְ fulcivit, to support, or establish, or hold up, there is no doubt. But this infinitive is elsewhere frequently taken in the sense of the imperative: and so here the Chaldee סְעַר sustein, or confirm thou; and so the LXXII. and the Latine κατάρτισον, perfice, Perfect my goings. The Syriack read ܘܬܩܢ And thou hast established——but the Arabick, that my rising (or going) might be strengthened in thy paths. Which reading of theirs seems to be founded in the infinitive sense, which is often thus expresst by [ut, that.] And indeed this of the infinitive, as it is the most simple, so it seems to be most agreeable to the context, and connects best with the former verse. For there he had set down his steadiness, in not being drawn by any temptation to the wayes of the violent: together with the means by which he continued so steady, the power of Gods law, called there the words of Gods lips, and his adhering constantly to it, the conscientious observing of all his commandments. And to that same sense this verse will be best expounded in the infinitive, thus; By confirming (i. e. by Gods confirming) my steps or goings in thy paths, (so תְּמֹךְ in the infinitive signifies in the notion of a Latine gerund) בְּלִי נָמוֹטּוּ פְעָמָי my feet (so פְּעָמַיִם in the plural signifies) have not been moved: And so there is no ellipsis in them, the sense perfectly current, and exactly agreeable to the former verse; Gods paths here being all one with the words of his lips there, (the ways that God commanded him to walk in) and his not being moved, all one with his not being wrought on by temptations, to go on with the violent in his wayes. And thus the interlinear understands it; sustentando gressus meos in orbitis tuis, non nutarunt pedes mei, by holding up my goings in thy paths, my feet have not gone aside, or tript.

e. V. 6. Thou wilt hear me] תַּעֲנֵנִי is indeed in the future here, and so is the Chaldee תְּקַבֵּל by which they render it literally, thou shalt receive. But 'tis very ordinary with both Hebrew and Chaldee, to use the futures in the præter tense; and so the LXXII. here render it, ἐπήκουσάς μου, thou hast heard, and so the Syriack and Latine, and Apollinarius, φίλτατε δὲ ὧν ἤκουσας ἐμοῦ, thou hast heard my voice. And so 'tis most probably to be understood as a second argument to inforce his petition to God for his defence and deliverance, in the following verses. The first argument had been taken from the sincerity of his own heart, and uprightness of his actions, the qualification to make him capable of Gods defence, and this v. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. And now this second is from Gods former mercies, which are generally pledges of future: Deus donando debet, saith Cyprian, God by every donation of mercy makes himself debter of more to him that worthily receives them: and so the words will be best read to this sense, I have called upon thee כִּי תַּעֲנֵנִי because thou hast heard me. תַּעֲנֵנִי

f. V. 7. By thy right hand] The only doubt in this v. 7. is of the rendring the last word בִּימִינֶךָ. The LXXII. rendring it τῇ δεξιᾷ σου, [thy right hand] do joyn it with ἀνθιστάντων, resist,] and then the construction lies thus; Thou that savest those that trust in thee from them that oppose thy right hand, meaning the counsel and purpose of God, (called Gods hand, Act. 4. 28.) to make David King. And thus the Latine understand it, resistentibus dexteræ tuæ, those that resist thy right hand; and the Syriack, those that rise up ܠܡܩܒܠ ܝܡܝܢܟ against thy right hand. But the Chaldee put in עֲלֵיהוֹן against them after קָמִין those that rise up, and so leave בִּימִינֶךָ to signifie [by thy right hand,] which then must joyn with מוֹשִׁיעַ Saviour, thus, Thou that deliverest by thy right hand them that trust in thee, from those that rise up against them. And so Apollinarius, Ῥύομαι σὲ μὴ πατρικῇ ἐπιλημψίᾳ σώζων ἀλλὰ, By thy strength (that is the meaning of his right hand) delivering all those that trust on thee. And this is retained by our English, and is the most probable reading. בִּימִינֶךָ

g. V. 9. Deadly enemies] The notion of בְּנֶפֶשׁ may here deserve to be considered, נֶפֶשׁ as it signifies soul and life, so oft it denotes the passions of the sensitive soul, and is rendred rightly will or desire: so Psal. 27. 12. בְּנֶפֶשׁ (the same that here) signifies into the will or desire of the enemy; and so Psal. 41. 2. deliver him not בְּנֶפֶשׁ into the will of his enemies. And then being here in the same form, and joyned with enemies, אֹיְבַי בְּנֶפֶשׁ enemies with the soul, it most probably will be taken in the same sense, vehement, or passionate, earnest enemies, or that with all their desire and intention יְסֹבְבוּנִי encompass or surround, or make a ring עָלַי against me. And thus the Chaldee understand it, and paraphrase it by בִּרְעוּת נַפְשָׁתְהוֹן with the desire of their souls. בְּנֶפֶשׁ

h. V. 10. Inclosed] The difficulties of this verse will be removed, if we joyne פִּימוֹ their mouth to the precedent, not the subsequent words, thus; חֶלְבָּמוֹ סָגָרוּ פִּימוֹ with fat have they shut up their mouth: a Poetical or Proverbial speech for haughtiness or pride, caused by wealth or great prosperity. That is frequently expresst by fat; Jeshurun waxed fat, חֶלְבָּמוֹ סָגָרוּ פִּימוֹ

j. e. rich and proſperous: Their eyes ſwell or ſtick out with fat, Pſal. 73. 7. to ſignifie their abundance, as it there follows, they have more than their heart could wiſh. And then πλούσιοι ὑβρισταὶ, ſaith Ariſtotle, rich men are very arrogant deſpiſers of others; and ſo it follows here, דִּבְּרוּ בְּגַאֲוָה they ſpeak proudly, or faſtuouſly. Thus the Chaldee appear to have underſtood the verſe, who paraphraſe it thus, עָתְרָהוֹן שׁוּמְנִתְהוֹן פּוּמְהוֹן סָנָא Their wealth is multiplied, with their fat they have covered their mouth; exactly anſwerable to the Hebrew (though the Latine render it otherwiſe, adipe ſuo operti ſunt, ore ſuo loquuntur magnifica.) and then סַלְּלוּ בְרַבְרְבָתָא they have ſpoken great or magnifick, i. e. proud things. And the Syriack came near it, ſo as to joyn פִּיהוֹ mouth with סָגְרוּ ſhut, rendring it ܐܣܬܡܘ ܦܘܡܗ ܕܡܡܠܠ ܓܐܘܬܐ; ſhut their mouth which ſpeaketh boaſting, but quite leaving out the fat in the beginning of the verſe. The LXXII. indeed divide it otherwiſe, τὸ στόμα αὐτῶν συνέλεισαν, they have ſhut up their fat; rightly rendring סָגְרוּ (which in the active muſt be ſo rendred, have ſhut up, not with the Chaldee in the paſſive:) but then joyning with it (not פִּיהוֹ their mouth, but) חֵלֶב their fat, they have rendred it unintelligibly, they have ſhut up their fat; ('tis hard to gueſs what they ſhould mean by thoſe words) and ſo have the Latine that follow them, adipem ſuum concluſerunt. The Arabick hath rendered it with more ſenſe, their fat is grown thick, or hard: but סָגְרוּ in the active is not favourable to that. The literal rendring is moſt intelligible, they have ſhut up or ſtuft their mouth with fat; Ore obeſitate farto ſuperbè loquuntur, ſaith Sebaſtianus Caſtellio, having ſtuft their mouth with fat, they ſpeak proudly. And to this rendring I adhere, as being the moſt ſimple, and leaſt forced.

i. לְנָטוֹת

V. 11. Bow down] What לְנָטוֹת here ſignifies will be eaſily reſolved, by obſerving the uſe of נָטָה for inclining, or bending, or caſting down; and ſo being here joyned with בָּאָרֶץ to the earth, it literally imports caſting down upon the earth: not applying it to their eyes præcedent, (as the LXXII. (with the Latine) ſeem to do, and from them Apollinarius, ἐν γαίῃ κλίνξαν ἐπαλλήλους ὄμματα, they bowed down and faſtened their eyes upon the ground;) but to him whom they beſieged, in the former part of the verſe, i. e. the Pſalmiſt, who makes this complaint: they now סְבָבוּנִי have incompaſt me אַשֻּׁרֵנוּ in our ſteps, laid wait for him as he went, and at laſt incloſed, or incompaſt him; and having done ſo, ſet their eyes (a phraſe for ſtedfaſt reſolving, or enterprizing any thing) לְנָטוֹת בָּאָרֶץ to caſt down to the earth. So the Syriack underſtood it, they ſet their eyes ܕܢܦܠܘܢ ܥܠ ܐܪܥܐ that they might lay me along on the earth, (and ſo indeed נָטָה ſignifies to extend, or lay along:) and ſo the Chaldee לְמִפְשַׁט ad diffundendum (not as 'tis rendred, ut ſe diffundant,) to poure out upon the earth: and the Arabick to the ſame ſenſe, they fixt their eyes, that they might beat, or ſtrike me upon the earth; and then this is a ready intelligible meaning of the words.

k. דָּמְיֹנוֹ

V. 12. Like as a Lion] Where the Hebrew reads דָּמְיֹנוֹ his likeneſs, from דָּמָה was like, the LXXII. ſeem to have read דָּמְיֹנוּ a verbe, and from another notion of the word דָּמָה in Piel, for cogitavit, intentus fuit, thinking intently on any thing; and accordingly they render it ὑπέλαβόν με, they thought intently on me, (and the word is oft uſed for imagining miſchief, 2 Sam. 21. 5. that deviſed againſt us that we ſhould be deſtroyed, and Jud. 20. 5. thought to have ſlain me:) And the Arabick ſounds this way, They met me as a Lion—But the Chaldee and Syriack render it in the notion of likeneſs, and ſo it muſt be underſtood. And then the moſt literal rendring will be, דָּמְיֹנוֹ כַּאֲרְיֵה his likeneſs as of a Lion. And then it follows, יִכְסוֹף לִשְׁרֹף he deſires to tear or ravin. The LXXII. render it ἕτοιμος εἰς θηρᾶν, ready for prey, as when he is hungry, he is ſuppoſed to be. And then the reſt of the verſe follows readily, and as of a young Lion וְשֵׁב dwelling; or abiding in his den;] which though it go not out, ſeizeth on all that comes thither: and ſo his enemies deſign and threaten to ſeize on him, now they have gotten him as they think, in their power.

l. קַדְּמָה

V. 13. Diſappoint] קַדְּמָה from קָדַד to anticipate and prevent, is here duly rendred by the LXXII. προφθασον, get before them, and is here adapted to the Lion making after his prey, v. 12. and under that reſemblance, to Davids enemies, which are now ready to ſeize upon him, v. 11. if God do not interpoſe his power, get before them, and, as it follows, וְהַכְרִיעֵהוּ ὑποσκέλισον, trip up their heels, (ſo כָּרַע ſignifies, from כָּרַע curvare, to bow down, and in Hiphil proſternere ὑπολαγεῖν, to make bown down, i. e. to throw down,) and ſo keep them from ſeizing on him.

m. חַרְבֶּךָ

V. 13. Sword] 'Tis matter of ſome doubt, to what the word חַרְבֶּךָ thy Sword, here belongs. It may poſſibly by way of appoſition connect with מֵרָשָׁע from the wicked, and then our Engliſh renders it according to ſenſe, from the wicked, which is thy ſword. But none of the antient interpreters underſtood it thus. The Chaldee have thus paraphraſed it; Deliver me from the wicked, רְאַתְחֵיב קְטוֹל בְּסֵיפָךְ which ought to be ſlain by thy ſword: the Syriack, ܡܢ ܪܫܝܥܐ ܘܡܢ ܣܝܦܐ ܕܝܠܟ; from the wicked, and the ſword (meaning the ſword of the wicked:) the LXXII. reading ῥομφαίας σου, and from them the Latine, frameam tuam, thy ſword, are not intelligible. The Arabick having rendred it [& à gladio tuo] with the inſertion of the Copulative [et,] add by way of explication, nempe ab inimicis tuis, to wit, from thine enemies, thus rendring the beginning of the next verſe. And the Æthiopick differs from all; Deliver my ſoul from the Lance, (for מֵרָשָׁע from the wicked, reading perhaps מֵרֹמַח which in Arabick ſignifies a dart or lance) thy ſword be upon the enemies of thy hand (joyning with it, as the Arabick did, the beginning of the next verſe.) In this variety there may be place of conjecture: and then it will not be improbable, that חַרְבֶּךָ thy ſword, ſhould here be conſidered as the inſtrument of his deliverance, and ſo joyned with פַּלְּטָה deliver me, thus, by thy ſword deliver or reſcue me from the wicked. This perfectly agrees to the context, where the enemy, as a hungry Lion, is ready to ſeize on David, as his prey, if ſome valiant champion with his ſword in his hand do not ariſe, and out-run, and trip up his heels, and ſo reſcue him out of his hands. And for this David hath none to rely on, but God, and therefore to him he cries, that he will thus ſpeedily interpoſe, and deliver him.

n. יָדְךָ

V. 14. Thy hand] By the importance of חַרְבֶּךָ (ſee note m.) in the former verſe, 'twill not be difficult to reſolve of the meaning of יָדְךָ here. There, that being joyned with פַּלְּטָה deliver me] was to be rendred gladio tuo, with thy ſword; and in the ſame manner will this here, deliver me by thy hand: juſt as v. 7. God is called מוֹשִׁיעַ בִּימִינֶךָ a Saviour, or he that delivereth and ſaveth by his right hand.

hand. And this perhaps to be connected with חַרְבֶּךָ with thy sword, by the figure ὑπαλλαγή, whereby two things are put severally to signifie but one, sword and hand, to signifie a drawn sword, which is fit for such a present rescue as David now stands in need of. There מֵרָשָׁע from the wicked, here מִמְתִים from the men in the next words, specifying what men he means, מִמְתֵי מֶחְלָד the men of the age, i.e. worldly men; and those described largely and poetically (in the insuing words to the end of the verse) to be such as have all things to their will, are very plentiful and prosperous, they and their posterity. In their description, 1. occurs their having their portion בַּחַיִּים in vita: this the Chaldee renders in life eternal, but the LXXII. (and so the Syriack and Arabick and Latine) ἐν τῇ ζωῇ αὐτῶν, i. e. in this life of theirs; and so 'tis certain the plural חַיִּים (there being no singular) signifies life simply. 2. Follows וְצָפִינְךָ ——and thou shalt fill their belly with thy good things, so in sense it may be rendred, or from thy hidden things, i. e. thy treasury, for from צָפַן to lay up or keep, is the noun צָפוֹן 1. any thing that is thus laid up or kept, 2. a treasury wherein 'tis laid up. In the latter sense it must be rendred from thy treasury; in the former, with thy good things, i.e. with all the wealth of this world, that God bestows on any. As when we are bid not to lay up our treasures upon earth, Mat. vi. the meaning is clear, not to lay up our goods there, (of which the several sorts are there pointed at, by the moths corrupting, and the rust, and the thieves breaking and stealing;) but by works of mercy to lay up our goods in Heaven, bestowing them on God, and the poor for Gods sake. And these in the parable of the rich man in the Gospel are thus styled, τὰ ἀγαθά σου, his portion of good things which he received in this life; and proportionably here is their having their portion in this life, and their being filled with good things or treasure. So the Chaldee render it, טָמִירָךְ טָבָא with thy hiding of good or hidden good; the Syriack and Arabick, with thy treasures: but the LXXII. ἐκ τῶν κρυπτῶν σου, more literally; and so the Latine, absconditis tuis, with thy hidden things: but none have thought fit to put both hidden and treasures, either of them signifying the other, and both of them those things that in the world are accounted good, and so are laid up and kept by the men of the world. 3. 'Tis added, יִשְׂבְּעוּ בָנִים they have plenty of children, so שָׂבַע signifies to abound with any thing: not as the Chaldee, and Syriack and Arabick are rendred, their children are filled; but as in the Hebrew, so in the Chaldee, סַגִּיאִין בְּנִין they abound in children, ἐχορτάσθησαν υἱῶν, they are filled with children, (saturati sunt filiis, saith the Latine) which it seems was antiently miswritten ὑῶν, Swines-flesh, and so followed by the Arabick Translation, and by the Roman Psalter, and so found in Arnobius and others of the antients from that mistake of the amanuensis. What follows of their leaving the residue or remainder (so יִתְרָם signifies) of their substance to their babes, is but a farther expression of their abundance; having such plenty for themselves, that they have much to spare, which yet they dispense not in any part to those that want, but reserve it all for their posterity: and so this is another part of the character of the worldly great and rich man; Lazarus at his door, might not have so much as the crums that fall from this rich mans Table.

V. 15. Righteousness] בְּצֶדֶק seems best to be rendred here, by or through righteousness, per justitiam saith Castellio, as by the condition, on which he may expect the return of Gods mercy here, or the eternal vision of him hereafter; which, saith the Apostle, no man shall attain to without peace and holiness, parts of this justice or righteousness. As for בְּהָקִיץ תְּמוּנָתֶךָ in the end of the verse, it is diversly rendred by the antient interpreters. For תְּמוּנָה the Syriack seems to have read אֱמוּנָה and so read וסכלא thy faith: but the LXXII. read δόξαν σου, and so the Latine and Arabick, thy glory, and the Chaldee אֵיקַ the glory of thy countenance. But the difficulty is, to what בְּהָקִיץ in evigilando, at the awaking] shall belong. The Chaldee apply it to David; when I shall awake, I shall be satisfied with the glory of thy countenance, and so it hath truth, in respect of the resurrection of the just, and that not unfitly opposed to the abundance of the worldly men, v. 14. in this life. But all the other interpreters agree in applying it to תְּמוּנָתֶךָ thy glory: ἐν τῷ ὀφθῆναι τὴν δόξαν σου, at the appearing of thy glory, say the LXXII. cum apparuerit gloria tua, the Latine; (and so the Arabick and Æthiopick,) when thy fidelity shall awake, saith the Syriack. And so most probably it is to be understood; by [Gods glory awaking] signifying his glorious and powerful interposition to his present rescue from his enemies hands, and not deferring to relieve and avenge him till the resurrection. And thus the learned Castellio took it; tum satiandus, cum tua experrecta fuerit imago, I shall be satisfied when thy likeness shall be awaked.

The Eighteenth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

The Eighteenth Psalm was indited by David in commemoration of the many victories, and now quiet settlement in the Kingdom of Israel and Judah, which God had bestowed on him by his powerful interpositions for him, in subduing the Philistims, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, that rose up against him, in quieting the Rebellion of Absalom, (soon after which it is recorded, 1 Sam. 22.) but especially in rescuing him out of the malitious bloody hands of King Saul. This he composed, and committed to the prefect of his Musick, to be sung on ‖ solemn days, for the commemorating of these deliverances and victories. And these were the words of it.

‖ for all the days wherein God had delivered him — Chald. Paraphr.

To the Chief Musitian, a Psalm of David, the servant of the Lord, who spake unto the Lord the words of this Song, in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul; and he said,

1. O blessed Lord, I acknowledge thee to be the sole Author of all my deliverances and victories; and so by all obligations imaginable I stand ingaged, most passionately to love, and bless, and magnifie thee, to pay all the affections of my whole soul, a due tribute to thee: and this I do, and am firmly resolved to do all my dayes.

1. I will love thee, O Lord my strength.

a. 2. To thee I have in all my distresses made my resort, as to a place of perfect strength, to a mighty champion to rescue me, and thou hast never failed to answer me in these addresses. O my God, thou hast been a place of strength and security unto me, and on that account I have always had confidence, and chearful expectations of deliverance, whatsoever my dangers have been; thou hast been my sure safeguard, so that I have needed no other shield, my mighty deliverer (see note on Luk. 1. a.) and my most impregnable fort or castle.

2. The Lord is my ‖ [a] rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer, my God, * my strength, in whom I will trust, my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower.

b. 3. If I am distrest, or assaulted by my adversaries, I have then my sure sanctuary to resort unto. To him I come with acknowledgments of his abundant mercies formerly received from him, the essays of his power and readiness to relieve me, and withall the pawns and pledges of them for the future; and to my songs of praise, I add my humblest requests and supplications for deliverance: and doing thus, I never fail of my returns from God, never miss the deliverance that I stand in need of.

3. I will * call upon the Lord, [b] which is worthy to be praised, so shall I be saved from my enemies.

* praise, and call upon the Lord, so ——

c. 4,5. When whole Armies of blood-thirsty enemies closed me on every side, ready as a torrent to overwhelm me, and were very terrible in that appearance, when their designs were even come to their desired issue, and there was no visible way of my escape or preservation;

4. The † [c] sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of ungodly men made me afraid.

† cords.

5. The ‖ sorrows of hell compassed me about, the snares of death prevented me.

‖ cords.

6. In these streights immediately I made my address to God, and most passionately poured out my requests before him: and he from Heaven, that place of his peculiar residence, (and therefore the sanctuary whence all rescues come, as the place to which all petitions are brought,) afforded me a speedy audience, considered, and immediately granted my desires.

6. In my distress I called upon the Lord, and cried unto my God: he heard my voice out of his Temple, and my cry came before him, even unto his ears.

d. 7,8,9,10,11,12,13,14,15. And then speedily he expresst his great displeasure and wrath against my adversaries: a most dreadful thing, the wrath of an All-powerful God, able to set all the world on trembling, and not so only, but even to set it on fire and consume it, (see Exod. 20. 18. and Heb. 12. 29.) Then might you discern him interposing his hand for the discomfiting my enemies, as signally as if he had descended in a black thick cloud with a mighty wind, and appearance of Angels in shining garments, (as we read of his exhibiting himself, Num. 9. 15. Mat. 9. 7. Heb. 12. 18.) with tempestuous showers of hail and fire, (such as Jos. 10. 11. Exod. 19. 23.) with thunders and lightning; all these on purpose (as with arrows and fiery darts) to annoy and pursue them: and finally, with the same notoriety of his presence, as when the waters of the Sea were driven back by a strong East wind, and the deep turned into dry ground, Exod. 14. 21, 22. to give the Israelites a safe passage out of their thraldome, and to drown the Egyptians.

7. Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth.

8. There went up a smoak out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured, coals were kindled by it.

9. He bowed the Heavens also, and [d] came down; and darkness was under his feet.

10. And he rode upon a Cherub and did fly; yea, he did fly upon the wings of the ‖ wind.

‖ See Psal. 104. note a.

11. He made darkness his secret place: his pavilion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies.

12. At the brightness that was before him his thick clouds past, hail-stones and coals of fire.

13. The Lord also thundred in the heavens, and the highest gave his voice, hail-stones and coals of fire.

e. 14. Yea, he sent out his arrows and scattered them, and he [e] shot out lightnings and discomfited them.

15. Then the chanels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered; at thy rebuke, O Lord, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.

16. He

16. He ſent from above, he took me, he drew me out of many waters.

16. And thus did he, as by a party ſent on purpoſe from Heaven, deliver and reſcue me from ‖ the multitude of my adverſaries.

‖ מַיִם מַסִּין

17. He delivered me from my ſtrong enemy, and from them which hated me, for they were too ſtrong for me.

17. And this at a time when they wanted neither power nor will to deſtroy me, being much ſuperior to me in ſtrength, had not he thus ſeaſonably come to my reſcue.

סַנְאִין from many people, Chald.

18. They prevented me in the day of my calamity; but the Lord was my ſtay.

18. When my diſtreſs was greateſt, (ſee note on Pſalm 17. k.) and all humane aids were obſtructed by them, then God, by his own ſpecial providence and interpoſition ſuſtained and ſupported me.

19. He brought me forth alſo into a large place: he delivered me, becauſe he delighted in me.

19. He freed me from all my ſtreights, reſtored me to a proſperous condition:

and this upon no other account, but only of his kindneſs and mercy to me.

20. The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſneſs: according to the [f] cleanneſs of my hands hath he recompenſed me.

20. Thus hath God vindicated my uprightneſs, and given me at laſt thoſe returns which were anſwerable to the juſtice of my cauſe. f

21. For I have kept the wayes of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

21. As ſeeing that indeed I have not knowingly tranſgreſt any command of his,

(ſave only in the matter of Uriah, for which he repented, and obtained pardon from God, 1 King. 15. 5.)

22. For all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his ſtatutes from me.

22. But have obſerved his ſtatutes diligently, never refuſing to be ruled by any of them.

23. I was alſo upright before him, and kept my ſelf from [g] mine iniquity.

23. And by ſo doing preſerved my innocence, and guarded me from compaſſi- g.

on of any ſin. (This ſtill, according to Scripture ſtile, to be underſtood with exception of the matter of Uriah.)

24. Therefore hath the Lord recompenſed me according to my righteouſneſs, acccording to the cleanneſs of my hands in his ſight.

24. And accordingly hath God, out of his abundant mercy to me, accepted and rewarded my uprightneſs, and given teſtimony to the ſincerity thereof.

25. With the merciful thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf merciful; with an upright man thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf upright;

26. With the pure thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf pure; and with the froward thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf froward.

25, 26. For God is a moſt juſt impartial rewarder, ſees the heart, and accordingly recompenſes. To a merciful pious man he makes returns of mercy and pity; to the upright he will adminiſter juſtice, vindicate his cauſe from the oppreſſor and injurious. He that keeps himſelf pure from ſin, with him God will deal moſt ‖ faithfully; perform his promiſe to him exactly; never leave any degree of goodneſs in him unrewarded. And on the other ſide the rule holds as true, that thoſe that deal frowardly and ſtubbornly with God, ſhall be ſure to be oppoſed and puniſhed by him. (See note on Mat. 9. k.)

‖ בַּר pure, ſignifies alſo juſt and faithful.

27. For thou wilt ſave the afflicted people, and wilt bring down high looks.

27. For it is Gods conſtant method, to relieve the oppreſſed, and deſtroy (in his due time) the oppreſſor, be he never ſo confident.

28. For thou wilt light my candle: the Lord my God will inlighten my darkneſs.

28. And on this ground I have built my confidence, that how hopeleſs ſoever my preſent condition can at any time be, the powerful Lord of Heaven, and my gratious God, will reſcue me out of it.

‖ Or, taken a fort.

29. For by thee I have run through a troop; and by my God [h] have ‖ I leaped over a wall.

29. By him I have been inabled to ſubdue and bring down the ſtrongeſt forces. h.

† Gods way, הָאֵל דַּרְכּוֹ

30. † As for God, his way is perfect: the word of the Lord is tried: he is a buckler to all that truſt in him.

30. He is moſt juſt and faithful, his promiſes without all deceit or poſſibility of failing: he will certainly protect all thoſe that rely and depend on him.

31. For who is God, ſave the Lord? or who is a rock ſave our God?

31. This cannot be ſaid of any other. The deities of the heathens are not able to yield them any defence, nor any, but the one God whom we adore.

32. It is God that girdeth me with ſtrength, and maketh my [i] way perfect.

32. From him I have received all my ſtrength, to him I acknowledge it wholly due, that I have been preſerved in ſafety. i.

*He fitteth, makes even——

33. * He [k] maketh my feet like hinds feet, and ſetteth me up upon my [l] high places.

34. He

m. 34. At other times he gave me ſtrength for battel, and inabled me to obtain moſt wonderful victories, (by mine own hand on Goliah, on all other my enemies by my armies.)

34. He teacheth my hands to warr, ſo that a bow of ſteal is [m] broken by my arme.

n. 35. Conſtantly he hath protected me from all evil, in time of diſtreſs ſupported me, and at laſt, by his continued multiplyed acts of providence, raiſed me to the greateſt height.

35. Thou haſt alſo given me the ſhield of thy ſalvation, and thy right hand hath holden me up, and thy †[n] gentleneſs || hath made me great.

† care, or diſcipline. || or, haſt thou multiplyed to me.

36. I am now by his mercy brought to a condition of ſafety, no enemies to diſtreſs or ſtreighten me, no dangers to apprehend:

36. Thou haſt inlarged my ſteps under me, that my feet did not ſlip.

37. Having put all my enemies to flight, purſued my victory, and finally ſubdued, and deſtroyed them,

37. I have purſued my enemies, and overtaken them: neither did I turn again till they were conſumed.

38. I have wounded them that they were not able to riſe; they are fallen under my feet.

39. And all by that ſtrength with which thou haſt furniſht me: my victories are all thy gifts of mercy.

39. For thou haſt girded me with ſtrength unto the battel: thou haſt ſubdued under me thoſe that roſe up againſt me.

40. 'Tis thou that haſt by thy wiſe and powerful providence ſubjected them to me. (See Jos. 10. 24.)

40. Thou haſt alſo given me the necks of mine enemies, that I might deſtroy them that hate me.

41. When thou wert thus their enemy, there was none to yield them any relief; the aid from heaven failed them, and no other would ſtand them in any ſtead.

41. They cried, but there was none to ſave; even unto the Lord, but he anſwered them not.

42. Being thus aſſiſted by thee, I put to flight and deſtroyed all their forces.

42. Then did I beat them as ſmall as the duſt before the winde: I did caſt them out as the dirt in the ſtreets.

43. And now I am landed in a calm harbour, after all the ſtormes that incompaſt me, not onely mine own Kingdom being quieted,

43. Thou haſt delivered me from the ſtrivings of the people, and thou haſt made me the head of the heathen; a people whom I have not known ſhall ſerve me.

but the neighbouring heathens, Philiſtims, Moabites, &c. added to my dominions.

o. 44. Some of them overcome and ſubdued by me, others through their dread of my power paying a feigned obedience to me;

44. As ſoon as they hear of me, they ſhall obey me: the ſtrangers [o] ſhall || ſubmit themſelves unto me.

|| or, ly, or, yield feigned obedience to me.

p. 45. And theſe living in a languiſhing condition of fear and dread, keeping cloſe, not daring to appear abroad, for the terror that thy ſignal preſence with me hath brought upon them.

* move fearfully out of their holes, or fenced places.

46. Bleſſed and exalted be the name of the living Lord, which hath given me ſtrength, and reſcued me from all my diſtreſſes.

46. The Lord liveth, and bleſſed be my rock: and let the God of my ſalvation be exalted.

47. All this work of execution on mine enemies, and of ſubduing them under me, is to be attributed to him only.

47. It is God that avengeth me, and || ſubdueth the people under me.

|| deſtroyeth, or breaketh to pieces, וַיְרֹבֵד See 2 Chr. 22. 10.

48. To him therefore I deſire to acknowledge both my reſcue, and my victory over all the forces that have been raiſed againſt me.

48. He delivereth me from mine enemies, yea, thou liſteſt me up above thoſe that riſe up againſt me, thou haſt delivered me from the violent man.

49. And for this will I laud and magnifie thy holy name among all the people of the world. And this ſhall be the ſum of my lauds.

49. Therefore will I give thanks unto thee (O Lord) among the heathen, and ſing praiſes unto thy name.

q. 50. O thou which haſt wrought theſe wonderful deliverances for him whom thou haſt ſet up on the Throne, which haſt exalted me to this dignity, and ſince incompaſt me with thy ſignal favour and mercy, and wilt perpetuate the ſame to all my poſterity, that ſhall ſucceed me in the regal power, (if they continue to adhere faithfully to thee) and wilt at length ſhew forth thy power and mercy, in a moſt illuſtrious manner in the Meſſias, the ſon of David, whoſe Kingdom ſhall never have end; To thee be all honor and glory and praiſe to all eternity.

50. Great deliverance giveth he to his King, and ſheweth mercy to his Anointed, to David, and to his ſeed [q] for evermore.

Annotations on Pſalm XVIII.

a. סֶלַע

V. 1. Rock] Though סֶלַע primarily ſignifie a rock, and ſo is uſed, and rendred πέτρα, rock in moſt places; yet by Synecdoche it ſometimes ſignifies a tower, or fort, 2 King. 14. 7. becauſe ſuch are commonly, for ſecurity, built on rocks or hills; and by Metaphore alſo any refuge, to which any, whether Man or Beaſt, is wont to reſort, becauſe (as Pſal. 104. 18. is affirmed) to rocks and hills they are wont to fly from approaching dangers. Thus Pſalm 42. 10. סַלְעִי my rock] is by the Chaldee rendred רְחָצָנַי my hope, by the LXXII. ἀντιλήπτωρ, my helper. So when Iſa. 31. 1. Iſrael is reproved for going down to Ægypt for help, as to a refuge, it is ſaid, v. 9. סַלְעוֹ: we render, his rock, or ſtrong hold; it muſt be his refuge (or thoſe to whom he went down for help) ſhall paſs away for fear. This therefore is the fitteſt rendring of the word in this place; the primitive notion of rock being after expreſt by צוּרִי which ſignifies that exactly, and the Synecdochical notion for a fort or tower, in the very next word מְצוּדָתִי my tower, or fortreſs: and to that the Chaldee agree, who render it תוּקְפִי my fortitude, or ſtrong hold for reſort; the LXXII. στερέωμά μου, my firmament, and ſo the Latine (as Pſal. 30. 3. καταφύγιον, ſtrength.) Apollinarius hath ἔρεισμα, to the ſame ſenſe, the Syriack ܒܛܘܬܝ my confidence, or my hope. All which are meant to ſignifie the Metaphorical, and not Original notion of it.

b. מְהֻלָּל

V. 3. Worthy to be praiſed] מְהֻלָּל literally ſignifies laudatum, praiſed, and ſo it is rendred both by the Interlinear, and Caſtellio; but the meaning of it will be beſt reſolved on by the antient Interpreters, that have not followed the phraſe ſo literally. Αἰνῶν ἐπικαλέσομαι κύριον, ſay the LXXII. prayſing I will call upon the Lord; not reading מְהֻלָּל (as ſome ſuppoſe,) but thus chooſing to expreſs the ſenſe: and ſo the Latine, laudans invocabo; the Chaldee בְּתוּשְׁבַּחְתָּא אֲנָא מְצַלֵּי in a ſong or hymne I pour out prayers; Apollinarius, ὑμνῶν σε λίταις, praiſing thee with prayers, or joyning my praiſes and requeſts, my doxologies and litanies together. But the Arabick more expreſly, I will praiſe the Lord, and call upon him: and R. Tanchum, I will call upon him, and ſeek him with celebration and praiſe. And this, without queſtion, is the meaning of the Poetick phraſe, I will call on him being praiſed, i. e. I will firſt praiſe, then call upon him; praiſe him for his paſt mercies, and then petition for freſh: the uniting of theſe two being the condition, on which they may hope for deliverance from God. A like phraſe we have in Latine, Laudatum dimiſit, he diſmiſt him being praiſed; i. e. firſt praiſed him, then ſent him away; and many the like.

c. חֶבֶל

V. 5. Sorrows] חֶבֶל ſignifies two things, a cord, and a pang of a womans travaile; and which it ſignifies, muſt be reſolved ſtill by the context. 1. Here, where 'tis joyned with incompaſſing, it is moſt fitly to be underſtood in the former ſenſe, becauſe ropes or cordes are proper for that turn, as for holding and keeping in, when they are incloſed. And thus I conceive it moſt proper to be rendred in the next verſe, where it is joyned with ſnares, to which cords very well agree (ſee Pſalm 140. 5. The proud laid a ſnare for me, and cords) but pangs of travail do not. The Chaldee indeed paraphraſe it in that other ſenſe of pangs, diſtreſs hath compaſt me as a woman in travail, which hath not ſtrength to bring forth, and is in danger to dye; and the LXXII. read ὠδῖνες θανάτου, the pangs of death: But it is uſual for them thus to do, when the ſame Hebrew ſignifies two Greek words, to take one of them for the other; and accordingly 'tis from them taken by St. Luke, Acts 2. 24. where yet the mention of looſing] and being holden] muſt needs reſtrein it to the other ſenſe of cords and not pangs, (ſee Annot. c. on Act. 2.) And thus the Interlinear reads funes here, and the learned Caſtellio, Lora, Cords. And in the next verſe the Chaldee reads the ſame word by חֶשְׁרַיָּת a troupe, or an army; which may well be the meaning of the figurative expreſſion; for a company (which we call a band) of ſouldiers, much more an army, incompaſs and girt in, as cords do: and the Syriack there expreſly ܚܒܠܝ ܕܫܐܘܠ ܐܬܝܩܦܘ the cords of ſcheol beſieged me, and ſo the margin of our Engliſh; and therefore in all reaſon it muſt be ſo alſo in this verſe.

d. יָרַד

V. 9. Come down] This whole paſſage of 9 verſes from v. 7. to 15. is but a Poetical deſcription of Gods executing vengeance on Davids enemies. And as in the New Teſtament, Chriſts vengeance on his Crucifiers (the Jews,) is frequently called the coming of Chriſt, and ſometimes coming in clouds, (ſee Mat. 24. note b. and 2 Theſſ. 2. note b. and 2 Pet. i. e.) and as Pſal 96. 13. Gods judgments are expreſt by, he cometh, he cometh, and Pſal. 97. 5. by the preſence of the Lord, and many the like: ſo here we have the repreſentation of a glorious and terrible coming of God, bowing the heavens, and coming, incloſed with a dark cloud, v. 11. as being inviſible; riding on a cherub, or Angel, v. 10. (all Gods appearances being by Angels,) and this in a tempeſtuous manner, haile, thunder, and lightning, v. 12, 13, 14. and גַּחֲלֵי אֵשׁ (thrice repeated) coals of fire, thereby repreſenting the bolt, or thunder-ſhaft, which is with great fitneſs thus expreſt poetically, as the lightning by brightneſs, the congealed moiſture of the cloud by haile (which in thoſe countries accompanied thunder, as rain does with us, Exod. 9. 23.) ſo that miſſile ſhot out of the cloud with ſo much terror both of noiſe and ſplendor, what is it but the earthy ſulphureous part, made up of the ſame ingredients as a fiery cinder among us, and all this to denote the terribleneſs of it; and laſtly, after the manner of his deſtroying of the Ægyptians, by drying up the channels of the Sea, that deep whereon the earth is oft ſaid to be founded, and ſo ingaging them in it, and then bringing the waters upon them, to the overwhelming them all: and all this but preparatory to Davids deliverance, which follows, v. 17.

e. רָבָב

V. 14. Shott out] The Hebrew רָבַב ſignifies to multiply, and to ſhoot or dart. In the latter ſenſe 'tis Gen. 49. 23. the archers grieved him, וַיְרֻבֻּהוּ and ſhot at him. And thus by the compariſon here made between arrows and lightning, we may conclude it to ſignifie. Yet the antient Interpreters generally render it in the former notion. The Chaldee read וּבְרָקִין סַגִּיאוּ and many lightenings, the LXXII. καὶ ἀστραπὰς ἐπλήθυνε, and he multiplyed lightnings, and ſo the Syriack and Vulgar Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick from them; and ſo alſo the Interlinear, multiplicavit, and Caſtellio, crebris fulgoribus, with frequent lightnings: and onely our Engliſh ſeems to have pitched on the right rendring it, caſt forth, in the old, and ſhot forth in the new tranſlation.

V. 20. Cleanneſs] What is here meant by the cleanneſs of Davids hands, to which he here pretends, may to ſome ſeem difficult, eſpecially when ſo many other expreſſions are added to it; keeping Gods ways indefinitely, not wickedly departing from him, v. 21. having all Gods judgments before him, and not putting away his ſtatutes, v. 22. being upright before him, and keeping himſelf from his iniquity, v. 23. and again, righteouſneſs and cleanneſs of hands in his eye-ſight, v. 24. when yet if we conſider the ſeries of the hiſtory, this Pſalm, 2 Sam. 22. was indited after the commiſſion of thoſe great ſins, of Adultery with Uriahs Wife, making him drunk, contriving his death, and theſe lived in a long ſpace, at leaſt a twelve moneth, before Nathan came to him from God, and brought him to repentance; which as it was a conjunction of many known deliberate wilful ſins, and a long courſe and ſtay in them, ſo no doubt it could not be reconcileable with Gods favour, whilſt unrepented of, nor conſequently with that uprightneſs in Gods ſight, which here is ſpoken of. With that indeed many ſins of weakneſs or ſuddain ſurreption, for which his heart preſently ſmites him, (ſuch as that of numbring the people) might be competible, as being but the ſpots of ſons, ſuch as God is favourably pleaſed to pardon in his ſons, and ſincere ſervants; but for theſe waſting wilful ſins, which have none of that excuſe of weakneſs at the time of Commiſſion, nor that inſtant ſmiting of the heart, humiliation and confeſſion, and change, and ſacrifice, to allay the poyſon of them, but accumulation of more, one on the back of the other, and a long continuance in them, theſe are not of that ſort; they exclude from the favour of God, as long as they remain unreformed. For the anſwering of this therefore, it muſt be remembred, 1. That Repentance, when ſincere, reſtores to the favour of God: and David was now in that ſtate, at, and long before the time of inditing that Pſalm, ſuppoſing it to be compoſed by him after the quieting of Abſaloms rebellion, as the ſeries of the ſtory ſets it, 2 Sam. 22. and then be his ſins as red as ſcarlet, God hath made them as white as ſnow, Gods pardon and acceptance ſets him right again; and that may be his ground of confidence, in thus mentioning the cleanneſs of his hands, viz. ſuch as now was reſtored to him by repentance. 2. As general affirmations have frequently ſome one or perhaps more exceptions, which yet comparatively, and in balance with the contrary, are not conſidered; ſo his profeſſion of Univerſal uprightneſs here, is to be interpreted with this exception of that matter of Uriah, according to that ſtyle of Scripture, which ſaith of him, that he did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aſide from any thing that he commanded him all the dayes of his life, ſave onely in the matter of Uriah the Hittite; which though it were very foule, yet was not fit to prejudice the univerſal uprightneſs of all the reſt of his life, and ſo is not named here in the Pſalm, but muſt, as an implicite exception, be, from that paſſage in the Kings, fetcht, to give the true importance of theſe phraſes, which in ſound pretend to Univerſal Uprightneſs and ſincerity, but muſt be taken with this allowance, except, or ſave only in that one matter.

g. בַּעֲוֹנִי V. 23. Iniquity.] For בַּעֲוֹנִי from mine iniquity] Which the LXXII. and Latine and Arabick and Æthiopick follow, the Chaldee ſeems to have read בַּעֲוֹנֵי from iniquities, in the plural, for ſo they read מֵחוֹבִין from debts, or faults, and ſo the Syriack alſo. But the Vulgar reading need not be parted with, being in ſenſe the ſame, I kept my ſelf from mine iniquity, i.e. from my falling into any ſuch.

h. אֶרֶץ גְּדוּד V. 29. Leaped] In this 29. v. where the Hebrew read אֶרֶץ גְּדוּד I will run through a troop, the Chaldee have אֶפְשֵׁי מַשְׁרְיָן I will multiply armies, but the LXXII. ῥυσθήσομαι ἀπὸ πειρατηρίου, I ſhall be delivered from temptation; both no doubt by way of Paraphraſe, not literal rendring. In the end of the verſe, the word שׁוּר from שׁוּר to look, ſignifies שׁוּר both a wall, from whence to look, and obſerve the approach of enemies, and alſo a watch-tower or fort, from the ſame ground. Thus wall among us, being lightly deduced from vallum, ſignifies alſo a fort, Colwal, the fort on the hill; becauſe generally when walls are thus built in war, there are ſome ſuch forts erected on them. To this is joyned אֲרַלֹּג אֲרַלֹּג from רָלַג to leap, or leap over. If we take שׁוּר in the notion of a wall, then 'tis rightly rendred, I will leap over a wall: but if in the notion of a fort, then 'tis to ſeize on it with force and ſuddenneſs, as if one leapt into it, and ſo will be beſt rendred to take it. Thus the Chaldee אֶכְבּוֹשׁ בִּרְכִין תַּקִּיפִין I will ſubdue fortified Towers.

i. תְּמִים V. 32. Perfect] That תְּמִים ſignifies intire, or abſolute, complete or perfect, there is no queſtion. Being applied to a way, 'tis generally thought to ſignifie uprightneſs of manners. But the context here will not permit it to be taken in that ſenſe, being joyn'd with ſtrength for the battel. As then ſin is the blemiſh of Manners, and the grace to eſchew that, is fitly yet figuratively ſaid to make the manners perfect, or ἄμωμος, immaculate (as the LXXII. and Latine and Syriack here read;) ſo Gods power and providence, that delivers from dangers, which are as contrary to the health and ſafety of the body, as ſins are to the ſafety and health of the mind, may as fitly be ſaid to make the way perfect, or intire, i. e. ſafe; and to that the context confines it in thisplace.

k. מְשַׁוֶּה V. 33. Maketh my feet] The word מְשַׁוֶּה here from שׁוּה ſignifies [he makes my feet alike,] neither of them ſhorter then his fellow, (that which the Greeks expreſs by ἀρτίπους,) from whence proceed fleetneſs, or nimbleneſs, which therefore the Hebrews ſignifie by this phraſe; as on the contrary a lame man is by them ſtiled צוֹלֵעַ one whoſe legs or feet are not equal, and correſpondent one to the other. And this the LXXII. ſeem to have conſidered, when they render it ὁ καταρτιζόμενός μου πόδας, he that made my feet whole, and compleat as they ſhould be, (ſee note on 2 Cor. 13. c.) juſt in the notion of ἀρτίπους, forementioned, as that is ἀρτίους πόδας ἔχων, one whoſe feet are whole and entire, in oppoſition to any kind of lame-neſs. The Latine alſo, that read perfecit pedes meos, hath perfected my feet, and other interpreters that follow the LXXII. muſt be underſtood in this notion. And the Chaldee having retained the Hebrew שָׁוֵה have added agile, or nimble, to it, by way of paraphraſe, דַּמְשֵׁוִי רַגְלַי קַלִּילִין which I ſuppoſe is moſt fully rendred, by evening or fitting my feet he makes them nimble, or he fits my feet, nimble as an Hinds feet; and not as the Latine renders it, qui ponit pedes meos agiles, which puts or ſets my feet nimble: for though it be true, that שָׁוָה in Piel, is by the Chaldee uſed for ſet, yet in this place, where the Hebrew uſe that word, and the Chaldee take it from them, it is not probable they ſhould uſe it in a ſenſe wherein the Hebrew did not uſe it. But however that be with the Chaldee, the Hebrew is ſure thus to be rendred, and ſo is by the interlinear, adæquans, making even.

l. בָּמוֹתַי V. 33. High places] What בָּמוֹתַי high places] ſignifies here, may perhaps be queſtion'd. The word ſignifies any high places, and ſo is oft taken for altars erected there, which from thence are βωμοὶ in the Greek. Beſides, it may be thought to ſignifie the Royal throne, to which David was now exalted, and ſo conſtituted by by God. But the ſwiftneſs of the Hind, that is here joyned with it, doth rather confine it to the moſt vulgar acception, for the tops of hills, whither both men, and beaſts, and birds are wont to fly, for the avoiding any imminent danger; and to ſuch David was forced to fly from Saul, and by that means was then preſerved.

m. נְחָתַת

V. 34. Broken] from חָתַת contritus eſt, to be broken in pieces, is נְחַתַּת here, is broken. For it the LXXII. (and from them the Latine and Æthiopick) ſeem to have read, נָתַתָּה thou haſt given; for according to that, they render it, ἔδω τόξον χαλκοῦν——thou haſt ſet or made my arms a brazen bow; and the Chaldee to the ſame ſenſe, thou haſt ſtrengthened my arms as a ſteel bow, and ſo the Syriack and Arabick: unleſs we may rather reſolve, that reading as we now do, they thought thus to paraphraſe, rather than literally to render the place; and then it will be very proper thus to expreſs the great military ſtrength that God had beſtowed on David.

n. עַנְוְתָךְ

V. 35. Gentleneſs] From עָנָה afflixit, humiliavit, depreſſit; afflicting, humbling, depreſſing, comes the noun עָנוּת which properly notes affliction, humiliation, poverty; and thus moſt of the antient interpreters render it here. The Chaldee indeed render it בְּמֵימְרָךְ by thy word, from another notion of עָנָה frequent with the Chaldee, for ſpeaking. But the Syriack read ܒܡܠܦܢܘܬܟ (from ירה erudivit, and caſtigavit) thy teaching, or thy correction; and the LXXII. rendring תַּרְבֵּנִי which is joyned with it, two ways, 1. ἀνόρθωσε, hath rectified me, and 2. διδάξει, ſhall teach me, (in the notion of רָבַב from whence their teachers or maſters were called Rabbines) they have to each of thoſe verbs prefixt παιδεία, diſcipline, by that rendring עָנוּת, and probably noting affliction, or chaſtiſement by it. And thus it is appliable to David, who was afflicted, and chaſtiſed, and oppreſt, and kept down for a while; but this in the way to his exaltation, in that notion of תַּרְבֵּנִי for increaſe, or making great, in which the Chaldee interpret it אַסְגַּעְתַּנִי thou haſt increaſed me. But there is another notion of the noun עָנוּ for care, but lightly varied from diſcipline (by which the LXXII. and Syriack render it,) and ſo R. Tanchum here, thy care, or, thy providence: ſo ענאיה in Arabick ſignifies, and ſo Abu Walid underſtands it, and Kimchi in radic. The Jewiſh-Arab reads, thy anſwering me, from עָנָה reſpondit. As for the תַּרְבֵּנִי haſt made me great] R. Tanchum renders it, thou haſt multiplyed unto me, rendring עַנְוְתָךְ in the accuſative caſe, thy care thou haſt multiplyed unto me: and that may be pitcht on as the cleareſt rendring.

o. יְכַחֲשׁוּ

V. 44. Submit] That כָּחַשׁ in Piel, as here it lyes, ſignifies to lye, or ſpeak falſely, there is no queſtion. And ſo the Chaldee render it, יְכַדְּבוּן &c. they ſhall lie in my preſence; the LXXII. ὑπεστάντό μοι, they lyed unto me; and ſo the Latine and Æthiopick, and Arabick. Only the Syriack with ſome difference, ܢܬܟܕܒܘܢ they ſhall ſubmit themſelves to me: but this I ſuppoſe not meant by them in oppoſition to the former ſenſe, but in this ſubordination to it; they ſhall feign themſelves to have been obedient to me, ſhall fear me when they ſee my power, and themſelves unable to reſiſt it, and thereupon flatter, and pretend they have never oppoſed me. And that is the full meaning of the place, which ſets out Davids power ſo great, that all that were near to ſee it, diſſembled their hoſtility, made fair with him, which is in effect a ſubjecting themſelves to him, as long as this his power continued; a forced, and ſo hypocritical ſubjection, from awe to his greatneſs, not from love or unfeigned obedience to him. So Abu Walid, who puts among the notions of כחש that of ſubmitting ones ſelf, and for that inſtances in this place, derives it (as the other of being lean) from the firſt of lying and denying, viz. ſubmitting feignedly, for want of ſtrength to reſiſt. And to that well accords the conjugation Hithpael, 2 Sam. 22. 45. and Abu Walid thinks, יִתְכַּחֲשׁוּ which occurs in the ſame ſenſe, Deut. 33. 29. ought to be reckoned as of that conjugation, the ת being recompenſed by Dageſh in כ. And though here it be in the plain form of Piel, yet the Pſalmi being but one here, and 2 Sam. 22. the ſame muſt be reſolved of both places.

V. 45. Afraid] In this place the Hebrew Copies of the Pſalms differ from the reading 2 Sam. 22. 46. One leſſer variation there was in v. 44. (See note o.) and in this next verſe, a ſecond; whether made by David himſelf, or by Eſdras that collected them into a Volume, or by any Scribe that wrote it out, muſt be uncertain; as alſo which is the Original reading, that in 2 Sam. or this here. There it is חָגַר from וַיֶּחְגְּרוּ ligavit, and claudicavit: and ſo 'tis rendred, by the LXXII. σφαλοῦσιν, they ſhall ſtumble, there, and ἐχώλανεν here, they were lamed; by the Latine, contrahentur, they ſhall be contracted, there, and claudicaverunt here, they were lame, as if it were from הָגַר claudicavit, in both places. Here 'tis by tranſpoſition of a letter וַיֶּחְדְּגוּ from חָרַג commotus eſt, trepidavit, being moved, or trembling. In this ſenſe the Chaldee ſeems to have read it, and render it here יִסְתַּלְטְלוּן and ſhall go, or remove, and there וְיִיוְעוּן, ſhall be moved; both evidently from חָרַג was moved. In this variety what ſhall be reſolved, might be uncertain, were it not for one direction, which we have from Mich. 7. 17. There we read יִרְגָּזוּ ſhall move, which the Chaldee render by the ſame word, whereby they render this, 2 Sam. 22. יְזוּעוּן ſhall be moved. Now as there and here, the adjunct is the ſame, מִסְּגֵרוֹתֵיהֶם from their holes, or cloſe or fenced places (סָגַר occluſit, to ſhut up) rendred here by the LXXII. τείχων, paths; but there more properly συγκλεισμῷ, clauſtrum, cloſe place; ſo in all reaſon the ſenſe muſt be the ſame. There in Michah, 'tis ſpoken of worms, or creeping things, which move out of their holes, and are afraid, i.e. move in great fear, when they come out of their holes (and ſo חָרַג, the word uſed here, oft ſignifies in Arabick to go out, as Pſal. 19. 4. Mat. 2. 6.) and ſo here being ſpoken of the Heathen people, which ſtood in ſuch awe of David, the conqueror, it ſignifies, that for fear they ran as into holes and Caverns, whether caſtles, or other places of ſecurity, and now they moved out of them, as worms out of their holes, extreamly fearful, (before he aſſaults, when they do but hear of him, v. 44.) to fall into the hands of this powerful Prince. And this trembling motion of theirs is expreſt moſt fitly by חָרַג, that ſignifies both to be moved, and to tremble; or (more fully) to move fearfully, or ſollicitouſly; and this is well enough expreſt alſo by חָגַר going lame, which is uſed 2 Sam. 22. and rendred to that ſenſe by the LXXII. and Syriack, and Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick, in this place, and moreover in the Arabick dialect hath the notion of fearful, as in Alkamus the great Arabick Lexicon appears. And ſo the antient Jews, as they doubt which to prefer, יִחְגְּרוּ or יִחְרְגוּ, ſo they reſolve one to be the ſame with the other, only by tranſpoſition of letters; and accordingly the Hebrew Arabick gloſſary renders תגר by נגד to fear. And ſo this may remove that difficulty

g. 50. For evermore] That this laſt paſſage of the Pſalm, which is Prophetical, and extended beyond the perſon of David, to his ſeed for evermore, is to be applied to the Meſſias, may be confirmed from ſeveral paſſages of the Chaldee Paraphraſe on this Pſalm, eſpecially on v. 29. and 32. On the 29. v. they have theſe words; Becauſe thou ſhalt inlighten the lamp of Iſrael, which is put out in the Captivity, for thou art the author of the light of Iſrael: The Lord my God ſhall lead me out of darkneſs into light, ſhall make me ſee the conſolation of the age which ſhall come to the juſt. And on v. 32. Becauſe for the miracle and redemption which thou ſhalt ſhew למשיחך to thy Chriſt, and to the reliques of the people which ſhall remain; all the people, nations and languages ſhall give praiſes to thee, &c. And v. 49. thou ſhalt reſcue me from Gog——— by whom the Jews are wont to deſcribe Antichriſt.

The Nineteenth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The Nineteenth Pſalm is chiefly ſpent in giving glory to God for all his works of power and excellence, eſpecially in giving ſo admirable a rule of life to men, and affording mercy for all but preſumptuous ſins. It was propoſed by David, and committed to the Prefect of his Muſick.

TO the || chief Muſitian, a Pſalm of David. || Prefect of his Muſick.

a. 1. The fabrick and motion and influences of the Heavens do demonſtrate to any man, that conſiders them diligently, how great, and powerful, and wiſe, and gratious that God is, who formed them in this manner; and the firmneſs and cloſeneſs of all thoſe vaſt orbs, which are of ſo fine and ſubtile a nature, and yet are compacted into a moſt perfect ſolidity, together with the aire, and the many meteors, thunder, lightning, &c. therein, are an evidence of his many glorious attributes who thus created them.

1. The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the [a] firmament ſheweth his handy-work.

2. The viciſſitude of days and nights cauſed by the conſtant certain motions of thoſe heavenly bodies, do continually preach, and inſtruct men in the glories of the creator of heaven and earth.

2. Day unto day uttereth ſpeech, and night unto night ſheweth knowledge.

b. 3. They are not furniſht with language, or words, or an articulate intelligible voice, as we men are.

3. [b] || There is no ſpeech nor language, where their voice is not heard. || They have not ſpeech, nor words, their voice is not heard.

c. d. 4. Yet have they ways to expreſs themſelves, to make known to all the men in the world, Gentiles as well as Jews, the wonderful power and goodneſs, and providence of God. In the midſt of them, in an eminent and principal place, is aſſigned a royal manſion for the Sun, in which he moves conſtantly, and by his motion inlivens and rejoyceth all that ſee him. Whereſoever he comes, he hath the day-Star, and a ſtreaming of light, going before him, as the torch-bearers before a Bridegroom, when he comes out of his Bride-chamber; and in his circuit he viſits all the corners of the earth, and drives on alacriouſly, like a mighty invincible champion in a perpetual courſe or race. He begins in one extreme point of the heavens, and marcheth on through every part, till he comes back to the very ſame point again; and ſo in ſome part of his courſe or other, takes in every climate of this lower World of ours: there is no corner, which doth not partake of the light and warmth he brings with him. (And in all this is there a farther myſtical repreſentation of the Goſpel of Chriſt, that Sun of righteouſneſs, with his Baptiſt before him, to light him into the world; whither, when he is come, he ſends out his Apoſtles to preach the Goſpel to all the dark heathen corners over all the earth, and by ſo doing, diffuſeth his light and warmth, the knowledge of his will, and ſtrength, and grace (in ſome meaſure) to perform it, and withall, pardon, and refreſhment, to all that do not love darkneſs more than light, and ſo wilfully refuſe to be inlightned by him.)

4. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath [c] he ſet a tabernacle [d] for the Sun.

5. Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoyceth as a ſtrong man to run a race.

6. His going forth is from the end of heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it; and there is nothing hid from the heat of it.

7. And as Gods glories are viſible in the creation, and wiſe and gracious diſpoſal of the heavens, &c. ſo above all, in his giving us ſuch a guide and director of life, as is the law, and revelation of his will unto us. A law made up of ſuch excellent præcepts, that it moſt eminently conduceth to the ſatisfying and refreſhing, the making all men happy, that obey it. It preſcribes us an univerſal adherence and dependence on God; and ſo is proper to repair and refreſh our hungry ſouls, which being fallen off from God by ſin into a moſt doleful ſtate, have no other means of recovery or refection, but this manna from heaven, this ſpiritual food of ours. 2. It is conſtant, and in every part agreeable to it ſelf, and conſequently is a means to ſettle and eſtabliſh, and confirm him that is moſt unſteady and ſeducible, and carried away with every deceit of ſin.

7. The Law of the Lord is || perfect, converting the ſoul: the teſtimony of the Lord is ſure, making wiſe the † ſimple. || reſtoring, ſee note e. † or, ſeducible. פתי

e. 8. As for the particular precepts and commandments thereof, they are made up of perfect juſtice and equity, ſo agreeable to our own reaſon, and the ſouls with which we are created, that the performance of them is matter of the greateſt preſent delight and joy to a rational man. Gods commands are our ſpiritual food; and the obeying them is refection and nouriſhment to the ſoul, the original of all ſpiritual ſtrength and vigor to it.

8. The ſtatutes of the Lord are right, rejoycing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is || [e] pure, inlightening the eyes. || or, food.

9. The

not any worldly or carnal aim to have admiſſion with him; and this, and nothing but this, will hold out in time of temptation, and conſequently yield him a reward from God in another world. As for the things wherein our obedience is expected by God, they are in themſelves moſt juſt and equitable, fitteſt to be done by us, (if they were not commanded, nor ſhould ever be rewarded in us) and ſo are acknowledged by all wiſe men, and cannot chuſe but be diſcerned by us to be ſo, if we ſeriouſly weigh them and practice them.

10. More to be deſired are they than gold, yea, than much [f] fine gold; ſweater alſo than honey and the || honey-comb.

value by practice and experience, (and not to judge them by thoſe appearances and colours that the world hath of them, and ſuch as conſider them at a diſtance, and ſo think them rugged and melancholy) we ſhall find them much more priſeable than the greateſt wealth in the world, (all that amaſs'd together cannot yield us any true contentment or ſatisfaction) much more delicious and pleaſurable than the richeſt and choiceſt ſenſualities that are moſt eagerly purſued and guſtfully injoyed by us.

11. Moreover by them † is thy ‡ ſervant warned, and in keeping of them there is great reward.

† doth thy] ſervant ſhine.

11. All the ſplendor and greatneſs, and flouriſhing condition that I injoy at this g.

time, or ever expect in this or in another world, I hold only by this tenure, as long as I keep my ſelf cloſe to the commands of God. For thus hath God pleaſed in his infinite goodneſs to deal with us; he gives us moſt excellent precepts, commanding us to do thoſe things which are of all others moſt agreeable to our natures, and ſo moſt valuable and pleaſurable to us, v. 10. and then upon our obedience to this moſt gracious yoak, heaps all the richeſt rewards upon us, Godlineſs having, beſides its own ſweetneſs, the promiſes of this life, and of that which is to come.

12. Who can underſtand his errours? cleanſe thou me from ſecret faults.

12. But, alas, how imperfect hath my obedience been? How many times have I tranſgreſt theſe holy commands of thine? Many, many times; which I am not now able to enumerate; many, which I did not obſerve at the time, ſins of ignorance and frailty no man is able to number, and particularly to confeſs to thee: O be thou pleaſed to ſeal to my ſoul thy free pardon and forgiveneſs for all theſe.

13. Keep back thy ſervant alſo from [h] preſumptuous ſins, let them not have dominion over me: then ſhall I be upright, and I ſhall be innocent from the great tranſgreſſion.

13. As for any known deliberate ſins, which have not that alleviation of ignorance or weakneſs, but are com- h.

mitted againſt expreſs knowledge of my duty, after mature conſideration of it, Lord, be thou pleaſed to arm me by thy ſpecial aſſiſtance of grace, that I never fall into any one ſuch commiſſion. Let not any temptation thus get power over my will, when my conſcience tells me I ought not to yield, whatſoever the profit or pleaſure be, that thus comes in competition with known duty. If it do, then am I a ſervant and ſlave of ſin, and ſo no longer the ſervant of God. But if by the power of thy grace thou ſhalt uphold me from falling into any ſuch preſumptuous ſins, then ſhall I not fail to be acquitted by thee; and being free from all hainous guilts, I ſhall, through thy mercy, promiſed in thy covenant of grace, be ſure to be abſolved, and juſtified from all the other innumerable frailties, v. 12. that I have been guilty of.

14. [i] * Let the words of my mouth and meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy ſight, O Lord my ſtrength and my Redeemer.

* The words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart ſhall be accepted in thy ſight, or an acceptable ſacrifice.

14. And then all my prayers and praiſes, being thus poured out of a pure, ſin- i.

cere heart, and ſo likewiſe all the performances and deſigns of my life, ſhall be as a ſacrifice well pleaſing and acceptable to thee, whoſe grace it is by which I have been preſerved, and whoſe abundant mercy by which I have been reſcued from all evil.

Annotations on Pſalm XIX.

a. רָקִיעַ

V. 1. Firmament] Of the word רָקִיעַ which is by the LXXII. rendred στέρωμα, firmament, that it is deduced from רָקַע, which the Syriack Luk. 6. 38. ſet for πίζειν, to preſs very cloſe, and is uſed in that ſenſe, Ezek. 6. 11. and 25. 6. and there by us rendred to ſtamp, i. e. to ſtrike and preſs together, and that ſo as plates of gold, &c. are, by beating and preſſing, expanded to a great breadth, and that in this reſpect it is by an antient Greek Interpreter (mentioned by * S. Chryſoſtome) rendered πλατὺν, which in || Ariſtotle ſignifies μόνιμον πάχος, a firm durable compreſſion, and that this is the ground of the LXXII. there rendring it στέρωμα, firmament, and others expanſum, ſee the moſt learned Nicholas Fuller, Miſcel. l. 1. c. 6. Now as under this title the heaven is conteined, Gen. 1. as appears undeniable by the Sun and Moons being created in it, v. 14. ſo 'tis as certain, that the air is ſignified by it alſo, by the uſe that is aſſigned it, to divide the waters from the waters, i. e. the Sea here below from the rain that is in the Clouds. Accordingly, as Joſephus, in his deſcription of the creation, Antiq. l. 1. c. 2. ſaith of heaven, ὑδάτων κωλυτικὸν εἶναι θεόν, that God made it to have rain in it, to benefit the earth by the dew thereof; ſo Sibylla ſpeaking of the air, ſaith that God mixed vapours, and rainy or dewy, i. e. watery clouds with it, —δεῖε μίξιν ὄμβρια καὶ νέφεα δροσόεντα. Thus when the rain fell that drowned the earth, Gen. 7. the windows of heaven are ſaid to be opened, v. 11. and therefore it is ſo frequently called rain from heaven, according to that of Pliny, Nat. Hiſt. l. 31. Scandunt aquæ in ſublime, & cælum quoque ſibi vendicant, The waters climbe on high, and challenge the heaven alſo for their ſeat; and again, Quid eſſe mirabilius poteſt aquis in cælo ſtantibus? What can be more wonderful than waters ſtanding in heaven? And thus in Scripture-ſtile, οἱ οὐρανοὶ, the heavens, contein all thoſe ſuperiour orbs, together with the regions of the air. So ſaith the Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers under Juſtins name: Οὐρανὸς λέγεται ἡ θεία γραφὴ τριχῶς, ἢ τὸν ἀπλανῆ καὶ ὑπάτην, ὡς ἐν ἀρχῇ ποιήσαντα θεὸν, καὶ τὸ στέρωμα, ἢ τὰ κάτω ἕως ἀέρος χαράσσοντα, the Scripture calls heaven three ways, either thoſe that are ſo indeed, the firſt heaven and the firmament, or the regions of the air, (ſee note on Eph. 6. 2.) even the loweſt of thoſe where the birds fly, which accordingly are called the fowles of heaven. And ſo all this is fitly compriſed under the word רָקִיעַ, but here (where the heavens are named before) the very regions peculiarly; the Hebrews having no other word for the air, but either this, or שָׁמַיִם heavens, (which alſo is generally derived from שָׁם and מַיִם, becauſe waters are there.) The word which now adays adays they uſe for the air אֲוִיר, being clearly taken from the Greek; when yet it cannot be queſtioned, but the ſacred Writers had ſome word by which they called it, viz. this of רָקִיעַ, which accordingly the Chaldee here render אֲוִירָא air.

b. בְּלוֹ

V. 3. There is no ſpeech] The underſtanding of this verſe ſeems to depend on the notion of בְּלִי. That commonly ſignifies not, and is perfectly all one with בַּל, only with the addition of י. Now both of theſe being oft uſed for all ſort of excluſive particles, without, beſides, unleſs, hence it is that the learned Grotius renders it in this place ſine, without, i. e. without the voice or words, precedent. If this liberty may be taken, I may then propoſe another notion of בְּלִי lightly deduced from theſe. For of בַּל the Lexicographers tell us, that in Arabick it ſignifies ſed, but. And the Arabick being but a dialect of the Hebrew, we may thence conclude, that thus it antiently ſignified among the Hebrews: and if that may be admitted, then the whole verſe will be thus clearly rendred, אֵין אֹמֶר non ſermo, not ſpeech, i. e. they (the heavens and firmament) have no ſpeech, וְאֵין דְּבָרִים, nor words, בְּלִי but, or notwithſtanding, נִשְׁמָע קוֹלָם their voice is, or, hath been heard; i. e. either, as קוֹל voice frequently ſignifies thunder, their thunder is heard, or elſe more generally, they have ways to proclaim, or make known the attributes of God, though they are not able to ſpeak. Beſides this way of interpreting the verſe, by this notion of בְּלִי for [but] or [yet] or [notwithſtanding] another offers it ſelf, by rendring it non, not, as it, without queſtion, and moſt vulgarly, ſignifies. Thus, they have neither ſpeech, nor words, their voice בְּלִי נִשְׁמָע is not, or hath not been heard; yet קָוָם their line we render it, is gone out into all the earth, מִלֵּיהֶם their words to the end of the world. Which if it be accepted, we muſt then ſuppoſe a difference to be made by the Pſalmiſt betwixt אֹמֶר and דְּבָרִים and קוֹל which the Heavens are ſaid to want, and קָוָם and מִלֵּיהֶם which they are ſaid to have. The three former are ſuch as belong to men peculiarly, rendred by the LXXII. λαλιὰ and λόγοι and φωναὶ, talk, and words, and voices: and though the laſt be ordinarily uſed for thunder, yet taking it, by analogy with the other two, for an humane voice, it may truly be ſaid, that the heavens have none of theſe. But two other things there are, which are fully equivalent, if not ſuperior, to theſe, and thoſe do eminently belong to them. What קָוָם here ſignifies, is a matter of ſome doubt. It ordinarily denotes a line, ſuch as being joyned with a plumbet, marks out any thing in architecture, ſhews and directs what to do, how to ſquare the timber, &c. as well as words could do. From hence alſo קָו in Abenezra is found to ſignifie book-learning, as when children learn one line after another. And thus it may here be underſtood, that the heavens direct men to the knowledge of God as evidently, as a line directs the workman in architecture: or again, that the heavens are as it were the book (to that they are compared Rev. 6. 14.) wherein God may be read by all the world; and ſo the lines of that book or volume are the indications of a Deity, that may there be read. But beſide this, the word is in Arabick found to ſignifie vociferation or crying aloud, (ſee Mr. Pocock, Miſcel. c. 4. p. 48.) and to this the LXXII. refer, reading it φθόγγος, a loud voice, which is more than φωνὴ, voice, by which they render קוֹל in the former verſe, and generally in other places: which is an evident proof, that the LXXII. did not here for קָוָם read קוֹלָם, as it is ordinarily imagined, for then in all reaſon they muſt have rendred it φωναὶ, voices, as in the verſe immediately precedent they had done. As for Capellus's conjecture, that they deduced קָוָם from חָוָה, which in Chaldee and Syriack ſignifies to declare, and indeed is ſo uſed here, v. 2. וְחַוֵּה דַּעַת ſheweth knowledge, there is no need of that; only it may make it more probable, that this ſenſe of declaring, or ſhewing, belong'd originally to this word, by the near affinity of this other word, that ſignifies the ſame. Mean while it is certain, that the Apoſtle citing this place, reads it, as the LXXII. did, ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν, their ſhrill or loud voice: which notion of the word קָוָם may therefore deſerve here to be preferr'd before that other of line, which belongs to it in other places, and is without any metaphore very really competible to the heavens, as they comprehend the aerial regions, in reference to the loud ſounds of thunders, that oft come from thence, and declare the power of God. Then for מִלֵּיהֶם, which is alſo attributed to the heavens, that comes from מָלַל in Piel to ſay, or ſpeak, but this, frequently, not by words, but by any other ſignificative expreſſions. So Prov. 6. 13. He winketh with his eyes; he ſpeaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers: the Hebrew hath מְמַלֵּל (ſuch language as it ſeems the feet have) which the LXXII. render σημαίνει, he ſignifies. The ſame word ſignifies in Chaldee clamorem, a cry or loud voice, and ſo agrees alſo with the ſecond notion of קָוָם for a loud voice. And then we have the full and clear meaning of the place; that though the heavens and firmament have neither ſpeech, nor words, nor voice properly ſo called, yet they have other ways of declaring and making known the attributes of God, whereby they ſpeak much louder than any ſpeaker or teacher on earth can do. This is literally true, in reſpect of that loud noiſe and roaring of the thunder; but much more ſo, in reſpect of the wonderful order, light, influences, &c. of thoſe heavenly bodies, which ſo ſignally ſet out the power and wiſdom of the Creator of them. This being clearly the importance of the place, the only remaining difficulty is, how that which is thus ſpoken of the heavens, and the loud voice and noiſe of them, is applicable to the Apoſtles purpoſe, to which it is cited Rom. 10. 18. which is evidently to faith in Chriſt, Chriſt, v. 9. it being not obvious to diſcern, how the thunder, and other ſuch language of the heavens, do reveal, or declare and preach that. To this the anſwers may be, 1. That as the faith of Chriſt is conſidered more generally, for the acknowledgment of the one true God of heaven and earth, in oppoſition to the gentile idolatry, or moreover of the gratious goodneſs of God to men, (which we know was moſt illuſtriouſly revealed and ſealed to us in Chriſt, and ſo the belief of that is in effect the believing on Chriſt;) ſo this place of this Pſalm directly belongs to it, and accordingly ſuch arguments as theſe are frequently uſed by the Apoſtles of Chriſt, to induce that faith. So Acts 14. 16, 17. God in times paſt ſuffered all nations to walk in their own ways; nevertheleſs he left not himſelf without witneſs, in that he did good, and gave us rain from Heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons, filling our hearts with food and gladneſs: where it ſeems the rain and fruitful ſeaſons were lookt on by the Apoſtle, as teſtimonies and proofs not only of the Deity, but alſo of the truth of that whole doctrine, which now the Apoſtle was about to reveal to them, and ſo no improper means of inducing this faith of Chriſt. And ſo Rom. 1. 20. the ποιήμασι, Gods works or doings in the world, are lookt on, as competent means to convince men of the divine eſſence, and attributes, and to render all idol-worſhippers unexcuſeable. And it is not altogether improbable, that the ſame Apoſtle, which had oft uſed this argument ment to inforce beliefe, might, in that Tenth to the Romans, in paſſing, touch on it, ſpeaking, v. 12. of the no difference betwixt Jew and Gentile, both of them having aſſurance, that if they ſincerely ſerve and worſhip the true God, now revealed in and by Chriſt, they ſhall be ſaved; and all the queſtion being how they ſhall now thus call on him without beliefe, believe without a Preacher— the anſwer is given in the words of thoſe places of Scripture, which teſtifie this knowledge or beliefe to have been abundantly preached or revealed to them. And then why may not this be one inferiour teſtimony of this kind, to prove that all ſort of men, Jews and Heathens, have heard, i.e. had a competent meaſure of this knowledge of Gods great goodneſs toward men revealed to them, that the Pſalmiſt ſpeaking of the glory of God, thoſe glorious attributes of power, mercy, and wiſdom, which are to be adored in him, and expreſſing poetically how the heavens declare, or ſet it forth, hath theſe words, their loud ſound is gone out into all the world, and their words, or ſignificative expreſſions, into the ends of the world, meaning thereby this knowledge of God, and his glories which his works of creation preach aloud to all the men in the world? This, I ſay, is a poſſible, and no very improbable meaning of the Apoſtle in his citation of theſe words. But then ſecondly, as the faith of Chriſt ſignifies more ſtrictly the whole Chriſtian faith at large, as it was now promulgated by the Apoſtles, and as that was founded in the preaching, miracles, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt, and as it was oppoſed to the Jewiſh Moſaical œconomy, of which this was to be the reformation; ſo thoſe words, being ſpoken literally of the heavens, are yet in a more ſublime manner of alluſion and accommodation applyable to the Goſpel preached, as to all the world, ſo peculiarly to the Jews: that as the Heavens, &c. preached a deity, proclaimed the power and goodneſs of God toward men, and ſo their loud ſound went out over all the world; ſo, in a much more eminent manner of completion, was this farther accompliſht in the Apoſtles of Chriſt, who had a very loud and audible voice, and that, according to Chriſts appointment, was now gone out into all the world, and heard by all the Nations thereof, the Jews as well as Gentiles, and indeed the Jews firſt, who therefore have no cauſe of objection againſt the proceeding now taken, in departing from them, and going to the Gentiles. And this indeed ſeems to be the beſt ſolution of the difficulty, as the words in the Apoſtle are an anſwer to the Jews objection, How ſhall they believe without a preacher, viz. when the Apoſtles forſake and give over preaching to them. And it is no news that ſuch accommodations, and fuller completions of paſſages in the old Teſtament as theſe, ſhould thus be made uſe of by the Apoſtles, the like being frequent among the Evangeliſts, and ſome of them expreſly ſtyled πληρώσεις, fulfillings of prophecies, when yet the paſſages themſelves, thus made uſe of, had a firſt and literal truth in ſome matter of fact far diſtant from thence; as when to Chriſts return out of Ægypt is accommodated that of Hoſeah concerning the children of Iſrael, Out of Ægypt have I called my Son, Matt. 11. 15. (ſee note on Mat. 11. [k].) Of the application of this whole paſſage to Chriſt, ſee more Note [c]. and [d].

[c] V. 4. He ſet] The Hebrew reading is here moſt perſpicuous, לַשֶּׁמֶשׁ to the ſun he hath ſet a Tabernacle there; and ſo the Chaldee agrees, to the ſun he hath ſet a Tabernacle of brightneſs, or bright Tabernacle there. And the Tranſlation which the * Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers under Juſtins name mentions, under the name of ἡ ἐκ τῆς τῶν Ἑβδομήκοντα γλώττης εἰς τὴν τῶν Σύρων γλῶσσαν μετάφρασις τῆς λέξεως, the literal Tranſlation out of the Hebrew Tongue into the Syriack, varies but little, ἐν αὐτοῖς ἔθετο τῷ ἡλίῳ τὸ σκήνωμα, in them he ſet the Tabernacle of the Sun. But the Syriack, which we now have, and which ſeems not herein to be the literal rendring of the Hebrew, but of the LXXII. (and ſo alſo of the Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick,) give it another ſenſe, as if God were ſaid to ſet his own Tabernacle in or on the Sun, in the Heavens: In ſole poſuit, in the Sun he hath ſet his Tabernacle, ſaith the Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick, ܒܫܡܫܐ ܣܝܡ ܡܫܟܢܗ Upon the Sun be fixt his Tabernacle in them, ſaith the Syriack: and all theſe, as rendring the Greek, ἐν τῷ ἡλίῳ ἔθετο τὸ σκήνωμα αὐτῶν, which literally ſounds thus; and from thence the LXXII. are ſuppoſed by many to have read the Hebrew otherwiſe than now we have it. But this I ſuppoſe a groundleſs reſolution, and ſhall rather propoſe to conſideration, whether their Greek verſion it ſelf, being only underſtood according to the idiome of the Helleniſts, be not exactly accordant to our Hebrew. For 1. ἐν τῷ ἡλίῳ, in their dialect, is perfectly all one with τῷ ἡλίῳ, to the Sun, in the dative caſe, as πιστεύειν ἐν θεῷ, to believe in God] is no more than θεῷ, God] in the dative, and many the like; and 2. ἐκεῖ, is as frequently uſed for [there] and then the LXXII. ſhall clearly thus be rendred, To the Sun he hath ſet a Tabernacle there, i.e. in them, or in the heavens; and that is all that the Hebrew as we now have it, affords. Now for the uſe of the word אֹהֶל Tabernacle, that Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers under Juſtin Martyrs name, interprets it to the ſenſe of thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt in another place, Pſalm 104. 2. ὁ ἐκτείνων τὸν οὐρανὸν ὥσει δέρριν, he extendeth, or ſpreadeth out the heavens like a skin, ἡ γὰρ ἔκτασις τῶν δέρεων τὴν σκηνὴν ἀποτελεῖ, for the extenſion of skins makes a Tabernacle. But if the whole place have a farther completion in Chriſt, (ſee Notes [b]. and [d].) then will here be an intimation of it alſo; Chriſts incarnation, Joh. 1. being thus expreſt by that Evangeliſt, καὶ ὁ λόγος σὰρξ ἐγένετο καὶ ἐσκήνωσεν ἐν ἡμῖν, the word was made fleſh, and he pitcht his Tabernacle or Tent among us.

V. 4. For the Sun] What is here ſaid of the Sun, Juſtin Martyr in his Dialogue with Tryphon affirms to be περὶ Χριστοῦ λελεγμένην γραφήν, a Scripture ſpoken of Chriſt. Thus we know the title of Sun of righteouſneſs, in the Prophecy of Malac. 2. 2. is myſtically underſtood to denote Chriſt, who is that true light, which coming into the world lighteneth every man. And ſo that of the Bridegroom, to which the Sun is here reſembled, is a ſignal title of Chriſt, in reſpect of his Spouſe the Church: and ſo alſo that of the גִּבּוֹר or ſtrong, whether Gyant, or Champion, eminently denoting Chriſt, among whoſe titles is that of אֵל גִּבּוֹר mighty God, Iſa. 9. 6. and accordingly ſaith * Juſtine, it is by the heathen Poets transformed into that fable of Hercules, ἰσχυρὸν καὶ περιοδεύσαντα πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν, a ſtrong man, and one that went over the whole earth, καὶ φίλον τῷ Διὶ ἐξ Ἀλκμήνης γενόμενον, καὶ ἀποθανόντα εἰς οὐρανὸν ἀνεληλυθέναι, and that he was the Son of Jupiter, born of Alcmena, who died and returned to heaven again. Now of theſe two ſimilitudes here uſed, the former, that of a Bridegroom coming out of his chamber, will not be perfectly underſtood, but by referring to the cuſtoms among the Jews: among whom the Bridegroom was wont to go with his Bride into a place of ſecrecy, called חֻפָּה as here his chuppa, or bride-chamber, there to talke with her more familiarly; and this as a ceremony of confirmation to the Wedlock. Whilſt he he was there, no person came in, but his friends and attendants waited for him at the door, with torches or lamps in their hands: and when he came out, he was received with great joy and acclamation by all that were there. To this custom many places of the Gospels refer, especially that of Joh. 3. (see Annot. c. on that chapter) and generally Christ is the person meant by that bridegroom. Now as those bridegrooms were solemnly brought out from under the chuppah by their Δαδοῦχοι, lamp-bearers or torch-bearers, (see Matth. 25. 1.) so when the Sun after some space of darkness comes to us, as out of his chuppah, or place whither he hath retired, not to be seen (in the morning, at the rising of the Sun, saith the Chaldee) the morning star, called Phosphorus, light-bearer, is just that Δαδοῦχος that comes before him. And thus in the mystical sense, when after a long night of captivity, (a cessation of all sorts of Prophecies and Revelations of God to the Jews, whether by Urim and Thummim, or by voice from heaven) at last this Sun of righteousness was ready to come forth, then in Zachary, and his son John the Baptist, (of whom it is peculiarly said, he was a burning and a shining lamp) this light from heaven, that of Prophecy, began to shew it self as the Phosphorus or Daduchus, the light-bearer or torch-bearer, to bring out this bridegroom into the world, who, when he was come, should imitate the Sun in his course, inlighten and warm all the parts of the habitable world, before he set again. This, we know, Christ did, by sending out his rays (by those his Apostles are to be signified) into all the world; which makes it still the more reasonable to interpret the קוֹם קוֹל their loud voice, of the Apostles of Christ, and not only of the indications of the Deity in the creature.

e. בָּרָה

V. 8. Pure] From בָּרַר the verb, to make pure, is בַּר pure, and of that בָּרָה here is thought to be the feminine, and so to signifie pure; so the Chaldee rendring it בְּרִירָה pure, and the LXXII. πλανητὴς, as purity and clarity, are all one. But it is not so regular, that בָּרָה should be the feminine of בַּר or בָּרַר, but rather בְּרָה, and then it may not be amiss to remember a notion of the verb בָּרָה to take food, and from thence the noun בָּרָה and בְּרוֹת esca, cibus, meat or food. So Lam. 4. 10. לִבְרוֹת for food in the plural, the Chaldee renders לְמִסְעָד, the LXXII. εἰς βρῶσιν, for food: so Psal. 78. 22. they gave me gall בְּבָרוֹתִי for food; so 2 Sam. 13. 5, 7, 10. And to this sense the context seems here to incline it; First, by rejoycing the heart, precedent, which being the effect attributed to wine, 'tis agreeable that this second part of the verse should belong to meat, and the effects thereof: and so secondly it follows, it enlightens the eyes. That this is an effect of taking food peculiarly, hath been noted at large Psal. 13. note [a], from that passage of Jonathan, when the tasting a little honey was the inlightning his eyes; and so the phrase is used to express any refection of mind or body. And so it will be most agreeable here, the law of God, and obedience thereto, being the most proper aliment to the soul, (as it is said to be Christs meat to do the will of him that sent him) and the effect thereof all manner of refreshment to the spirit; when on the other side, sin puts men into a sad, weak, famishing condition, such as the prodigal in the Gospel is described in. To this sense of בָּרָה for food the reader will be more inclined 1. by the context, v. 7. where the law of the Lord is said מְשִׁיבַת נֶפֶשׁ to make my soul or life return, which is the ordinary expression of foods refreshing us, when we faint with hunger. So Psal. 23. 3. נַפְשִׁי יְשׁוֹבֵב he restores my soul, a consequent of the green pasture, and still waters, v. 2. he refresheth me. So 1 Sam. 30. 12. וַתָּשָׁב and his spirit returned to him, as an effect of eating and drinking, after fasting three days. So Lam. 1. 16. the comforter מְשִׁיב restoring or bringing back the soul, i. e. he that should refresh me. And then this restoring of the soul, and being food to it, are in effect all one. This food being as that of Paradise, without the curse annext to it, afforded us by God without our labour, the fruit both of the tree of knowledge, and of life. 2. By the nature of the the word בָּרָה, which in the notion of food is deduced from both the roots, בָּרַר, and בָּרָה, in the former as a dimensum, or portion of meat, in the latter, as 'tis purged and drest, before 'tis fit for use.

f. פָּז

V. 10. Fine gold] What פָּז signifies, will be uncertain. The Chaldee renders it אוּבְרַיְזִין obryzum fine gold, or gold of Ophir: so S. Hierome conceives obryzum to signifie, Ophirinum, that which comes from Ophir, which yields the finest gold. But the LXXII. render it λίθον τίμιον, precious stone, and Psal. 119. 127. τοπάζιον, topaz, which is a precious stone. And this latter is very agreeable to the word, and is but a light variation of it in other languages, if we may believe Hesychius. For so he speaking of the Greek πάζιον, which is but this פָּז with the Greek termination, πάζιον, ὃ καὶ τοπάζιον, λίθος τίμιος, Paz is also called Topaz, and is a precious stone. Meanwhile it is also clear, that it is used for fine gold also, of which the Crown is made, Psal. 21. 3. and of which are vessels, Job 28. 17. and so it may be here also.

g. זָהַר

* V. 11. Warned] The word זָהַר here used hath three significations: First, to shine, and is rendred ἐκλάμπειν, to shine forth, Dan. 12. 3. Secondly, by a metaphor to admonish and warn, and then is rendred σημαίνειν, Ezech. 33. 3. to signifie, προαπαγγέλλειν, Ezech. 33. 9. to declare before hand; and Thirdly, to flourish, in the Chaldee Paraphrase, Hos. 14. 6. and Psal. 90. 6. From the second of these, most of the Antient Interpreters render it here: the Chaldee, thy servant was circumspect in them; the LXXII. φυλάσσει αὐτὰ, keeps them, and so oft elsewhere; and from them the Syriack, Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick. But the context seems rather to determine it to the first, or (which is all one) to the third sense, the glorious and flourishing condition that is to be attained to either in this, or in another world, by this means of careful obedience unto Gods commands, and by no other; for to this it follows, that in keeping of them there is great reward.

i. מְזִדִים

V. 13. Presumptuous] From זוד ebullivit, intumuit, to boil, to swell, is זֵד proud or insolent, one that on set purpose, deliberately commits any ill, and also the action that is so committed. This the LXXII. render ἀπ' ἀλλοτρίων, and the Latine, ab alienis, from strangers, or strange sins, or other mens sins; most probably misreading the word מְזִדִים, and taking מְזָרִים from strangers, for it.

i. יִהְיוּ

V. 14. Let the words] The Hebrew יִהְיוּ in the future is literally to be rendred, shall be, and so the LXXII. and Latine read it, ἔσονται, & erunt; and the words shall be לְרָצוֹן εἰς εὐδοκίαν, ut complaceant, such as shall be acceptable before God, or in his sight, or, more expresly, an acceptable sacrifice. So 'tis used Exod. 28. 38. Lev. 22. 20, 21. Isai. 56. 7. Jer. 6. 20. in all the places where it occurs. And to this sense the context confines it, speaking of that abstinence from all wilful known presumptuous sins, which is required of all men to make their prayers, or any other their best performances or sacrifices, acceptable before God; according to that of the Apostle, exhorting to lift up clean or holy hands, 1 Tim. 2. 8. and the Prophet Isai. 1. 16. Wash ye, make ye clean; till then surely God heareth not sinners—— John 9. 31.

The Twentieth PSALM.

|| Prefect of his Musick.

TO the || chief Musitian, a Psalm of David.

Paraphrase.

The Twentieth Psalm is a form of Prayer to be used by the congregation for their Prince, in all times of danger, that God will protect and assist him. It was indited by David himself, and committed to the Prefect of his Musick, to be used as occasion required.

* Secure thee, or, set thee up on high, שְׂגַבְךָ

1. The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble, the Name of the God of Jacob * defend thee.

1. Whensoever any distress or danger befalls the King, we beseech the Lord of heaven to interpose his hand for him, to hearken to all his petitions, and perform them graciously, and by his own almighty power to preserve him safe, as in an impregnable tower or fortress.

† thy help עֶזְרְךָ

2. Send † thee help from the Sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion;

2. Whatsoever aid or assistance he shall at any time want, that holy Majesty that exhibites himself in the ark of the tabernacle, which is now placed in Zion, and hath promised to grant those prayers which are duly addrest to him there, be graciously pleased from his heavenly throne to send it down to him;

|| or burn to ashes thy

3. Remember all thy offerings, and || [a] accept thy burnt sacrifice. Selah.

3. Receive and answer all the requests that he hath at any time made to God, accept and reward all his oblations of piety, as signally, as when by fire sent from heaven to consume a sacrifice, he evidenceth his acceptation of it. a.

4. Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel.

4. Whatsoever he doth now want and wish for, whatsoever design he hath in his heart to accomplish, the Lord of heaven by his power and wisdom graciously dispose, and perform it for him.

5. We will rejoyce in thy salvation, and in the Name of our God will we set up our banners. The Lord fulfil all thy petitions.

5. It is thy strength and guidance and prospering hand; thou Lord of hosts, on which only we depend for success and victory: to thee therefore alone will we give the praise of it, when either we go out to battel, or return with conquest; it shall be only in confidence of thy aid, and with acknowledgment of thy mercy. And therefore now that our King goes out to battel, we have nothing to do, but to invoke thy assistance, that thou wilt be present with him in all his wants, prosper him whatsoever he undertakes. b.

6. Now know I that the Lord saveth his anointed; he will hear him from his holy heaven, with the saving strength of his right hand.

6. And of this we are confident, that he which hath advanced him to be King over his own people, will interpose his hand for his rescue and deliverance, the God of heaven is of abundant strength to secure him, whatsoever the distress be; and he will certainly do it, as illustriously, as if by his own right hand from heaven, his holy seat of mansion, he should reach out deliverance to him.

|| recount their chariots, and some their horses, but we will recount—

7. Some || [c] trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the Name of the Lord our God.

7. Let others talk of their military preparations, that they have so many chariots and horses, are so strongly provided for the approach of their enemies, and therein place their confidence; that is not our method, but only to make claim of Gods protection, that through him we go out to battel, and on him depend for the victory, and on no strength or preparations of our own. c.

8. They are brought down and fallen, but we are risen and stand upright.

8. And as they that thus go out, talking of their own strength, are sure to miscarry by that confidence, so shall not we fail of victory, through this far surer dependance, the strength of our God of Heaven.

† Lord save the King. He will hear us in the day of our calling.

9. † Save, Lord, [d] let the King hear us when we call.

9. O Lord of Heaven, preserve and deliver the King out of all his streights, and let all the congregation resound Amen, confidently beseech God to grant this their devout petition, which they believe to be most acceptable to him, their duty to offer, and such as he will not fail to grant their importunate and fervent prayers. d.

Annotations on Psalm XX.

a. יִשֵּׁן

V. 3. Accept] The Hebrew יִשֵּׁן signifies pinguis fuit, was fat, or, was made fat, and so 'tis rendred here by the LXII. πιανάτω, let thy holocaust be made fat, i. e. (as fat and good sacrifices are wont to be) accepted: so the Latine, pingue fiat. But the word hath yet a farther notion: for יֶשֶׁן signifies ashes, Lev. 1. 16. Jer. 31. 40. and from thence the verb יָשַׁן incineravit to turn to ashes; which for God to do to a sacrifice, (to send fire from heaven, and burn it to ashes, 1 Kings 18. 38.) is a sure token of his accepting the sacrifice, and him that offers it, as there he did Elijah: and accordingly in Arabick יָשַׁן hath the notion of receiving or accepting, as is to be seen in Alkamus. And thus, I suppose, it is taken in this place; the Lord consume to ashes thy burnt offerings in token of accepting them. Thus יִזְכֹּר remembring] in the beginning of the verse, being, as here, applied to sacrifices, is taken in a peculiar notion, so as to include acceptance.

b. נִרְגֹּל נָרִים

V. 5. Set up our banners] The word נִרְגֹּל is questionless from דָּגַל to lift up a banner, (so דָּגַל signifies) and this as a token of military courage, going out alacriously to battel. Thus the Chaldee renders it, we will display our banners; but the LXXII. μεγαλυνθησόμεθα, we shall be magnified, and so the Latine, Syriack, Arabick, and Æthiopick. This is generally thought to proceed from their mis-reading the word, inverting or transposing the letters, and reading נִגְדַּל from גָּדַל magnus fuit, was great. But it may also well be, that they thus thought fit to paraphrase the word in the true reading; for so displaying or setting up of banners is a mode of triumph and military magnificence, and so seems to beused here.

c. V. 7. Trust] It is not certain what the verb is, that is to be supplied in the former part of this v. 7. That there is an ellipsis is manifest, yet none of the antient interpreters have supplied it, but read just as the Hebrew doth, some in chariots, and some in horses, but we—— Our English, as being directed by the sense, putteth in [trust,] some trust in chariots—— But the surest way will be to let the beginning of the verse depend on that verb which follows in the end of it, for so certainly it lies: some do recount, or make mention of their preparations for the war, their chariots or horses, how strong or well provided they are in these; but we will recount the name of the Lord, as depending only on his blessing, or prospering hand. And if the preposition [בְּ in] seem to resist this, the account is obvious, that the same is also prefixt before שֵׁם name, and indeed seems to be superfluous (as oft it is) in both places; and then being left out in the rendring the latter part of the verse, we will remember the name—— there is little reason it should be conceived to have any weight in the former part of it, (but either be rendred in all the three places, or equally be omitted in all the three.) And then the sense will be clear; some make mention of their chariots, and some of their horses; but we will make mention of the name of the Lord our God: or, some recount their chariots— but we will recount the name of the Lord our God, and thus the Jewish Arabick translator interprets it. For נַזְכִּיר we will recount, or remember, the LXXII. read μεγαλυνθησόμεθα, we will be magnified, or we will triumph, the same word that they had used v. 6. in stead of lifting up banners; which makes it the more probable, that in both places they chose to paraphrase, rather than render the Hebrew, and did not mis-read the Hebrew, as there it is thought, but here it is not pretended. The Latine use the like liberty, and from ἐπικαλεσόμεθα, (another reading of the LXXII.) read invocabimus, we will call upon the name of the Lord. But the Syriack, Æthiopick, and Arabick follow the LXXII. in their former reading.

d. V. 9. Save Lord] The rendring of this last verse is very uncertain among interpreters. The Chaldee, free from all ambiguity, render it, Lord, save us, O strong King, receive our prayer: and so the Syriack, the Lord shall save us, and our King shall hear us: but both these add the Pronoun [אֹתָנוּ us], above what we read in the Hebrew. The LXXII. on the other side render, Κύριε, σῶσον τὸν βασιλέα, καὶ ἐπάκου ἡμῶν, O Lord save the King, and hear us—— and the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick follow these, and so Apollinarius, Κύριε ἀθάνατε, σῶσον τὸν βασιλέα σωτῆρος,—— Εἰσαίοις δ', ὅτ[ε]—

O eternal God, save the King, and hear when—— Here the LXXII. adhere exactly to the Hebrew in the first part, הוֹשִׁיעָה הַמֶּלֶךְ Lord save the King; but in the second render it, as if it were וַעֲנֵנוּ in the second person, which they render ἐπάκουσον ἡμῶν, hear us; whereas the Hebrew reads יַעֲנֵנוּ in the third person, let him hear us. This Joseph Scaliger will have understood of King David himself, by way of μίμησις, taking it for granted, that as the people prayed to God for the King in the five first verses of the Psalm, so the King answers them, v. 6, 7, 8. and then that the people again in the beginning of the last verse wish, or pray, that the King may answer them as he had done in those three verses, i.e. that he might be victorious, and so be able to answer them in that Eucharistical manner. But there is neither need nor ground for this phansie. For 1. the whole Psalm is equally sung by the People, some part of it by way of prayer for the King particularly, the rest for themselves going out to battel with him, and so imbarkt in one common concernment. And 2. if the former part be a prayer to God for the King, (as the whole precedent Psalm will inforce, especially v. 1. The Lord hear thee——) then certainly the latter part must also concern God, as the hearer of prayers, (his known peculiar stile;) and setting it, as the Hebrew doth, in the third person, 'tis most formally a prayer to God, and as much so, as if it were in the second, as v. 1. The Lord hear thee, in the third person, is certainly a prayer to God to hear. And for the transition from the second to the third person, 'tis very ordinary in Hebrew; and the account of it may here be very reasonable, that having prayed solemnly for David, Lord, save the King, (which sure our Liturgy hath from hence) the whole congregation joyns in the ἀντίφωνον, of confidence, that their prayer shall be heard, as in an Amen, (of which that is the full importance) the Lord shall hear us when we call upon him. And so this seems to be the undoubted meaning and rendring of the verse, a prayer for the King in both parts, in the one by name, in the other comprehensively. And that makes it more probable, that the LXXII. should by way of explication put both in the second person, (as fittest for the petitionary address) than that they mis-read the Hebrew, the sense of which they retain'd so perfectly. From this form of acclamation to, and prayer for the King, and the like, Psalm 118. 25. is the Hosannah taken, Mat. 21. 9. being but a corruption of the Hebrew, הוֹשִׁיעָה נָּא save now, or, save I pray] in that other Psalm. See note a. on Mat. 21.

The Twenty First PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

|| Prefect of his Muſick.

TO the || chief Muſitian, a Pſalm of David.

The Twenty firſt Pſalm was indited by David himſelf, and committed to the Prefect of his Muſick, to be ſung by the quire, in the aſſembly of the people, as a form of thankſgiving to God, upon occaſion of any victory over his and Gods enemies.

1. The King ſhall joy in thy ſtrength, O Lord; and in thy ſalvation how greatly ſhall he rejoyce?

1. O bleſſed Lord, thou haſt graciouſly interpoſed thy hand of power for our ſoveraign thine anointed, thou haſt delivered him out of all his dangers; in this thy gratious and ſeaſonable exhibition of thy ſelf, he hath all canſe to rejoyce and triumph exceedingly. (This hath a more eminent completion in the Reſurrection of the * Meſſias.)

מלך * משיחא

2. Thou haſt given him his hearts deſire, and haſt not with-holden * the † requeſt of his lips. Selah.

† pouring out, or perhaps eſpouſal—— * haſt met him

2. Thou haſt given him a moſt liberal return to all the moſt earneſt requeſts, that with tongue or heart he hath addreſt to thee. the King Meſſias Chald. a.

3. For thou * b preventeſt him with the bleſſings of goodneſs, thou ſetteſt a crown of pure gold on his head.

3. Thou haſt beſtowed on him, of thine own free bounty, all ſorts of the moſt valuable mercies, thy ſpecial favour, and all the effects thereof: and as thou didſt firſt advance him to the regal throne, ſo haſt thou now moſt eminently ſecured him in it, and made his crown more illuſtrious, his glory more conſpicuous than ever. b.

4. He asked life of thee, and thou gaveſt it him; even length of days for ever and ever.

4. He beſought thy defence, that thou wouldſt preſerve his life, and not ſuffer his enemies to prevail againſt it; and thou haſt heard him abundantly, granted him a very long, and peaceable, and proſperous reign, and by thy faithful promiſe ſecured the Crown to his poſterity, to the time of the coming of the Meſſiah, who muſt be born of his ſeed, and when he comes, be inſtall'd in a glorious kingdom, that never ſhall have an end.

5. His glory is great in thy ſalvation: honour and majeſty haſt thou laid upon him.

5. Thou haſt, by interpoſition of thy hand for his deliverance, brought great glory and dignity to him, made all men ſee, how he is valued by thee, and thereby exalted him to the greateſt honour and majeſty of any man in the world.

|| ſet him bleſſings תְּשִׁיתֵהוּ בְּרָכוֹת

6. For thou haſt || made him moſt bleſſed for ever; thou haſt made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.

6. Thou haſt bleſſed him in ſuch a degree, that, as it was promiſed Abraham, Gen. 12. 2. thou ſhalt be a bleſſing, ſo it is now performed to this ſon of Abraham, they that will bleſs any, ſhall uſe this form for time to come, Let him be bleſſed by God as David was; thy ſpecial favour and kindneſs toward him hath been matter of moſt triumphant joy, and exultation to him.

7. For the King truſteth in the Lord, and through the mercy of the moſt High he ſhall not be moved.

7. And as he hath always repoſed his truſt and affiance in God, ſo hath he never miſcarried in his undertakings; Gods moſt powerful hand hath been moſt ſeaſonably and mercifully reacht out to him, and ſecured him in all his dangers.

8. Thine hand ſhall find out all thine enemies; thy right hand ſhall find thoſe that hate thee;

9. Thou ſhalt make them as a fiery oven in time of thine anger: the Lord ſhall ſwallow them up in his wrath, and the fire ſhall devour them.

8, 9. Thoſe that oppoſe or ſet themſelves againſt God, ſhall be ſure to be brought down, and diſcomfited by him. They that hate God ſhall meet with effects of his hatred. Gods diſpleaſure is very heavy, and flaming, and inſupportable, and the effects of it no leſs than a moſt formidable and utter deſtruction.

10. Their fruit ſhalt thou deſtroy from the earth, and their ſeed from among the children of men.

10. And this ruine that falls on them ſhall proceed to their poſterity, even to the utter eradication of their families.

|| bent or ſpread † they prevailed not כַּל יוּכָלוּ

11. For they || c intended evil againſt thee; they imagined a miſchievous device † which they were not able to perform.

11. And this is a juſt vengeance on them, for the evil deſigns which they had againſt him whom God had ſet in the throne: The malignity of their purpoſe is thus puniſht, though they were not able to bring it to effect, God thus blaſting and fruſtrating them. c.

* ſet them a ſhoulder, or make them as one ſhoulder, on thy ſtrings ſhalt thou prepare againſt——

12. Therefore ſhalt thou * d make them turn their back, when thou ſhalt make ready thine arrows upon thy ſtrings againſt the face of them.

12. In reward to their evil intentions God ſhall ſet them in a battalio before him, and then aſſault them moſt hoſtilely, and with the weapons of his ſharp diſpleaſure moſt ſadly infeſt and deſtroy them. d.

13. Be thou exalted, O Lord, in thine own ſtrength; ſo will we ſing and praiſe thy power.

13. And this his vengeance on his enemies, as it is an exalting of his almighty power in the ſight of all men, ſo is it that for which we, that receive the advantage by it, are eternally obliged to rejoyce, and bleſs and magnifie his holy Name.

Annotations on Pſalm XXI.

a. אֶרֶשׁ

V. 2. Requeſt] The Hebrew אֶרֶשׁ ſignifies to eſpouſe, Deut. 21. 7. he that אֵרַשׂ hath eſpouſed a woman; ſo Exod. 22. 15. אֵרוּשָׂה a virgin eſpouſed, and Deut. 22. 23. מְאֹרָשָׂה. And ſo the Chaldee אֲרַשׁ in the ſame ſenſe. And if from that root came the noun אֶרֶשׁ here with שׂ, it would elegantly be rendred the eſpouſal of his lips, i. e. his moſt important conſiderable deſire, which he had ſet his heart upon, and ſo often begg'd of God. What that was, appears v. 3. ſetting the crown upon his head, ſetling him peaceably in the throne. Thus Cant. 3. 11. Solomons day of Coronation is called poetically the day of his eſpouſals, and the day of the gladneſs of his heart, i. e. the day that he deſired ſo earneſtly, ſet his heart on, and was ſo glad when it came. But if the roots be diſtinguiſhed by the poſition of the point over שׂ, then as the word אֶרֶשׁ, is not elſe-where to be met with in Scripture; ſo there may be place for conjecture, that אֶרֶשׁ had originally the ſame ſenſe, that now אָשַׁר in Chaldee and Syriack hath for effudit, pouring out. For the Lexicographers (that render it elocutio and expoſitio, and yet produce no other place but this, wherein they pretend it to do ſo) are well reconcileable with this, and ſo are moſt of the antient Interpreters, though they have rendred it variouſly; the LXXII. Θέλημα, the will, or as other copies Αἴτημα, the prayer of his lips, that which the lips pour out in prayer; and the Chaldee מֵירוּשׁ the interpretation or expoſition of the lips, agreeable to the Arabick notion of אשארה (from אשר) for indicium. But the Syriack have ܡܗܦܟܢܐ the preparation of his lips, that which he hath firſt prepared in the heart by meditation, and then poured out at the lips.

b. קִדֵּם

V. 2. Preventeſt] From קָדַם the word קִדֵּם in Piel hath ſeveral ſignifications; ordinarily to prevent or antiecipate, but withal to meet. Deut 23. 4. לֹא קִדְּמוּ we render, they met you not with bread and water; and ſo the Chaldee renders it עָרְעוּ occurrerunt me, and the LXXII. Συναντᾶν: ſo Nehem. 13. 2. they met not—— ſo Iſai. 21. 14. we read they prevented not; it ſhould be, they met not with bread him that fled: In all which the LXXII. read Συναντᾶν, to meet. So Mich. 6. 6. wherewithal אֲקַדֵּם ſhall I meet the Lord? and again, אֲקַדְּמֶנּוּ ſhall I meet him with burnt-offerings? we read, come before; which if it be in the notion of preventing, certainly belongs not to that place. And thus it moſt probably ſignifies here, thou ſhalt meet him with benedictions of good, as when Melchizedeck met Abraham, and brought forth bread and wine, and bleſſed him: So Gods coming out to meet us with bleſſings is a very proper expreſſion of his bounty in obliging and loving us firſt; as Job 41. 2. who הִקְדִּימַנִי hath begun any kindneſs to me, obliged me firſt, and I will repay him? The rendring of Caſtellio is here moſt perſpicuous, and fully expreſſive of the ſenſe, eum egregiis affecisti beneficiis, thou haſt beſtowed moſt eminent favours on him.

c. נָטוּ רָעָה

V. 11. Intended] The Hebrew נָטָה from whence נָטוּ is here, ſignifies two things; 1. to incline or decline, and 2. to ſtretch out, extend, diſtend. But how in either of theſe notions it ſhall be joyned with רָעָה here, it will not be eaſie to judge. The LXXII. render it in the former notion, ἔκλιναν εἰς οἷς κακῶς, they bow'd down evil things on thee; and the Latine, declinaverunt in te mala; and the Syriack ſeems to accord, rendring it ܐܫܬܘ and the Arabick, they bow'd down. If this be the notion of the word, then it will beſt be rendred, they wreſted, or perverted evil things againſt thee, (as Exod. 23. 2. לִנְטֹת to decline, and לְהַטּוֹת to pervert, is uſed, and again v. 6. לֹא תַטֶּה thou ſhalt not pervert) i. e. by perverting or diſtorting thy words, framed accuſations, calumnies (which are ſtiled πονηρὰ ῥήματα, evil or wicked words or things, Matth. 5. 2.) againſt thee. In the ſecond notion it is ordinarily applied to lines and curtains; and then to ſpread evil againſt any, may be a phraſe taken from the ſpreading of nets, (as Pſal. 140. 5. they ſpread a net with cords) for the inſnaring of any. But the Chaldee, which render it by חַשְׁלוּ from חָשַׁל which ſignifies firſt to beat out and compreſs, and thence to machinate, contrive, or forge in the brain, (in which ſenſe it beſt agrees with imagining, that follows) make it probable to be taken from the Metallifts, who beat out, and ſo extend or diſtend their metals, and ſo frame them into any faſhion: from whence, by an eaſie metaphor, it may be drawn to that of deſigning, or forging any evil againſt another.

d. שְׁכֶם

V. 11. Make them turn their backs] That שֶׁכֶם ſignifies a ſhoulder or ſhoulder-blade, there is no queſtion, Scapula, that part of the body which from the neck reacheth on both ſides, before, and behind, to the arm. But what the meaning is here of the Poetical phraſe תְּשִׁיתֵמוֹ שְׁכֶם thou ſhalt ſet them a ſhoulder, is not ſo eaſie to reſolve. The Chaldee reads it, Thou haſt ſet them to thy people פְּחַד חַד one ſhoulder. The ſenſe of it ſeems to be beſt fetcht from that which follows, בְּמֵיתָרֶיךָ to thy ſtrings, from יָתַר nervous, a bow-ſtring, Pſal. 9. 2. The LXXII. ſeem not to have underſtood it, rendring it ἐν τοῖς ἐπιλοίποις σου, in thy remainders, as if it were from יָתַר reliquus fuit. But ſure it ſignifies the ſtrings of a bow, as the inſtrument of ſhooting or wounding: and then whether we joyn that to the precedent words, Thou ſhalt ſet them a ſhoulder for thy bow-ſtrings,] or to the ſubſequent words, Thou ſhalt ſet them a ſhoulder, with thy bow-ſtrings thou ſhalt prepare againſt the face of them,] the latter part muſt have ſome influence on the former; and then either way, the ſetting them a ſhoulder] will be either the ſetting them in aray, drawing them up in a full and fair battalio, that ſo his arrows may freely play upon them, which in the end of the verſe are ſaid to be prepared againſt the face of them; or, to the ſame ſenſe, thou ſhalt make them as one neck (ſo the Jewiſh Arab. renders it) for ſlaughter. Somewhat parallel to this we have Hoſ. 6. 9. where it is ſaid of the Prieſts יִרְצְחוּ שְׁכֶמָה they killed ſhoulder-wiſe, or by the ſhoulder. The Chaldee render it בְּחַד חַד one ſhoulder, in the ſame words, as here they uſe to expound שְׁכֶם ſhoulder: which ſhews it to be a proverbial form, to ſignifie ſure, and uniform ſlaughter. This the learned Caſtellio ſaw, and paraphraſtically, but very ſignificantly, expreſt; Nam tu eis pro ſcopo collocatis, recta in eos tuis nervis collineabis, For thou ſhalt ſet them as thy butt or mark, and with thine arrows aim ſtraight at them. And this ſure is the perſpicuous meaning of this dark place. For the Souldier in procinctu, both in the antient and modern wars, was, and is wont to oppoſe only the ſhoulder to the enemy, that being the moſt commodious poſture both for defence and offence. Thus the Phalanx was drawn up; thus our ſtand of Pikes are accuſtomed to charge; thus the Archers draw the bows, the Musketiers give fire; ſo the Swordmen receive the enemy, covering the left ſhoulder with the buckler, and they that uſe no buckler, yet ſtand upon a guard of like nature, and hold it for a rule, never to leave open the whole body to the oppoſite. All which gives the account clearly, why the phraſe of ſetting them a ſhoulder] is here uſed, becauſe that was the military poſture. Abu Walid interprets it, thou ſhalt ſet them as one ſide, or on one ſide, viz. to deal with them all alike, comparing the uſe of it here with that in Hoſeah c. 6. 9.

The

The Twenty Second PSALM.

|| Præfect of his Muſick. † the Hind of the Morning.

TO the || chief Muſitian [a] upon † Aiieleth Shahar, A Pſalm of David.

Paraphraſe.

The Twenty Second Pſalm was compoſed by David, on occaſion of his own flying from his perſecutors, and the calamities that befell him at that time, and belongs myſtically to the Crucifixion of Chriſt. and was therein moſt literally fulfilled in ſeveral paſſages, ſee Matth. 27.35.43. and was by Chriſt recited upon the Croſs, either all, or at leaſt ſome part of it, Matth. 27.46. The Pſalm thus compoſed by David, was committed to the Præfect of his Muſick.

* Far from my help are the words—

1. My God [b] my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? * why art thou ſo far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?

1. O my God, O my God, I am forſaken by thee, mine enemies prevail againſt me, and all my loudeſt and moſt importunate cryes to thee for help, bring me no relief: How long wilt thou thus leave me to this ſtate of deſtitution? I beſeech thee at length to look upon me. (This was farther completed in Chriſt upon the Croſs, when his Divine Nature ſuſpended the exerciſe of his omnipotence ſo far, as to deliver up his body to that reproachful death, and real ſeparation from his Soul; Matth. 27.46.) b.

2. O my God, I cry in the day time, || but thou heareſt not, and in the night ſeaſon, and † am not [c] ſilent.

2. O my God, I call and cry unto thee continually, day and night, and thou giveſt me no redreſs, nor leaſt ceſſation to my afflictions. c.

* perſevereſt holy, the praiſes.

3. But thou * art holy, [d] O thou that inhabiteſt the praiſes of Iſrael.

3. Yet am I not diſcouraged by this; I am ſure that thou continueſt faithful and true, ſuch as canſt not forget thy promiſes; thou art he that haſt, and wilt continue to do all wonderfull things for thy people: and even when for a time thou permitteſt them to be oppreſt by their enemies, thou art ſtill moſt worthy to be magnified and praiſed by them. d.

4. Our fathers truſted in thee; they truſted, and thou didſt deliver them.

4. We thy people have had long experience of thy mercy and fidelity: our fathers before us in all their diſtreſſes have placed their full affiance in thee, for reſcue and deliverance, and never failed to receive it from thee.

† put to ſhame. בושו

5. They cryed unto thee, and were delivered; they truſted in thee, and were not † confounded.

5. Upon their humble and conſtant, and importunate addreſſes to thee, they continually obtained deliverance from thee, and never were diſcomfited, or put to ſhame, in their truſting or relying on thee.

6. But I am [e] a worm, and no man, a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people.

7. All they that ſee me laugh me to ſcorn; they * ſhoot out the lip, they ſhake the head, ſaying,

8. He [f] truſted on the Lord that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, ſeeing [g] he delighted in him.

6, 7, 8. Mean while I am an abject, weak, contemptible perſon, reviled and ſet at nought by the vulgar and baſer ſort. All that behold my preſent low condition, think that I am utterly forſaken, and ſo mock me, and ſcoff at me, for truſting in God, or relying on any aid of his, or taking any comfort or ground of hope from my being in his favour. (That theſe three verſes have a largeſt and moſt literal completion in Chriſt in his crucifixion, ſee note c.) e. f. g.

9. But thou art he that took me out of the womb; thou didſt make me hope || when I was upon my mothers breſts.

10. I was caſt upon thee from the womb; thou art my God from my mothers belly.

9, 10. But all this doth not diſcourage me. I know thy protection hath hitherto ſupported me in my greateſt diſtreſſes and weakneſſes. Thou broughteſt me out of the womb of my Mother: which, duly conſidered, was a greater deliverance than that I now want from thee; and from that time didſt ſuſtain and uphold me, when I was not able to do the leaſt for my ſelf. When I came forth into the World, I had no inheritance, but thy ſpecial providence and preſervation, which if it had been but one minute ſuſpended, or withdrawn from me, I had been immediately loſt: but this thou haſt from my firſt conception thus long continued to me, and thereby teſtified to me convincingly, that as I have none to depend on but thee, ſo I may on thee confidently repoſe my truſt.

11. Be not far from me, for † trouble is near, for there is none to help.

11. Now therefore, in the approach of the greateſt ſtraits, and the moſt abſolute deſtitution of all humane aids, be thou ſeaſonably pleaſed to interpoſe thy aſſiſtance, and not to forſake me utterly. h.

|| bullocks פרים * bulls

12. Many || bulls have compaſt me; * [h] ſtrong bulls of Baſan have beſet me round.

12. My enemies are very ſtrong and puiſſant, and have beſieged me very cloſe, brought me to great ſtraits.

13. They gaped upon me with their mouth, as a ravening and a roaring Lion.

13. And now are they ready to devour me: and therefore as a Lion, when he is near his prey, makes a terrible roaring, by that means to aſtoniſh the poor creature, and make it fall down through the fright, before him; ſo do they now rave, and vaunt, and threaten exceſſively.

14. I

i. 14. My outward eſtate cannot better be reſembled, than by a conſumptive body, brought extreme low, daily pining and falling away very faſt, the bones ſtarting one from the other (ſee v.17.) and the very heart and moſt vital parts quite diſſolved,

14. I am poured out like water, and all my bones † out of [i] joynt; my heart is like wax, it is melted in the midſt of my bowels.

† are parted, or have ſeparated themſelves.

15. The radical moiſture ſo dryed up, that there is no more left, than in a brick or tile that comes ſcorcht from the kiln, the tongue dry, and not able to ſpeak, and the whole body ready to drop into the grave.

15. My ſtrength is dryed up like a potſheard, and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death.

k. 16. For my enemies come about me as fiercely as ſo many dogs, to rend and tear me; a multitude of malitious people, like a ravenous Lion, have now got me into their power, beſet me, and incloſed me, on deſign to wound and deſtroy me. (This was moſt eminently fulfilled in Chriſt at his crucifixion, that being a real piercing of his hands and feet, and that cauſed by the importunate clamors of the Jewiſh ſanhedrim and people; and a more literal accompliſhment of the words, than belonged to David.)

16. For dogs have compaſſed me, the aſſembly of the wicked have incloſed me: they [k] pierced my hands and my feet.

17. My civil ſtate, I ſay, is as low as their ſtate of body, who have no fleſh left on it, whoſe bones conſequently are ſo wide and diſtant one from another, that they may be numbred (as Chriſts were to be, on another occaſion, by being naked and diſtended on the Croſs) and are thereupon lookt on as a prodigy, and ſcoft at by all beholders (as Chriſt alſo was upon the Croſs, Mat. 27. 39.)

17. I may tell all my bones, they look and ſtare upon me.

18. They look on me as their prey, and all that I have as their lawful ſpoil or pillage, to be divided as by lot, and diſtributed among them. (This alſo was more literally fulfilled in Chriſt, John 19. 23, 24. when the ſoldiers having divided his upper garments into four parts, finding his inner garment to be without ſeam, would not tear it, but rather caſt lots who ſhould have it.)

18. They part my garments among them, and caſt lots upon my veſture.

19. But be thou, O Lord, who art my only aid, in a ſpecial manner preſent, and with ſpeed aſſiſtant to me.

19. But be not thou far from me, O Lord: O my ſtrength haſt thee to help me.

20. Reſcue me now, I beſeech thee, that am left deſtitute, and helpleſs, from the power and malice of theſe bloody men. (Or, as applied to Chriſt, thou ſhalt deliver me out of the grave, and not permit the very jaws or power of death, though it ſeize on me, to detain me under its dominion.)

20. Deliver my ſoul from the ſword, my ‖ darling from the power of the dog.

‖ deſolate, or only one, יחידתי ſee note on Pſ. 25. c.

k. 21. And as formerly thou haſt anſwered my prayers, and preſerved me from the ſtrongeſt enemies, when they moſt inſolently exalted themſelves againſt me; ſo be thou now pleaſed to deliver me from thoſe violent men who now are ready to devour me. (And thus was it fulfilled to Chriſt in his Reſurrection.)

21. Save me from the Lions mouth; for thou [k] haſt heard me from the horns of the Unicorn.

22. And this ſhall give me continual matter of rejoycing, and proclaiming thy wonderful goodneſs toward me, and of making the moſt publick mentions of theſe thy unſpeakable mercies, and aſcribing the glory to thee, (this alſo was fulfilled in Chriſt, in the Apoſtles preaching his reſurrection in all their aſſemblies, and magnifying God for it. See Acts 2.47.) after this manner:

22. I will declare thy name unto my brethren: in the midſt of the congregation will I praiſe thee.

23. O bleſs and praiſe the name of our gratious Lord, all ye that profeſs to be his ſervants, all ye whom he hath thus taken to himſelf to be his peculiar people, and ſhewed ſuch marvellous works of mercy among you; let this be a perpetual obligation to you to magnifie him, and perform all faithful obedience to him for ever. (Of this, as it reſpects Chriſt, ſee St. Peters Sermon, Acts 3. 26.)

23. Ye that fear the Lord, praiſe him, all ye the ſeed of Jacob glorifie him; and fear him all ye the ſeed of Iſrael.

m. 24. Becauſe he is faithful, and conſtantly ready to hear and anſwer the petitions of them that are brought to the loweſt condition, and inſtantly anſwers them with timely relief, and never finally caſts out, or rejects their ſupplications. (How this was fulfilled in Chriſt, ſee Heb. v. 7.)

24. For he hath not deſpiſed nor abhorred the [m] † affliction of the afflicted, neither hath he hid his face from him, but when he cryed unto him, he heard.

† requeſt

25. From theſe gratious revelations of thy ſelf unto me, ſhall I fetch abundant matter of praiſe and thanksgiving, when I come to thy holy aſſembly; and there will I conſtantly offer thoſe ſacrifices, which I now devote and conſecrate unto thee, that all thy faithful ſervants may joyn with me in this duty. (This had its completion in Chriſt, in reſpect of the commemorative Euchariſtical oblations, offered up daily in the Church, in remembrance of Chriſts death and reſurrection.)

25. My praiſe ſhall be ‖ of thee in the great congregation: I will pay my vows before them that fear him.

‖ from thee מאתך

26. As remembring what certain returns thou makeſt to the prayers of the diſtreſſed, ſupplyeſt all their wants, giveſt them matter of thanksgiving, whoſoever make their addreſſes to thee, and comforteſt and reviveſt them with durable refreſhments, when their condition is moſt diſconſolate and deſtitute. (This is alſo fulfilled in the Evangelizing and comforting of the poor humble Chriſtian, and in the Euchariſtical ſpiritual food, and the vital effects thereof, of which Sacramentally and by faith they are made partakers.)

26. The meek ſhall eat and be ſatisfied; they ſhall praiſe the Lord that ſeek him: your heart ſhall live for ever.

27. All

27. All the ends of the world ſhall remember, and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations ſhall worſhip before thee.

27. Theſe miracles of thy mercy ſhall be recounted through all the world, and bring in many ſpiritual ſubjects to thy Kingdom, to ſerve and adore thee. (This alſo was moſt eminently completed in the effects of the reſurrection of Chriſt, that mighty work of Gods power, and mercy, and fidelity, when the Apoſtles preaching of it to all the world, brought in ſuch multitudes of proſelytes to Chriſt.)

28. For the Kingdom is the Lords, and he is the governor among the nations.

28. Acknowledging, that as the managery and ſole government of all the nations of the world doth certainly belong to thee, ſo all ſubjection and faithful uniform obedience is moſt due unto thee. (This alſo was an effect of the promulgation of the reſurrection of Chriſt.)

29. All they that be fat on earth ſhall eat and worſhip, all they that go down into the duſt ſhall bow before him, and [n] none can keep alive his own ſoul.

30. A ſeed ſhall ſerve him, it ſhall be accounted to the Lord for a generation.

31. They ſhall come, and declare his righteouſneſs unto a people that ſhall be born, [o] that he hath done this.

29, 30, 31. And all this for the confirmation of all ſorts of men in Gods ſervice: 1. Of thoſe that enjoy proſperity in this world, as knowing that they have received it from God: 2. Of thoſe that dye, and live not themſelves to ſee thy wonderful work, yet ſhall their poſterity behold and adore thee for it; or, all mortal men ſhall confeſs that all life, and preſervation, and deliverance is from God, and ſo they and their poſterity ſhall betake themſelves to thy ſervice. (How this is fulfilled in Chriſt, ſee note n.) And ſo all ſucceſſions of men ſhall declare to their followers, thoſe that are not yet born to thoſe that ſhall come after them, how richly God hath performed all his promiſed mercies, and how ſeaſonably and miraculouſly, at this time of greateſt need, he hath granted me his protection and deliverance. n. o.

Annotations on Pſal. XXII.

a. אַיֶּלֶת

Tit. Aijeleth] For the meaning of the title of this Pſalm, עַל אַיֶּלֶת חַשַּׁחַר the LXXII. may firſt be conſidered, which render it ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀντιλήψεως τῆς ἰωθινῆς, and the Latine pro ſuſceptione matutina, for the morning help. This is by the Learned Grotius thought to proceed from their reading the Hebrew otherwiſe than now we have it; not אַיֶּלֶת but עֶזְרַת which v. 20. is by them rendred ἀντίλημψις, help. But that is a very remote conjecture, the words having no affinity in ſound or writing. It is more probable, that from אַיִל and אֵילוּת robur, ſtrength, which is made uſe of for the aid and relief of others (as in that v. 20. אֵילוּתִי thou art my ſtrength, haſten unto my help) they deduced the word אַיֶּלֶת, and took it in the notion of relief, and ſo render it, ἀντίλημψις, help. Upon this conceited notion of אַיִל it is that אֱוִלִים Pſal. 107. 17. where the Hebrew hath אֱוִלִים fools, they transforming אָוִיל fool into אַיִל robur, do conſequently render it ἀνθελάβετο αὐτῶν, he helped them, the Latine ſuſcepit, and the Syriack ܫܪܪ helped, or ſtrengthened: and then joyning הַשַּׁחַר, of the morning, with it, as denoting the haſt or earlineſs of the help, they render it ὑπὲρ ἀντιλήψεως ἰωθινῆς, for morning, or ſpeedy, or early help. From this notion of אַיִל for ſtrength, the Chaldee alſo paraphraſe it, עַל תְּקוֹף קוּרְבָּן &c. for a ſtrong or powerful oblation, perpetual for the morning; perhaps from אַיִל a ramme (ſuch as were uſually offered in ſacrifice) pitching on the notion of oblation. But the notion which the antient fathers, and from thence the interlinear, and moſt modern tranſlations have pitcht on, is that of אַיָּלָה an hind; ſo Prov. v. 19. in the form wherein here 'tis אַיֶּלֶת an hind, and ſo frequently אַיָּל an hart, or ſtag, Pſal. 42. 2. Gen. 49. 21. Pſal. 18. 34. Cant. 2. 7. And this beaſt being generally taken notice of for ſwiftneſs of foot, (as in that Pſal. 18. 34. thou haſt made my feet like hinds feeds, in reſpect of his flight to ſome place of ſafety, in the following words, קַלִּים רַגְלָיו ſwift as the hind ſaith the Chaldee) it is therefore here ſet to denote David in time of his flight from his perſecutors; and the rather, becauſe אֵל and אַיִל ſignifies alſo a Prince, Ezek. 31. 11. אֵל גּוֹיִם the Prince of the Nations, Nebuchadnezzar, and Ezek. 15. 15. אֵילֵי מוֹאָב ἄρχοντες; ſay the LXXII. the Princes of Moab, and ſo 2 King. 24 15. we render the mighty of the land: the Chaldee רַבְרְבֵי the Princes, and ſo Iſa. 61. 3. And thus the title belonging primarily to David in time of his perſecution, it very fitly alſo belongs to Chriſt at his Crucifixion, he being that Hart, and that Prince, which was then purſued to death, and ſlaughter'd by the Jews; and the Pſalm following in many paſſages more literally belonging to Chriſt than to David himſelf, in the firſt completion.

אֵילֵי

V. 2. My God] In this verſe the LXXII. their rendring is obſervable. First, for the Hebrew אֵלִי אֵלִי My God, my God, they read, ὁ θεὸς ὁ θεός μου, πρόσχες μοι, God my God, look on me; and ſo the Latine: the Arabick and Æthiopick add [my] in the firſt place, My God, my God, look upon me; the Jewiſh Arabick, my ſtrong God, my potent God. Here 'tis evident, as oft in other places, that they gave a double ſignification of the latter אֵלִי; firſt as reading it אֵלִי ὁ θεός μου, my God, and then again אֵלִי to me, which they choſe to paraphraſe by πρόσχες μοι, look, or give heed to me. But our Saviour reciting theſe words upon the Croſs, is an evidence, that this was not the Hebrew reading, but only the deſcant of the LXXII. Then in the end of the verſe, for שַׁאֲגָתִי my roarings, from שָׁאַג rugivit, they read שְׁגָגָתִי my errors, my incogitances, (as from שָׁגַג ignoravit, peccavit) παραπτωμάτων μου, and the Latine delictorum meorum, of my faults; and ſo the Syriack ܥܠ ܚܛܗܝ of my faults, and the Arabick in like manner. And this is a miſtake alſo. But then thirdly, where the Hebrew hath רָחוֹק מִישׁוּעָתִי דִּבְרֵי שַׁאֲגָתִי which taking רָחוֹק adverbially (as oft it is) is literally rendred thus, the words of my roaring are far from my help, i. e. from helping me; the LXXII. have followed this conſtruction, μακρὰν ἀπὸ τῆς σωτηρίας μου αἱ λόγοι τῶν παραπτωμάτων μου the words — are far from my deliverance, or, from delivering me; and ſo the Latine, (and Æthiopick) longè à ſalute mea verba — the words are far from my ſalvation. And to this the Chaldee agrees, רְחִיק מִן פּוּרְקָנִי מִלֵּי אֲבָלוּתִי far from my redemption are the words of my cry: and ſo the learned Sebindler renders them, as an inſtance

רָחוֹק מִישׁוּעָתִי

b. אֵלִי אֵלִי

שַׁאֲגָתִי

ſtance of the adverbial uſe of רָחוֹק, procul à ſalute meâ verba rugitus mei, the words of my roaring are far from my help; and Seb. Caſtellio to the ſame purpoſe, only continuing the interrogation from the beginning of the verſe, cur à meis verbis querulis remota ſalus eſt? why is deliverance removed from my complaining words? And thus in all reaſon are they to be rendred, to denote the ineffectualneſs of his complaints, or how little help they brought him. The other rendering puts in [and] where the Hebrew hath it not, and joyns together יְשׁוּעָתִי deliverance, and דִּבְרֵי words, which cannot well joyn in ſenſe; whereas this is moſt ſimple, only underſtanding the verb [are] which is ſeldom expreſt in theſe writers. Only one thing may deſerve to be added from the Jewiſh-Arabick, who as he concurs in this latter part of the verſe, [my words, and my groaning far from my help,] ſo he puts the whole verſe in form of deprecation, not of complaint, expreſſing the interrogation, why, as uſually he doth, by the negative, Forſake me not, ſo as that my words and my groaning be far from my help:] and that ſure is the adaquate importance of them.

c. דּוֹמִיָּה

V. 2. Silent] The Hebrew דּוֹמִיָּה ſignifies reſt or quiet; either of the tongue only, and then 'tis ſilence, or of the whole body. And ſo here it is moſt probable to be taken, to anſwer the former part of the verſe: There 'twas, I cry in the day time, וְלֹא and thou heareſt not; and here, and in the night, (repeating ἀφὼ κεκρᾶ, I cry) וְלֹא and not, i. e. there is not any quiet to me, i. e. no anſwer to thoſe prayers of mine which were addreſt for quiet or deliverance from my perſecutors: and therefore the Syriack, by way of Paraphraſe, render it, thou amendeſt not to me, and ſo the Arabick alſo. As for the LXXII. their rendring οὐκ εἰς ἄνοιαν ἐμοὶ, which the Latine follows, & non ad inſipientiam mihi, and not for folly to me, it will be hard either to give any intelligible account of the meaning of it, or of וְלֹא דוֹמִיָּה לִי being rendred by it; unleſs as Exodus 15.16. דּוֹם כָּאָבֶן [ſtill as a ſtone] ſignifies ſenſeleſneſs, ſo here דּוֹמִיָּה were thought to ſignifie ſenſeleſneſs, and accordingly, without care of the ſenſe, thus rendred ἄνοιαν, by them.

d. יוֹשֵׁב

V. 4. O thou that inhabiteſt] יָשַׁב to inhabit, ſignifies alſo to remain, or perſevere: ſo Pſal. 102. 13. thou, O Lord, תֵּשֵׁב ſhalt remain, or continue for ever. And in this ſenſe it will be beſt taken here, וְאַתָּה קָדוֹשׁ יוֹשֵׁב but thou remaineſt, or perſevereſt holy, (the derelictions in the former verſes do not tempt him him to doubt of it) תְּהִלּוֹת יִשְׂרָאֵל the praiſe of Iſrael; or, O thou, the praiſes, or which art the praiſes of Iſrael, i. e. the object of all their praiſes; or yet more ſimply, (without the leaſt elipſis to be ſupplied.) But thou remaineſt holy, the praiſes of Iſrael. The LXXII. retain the conſtruction in the latter part, reading ὁ ἁγιάζων τῷ Ἰσραὴλ, and ſo the Latine, Laus Iſrael, the praiſe of Iſrael, and the Arabick, the glory of Iſrael, (as in Simeons ſong, Luke 2. 32. Chriſt is ſaid to be the glory of thy people Iſrael, in whom they ſhould rejoyce, or glory:) only in the former part they have ſomewhat varied, σὺ δὲ ἐν ἁγίῳ κατοικεῖς, But thou dwelleſt in thy holy place; which yet rightly conſidered, is but a Paraphraſe of the ſenſe in which we render it; for Gods dwelling in heaven] is but a phraſe to expreſs his faithfulneſs and mindfulneſs of his promiſe, his not being changed, and that is it which is meant by his perſevering holy. The Chaldee have a little farther receded, but thou art holy who eſtabliſheſt the world for the praiſes of Iſrael] with reference, perhaps, to the phanſy of the Jews, that the world was created for their ſakes and their Laws; this Paraphraſe of theirs being not free from ſundry of their dreams. Yet may theſe words bear no ill ſenſe, and Gods making and eſtabliſhing the World for the praiſes or glory of Iſrael] ſignifie his great care, and kindneſs, and conſequently fidelity in performing all his promiſes to his people. The Syriack differ from all the former, making the whole verſe but a compellation of God, in theſe titles, Thou, O holy, and who ſitteſt in Iſrael thy glory.

e. תּוֹלַעַת

V. 6. A worm] Theſe three verſes, though they have a firſt ſence hiſtorically verified in David, at the time of his flying from his enemies, yet are they, in a much higher, and alſo more literal ſenſe, fulfilled in Chriſt upon the Croſs. And 1. the word תּוֹלַעַת worme, is thought to have a ſpecial energy in it, to denote that kind of worme, which is begotten of a grain of coccum, or coccinele, a red berry, that yields the ſcarlet juice, with which they dy cloth of that colour, and which is full of thoſe red wormes. So Iſa. 1, 18. though your ſins be as ſcarlet, the Hebrew hath כַּתּוֹלָע as a worme, viz. this ſcarlet-worme. So Lam. 4. 5. they that are brought up on תּוֹלָע, we rightly render it ſcarlet. And if it be twice dipt with it, then 'tis a darker and richer colour, Num. 4. 8. and is rendred purple by the Chaldee. And thus is it a fit title for Chriſt upon the croſs: a worme, in that he is deſpiſed, and trodden on, and oppreſt by the Jews; and more peculiarly this ſcarlet worme, which being preſt, yields this rich juice, (viz. his blood) of which this royal ſcarlet or purple garment is made, wherein we may appear before God. In token of which he was araied in a ſcarlet Robe, Mat. 27. 28. at this time peculiarly of his crucifixion. In the next place, when he is here ſtyled the reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people, בְּזוּי from בָּזָה, to ſcorn, or ſet at nought, and ſo by the LXXII. rightly rendred ἐξουθένημα λαοῦ, one ſet at nought by the people, this is but parallel to that other prædiction, ſignally pointing at his crucifixion, Iſa. 53. 3. he is deſpiſed and rejected of men—— and farther parallel'd in the ſtory, when they rejected him, and choſe Barabbas, Matth. 27. 21. when they mocked him, v. 29. ſpit on him, v. 30. and mocked him again, v. 31. Then for the reſt of the words, All they that ſee me laugh me to ſcorn—— they are exactly fulfill'd, Mat. 27. 39. they that paſſed by, reviled him, wagging their heads, and ſaying—— he truſted in God, let him deliver him now if he will have him, v. 43. As for the phraſe יַפְטִירוּ בְשָׂפָה, it may beſt be rendred, they put out the lip, from פָּטַר emiſit, dimiſit, laxavit, noting that way of mocking, by the diſtortion of the mouth or lip; and ſo it agrees with laughing to ſcorn] præcedent, and ſhaking the head] ſubſequent: ſo the Syriack renders it, they moved their lips; the Chaldee, מְחַוְרִין they cut with the lip, as a paraphraſe to expreſs reproaching or abuſing; but the LXXII. only ἐλάλησαν ἐν χείλεσι, (and ſo the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick) they ſpake with their lips, as from the notion of פָּטַר for opening, which applyed to the lips, denoteth ſpeaking with them.

f. גֹּל

V. 8. Truſted] גֹּל from גָּלַל and גַּל volvit, devolvit, roll, or devolve, is uſed for committing, intruſting any thing to another, caſting ones ſelf on God, which is the phraſe uſed uſed Pſal. 55. 22. caſt thy burthen upon the Lord. So Pſal. 37. 5. גֹּל roll thy ways upon the Lord, i. e. commit them to him, caſt them on him; farther expreſt by the next words, truſt alſo in him—— The LXXII. have rendered it according to this ſenſe ἤλπισεν, He hath hoped, and ſo the Latine, and is fully rendred, Matth. 27. 43. πέποιθεν, he

he hath confided; ſo alſo the Syriack here, and the Arabick by two words, he hath believed and confided. גל is the imperative mood, and ſo may fitly be rendred, truſt in God, (as a form of reproach:) ſo 'tis rendred Pſal. 37. 5. But it may poſſibly be the præter tenſe in Kal alſo, as a contraction of גָּלוּל, as that may, by analogy with ſome other words, be uſed for גָּלַל.

g. חָפֵץ V. 8. Delighted] חָפֵץ voluit, willed, is frequently uſed for complacuit, delectatus eſt, being delighted or pleaſed with, when it hath the prepoſition בְּ following it. And accordingly ſo the LXXII. their [θέλω ἐν, will in] muſt be rendred taking pleaſure in; and ſo muſt the phraſe be rendred Mat. 27. 43. εἰ θέλει αὐτὸν, not, if he will have him, but, if he love him (ſo חָפֵץ ſignifies alſo) if he delight, or have pleaſure in him. And thus it peculiarly belongs to Chriſt, of whom 'tis teſtified by God at his baptiſm, Matth. 3. 17. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

h. אַבִּירִים V. 12. Strong Bulls] The notion of אַבִּירִים here muſt be reſolved by the context. The word אַבִּיר ſignifies ſtrong, and is ſometimes applyed to God, Pſal. 132. 2; ſometimes to Angels, Pſal. 78. 25. לֶחֶם אַבִּירִים the bread of the ſtrong, we duly render Angels food, from the LXXII. who read ἄρτον ἀγγέλων, ſometimes to men, Iſa. 10. 13; ſometimes to horſes, Jer. 8. 16. and 47. 3; and ſometimes to bulls, when in conjunction with bullocks, Iſa. 34. 7. פָּרִים Pſal. 48. 30. and here in this place, פָּרִים bullocks immediately foregoing. So Pſal. 50. 13. ſpeaking of ſacrifice, the fleſh of the אַבִּירִים muſt be the fleſh of bulls or oxen. To this it is not amiſs to add, that Jer. 46. 15. the LXXII. for אַבִּירֵךְ read ὁ Ἄπις. The words indeed relate to the Ægyptians, whoſe God Apis was, and as a God, may be ſo called from אַבִּיר, which oft ſignifies God, the ב, as it is ordinary in ſeveral languages, being changed into π, and the ר into ς, as in μάρτυς, martyr, κέλης celer, and many others, thoſe letters are permutabiles. But that God of the Ægyptians was originally an Oxe, or Bull; and then why may it not be thus lightly changed from Abir, a Bull? And then as שׁוֹר ſignifies a Bull alſo (and in Chaldee תּוֹר from whence the Greek and Latine ταῦρος, and taurus) why may not that præfixt to אַבִּיר make שׁוֹר אֲבִיר, and that be lightly changed into Serapis, the other title of the Ægyptians God, which alſo is no more originally but a Bull, or oxe? But this by the way. This therefore being clear, the rendring of אַבִּירִים muſt be ſimply bulls, and with בָּשָׁן joyned with it, bulls of Baſhan; which being a rich and fruitful place, and the Cattel thereof great, and ſtrong and fat, as the inhabitants gyants, Deut. 3. 13. and formidable, Num. 21. 34. they are here fitly ſet (Poetically) to expreſs potent enemies, and proud inſulters; as the Kine of Baſhan, Amos 4. 1. are imperious women. This the LXXII. renders ταῦροι πίονες, fat bulls, without mention of Baſhan; either as reading for it רָשָׁן, which ſignifies fat, or rather thus paraphraſtically expreſſing Baſhan, the cattel whereof were fat above any others.

i. פָּרַד V. 14. Out of joynt] פָּרַד ſignifies dividing, parting, diſſolving, diſperſing, and in Hithpael reciprocally diperſing, or parting themſelves, ſo as one leaves or goes from the other. So Job. 4. 11. the Lions whelps יִתְפָּרְדוּ, we render, are ſcattered abroad, LXXII. ἕλκυσον ἀλλήλους, have left one another, in the notion of diſperſing. And ſo all the antients render it here: the Chaldee אִתְפַּרְשָׁן were diſperſed; the LXXII. διεσκορπίσθη, and ſo the Syriack, and Latine, and Æthiopick, were diſperſed; the Arabick, diſſolved: and this not to denote diſlocation of bones, but their parting one from another, as in a conſumption of the whole body, which is here deſcribed in this, and the reſt of the verſe; which is the thing which is here repreſented, and by it the lowneſs of his preſent condition, or outward eſtate.

k. כָּאֲרִי V. 15. Pierced] The double reading of the Hebrew here, is commonly taken notice of, כָּארוּ they pierced, and כָּאֲרִי as a Lion; and the Chaldee hath put them both together, נָכְתִּין הֵיךְ דְּאַרְיֵא biting me as a Lion. But 'tis evident, the LXXII. read it in the former notion only, and ſo render it ὤρυξαν, they pierced my hands and my feet; and ſo the Latine, Syriack, and Æthiopick. Of theſe readings the enquiry muſt be, 1. what force they have in the firſt intention of the words, as they concern David; and 2. what is to be ſaid of them in reference to the Prophetick ſenſe, completed in Chriſt. For the former, if we ſtand to the preſent Hebrew-reading, כָּאֲרִי as a Lion, the ſenſe will run thus, the aſſembly of the wicked hath encloſed me as a Lion, both my hands and my feet, i. e. I am brought into a condition perfectly helpleſs, as when a Lion hath one in his power, and is about to ſeize on him; neither my hands nor my feet can ſtand me in any ſtead, the former to reſiſt, or the ſecond to fly: where נָקַף to encloſe] is of the ſame importance with סָבַב, ſo oft uſed in Scripture, for ſuch an incloſure, as puts one into the power of another. But if the other reading, כָּארוּ they pierced, be admitted, the ſame totall impotence is ſtill diſcernible. To be bound hand and foot] is the proverbial ſtyle of Scripture, for one that is delivered up to utter ruine; but to be nailed, or pierced, or faſtned hand and foot, is a much higher expreſſion of the ſame thing, both in reſpect of the certainty, and ſharpneſs of the ruine. 'Tis eaſier to unty a knot, then looſen what is nailed, and 'tis more painful to be pierced, then only reſtrained from liberty. And ſo in either of the readings the ſenſe holds fitly to Davids perſon, as being in a ſore diſtreſs, and ſad condition. Next then, to conſider the place in relation to Chriſt, prophetically deſcribed upon his croſs; many conjectures of learned men are obvious on this place, but none more worthy to be hearkened to, than our two learned Countreymen, both exquiſitely skilled in the Oriental Languages, Mr. Nic. Fuller, and Mr. Ed. Pocock. From the † Collections of the former we learn, that both from the little Maſoreth, and from Rabbi Jacob ſon of Haym, and from his own ocular experience of many copies, * Joan. Iſaac Levita hath demonſtrated כָּארוּ they pierced] to be the reading in the text or chetib, and the other כָּאֲרִי as a Lion, only in the Margine, or chere. And this farther manifeſted by the rendring of Aquila, one very favourable to the Jewiſh intereſt, who rendred it as a verbe, not as a ſubſtantive, and ſo only according to the textual, not the marginal reading. From the ‖ latter we have a more particular, literal, minute account of the word it ſelf: כארו, they pierced, either from כור, or from כאר, as that is found in the Arabick (and ſo probably in Hebrew antiently) to be all one with כָּרָה fodere, to digg, or pierce, and from whence is Alcaur, the digging of the earth, and Cawar, haſtâ confodere, to run through with a ſpear. Or if it be read, as in their margine, כָּאֲרִי, then alſo is his conjecture very ingenious, that it be taken for the participle preſent in Kal in the plural number, from כוֹר, כָּאֲרִים, and from thence כָּאֲרוּ, of which he brings many examples. To this he addeth alſo, that the Chaldees paraphraſtical rendring (which from the likeneſs of the word אֲרִי, as a Lion, took occasion thus to express the notion of the participle, and therein the manner of their savage usage) was the original of that double reading of the Hebrew; and indeed not an effect, but the cause of it. As for those who suspect our reading as a falsification of the Christians, besides many other evidences of conviction, he there gives us the testimony of David Kimchi; who taking notice of the Christians reading in this place, different from the Jews, doth not accuse them of any fraud, as elsewhere he doth, Psal. 110. and probably would have done, if he had not known that they had herein followed the most emendate copies.

‖ Not. Miſcel. c. 4.

l. עֲנִיתָנִי V. 21. Hast heard me] From עָנָה to speak, or answer, or hearken to another, is the word עֲנִיתָנִי here, thou hast heard, or answered me. This verbe the LXXII. read, as if it were a noun from the other notion of עָנָה afflixit, and so read ταπείνωσίν μου, my affliction, or humiliation, (and from them the Syriack and Latine, &c.) as if it were עֲנוּתִי my affliction.

m. עֲנוּת V. 24. Affliction] עֲנוּת from the præcedent עָנָה may signifie affliction, or low estate: but all the antient interpreters render it in the notion of prayer, and the like; the Chaldee צְלוֹתְהוֹן the prayer, the LXXII. ἱκέτου, prayer, the Latine deprecationem, and so the Arabick, and the Syriack ܒܥܝܬܐ the cry; and so the not despising or abhorring, or casting out] will best agree with it, and the subsequents also, when I cryed unto him he heard: And so the word will well enough bear, from עָנָה to speak, as that is here applyed to עָנִי the poor, of whom the wise man saith, the poor man speaketh supplications.

n. נַפְשׁוֹ לֹא חִיָּה V. 29. Keep alive] Where the Hebrew reads וְנַפְשׁוֹ לֹא חִיָּה and he hath not quickened his soul, the LXXII. (and Syriack, Latine, Arabick, Æthiopick) render, καὶ ἡ ψυχή μου αὐτῷ ζήσεται, and my soul lives to him, for וְנַפְשִׁי his soul, reading נַפְשִׁי my soul, for לֹא not, לוֹ to him; and then joyning the masculine חִיָּה to the fæminine נַפְשׁ. But the Chaldee rendring it וְנַפְשׁ רְשִׁיעָא לָא וְחַיֵּי and the soul of the wicked he shall not enliven] do evidence our vulgar reading of the Hebrew to be that which they then used, and so the LXXII. to have mis-read it. The literal meaning of it is somewhat difficult. Castellio's conjecture is not unfit to be taken notice of, who joyns it with that which follows, thus; and he that hath not quickened his soul, i. e. who is dead, זֶרַע יַעַבְדֶנּוּ his seed shall serve him, Eorum progenies, quorum vita non perdurat, eum colent, the progeny of them whose life continues not, shall serve, or worship. And thus may the ellipsis be well enough supplied, and with as little violence as any other way. Yet because both חִיָּה and נַפְשׁ are in the singular, not plural number, (and זֶרַע seed, without any affix of any number, must agree with those) it will be more reasonable to change his plural, eorum, and quorum, into ejus, and cujus, and then reteining that his way of interpretation, the rendring will be literally this; and for him who doth not enliven his soul, i. e. who dies, his seed or posterity shall serve him, i. e. God. This may have a commodious meaning, in respect of David himself, that when he is dead, and so can praise God no longer himself for these his mercies, yet his posterity shall praise God for them, and by that ingagement be moved to undertake, and adhere to his service. But in respect of Christ, the completion is more signal; that though he dye, yet he should have a numerous posterity, and those begotten, as it were, by his blood-shedding: as Isa. 53.10. when he hath made his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, and this seed of his shall serve him, viz. the multitude of Christians that adore the crucified Saviour; of whom it very agreeably follows, that they shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation, being the men that make up the μέλλων αἰὼν, the future age, (as Christianity is called) of which Christ is stiled ὁ πατὴρ, the father, in the LXXII. their rendring of Isa. 9. 6. If this be not the meaning of the place, then taking the words by themselves, וְנַפְשׁוֹ לֹא חִיָּה and enlivens not his own soul,] must probably be thus supplied, as our English hath it, and none can keep (or more literally to חִיָּה hath kept alive) his own soul: i. e. in relation to David, 'tis God that hath delivered and preserved him, and none else could have done it, being destitute of all worldly aides; and the same by way of pious aphorisme, is appliable to all others, all deliverance from the least to the greatest streight or danger, is totally to be imputed to God. But most eminently and signally to Christ, who being dead in the flesh, was quickened by the spirit; being put to that shameful death of Crucifixion in his humane nature, was raised again by the power of his divine nature; and in that was founded the propagation of the Christian Religion, as the interpretation of that which follows. His seed shall serve him, and be numbred יִסָּפֵר, or accounted to God for a generation. יִסָּפֵר

o. כִּי עָשָׂה V. 31. That he hath done this] Where the Hebrew hath כִּי עָשָׂה that, or, because he hath done it, the Chaldee renders paraphrastically, and in sense, פֻּרְקָנָא דְעַבַד the miracles which he hath wrought. The LXXII. applying it to the people that should be born, reads, ὃν ἐποίησεν ὁ Κύριος, which the Lord hath made, (and so the Latine and Æthiopick, and the Syriack also, save that they read it in the future.) That which is most exact, and according to the letter, will be to render כִּי עָשָׂה because he hath wrought it, by it meaning the righteousness præcedent: so Castellio renders it, ut exponant quâ sit usus justitiâ, that they may shew what righteousness he hath wrought; by righteousness meaning either fidelity, and performance of promise, or more fitly, in the sacred notion of צְדָקָה, benignity, or beneficence. צְדָקָה

The Twenty Third PSALM.

A Psalm of David.

Paraphrase.

The Twenty Third Psalm was composed by David, and is a most passionate expression of Gods abundant care and providence toward all those that faithfully depend on him: (And hath its most eminent completion in Christ, the great Shepheard and Bishop of our souls, of whom that this Psalm is a Prophecy, see Maximus mei ἀγάπ. l. 3. c. β. and l. 2. 55. &c.)

יְיָ רֹעִי לֹא אֶחְסָר׃ 1. The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.

1. The Lord my God is to me (and all that diligently wait on him) as a Pastor is to his flock of sheep, || though it be in a wilderness, he is able to provide for me, I shall not be left destitute.

בִּנְאוֹת דֶּשֶׁא יַרְבִּיצֵנִי עַל מֵי מְנֻחוֹת יְנַהֲלֵנִי׃ 2. He maketh me to ly down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters.

2. He providеth abundantly both for my food and refreshment.

נַפְשִׁי יְשׁוֹבֵב יַנְחֵנִי בְמַעְגְּלֵי צֶדֶק לְמַעַן שְׁמוֹ׃ 3. He || restoreth my soul; he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his names sake.

|| or refresheth, see note on Psal. 19. c.

3. He revives and refreshes and comforts me by his spirit, affords me a full and plenteous baite, and thereby enables me for the hardship of a journey; (as he did Elias, 1 King 19. 8.) and then leads me forth in the even paths of pious duties, gently and carefully, as I am able to goe; by this means directing me to that true felicity even of this life, the exercising my self, and guiding my steps by his excellent laws, and rules of living; and this out of his free mercy to me, the greatest and most valuable that any mortal is capable of.

4. And though this course should engage me in the greatest distresses, the lowest depression of sadness, the most palpable darkness of despair, yet am I chearfully resolved not to be discouraged therewith, or to apprehend it will make me miserable, being confident of the continuance of this special guard about me, and that, as a shepherd still, thou wilt keep me from straying from thee, and protect me from all dangers.

תַּעֲרֹךְ לְפָנַי שֻׁלְחָן נֶגֶד צֹרְרָי דִּשַּׁנְתָּ בַשֶּׁמֶן רֹאשִׁי כּוֹסִי רְוָיָה׃ 5. Thou prepareſt a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oyle; my cup [a] runneth over.

5. Nay more, thou giveſt me that treatment of the most indulgent possessor, 2 Sam. 12. 3. that admitted his beloved lamb unto his table, to eate of his bread, and drink of his cup with him; thou omittest no expression of respect and tender love to me. By this means thou provideſt all plenty for me, maugre the malice of my enemies, who grieve to see the riches of thy bounty to me, and care over me. Thou entertaineſt me with wine and oyle in the most festival manner, affordest me, not only in a sufficient, but in a most plentiful degree, all things that are for the advantage, as well as support, both of my body and soul.

אַךְ טוֹב וָחֶסֶד יִרְדְּפוּנִי כָּל יְמֵי חַיָּי וְשַׁבְתִּי בְּבֵית יְיָ לְאֹרֶךְ יָמִים׃ 6. Surely, || goodnes and mercy shall follow me all the dayes of my life, and I † will [b] dwell in the house of the Lord * for ever.

|| benignity or shall * for length of dayes.

6. And I cannot doubt but this bounty and superabundant mercy of thine shall continue to me all my dayes; and, for my return to thee, I shall most diligently frequent the publick Assembly of thy saints and servants, whereſoever the Ark is placed, and there bless and praise thy name, and address my prayers to thee, as long as I live. (And this is a farther addition to the felicities of my life, that thou wilt afford me this honourable and glorious way of inhabiting in thy sanctuary, and most amicably conversing with thee.) Or to crown all this, thou shalt enfold me at last in that best of sheep-coats, that place of equal purity and safety, where no unclean or ravenous beast can come; there shall I rest, and there abide for ever.

Annotations on Psal. XXIII.

a. רְוָיָה exuberant, read μεθύσκον, inebriating: but this is their ordinary use of the word μεθύω, for drinking liberally, not being intoxicated or drunk. The word רְוָיָה signifies moist, watered, and (watering being a means of making ground fertile) plentiful, exuberant, and so is fitly applied to the festival cup here. But to this the LXXII. add ὡς κράτιστον; the Latine, quam præclarus est? how excellent is it? This they do, by taking the beginning of the next verse, and adding it to the end of this, אַךְ טוֹב, which they therefore render, how good? But that belongs to the consequent words, and so is rendred by the Chaldee בְּרַם טָבְתָא but goodness or benignity, and so the Syriack and the Arabick; who yet finding κράτιστον, in the version of the LXXII. render that there, inebriating as pure wine, accounting that the meaning of κράτιστον, best, the wine which hath no dash of water being such. In this place the LXXII. read πολίτειόν σε, thy cup, and from them the Arabick and Æthiopick; but the Hebrew hath כּוֹסִי my cup, and so the Chaldee and Syriack and Latine; and St. Hierome in his Epistle to Sunia and Fretella, saith, that in the edition of the LXXII. it was my cup, and that thy cup was an error of the Scribes.

a. רְוָיָה

כּוֹסִי

V. 6. Dwell] שִׁבְתִּי which the interlinear regularly renders, I shall return, from שׁוּב which is commonly taken in that sense, is by all the antient Interpreters rendred I shall dwell, אֵתֵב in the Chaldee, κατοικήσω, in the LXXII. and so in the rest, from a second notion of שׁוּב to inhabit, in which we have it, Jer. 42. 10. אִם שׁוֹב תֵּשְׁבוּ. We render it, if ye shall still abide, and the Chaldee אִם מֵתֵב תִּתְבוֹן if by dwelling ye shall dwell, and so the LXXII. ἐὰν καθίζοντες καθίσητε, if ye shall surely abide, and the Arabick, if ye shall remain firm, and the Latine, si quiescentes permanseritis, if ye shall abide quiet, and so the Syriack also. Thus 2 Sam. 19. 32. בְּשִׁבְתּוֹ in his abiding, the Chaldee again בְּמֵיתְבֵהּ in his dwelling at Mahanaim. And that thus it was taken here, is much more probable from their general consent, than that they read (as some imagine) שָׁבְתִּי from שׁבב and not שִׁבְתִּי from שׁוּב, it being ordinary for words of so near alliance, as are

a. שִׁבְתִּי

יָשַׁב to dwell, שׁוּב to return (and I may add שָׁבַת to reſt) to change ſignifications, the one with the other, and ſo to ſignifie the ſame thing; eſpecially when 'tis remembred, that he that is returned to a place, is ſuppoſed to abide for ſome time, and ſo to inhabit there.

The Twenty Fourth PSALM.

Paraphraſe. The Twenty fourth Pſalm, compoſed by David on occaſion of bringing the Ark into Sion, is a declaration of Gods dominion over this world, his providential preſence in every part of it, but his ſpecial preſence in the place aſſigned for his worſhip, the Ark of the Covenant; which is therefore joyfully to be received into Sion, and entertain'd by all Iſrael, being moreover a ſignal emblem of Chriſt's aſcenſion into heaven.

A Pſalm of David.

1, 2. This whole lower orbe of ours (and not only the heaven, where he is ſaid to dwell) is the Lords, by all right of creation, and providence, and preſervation; and ſo are all the ſorts of creatures, and every particular, with which he hath repleniſht it; the Univerſe, and all the inhabitants thereof, produced at firſt, continued ſince, and every minute preſerved by him: for were it not ſo, this globe whereon we dwell would ſuddenly be overwhelmed and covered with waters. For thus the order of nature would direct; and thus we find in the beginning of the creation, that next under the aire were the waters, encompaſſing the whole ſurface of the earth, Gen. 1. 7. till God reformed this courſe, made ſuch cavities in the earth, as ſhould receive the water into them, and ſuch banks, as ſhould bound and keep it in, and ſuch a law, as ſhould bridle this vaſt Ocean, that it ſhould not break forth, Gen. 1. 9. and ſo now by his providence the water is beneath the earth, and yet the earth ſtands firm on that fluid body, as upon the moſt ſolid foundation: which is a mighty work of wiſe diſpoſal and contrivance, for the preſervation of mankind; and though once, for the ſins of the old World, theſe waters were appointed to break out, and ſo overwhelmed the whole earth, yet God hath firmly promiſed that they ſhall never do ſo again.

1. The earth is the Lords and the fulneſs thereof, the world and they that dwell therein.

2. For he hath founded it upon the ſeas, and eſtabliſhed it upon the floods.

3. But though all the whole Univerſe be his, and he effectually preſent in every the ſmalleſt corner thereof, yet in a more peculiar manner will he exhibit himſelf in Mount Sion, at the placing the Ark of the Covenant in it, (that image of heaven it ſelf, the ſpecial place of his reſidence) built on purpoſe for the adoring and worſhipping, and performing ſervice to him. And (as to heaven, ſo) to this, every one promiſcuouſly is not meet to be admitted, nor can expect to partake of his bleſſing auſpicious preſence there;

3. Who ſhall aſcend into the hill of the Lord? and who ſhall ſtand in his holy place?

4. But only ſuch as keep cloſe to the commands of God, that preſerve their minds, as well as their bodies, their inward thoughts and conſents, as well as their external actions, from all forbidden unlawful objects; that never make uſe of perjurious deceitful means for the inriching themſelves, or depriving others, but ſerve and worſhip God uprightly.

4. He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not †lift up his [a] ſoul unto vanity, nor ſworn deceitfully.

† taken his life to a falſity.

5. Such, and none but ſuch, ſhall be accepted, and rewarded by God, at their approach to his Sanctuary, when they pray unto him, and when they moſt want and depend upon his mercy. Though God (in Chriſt) be a Saviour to all ſincere worſhippers, and ſervants of his, none, 'tis ſure, but ſuch, ſhall have part in this ſalvation.

5. He ſhall receive the bleſſing from the Lord, and [b] ‖righteouſneſs from the God of his ſalvation.

‖ or, mercy.

b.

6 Theſe indeed are the men that may properly be ſaid to pray to, and worſhip God; theſe are the true Iſraelites, that are meet to appear before the God of Iſrael, whoſe peculiar preſence is exhibited in the Ark of his Covenant, or that aſſociate themſelves and joyn with thee, O Jacob, in the worſhip of the one true God.

6. This is the generation of them that ſeek him, * ſeek thy face, [c] O Jacob. Selah.

* of Jacob, or, the ſons of Jacob that ſeek thy face.

d.

7. For the admiſſion of this Ark of the Lord to a place where it may long continue, the gates of the Fort of Sion are now to be ſet wide open, thoſe ſtrong invincible gates, as for the cheerful hoſpitable reception and entertainment of that great King, whoſe Palace it is.

7. [d] Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlaſting dores, and the King of glory ſhall come in.

e.

8. And if any aske, what King this is; the anſwer is ready, That powerful omnipotent Lord, that hath wrought all Davids victories for him.

8. Who is the King of glory? the Lord ſtrong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battel.

9, 10. And let this be a ſolemnity to all Iſrael, as for the moſt glorious and welcome news, the placing the Ark of Gods Covenant in the Royal City, and ſo ſecuring to us the preſence of God himſelf, the God of all victory in war, to whom we may daily aſſemble and make our addreſſes, with confidence to be accepted and heard, and ſo be for ever happy, and joyful in his preſence. (This primarily belonging to the bringing the Ark into Sion, doth alſo literally belong to the aſcenſion of Chriſt our Saviour into the higheſt heavens: and ſo the antient Fathers frequently apply it.)

9. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, even lift them up, ye everlaſting dores, and the King of glory ſhall come in.

10. Who is ‖the King of glory? the Lord of hoſts, he is the King of glory. Selah.

‖ this the King הוּא זֶה מֶלֶךְ הַכָּבוֹד

Annotations

Annotations on Pſal. XXIV.

a נָשָׂא V. 4. Lift up his ſoul] That נָשָׂא to take, to lift up, (which is uſed in very many ſenſes, according to the matter to which it belongs) doth ſometimes ſignifie to ſwear by, there is no queſtion. Thus 'tis in the third Commandment, and generally, when it is the taking Gods name: for Gods name being God himſelf, the taking of that is the ſwearing by God; ſee note on נַפְשִׁי Pſal. 16. e. And though applied to נַפְשׁוֹ the ſoul, it frequently in the Pſalmiſt ſignifies ſomewhat elſe, lifting it up in devotion, as it were a ſacrifice to God; yet the conſequents here belonging evidently to perjury, and among the forms of ſwearing, that by the ſoul or life being one, (נִשְׁבַּע בְּנַפְשׁוֹ Am. 6. 8. God hath ſworn by his life, or ſoul) therefore it is here moſt probable to be taken in that ſenſe, eſpecially having לַשָּׁוְא in vain] joyned with it: which again makes it more parallel to that in the third Commandment, where by ἐπιορκεῖν, (ſaith our Saviour, Mat. 5.) perjury is denoted. The only remaining difficulty is, how the נַפְשִׁי is to be rendred, my ſoul, or, his own ſoul. The points direct to render it, my ſoul; and ſo the Interlinear reads, animam meam, my ſoul, or life, as if it were נַפְשִׁי, making God the ſpeaker of this verſe, and then it is, God's life, or ſoul. But the the text writing ' not ', and the context according with it, the punctation muſt in reaſon give place; and accordingly all the antient interpreters appear to have read it נַפְשׁוֹ his ſoul, by that meaning his own ſoul, or the ſoul of the ſwearer. And thus it may probably be. And yet it is as probable alſo, that the Lord being formerly more than once mentioned in this Pſalm, the נַפְשׁוֹ his ſoul, or life] may be the life of God, by whom oaths are wont to be conceived, and are then an acknowledgment of Gods vindicative power, which if it be invoked לַשָּׁוְא to a vain, i. e. a falſe thing, is a huge degree of profaneneſs; and ſo may here fitly be ſet to ſignifie thoſe, that are not meet to be admitted into Gods holy place, where he is to be honoured and worſhipt.

b צְדָקָה V. 5. Righteouſneſs] That צְדָקָה righteouſneſs is oft taken for mercy, is frequently obſerved, (ſee note on Mat. 1. g. and Mat. 6. a.) and ſo 'tis moſt probably to be taken here, being explicative of בְּרָכָה bleſſing] going before, as ἰσχυρὸς, and ἐυλογία, (the two words for bleſſing) benefaction and benediction, are frequently uſed for works of mercy: and thus the LXXII. read it here, ἐλεημοσύνην παρὰ θεοῦ σωτῆρος αὐτοῦ, (and the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick in like manner) mercy from God his Saviour.

c יַעֲקֹב V. 6. O Jacob] What יַעֲקֹב Jacob is ſet to ſignifie here, is uncertain. The LXXII. leaving out the affix of the former word פָּנֶיךָ thy face, and reading it only τὸ πρόσωπον, the face,] for יַעֲקֹב Jacob] read τοῦ θεοῦ Ἰακώβ, of the God of Jacob; and ſo the Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick: but the Syriack, thy face, O God of Jacob, as our Engliſh doth, making an unuſual Elipſis, which they ſupply with [O God of.] But it may be more probable, that Jacob is here ſet (as oft it is) for the children or poſterity of Jacob; as Iſrael the other name of Jacob, is, we know, very frequently uſed for the men or children of Iſrael, the Iſraelites: ſo the Jewiſh Arab here, of the family or poſterity of Jacob: and then two rendrings the words will be capable of. For Jacob, i. e. the children of Jacob, will be a fit appellation for thoſe that are diligent ſeekers of God, truly pious men, and ſo may be joyned with them by apoſition, or as the ſubſtantive, to which that participle is to be annext in conſtruction, though it be placed before it: ſo the Jewiſh Arab, which ſeek the light of thy countenance, of the family, &c. And to this the Chaldee may ſeem to have lookt, who, without any paraphraſe, to illuſtrate it, or ſupply any Elipſis, ſet it juſt as the Hebrew do; only in ſtead of [thy face] they read סְבַר אַפּוֹי the ſight of his face. To this ſenſe the learned Caſtellio reads it, thus expreſly; Jacobæorum qui ſunt ejus præſentiæ cupidi, the Jacobæans or Iſraelites which are deſirous of his preſence, which love, and earneſtly deſire and frequent the aſſemblies where God hath promiſed to exhibit himſelf to thoſe that worthily approach him. But there is alſo a ſecond poſſible and not improbable rendring, to be fetcht from the importance of the phraſe [ſeeking the face,] which is no more than joyning themſelves to another. So Prov. 7. 15. Therefore came I out to meet thee diligently, to ſeek thy face, &c. 'Tis the ſpeech of the whore to the lover, and ſignifies no more then to get into his ſociety, to joyn her ſelf to him. Now the ſons of Jacob being the only people that had the knowledge of God, and that were owned by him, and that ſhould have liberty to enter into the Temple, the holy hill, the repreſentation of heaven, and this priviledge being communicable to Proſelytes, that ſhould come and ſeek, and joyn themſelves to them, and the Prophets oft foretelling, that thus the Nations ſhould flow in to them (which was moſt eminently fulfilled in the Gentiles receiving the faith, and ſo becoming the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, and Jacob, the true Iſraelites;) therefore this may very fitly be the rendring of the words, [that ſeek thy face, O Jacob,] that come in, and are proſelytes to Iſrael, joyn themſelves to them, in the worſhip and lauding of God, and undertaking of his obedience: the ſeeking of Jacobs face, in this ſenſe, being all one with being proſelytes to their Jewiſh Religion, as the προσέρχεσθαι τῷ θεῷ, coming to God, Heb. 11. 6. (the periphraſis of a proſelyte to Chriſt) is all one with ἐκζητεῖν, ſeeking him diligently, in the latter part of that verſe. This interpretation will be yet more commodious, if we ſuppoſe (ſee note d.) this Pſalm ſung by way of antiphona, one chorus anſwering to'ther. For then they to whom the anſwer is given, may fitly be meant by the other, in that phraſe [thy face, O Jacob;] as thoſe that repreſented the whole people, and praiſed God in their name.

d V. 7. Lift up your heads] Where the Hebrew hath שְׂאוּ שְׁעָרִים רָאשֵׁיכֶם lift up O gates your heads, the LXXII. read ἄρατε πύλας οἱ ἄρχοντες ὑμῶν, which may be conſtrued, Ye Princes lift up your gates: ſo the Latine render it, attollite portas principes veſtras, and ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick, and ſo Apollinarius, Τιμῶν ἄνακτα πύλας ἀναίρεσθε ἡγεμόνες,

Ye Rulers lift up your gates. But that rendring can have no accord with the Hebrew, which joynes the affixe כֶם yours to רָאשֵׁי heads, not with שְׁעָרִים gates. 'Tis therefore more probable, that the LXXII. ſet οἱ ἄρχοντες ὑμῶν, your Princes; to render רָאשֵׁיכֶם your heads, ſo inverting the Syntaxis, your heads, or Princes lift up the gates, for, ye gates lift up your heads. But this is a miſrendring of theirs, and the Chaldee and Syriack read, ye gates lift up your heads: what what that is, may next be considered. The gates שְׁעָרִים are specified by the Chaldee to be חַרְעֵי בֵּית מַקְדְּשָׁא the gates of the house of the Sanctuary, i. e. of Sion, whither the Arke was to enter, and to be placed there. The Arke, we know, is called הַכָּבוֹד the glory, 1 Sam. 4. 22. The glory is departed from Israel, for the Ark of God is taken. And God having promised to be present there, he is, as in other, so peculiarly in that respect, here called מֶלֶךְ הַכָּבוֹד the King of glory, and he to come in, when the Ark enters. Now there be some hanging gates, the letting down of which is the shutting of them, and the lifting them up the opening of them. Such are those which we call Portcullis, of use for fortified places, such as Sion was, the strong hold of Sion, 2 Sam. 5. 7. and so the gates of Sion lifting up their heads, is their being opened, for the Ark to come into it. And this, we know, was done with solemnity, 2 Sam. 6. 12. with gladness, saith the text: and this Psalm was either made for that solemnity, or else for the commemorating of it. That these gates in the next words are called פִּתְחֵי עוֹלָם eternal gates, the reason may be taken from the durableness of the matter whereof they were made, as strong holds have iron-gates, or the like. In this place it is not amiss to add of this Psalm, that being designed for so solemn an occasion, as that of the bringing the Arke into Sion, or the commemorating thereof, it was probably sung by way of Antiphona, or response, or alternation. Thus it seems to be practiced at the Encænia, or dedication of the wall, Nehem. 12. the solemnity whereof was performed by drawing up the whole train of Attendants into two companies, or Processions. Then saith Nehemiah v. 31. I appointed שְׁתֵּי תּוֹדוֹת גְּדוֹלוֹת two great companies, or chori וַיְתַהֲלְכוּת and processions, saith the interlinear; we render it, from the vulgar, laudantium, of them that gave thanks; whereof one went on the right hand, and v. 38. the other company of them that gave thanks, went over against them: So stood the two companies of them that gave thanks in the house of the Lord, v. 40. This same usage, on solemn occasions, to divide into two chores (though without respect to alternations) appeareth also more antiently (before this of bringing the Ark to Sion) from the performances on Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal, Deut. 27. 12. where the quires were after this manner divided: Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Joseph, and Benjamin, to bless the people on the one; and Reuben, Gad, Dan, Asher, Zabulon, and Naphtali, on the other, to curse; six on one side, and six on to'ther. And being thus found so long before and so long after this time, 'tis the less to be doubted, but it was practised now, at the bringing of the Ark to Sion. To which purpose 'tis farther to be observed from Psal. 48. (written for the removal of the Arke, and beginning with the solemn form, Let God arise, &c. prescribed in the law for that occasion, Num. 10. 36.) that the manner of this Procession is thus described, v. 24. They see thy goings, O God, the goings of my God and King in the Sanctuary. The singers went before, the players on Instruments followed after; amongst them were the Damsels playing upon the timbrels. One תּוֹדָה company, or chorus of vocall Musick went before the Ark, the other of Instrumental of all kinds followed it. Whereon it follows, Bless ye the Lord in the Congregations (in the plural, these two companies.) And then it cannot be improbable that, as Neh. 12. 40. [So stood the two companies in the house of the Lord;] so here, at the entry of the Ark into Sion, these two chori should be drawn up at the gates on each side of it; and so stand, and the first be supposed to begin with the three first verses of this Psalm, The earth is the Lords, &c. Who shall ascend, &c. to which the other answered in the three following, He that hath clean hands, &c. Then the first resuming their turn, in the seventh verse, Lift up your heads, &c. the other answered in part of the eighth, Who is the King of glory? then the former answering, The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battel; The other resumes again, Lift up your heads, &c. And then the first asking the question, Who is, &c. the second concludes, The Lord of hosts, he is the King of Glory.

The Twenty Fifth PSALM.

‖ To, or, for David. לְדָוִד

A ‖ Pſalm of David.

Paraphraſe.

The Twenty Fifth Pſalm, compoſed by David in ſome time of diſtreſs, is a divine mixture of Prayer for pardon of ſin, and deliverance from evil, and alſo of meditation of Gods gracious dealings with his ſervants.

1. Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my ſoul.

1. O Lord, I have none but thee to whom to addreſs my prayers in times of diſtreſs; to thee therefore I come with the tribute of an humble heart, the offering of a devout ſoul: be thou pleaſed to accept it from me.

2. O my God, I truſt in thee; let me not be aſhamed, let not mine enemies triumph over me.

2. In thee, O my gracious God, do I repoſe all my confidence; O let me not be left deſtitute or forſaken by thee; let not my adverſaries have occaſion to rejoyce and deride me, as one that have been diſappointed, or fruſtrated in my dependences on thee.

† deal perfidiouſly in vain.

3. Yea let none that wait on thee be aſhamed: let them be aſhamed that † tranſgreſs [a] without cauſe.

3. Yea let all thoſe that rely and depend on thee, be conſtantly owned by thee: let not any man that hath repoſed his whole truſt in thee, find himſelf diſappointed: Let that be the fate of treacherous perfidious perſons, thoſe that rely on their own ungodly policies, let them miſcarry and be diſappointed of their hopes, and ſo appear ridiculous among men. (The only way that may moſt probably work reformation in them, Pſal. 83. 16.) 2.

4. Shew me thy wayes, O Lord, teach me thy paths.

4. O Lord, be thou pleaſed by thy ſpecial grace to direct me in the performance of all that may be acceptable in thy ſight.

5. Lead me in thy truth, and teach me; for thou art the God of my ſalvation: on thee do I wait all the day.

5. Preſerve me from all ſtraying and wandring out of the right way. On thee I depend for this, and every minute look up to thee, for the directions and ſupport of thy good ſpirit.

6. Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies, and thy loving kindneſs; for they have been ever of old.

6. Lord, thou haſt allwayes abounded to thy ſervants in compaſſion and bounty, relieved the diſtreſt, and plentifully ſupplyed all wants to thoſe that have addreſt their prayers to thee. Be thou pleaſed at this time thus in mercy to deal with me.

7. Remember not the ſins of my youth, nor my tranſgreſſions: According to thy mercy remember me, for thy goodneſs ſake, O Lord.

7. Lord, the ſins of my younger dayes are many, the breaches innumerable, wherewith I have ignorantly or fooliſhly, for want of knowledge or conſideration, offended againſt thee: Lay them not, I beſeech thee, to my charge; but of thine own free mercy and compaſſion to a wretched ſinner, be thou pleaſed to be reconciled to me, O Lord.

8. Good and upright is the Lord; therefore will he teach ſinners in the way.

8. It is an act of the great purity and juſtice and rectitude of God, to direct and aſſiſt toward the wayes of virtue, all thoſe that are by error and weakneſs fallen away and departed from it, and timely to reduce them to good life.

9. The meek will he guide in judgment, and the meek will he teach his way.

9. Thoſe that are truly humbled before him for their ſins and failings, and devoutly addreſs to him for pardon and grace, he will never fail to allow them his aſſiſtance and direction in the wayes of virtue.

‖ obſerve, take care of; ſee note on Pſalm 119. 2.

10. All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto ſuch as ‖ keep his Covenant and his teſtimonies.

10. God will never fail either in mercy or fidelity any man, that walks diligently and induſtriouſly in obedience to him. The pardon and the grace that he hath promiſed to ſuch, the pardon of all their frailties, and the donation of ſufficient ſtrength to ſupport their weakneſs, ſhall never fail to be performed to them that remain thus faithful to him.

11. For thy names ſake, O Lord, pardon my iniquity, for it is great.

11. I have many wayes greatly ſinned againſt thee, and have no ground of hope for mercy, but only from thy free abundant pardon, which, I know, exceedeth my ſins, and for which I am the more abundantly qualified, by how much my ſtate is more ſadly miſerable, without the interpoſition of this mercy. On that only account therefore of thy free pardon to the greateſt, ſo they be truly penitent ſinners, I beſeech thee to be reconciled unto me, who unfeignedly repent and return to thee.

12. What man is he that feareth the Lord? Him ſhall he teach in the way that he ſhall chuſe.

12. Where the fear of God is planted truly in the heart, there God will not fail of his directions and illuminations, but will certainly afford him knowledge what will be acceptable in his ſight,

13. His

13. And beſide this, all the comforts of this life are his portion here, and his poſterity have a greater aſſurance of proſperity intailed on them, than any other.

13. His ſoul ſhall † dwell at eaſe, and his ſeed ſhall inherit the earth.

† abide in good, תָּלִין בְּטוֹב

b. 14. It is part of the gracious decree and Covenant of God, ſtricken in Chriſt with all thoſe that truly fear and ſerve him, and endeavour ſincerely to do what he commands, never to conceal from them the knowledge of his will ſo far as their practice is concerned in it.

14. * The [b] ſecret of the Lord is among them that fear him, and he will ſhew them his Covenant.

* The Counſel and Covenant of the Lord to them that fear him, is to make known, or reveal to them.

15. Whatever my ſtreits are, I ſhall not fail to wait and attend on thee confidently, aſſuring my ſelf that thou in thy good time wilt deliver me out of them.

15. Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord; for he ſhall pluck my feet out of the net.

c. 16. And now that I am in ſuch a condition, I have no other motive to invite thy mercy, but my ſhewing thee that I have need of it. All humane aids failing me, 'tis now thy ſeaſon to interpoſe for me.

16. Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, for I am [c] deſolate and afflicted.

17. My anxieties and deſtitutions daily increaſe: O be thou pleaſed to deliver me out of them.

17. The ‖ Troubles of my heart are inlarged: O bring thou me out of my diſtreſſes.

‖ preſſures צָרוֹת

18. My ſins, I know, they are, that have brought theſe puniſhments on me: be thou of thine own goodneſs pleaſed to pardon the one, and remove the other.

18. Look upon mine affliction and my pain, and forgive all my ſins.

19. My adverſaries daily increaſe, and their hatred to me is perfectly cauſeleſs. let their power and my innocence move thee at length to chaſtize the one, and vindicate the other.

19. Conſider my enemies, for they are many; and they hate me with † cruel hatred.

† unjuſt חָמָס

20. Preſerve and deliver me out of their hands: my confidence is wholly in thee, O let me not be diſappointed in that hope.

20. O keep my ſoul, and deliver me: let me not be aſhamed, for I put my truſt in thee.

d. 21. Let my innocence be ſupported and defended by thee, for I have none elſe to depend upon. Or, thy mercy and thy fidelity ſhall ſecure me, as one that have no other hold, and therefore wholly depend and rely on thee, that as thou haſt promiſed thou wilt perform for me.

21. ‖ Let [d] integrity and uprightneſs preſerve me, for I waite on thee.

‖ or perfectneſs and uprightneſs ſhall preſerve——

22. And in thy good time deliver all thoſe that rely on thee, from all the difficulties that encumber them.

22. Redeem Iſrael, O God, out of all his troubles.

Annotations on Pſal. XXV.

a. בֶּגֶד רֵיקָם ׀

V. 3. Without a cauſe] בֶּגֶד ſignifies any falſeneſs, perfidiouſneſs, violation of oath or league; and not ſimply any kind of tranſgreſſion, but thoſe of lying, or falſeneſs. The only difficulty is, what is meant by רֵיקָם, that is joyned with it, an adverbe from רִיק inanis, or vaculus, vain, empty, or void. It is by the LXXII. rendred διαχενῆς, by the Latine ſupervacuè, in vain, or to no purpoſe; and it ordinarily belongs to thoſe that do any thing, and receive no reward or advantage by it. So Gen. 31. 42. Surely thou hadſt ſent me away רֵיקָם we render it empty, the LXXII. κενὸν, that is, without any reward for all my labour. So Exod. 23. 15. thou ſhalt not appear before me (i. e. before God) רֵיקָם empty, without ſome preſent to offer him. So 1 Sam. 5. 3. if ye ſend the Ark, ſend it not empty, i. e. without ſome preſents to accompany it. And thus it ſeems to ſignifie here, being applyed to the falſe perfidious perſons, that had violated their faith to David. Thoſe, if they were fruſtrated in their miſchievous deſigns, if they proſpered not, ſhould be perfidious without any reward, and ſo be put to ſhame, rendred ridiculous thereby, as thoſe that are diſappointed of their expectations: and ſo that is the meaning of the phraſe.

b. סוֹד

V. 14. The ſecret] The Hebrew סוֹד, the ſecret, is by the LXXII. rendred κραταίωμα, by the Latine firmamentum, the firmament or foundation, by the Arabick the ſtrength; all either reading יְסוֹד a foundation, or elſe ſuppoſing סוֹד, which is a primitive, to be derived from יָסַד fundavit. But the Chaldee reads it in the notion of סוֹד the ſecret; which ſignifying a thought alſo, or counſel, or conſultation, the Syriack read it to no ill ſenſe, The thought of the Lord is of them that fear him, as thought ſignifies care, or conſultation, and ſollicitude for or about any thing, and ſo the thought of God, his careful providing all that is wanting for them. In the notion of a counſel or conſultation we have it, Gen. 49. 6. My ſoul come not בְּסוֹדָם into their ſecret, i. e. into the conſultations of thoſe brethren in iniquity. And either this notion, or that for a ſecret, may moſt fitly be retein'd in this place. If it be the ſecret, then 'twill be anſwerable to the ſhewing or revealing, that follows in the end of the verſe, וּבְרִיתוֹ לְהוֹדִיעָם, which is thus literally to be rendred; and his Covenant (is) to declare (viz. his ſecrets) to them. So the LXXII. καὶ ἡ διαθήκη αὐτοῦ τοῦ διαλῶσαι αὐτοῖς, and his Covenant of declaring, or, to declare to them; and the Latine, & Teſtamentum ejus ut manifeſtetur iis, and his Teſtament or Covenant is, that it, i. e. the ſecret preceding, be revealed to them, i. e. it is part of Gods Covenant with his faithful, to reveal his will to them, and not to keep it ſecret, ſo that they may know it, and practice it, which without knowing they cannot do. See Deut. 30. 11. And to this ſenſe the Æthiopick paraphraſe it, his law ſhall teach them. And this is no incommodious sense of these words. But then considering that this of the Psalms is a Poetical writing, in which trajections are not unusual or strange, it may, I suppose, yet be more probable, that there should be place here for such an easie trajection, as we observed Psal. 2. 11. and so the whole verse lie in construction thus יבריחו סוד יהוה ליראיו. 'Tis the counsel (or secret) of the Lord, and his Covenant to them that fear him, להודיעם ad notificandum iis, to declare to them, or reveal, or let them know, i.e. to reveal his will unto them, viz. that part of his will, which is so oft mentioned in this Psalm, v. 4, 5. 8, 9, 10, 12. and that which alone is useful for us to know, his will, or Commandments, wherein we are to walk, if ever we hope to be accepted by him. And this I suppose to be the fullest and cleerest rendering of these words, which must be acknowledged to have some obscurity in them.

c. יָחִיד V. 16. Desolate] יָחִיד unus, one,] oft used for unigenitus, an onely-son, doth also signifie a solitary and desolate person; so Psal. 68. 6. God setteth יְחִידִים the solitary in families, i.e. gives them children that had none. So Psal. 22. 20. deliver my soul from the sword, יְחִידָתִי my onely one, i.e. my soul, which is now left destitute, from the power of the dog. and so here, as must be concluded from ועני and afflicted] which is added to it. Yet have the LXXII. rendred it in the other signification, μονογενὴς, onely-begotten; and so the Arabick, onely son: But the Latine more to the letter, unicus & pauper sum ego, I am alone and poor.

d. תֹּם יָשַׁר יִצְּרוּנִי V. 21. Integrity] For תֹּם וְיָשֶׁר integrity and uprightness, in the abstract and singular, the LXXII. read in the concrete and the plural, ἄκακοι καὶ εὐθεῖς, the innocent and right: and then יִצְּרוּנִי from נָצַר to keep or preserve, is by them rendered ἐκολλήθη μοι, stuck, or adhered to me, as if it were from צָרַר colligavit, to be bound up in league with any. But the Chaldee render it clearly, Perfectness and uprightness shall preserve me. And thus also 'tis capable of two sences; one in relation to himself, the other to God. If it refer to David himself, then תֹּם will best be rendred simplicity, that ingredient in Jacobs character, as that is somewhat inferior to goodness, which v. 8. is joyned with uprightness, and both spoken of God, besides whom none is good in that sense, as Christ saith. But it may not unfitly refer to God, and then it will signifie perfectness in the highest degree: and as that denotes the greatest goodness and mercy, as when Christ saith, be you perfect, as your Father in heaven is perfect, Mat. 5. 48. 'tis Luk. 6. 36. be ye merciful, as your heavenly Father is merciful; and then as Psal. 23. 6. we have, Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, referring questionless to Gods goodness, &c. so here it may well be, Perfectness and uprightness, i.e. Gods perfectness and uprightness, his mercy in promising, his fidelity in performing, shall preserve me. תֹּם

The Twenty Sixth PSALM.

A Psalm of David.

Paraphrase.

The Twenty Sixth Psalm was composed by David, as an appeal to God to vindicate his integrity, and deliver him from his enemies.

‖ Plead for, or defend me. שָׁפְטֵנִי

1. ‖ Judge me, O Lord, for I have walked in mine integrity: † I have trusted also in the Lord, therefore I shall [a] not slide.

† and in the Lord I have trusted, I will not be shaken.

1. To thee, O Lord, I appeal for patronage and relief; and to qualifie my self for so great a dignity, am able only to say this for my self, 1. That I have not injured them that invade me, nor by any other wilful prevarication from my duty forfeited thy protection; 2. That I have constantly and immutably reposed my full trust and dependance on thee my only helper. a.

2. Examine me, O Lord, and prove me: [b] try my reins and my heart.

2. For these two I humbly offer my self to thy divine most exact inspection, and examination, even of my most inward thoughts; and if thou seelt good, to thy casting me even into the furnace of affliction, for the approving my sincerity herein. b.

3. For thy loving-kindness is before mine eyes, and I have walked in thy truth.

3. What ever thy trials are, this thou wilt certainly find, that I have never failed to meditate on, delight in, and repose all my trust in thy mercies, and that I have sincerely performed obedience to all thy commandments.

* false שָׁוְא

‖ gone in (see note d.) with flagitious men.

† have not sat; see note d.

4. I have not sat with * vain persons, neither ‖ will I go in with [c] dissemblers.

4. My conversation hath not been tainted with the evil examples of the world; I have not been guilty either of falseness or treachery, or any manner of base unworthy dealing. c.

5. I have hated the congregation of evil doers, and † will not sit with the wicked.

5. On the contrary, I have detested and abhorred all assemblies of those that design such things, and constantly eschewed entring into any of their consultations.

‖ have washt † and compast.

6. I ‖ [d] will wash mine hands in innocency; † so will I compass thine altar, O Lord.

6. I have indeavoured daily so to preserve my thoughts and actions from all impurity, that I might be duly qualified to offer my oblations to thee, with confidence to be accepted of thee; d.

7. That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works.

7. To proclaim to all men, in the solemnest manner, thy abundant rich mercies to those that keep close to thee.

e. 8. O what a pleasure hath it always been to me to come, and offer up my prayers before the Ark, the place where thou art graciously pleased to presentiate and exhibite thy self?

8. Lord, I have loved the e habitation of thy house, and the place * where thine honour dwelleth. * of the tabernacle of thy glory.

9. This I hope may be ground of assurance to me, that thou wilt not deal with me as with wicked and bloody men, that thou wilt not permit me to fall under their fate, to * perish as they do;

9. || Gather not my soul with sinners, nor my life with bloody Men: || Unite not. אַל תֹּאסֵף

* Συναπολέσῃς, LXXII.

10. Who design, and consult, and contrive nothing but injustice, and spare no liberalities that may be useful toward that end.

10. In whose hand is mischief, and their right hand is full of bribes.

11. Out of such mens power and malice be thou pleased to rescue me, who have never yet forfeited mine integrity.

11. But as for me, † I will walk in mine integrity. Redeem me, and be merciful unto me. † I have walkt, so the Syriack and LXXII. and Lat. see note d.

f. 12. I am constant and steady in my adherence and relyance on thee: thou, I know wilt support me, and I will make my most solemn acknowledgments of it to thee. Or, And now what have I to do, but to offer sacrifice to thee, and bless and praise thee for ever in the publick assembly?

12. My foot standeth f || in an even place; in the congregation will I bless the Lord. || or in the plain, or court.

Annotations on Psalm XXVI.

a. אֶמְעָד

V. 1. Slide] The only difficulty in this verse, is, in what sense אֶמְעָד is to be taken. The verbe מָעַד signifies to trip, to totter, to be shaken, or moved, to be ready to fall, inconstant, or not able to stand. And it may be applyed either to the subject matter of his hope, that he shall not be cast down by his enemies, forsaken by God, (and that look't on as a reward of his hope;) and so our English understands it, and accordingly infers it with the illative, therefore: Or else it may be applyed to the hope it self, or David hoping; and then it signifies the constancy of his unshaken hope; that however God deal with David, he will immutably trust in him. And thus I suppose it is to be understood here, if the words be simply read, as they are in the original, thus, Judge me, O Lord, for I have walked in mine integrity, וּבַיהוָה and in the Lord I have trusted, לֹא אֶמְעָד I will not be shaken. Where in his appeal to God he proposeth two things to his trial (examine me——v. 2.) 1. whether he have not continued upright before him; 2. whether he have not, and do not still constantly continue to adhere and depend on him for his protection: which being the two things to qualifie a man for God; audience and acceptance, (sincerity of obedience to, and of trust in God) he may now chearfully appeal to him, and adventure himself to his divine examination. And thus all the antient Interpreters seem to have understood it, none of them interposing the [therefore,] or varying from the simple reading, as our English doth; but, on the contrary, the Arabick interpreting מָעַד by fearing, (which is the shaking of his hope) I have trusted in the Lord, and will not fear,] have confined it to this sense; and so the LXXII. ᾧ ἐπὶ τῷ κυρίῳ ἐλπίζων οὐ μὴ σαλευθῶ, and trusting in the Lord I will not be shaken, or as other copies read, ἀσθενήσω, grow weak: the Latine in like manner, (and the Æthiopick) & in Domino sperans non infirmabor, and hoping in the Lord I will not be weakned, i. e. I do hope, and will continue firm in so doing. To this the learned Castellio hath expresst his sense, Patrocinare, Jehovah, qui me innocenter gero, immotam in Jehova fiduciam habens; O Lord take my part, who behave my self innocently, having an unmoved trust in the Lord. And considering that it is here his request to God to take his part, that which follows in the rest of the period, must in reason be the recital of the qualifications necessarily required to the hearing of this prayer, rather than the inferring or concluding that God will take his part, i. e. that his prayer shall be heard. And this also appears by v. 3. where, having offered himself to Gods examination, v. 2. for the truth of what he had here pretended, he specifies expresly, or instances in these two things; (only by way of ἐπάνοδον, frequent in sacred style, the latter is mentioned first) For thy loving kindness is before mine eyes, (there is his unmoved hope) and I have walked in thy truth, (there is his integrity.)

b. צָרְפָה

V. 2. Try] The Hebrew צָרַף signifies originally so to try, as the metallist doth his gold, by dissolving and melting it. So Psal. 66. 10. thou hast tried me as silver is tried; where the Targum אֶתְחַתְנָא thou hast melted us as the goldsmith melts his silver. So Isa. 47. 10. צְרַפְתִּיךָ I have melted thee——I have tried thee in the crucible of affliction. And thus the LXXII. renders it here, πύρωσον, set on fire; the Latine, Ure, burn; and the Arabick, make to burn. And thus it specially belongs to afflictions, by which, as by fire, such trials are made.

c. נֶעְלָמִים

V. 4. Dissemblers] From עָלַם hiding himself, is נֶעְלָמִים here, which therefore literally signifies those that hide themselves; which because all wicked men desire to do, their actions averting and hating the light, therefore the LXXII. here render it παρανομοῦντας, and the Latine iniqua gerentes, wicked doers, the Arabick, breakers of the Law: and so in sense it is to be rendered, but literally the secret dealers; the greatest wickednesses being those that are most secretly contrived: and accordingly the Chaldee so paraphraseth it, they that hide themselves that they may do ill.

d. יָשַׁטְתִּי

V. 6. I will wash] That the future tense in Hebrew is frequently taken in the preter tense, is known to all. Here the context requires it to be so, both in v. 5. and 6. being all but an explication, or recital at large of what had been said, v. 1. viz. that he had walked in integrity. And therefore as it is, v. 3. I have walked in thy truth, and v. 4. I have not sat, and 5. I have hated; so in all reason must the futures be rendred in the latter part of those verses, 4. and v. 5. I have not; (not I will not) go, and sit. And then by consequence so it must be in this v. 6. I have (not, will, for the future) washt my hands in innocency, and so compast—— Now for the phrase, washing hands in innocency, the LXXII. render it, ἐν ἀθῴοις, i. e. literally, among the guiltless; and so the Latine render it, inter innocentes, among the innocent. But this sure signifies no more than the ordinary reading of the Hebrew imports, to wash the hands in token of innocence. This we know was common among אֶרְחַץ אָשׁוּב אָבוֹא among the Jews (from Deut. 21. 6.) in any ſolemn buſineſs of proteſting innocency, to waſh the hands, as a token of it; and ſo Pilate did, Matth. 27. But it particularly belong'd as a ceremony preparative to praying; for unleſs we come pure to that work, there is no hope to be heard. If I incline to wickedneſs in my heart, the Lord will not hear, ſaith David: and, ſurely the Lord heareth not ſinners, ſaith the man in the Goſpel that was born blind: and Iſa. 1. when you make long prayers, I will not hear, your hands are full of blood; waſh you, make you clean: 'Twas therefore a common uſage among all the Jews, always to waſh before prayers. So ſaith Ariſteas in his Hiſtory of

p. 890. D. the LXXII. Ἔθος ἐστὶ πᾶσι τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις ἀποτιθαμένους τὴν θαλάσσαν τὰς χεῖρας, ὡς ἂν ἤυξαντο πρὸς τὸν θεόν, It is the cuſtom for all the Jews to waſh their hands, as oft as they pray to God: whence the Apoſtle takes that phraſe of lifting up holy hands, 1 Tim. 2. 8. (ſee note [b]. on that chapter.) So in the Tad Tephillah, c. 4. Sect. 2. The hands are to be waſht before prayers. To this belongs the rule of the Jews, that every one ſhould waſh, as ſoon as he riſes in the morning, thereby to prepare himſelf for the reading of the Shemaah, and praying; not accounting him טָהוֹר pure or clean, before he hath waſht his hands in water: and this in imitation of the Prieſts miniſtring in the Sanctuary, who were not to perform any ſacred office till they had poured water out of the Laver, (that was ſet in the Temple to that purpoſe,) and waſht their hands in it. In place of which offices of the Prieſt, is, ſay they, the reading of the Shemaah in the morning, and at other times, which belongs to all, and muſt be prepared for by waſhing. See Mr.
p. 388. Pococks Miſcell. c. 9. This then being premiſed, the only difficulty remaining is, what is meant by incompaſſing the Altar; this referring, no doubt, to the אֶסֹּבְבָה מִזְבַּחֲךָ Prieſts officiating or ſacrificing, at which time he was wont to go about the Altar, (as it here follows in the next verſe) publiſhing and telling of all his wondrous works, (in order to which going about the Altar was adapted) praiſing of God, or praying to him. In reference to this cuſtom of the Prieſts going about the Altar, it is, that the LXXII. Pſal. 27. 6. have theſe words, ἐκύκλωσα καὶ ἔθυσα ἐν τῇ σκηνῇ αὐτοῦ θυσίαν ἀλαλαγμοῦ, I compaſt and ſacrificed in his Tabernacle a ſacrifice of ſhouting; and the Arabick reads טוף to walk about, to perambulate, rendred by the Latine luſtravi, ſo compaſſing, as in a luſtration. The truth סְבִיבוֹתַי is, the Hebrew סְבִיבוֹתַי in that place ſignifies round about me, and ſo is moſt rightly rendered by the LXXII. ἐκύκλωσα, (they ſeem rather to have read it טְבוּחַי) I compaſſed: Yet is that mis-rendering of theirs founded in this cuſtome of the Prieſts going round the Altar, in time of his oblation: And then it being this cuſtom of the Prieſts waſhing before his officiating, from whence came the cuſtom of the peoples waſhing before Prayers, the whole verſe muſt thus be underſtood with reference to the Prieſts practice, who firſt waſht his hands, and then offered ſacrifice, and in offering encompaſt the Altar. In proportion whereto David willing to expreſs his coming with a pure heart to pray to God, doth it by this ſimilitude of a Prieſt, that as a Prieſt waſhes his hands, and then offers oblation, ſo had he conſtantly joyned purity and devotion together; which ſtill belong to the two things mentioned, v. 1. and again, v. 3. as the qualifications to fit him for Gods patronage. The waſhing hands in innocency being perfectly all one with walking innocently, v. 1. walking in thy truth, v. 3. as his Compaſſing Gods Altar, i. e. offering up his prayers in a pious hope and reliance on God, is equivalent with truſting in him, v. 1. and having Gods loving-kindneſs before his eyes, v. 3. And ſo ſtill the decorum is obſerved throughout the Pſalm, and concludes it again, But as for me, I will walk innocently, v. 11. (there is the former) My foot ſtandeth in an even place, v. 12. and ſo ſteady, firm, to ſignifie the ſtability of his hope, (there is the latter.)

V. 8. Habitation] The Hebrew מָעוֹן habitation, [e] מָעוֹן from עוּן to dwell, is here by the LXXII. rendered ἐυπρέπεια, comlineſs, miſreading it, as ſome think, נוֹעַם, by inverting the letters. In another place they render it νεφέλην, a cloud, Zach. 2. 13. as if it had been עָנָן that ſo ſignifies. But 2 Sam. 2. 29. they render it ὀφθαλμὸν, eye, as if it were from עַיִן oculus. And ſo probably they took it here, the eye ſignifying alſo the aſpect, wherein conſiſts the ἐυπρέπεια, or comelineſs of any living thing. The Syriack here render ܫܘܒܚܐ miniſtery; but the Chaldee מְדוֹר habitation. The only queſtion can be, whether by habitation of thy houſe] be meant Davids inhabiting Gods houſe, as Pſal. 27. 4. One thing have I deſired, that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord; or Gods inhabiting it himſelf. And the latter ſeems moſt agreeable, ſo as the habitation of thy houſe, be the houſe which thou inhabiteſt, or מְעוֹן בֵּיתֶךָ by מָעוֹן בֵּיתֶךָ appoſition, thy habitation-houſe, as we uſe in Engliſh a manſion-houſe, i. e. a place for daily habitation, ſuch as the Temple or Tabernacle was to God, having promiſed to be continually preſent there. Anſwerable משכן כבודך to which is the latter phraſe in the verſe, מְקוֹם מִשְׁכַּן כְּבוֹדֶךָ the place of the Tabernacle of thy glory; ſo 'tis literally to be rendred (מִשְׁכַּן Tabernacle, from שָׁכַן habitavit) and ſo the Chaldee reads, and ſo the LXXII. τόπον σκηνώματος δόξης σου, the place of the Tabernacle of thy glory, by glory, as formerly, meaning the Ark which was placed in the Tabernacle.

V. 12. In an even place] From יָשַׁר rectus, equus, planus fuit, is מִישׁוֹר planicies, a plain or valley. So [f] בְּמִישׁוֹר Deut. 3. all the cities מִישׁוֹר of the plain, and the Chaldee מֵישְׁרָא. And then 'tis not improbable, the word may here be uſed for the area, or atrium, the court where the Altar ſtood, and ſo bear ſome analogy with the mention of the Altar, v. 6. the habitation of thy houſe, &c. v. 8. and with the congregation where God is praiſed, in the end of this verſe.

The Twenty Seventh PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The Twenty Seventh Pſalm was compoſed by David in time of his diſtreſs; wherein placing all his truſt and confidence in God, he eſpecially expreſſeth his deſire of returning to the participation of Gods publick ſervice.

A Pſalm of David.

1. Whatſoever my diſtreſſes are, I have a God of might, who will deliver me out of this dark and forlorn condition, will preſerve me ſafe from all the malice of my enemies. It were then great folly in me, to betray any the leaſt fear, or apprehenſion of the dangers that incompaſs me.

1. The Lord is my light and my ſalvation; whom ſhall I fear? The Lord is the ſtrength of my life; of whom ſhall I be afraid?

2. When ungodly men make their approaches againſt me, very bloodily reſolved to devour and deſtroy me utterly, then will God certainly interpoſe his hand, to diſcomfit and diſappoint my foreſt enemies, and reſcue me out of their hands: for thus he hitherto hath done in my greateſt dangers.

2. When the wicked, even mine enemies, and my foes ‖ came upon me to eat up my fleſh, they [a] † ſtumbled and fell.

‖ came near upon me, בְּקָרֹב עָלַי

† or, ſhall ſtumble and fall.

3. Whatſoever the danger be, whether by cloſe ſiege, or by pitcht battail, yet have I ſtill my reliance firm, in confidence of Gods aſſiſtance and relief, and that will keep all fear from me.

3. * Though an hoſt ſhould encamp againſt me, my heart ſhall not fear: ‖ though war ſhould riſe againſt me, in this will I be confident.

* If an hoſt incamp, אִם—

‖ If war riſe—— אִם—

4. There is but one thing that I am much ſollicitous for, or importunate in my Prayers, viz. (not that I be ſetled in my regal throne, which he * ſeems not yet to be, but) that I may have that benefit of peace to partake of Gods publick ſervice in the Aſſembly, and never to be taken off from it, to injoy that ſweetneſs and tranſcendent pleaſure and delight of converſing daily and frequently with God, and receiving counſel and directions from him in all my doubts. The being but for a time deprived of this felicity is indeed matter of ſome ſadneſs to me, from which I daily pray to be releaſed. But beſides this, I have nothing elſe to complain of in my preſent diſtreſſes.

4. One thing have I deſired of the Lord, that I will ſeek after; that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the dayes of my life, to behold the † beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple.

† ſweetneſs בְּנֹעַם

ſo the Chald. and Syr. but the LXXII. τὴν ἀγαθότητα, the Lat. voluptatem, pleaſantneſs

*The LXXII in the Title of the Pſalm add, πρὸ τοῦ χρισθῆναι, before he was anointed.

5. Were I but returned to the Sanctuary, I ſhould look upon it, and make uſe of it as of a refuge of perfect ſafety, to which in any difficulty I might confidently reſort, and be ſecured by God, as in a tower or fortreſs.

5. For in the time of trouble he ſhall hide me in his pavilion; in the ſecret of his Tabernacle ſhall he hide me, he ſhall ſet me up upon a rock.

b. 6. And as now it is, though I am at preſent withheld from that felicity, yet have I confidence that my prayers ſhall be heard, that I ſhall be delivered from mine enemies power, and exalted above them all, and afforded all matter of joy and Sacrifices, when I do come to Sion, and abundant thanksgivings unto God.

6. And now ſhall my head be lifted up above mine enemies ‖ round about me: therefore will I offer in his Tabernacle ſacrifices [b] of † joy; I will ſing, yea I will ſing praiſes unto the Lord.

7. And therefore with this confidence I now offer up my Prayers to thee, O Lord, for mercy and compaſſion, and gracious returns to all my wants.

7. Hear, O Lord, when I cry with my voice; have mercy alſo upon me, and anſwer me.

c. 8. Whatſoever ſupply I lack, my heart directs me whither to apply my ſelf, by reſounding in my ears thoſe gracious words of thine [ſeek ye my face,] calling all, that want any thing, to ask it of thee. To thee therefore I make my addreſs with thine own words of invitation in my mouth, [Thy face, O Lord, will I ſeek] making all my application to thee, and to none other.

d. 12. Permit me not to fall into their power; for as they have begun with ſlander and calumny, ſo will they end, if thou do not divert or with-hold them, in injuſtice and rapine.

* Expect קַוֵּה

14. * Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, f and he shall strengthen thy heart: wait, I say, on the Lord.

14. O my soul, do thou patiently expect Gods leasure; be not discouraged with thy present evils, but arm thy self with constancy and fortitude, and never doubt of Gods seasonable reliefs. f.

Annotations on Psalm XXVII.

a. כָּשְׁלוּ

V. 2. Stumbled] Though כָּשְׁלוּ and נָפְלוּ be in the Preter tense, yet 'tis usual in the Prophetick writings, that these should be taken in the future tense, when the context inclines that way. And so here it doth, being a profession of his confidence in God, that he will deliver him out of his present distresses; as both the antecedents v. 1. and consequents v. 3. make evident. And accordingly it is most probable that here thus it should be, v. 2. and so the Jewish Arab reads, they shall stumble, and fall; and so the learned Castellio renders it, si invadant——offensuri sunt atque casuri, If they invade me, they shall stumble and fall. Though it be also possible, that it may reflect upon his past experiences of Gods mercies, as pledges of his future, and then it may retain the preter tense. And therefore I deemed it safest to take that in also in the Paraphrase.

b. תְּרוּעָה

V. 6. Joy] זִבְחֵי תְרוּעָה sacrifices of jubilation, are those of the solemn feasts, attended not only with the harmony and Musick of the Levites, but the Hosannahs and acclamations of the people. Hence Jeremy compares the military clamours of the victorious Chaldeans in the Temple, to those that were formerly made there in the day of a solemn feast, Lam. 2. 7. They have made a noise in the house of the Lord, as in a day of a solemn feast. And this is that תְּרוּעָה or joyful sound, which they that hear, are by David pronounced blessed, Psal. 89. 15. Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound.

V. 8. My heart] For the meaning of this v. 8. little help will be had from the antient Interpreters. The Syriack leave out a part of it unrendred, and have only thus much, My heart saith unto thee, and my face shall seek thy countenance. The LXXII. (and after them the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick,) in stead of Seek ye my face,] read, I have sought thy face,] Σοὶ εἶπεν ἡ καρδία μου, ἐξεζήτησα τὸ πρόσωπόν σου, τὸ πρόσωπόν σου, Κύριε, ζητήσω, My heart said to thee, I have sought thy face; thy face, Lord, will I seek: and other copies with some change, Σοὶ εἶπεν ἡ καρδία μου, Κύριον ζητήσω. ἐξεζήτησά σε τὸ πρόσωπόν μου, τὸ πρόσωπόν σου, &c. My heart hath said to thee, I will seek the Lord; my face hath sought thee, thy face, Lord, will I seek. But the Chaldee keeps close to the Hebrew, only for [seek ye] reads in the singular seek thou. The full meaning of it will easily be gathered, by reflecting on Gods mercy and kindness unto men, ready to defend them, if they will but call to him for his help. This is conteined in this supposed speech or command of Gods, בַּקְשׁוּ פָנַי seek ye my face,] thereby inviting all to address their prayers to him. This gracious speech of Gods, David here meditates upon, and on it founds his confidence, and in his addresses to Heaven first minds God of this his command, or invitation, or incouragement to all, to seek to him, (that is the meaning of [My soul said to thee, seek ye my face,] laying a foundation of claim in Gods own words;) and then he makes use of this priviledge immediately, answers the invitation in the very words wherein 'twas made, [Thy face, Lord, will I seek.] This Castellio hath paraphrastically expresst, sic animo cogito, velle te tuum quæri conspectum; tuum conspectum, Jova, quæro. I thus think in my mind, that thou wouldst have thy face sought: Thy face, Lord, I seek. The Jewish-Arab hath here another construction, making פָּנַי my face, to govern, and not be governed by the verb, thus; My heart said of thee, O my face, seek him, (because saith he, the other members are at the command of the heart, to do what that bids) therefore will I seek the light of thy countenance, O Lord.

d. יָפֵחַ חָמָס

V. 12. Such as breathe cruelty] For יפח חמס breathers or speakers of injury or rapine, (חָמָס signifying injury or rapine, and פּוּחַ to breathe or speak) the LXXII. read ἐψεύσατο ἡ ἀδικία ἑαυτῇ, iniquity hath lied to, or against it self, and the Latine and Æthiopick (and in effect the Arabick) follow them. How they came thus to vary from the original, is not easie to resolve: what is most probable may be briefly noted. Near unto פּוּחַ to breathe or speak is פַּחַח and פַּח laqueus (from whence is the Greek παγὶς) a snare. One of these the LXXII. may have mistaken for the other. So the learned ‖ Schindler supposeth them to have done, Isai. 42. 22. הַפַּח בַּחוּרִים כֻּלָּם which he renders, all the young men have been puft at, (הַפַּח in the infinitive to be rendered in the preter tense.) To this the Chaldee paraphrase seems to accord, אִתְחַפִּיאוּ בְּהִתָּא were covered with shame or confusion: but the LXXII. read ἡ παγὶς ἐν τοῖς ταμείοις, a snare in their recesses: where as they render בְּחוּרִים ἐν ταμείοις, from חֵדֶר a secret chamber, frequently rendred ταμεῖον, so they took הַפַּח as from פַּח and accordingly rendred it ἡ παγὶς, the snare. And herein the sense favours them there, and our translation hath followed them. And if as there, so here, they deduced יָפֵחַ from פַּח a snare, then taking חָמָס for iniquity in the nominative case, they might thus (by periphrasis) express its being insnared, by its lying against it self.

e. Ἀποσιώπησις.

V. 13. I had fainted] In the Hebrew there is an aposiopesis, a figure of elegance, purposely breaking off in the midst of the speech; yet so as every man can foresee what kind of conclusion should follow, if he did not purposely divert to the contrary. As Neptune in Virgil, *Hos ego——*the beginning of a threat, but then artificially breaking off into an exhortation to prevent it, ——sed motos præstat componere fluctus, but 'tis your best way to quiet the waves: so here, לוּלֵא except, or unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living——. The LXXII. render it Πιστεύω ἰδεῖν, I believe to see (and so the Syriack ܗܝܡܢܬ ܕܐܚܙܐ I believed that I should see, and so the Latine, &c.) not at all rendring לוּלֵא unless, nor taking notice of the figure, or manner of speech, the abrupt breaking off in the midst. But the Chaldee reads just as the Hebrew doth, and thinks not fit to supply what is wanting, but leaves it in suspence. And so sure that is the fullest way of rendring it, that so the figure may be discernible; diſcernible; which conſiſting wholly in the breaking off, or concealing ſomewhat, is loſt, if the ſenſe be made perfect by addition of any other words. The only difficulty is, what is here meant by אֶרֶץ חַיִּים the land of lives, or of the living. And the anſwer will be brief, that though the phraſe may very fitly denote (where the context requires it) the future age, whether as that denotes the age of the Meſſias, or the life eternal after the end of this; and though there is no cauſe of doubt, but that David believed both theſe; yet it being the matter of the whole Pſalm to expreſs his confidence, that God would not now leave him in his preſent diſtreſs, but deliver him out of his enemies hands, and return him home in ſafety and peace; in all reaſon that is to be deemed the meaning of it here alſo, as the land of the living oft ſignifies a proſperous life in this world, but this not excluding, but including alſo his hopes of the other, which much added to his ſupport alſo.

f. V. 14. Shall ſtrengthen] יְאַמֵּץ is literally to be rendred, he ſhall ſtrengthen, and may ſo be applied to God by way of promiſe, that he ſhall ſtrengthen his heart that waits on him. But yet it is alſo to be remembred, that the Hebrews do oft uſe to confound conjugations, and uſe the active in the third perſon, to denote the paſſive in ſome other perſon: Thou fool, this night ſhall they take thy ſoul from thee, i. e. thy ſoul ſhall be taken away: So 2 Sam. 24. 1. And he moved David, i. e. David was moved, (ſee examples in note on Luk. 16. b.) and then ſo it may well be here, be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen thy heart, i. e. (to continue the conſtruction with the antecedents and conſequents) let thy heart be ſtrengthened, (all the imperative) wait on, or expect the Lord. And thus all the antient Interpreters render it: עֹז לִבֵּךְ ſtrengthen thy heart, ſay the Chaldee; κραταιώσθω ἡ καρδία, let your heart be ſtrengthened, ſay the LXXII. and ſo the Syriack ܬܬܬܩܦ and Latine, & confortetur, and the Arabick ſo alſo, (only reading it, my heart, in ſtead of your, reading the whole verſe accordingly, I hope——) So Pſal. 31. 24. and thus in both places the Jewiſh-Arabick Tranſlator renders it.

The Twenty Eighth PSALM.

Paraphraſe. A Pſalm of David.

The Twenty Eighth Pſalm was compoſed by David in time of his diſtreſs, and is a fiducial prayer for deliverance.

a. 1. O Lord, I have no ſtrength or power to defend my ſelf, but that which wholly deſcends from thee. hear and anſwer it gratiouſly; leſt, whilſt I call to thee, and am neglected by thee, my enemies begin to inſult, and account of me, as of a deſtitute loſt perſon.

1. Unto thee will I cry, O Lord, my rock: be not || ſilent to me; * leſt † if thou be ſilent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit.

|| or, deaf דַּחֲרִישׁ

† thou be ſilent, and I be likened--

To thee therefore I make my humble and moſt importunate addreſs: be thou pleaſed to

b. 2. Lord, anſwer my petitions, which ardently and ſolemnly I addreſs unto thee, and ſo, as thou haſt promiſed gratiouſly to anſwer them.

2. Hear the voice of my ſupplications, when I cry unto thee, when I lift up my hands toward thy holy [b] oracle.

c. 3. And let not me be handled in that manner, as wicked unjuſt oppreſſors, and treacherous deſigners are wont to be handled, periſhing in their injurious attempts.

3. * [c] Draw me not away with the wicked, and with the workers of iniquity; which ſpeak peace to their neighbours, but miſchief is in their hearts.

* Seiſe not on me.

d. 4, 5. For them, it is moſt juſt that they ſhould be dealt with as they have dealt, that the ſame meaſure that they have meted to others ſhould be meted to them again. That as they have not heeded God, and his actions, and works of providence, but lived in oppoſition to all his precepts; ſo he, inſtead of proſpering them as they expect, ſhould remarkably blaſt all their attempts, and at length utterly deſtroy them. (ſee note on Pſal. 10. 50.) (But thus ſure thou wilt not deal with me, who have kept cloſe to thee in all my undertakings, have dealt uprightly with all, and attempted nothing but what I have thy warrant for.)

4. Give them according to their deeds, and according to the wickedneſs of their endeavours; give them after the work of their hands, render to them their || [d] deſert.

|| rendring.

5. Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord, nor the operation of his hands, he ſhall deſtroy them, and not build them up.

6. On which grounds I come confidently to thee with my requeſt, and am ſo aſſured of thy hearing and anſwering it graciouſly, that I have nothing to do, but to acknowledge and magnifie thy mercies, as if they were already poured down upon me, ſaying,

6. Bleſſed be the Lord, becauſe he hath heard the voice of my ſupplications.

e. 7. The Lord of heaven is my only fortification and defence. I placed my full truſt in him, and never made applications to any other aids, that humane wiſdom might ſuggeſt, and I am aſſured I ſhall reap the fruit thereof, aſſiſtance and deliverance in due ſeaſon; and therefore I am tranſported with joy, and cannot chuſe but triumph, and exult, and make and ſing hymns for the acknowledging of his mercy.

7. The Lord is my ſtrength and my ſhield; my heart truſted in him, and I am helped: therefore my heart greatly rejoyceth, and [e] with my ſong will I praiſe him.

8. The

* fortress of deliverances,

8. The Lord is their strength; and he is the * [f] saving strength of his anointed.

8. Those that adhere to God shall certainly be protected by him: he will never fail to come seasonably to the rescue of him, whom he hath by his own appointment advanced to the Kingdom.

9. Save thy people, and bless thine inheritance: feed them also, and lift them up for ever.

9. O be thou now pleased to stretch forth thy hand, to rescue thy faithful servants whom thou hast chosen for thy self, to be owned by thee in a peculiar manner: be thou their pastor to take care of them, as of thy flock, and for ever to support them, and raise them up, when they are fallen.

Annotations on Psalm XXVIII.

a. פֶּן תֶּחֱשֶׁה מִמֶּנִּי וְנִמְשַׁלְתִּי

V. 1. Lest if thou] The Hebrew idiome is here observable. The words are literally thus, פֶּן תֶּחֱשֶׁה מִמֶּנִּי Lest thou be silent, or, hold thy peace from me, (from חָשָׁה siluit) וְנִמְשַׁלְתִּי (from מָשַׁל to speak by parable.) Yet here the adverb פֶּן hath no influence on that which immediately follows, for thus the sense bears not, [be not silent, lest thou be silent;] but on that only which is farther off, [lest I be likened—] that in the midst being only taken in, in passage to the latter, and is best rendred in sense, lest thou being silent, or lest whilst thou art silent, I be likened. (This idiome frequently occurs in the sacred writings, and will be useful to be remembred from hence.) The LXXII. render it literally, as it lies in the Hebrew, μήποτε σιωπήσῃς ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, καὶ ὁμοιωθήσομαι, lest thou be silent to me, and I be likened; and so the Latine and Syriack also, and so it must be rendred; the other by [if, or, whilst] being the paraphrase, and not the version, and so used only by the Chaldee, which professeth paraphrasing.

b. דְּבִיר

V. 2. Oracle] From דָּבַר to speak is דְּבִיר, used for the place wherein the Ark was, the holy of holies in the Temple, and so proportionably in the Tabernacle, before the Temple was built: so stiled not only from the Decalogue, or ten דְּבָרִים words, which were put into the Ark; but specially because from the midst of the Cherubim, God was wont to give answer to the Priest, when he inquired of ought, and so to speak there. From this use of it 'tis ordinarily stiled the Oracle, 1 King. 6. 5, 16, 19, 20, 22, 30. and 8. 6, 8. in all which the LXXII. retain the Hebrew word, and render it λόγιον: and so 2 Chron. 3. 15. and 4. 20. and 5. 6, 8. only here they render it ναὸς, not as the Latine takes it in the notion of Templum, but as Ναὸς may best be rendred the Tabernacle, (of the notion of ναὸς see note on Act. 19. e.) or Sanctuary, a part of that, as in the Christian Church Ναὸς is but a part of the σηκὸς or τέμενος, by which words ἱερὸν ὅλον, the whole Church or Temple is signified) and that part particularly, ἐν ᾧ ἡ θεία μυσταγωγία τελεῖται τραπέζης. in which the table of the holy mysteries is set, called also the συνθρόνιον, or altar-place, as we learn from the Scholiast of Nazianzen στηλ. α'. This therefore is the meaning of דְּבִיר קָדְשֶׁךָ thy holy Oracle, in this place, (so Symmachus and Aquila read it, χρηματιστήριον, oracle) the Tabernacle, or Sanctuary wherein the Ark was placed, toward which they used to pray, and expect Gods answers from thence, viz. the granting of their prayers: as when in matters of doubt they sought to the oracle for the resolution of it, the Priest solemnly gave them responses from thence, called also Λόγια, oracles, answerable to the origination of דְּבִיר here, from דָּבַר to speak, (see note on Rom. 3. r.)

Ναὸς.

Λόγια.

אַל תִּמְשְׁכֵנִי

V. 3. Draw] אַל תִּמְשְׁכֵנִי from מָשַׁךְ that signifies both to draw and apprehend, will be best rendered here, seize not on me, as he that seizeth on any to carry or drag him to execution. The Syriack reads ܠܐ ܬܡܢܝܢܝ Number me not with the wicked, seeming to transfer the phrase אֶל תֹּאסֹף Psal. 26. 9. hither, for so that is to be rendred, number not my soul with sinners. In like manner the LXXII. which there read μὴ συναπολέσῃς, destroy me not together with—do here, after they have literally rendred the Hebrew by μὴ συνελκύσῃς, draw not together, add, καὶ μὴ συναπολέσῃς, and destroy not together; hereby evidencing, 1. that the phrase here, and [number not] Psal. 26. are all one; and 2. that the meaning and full importance of both is, destroy me not with the wicked, or in such manner as the wicked are destroyed.

d. גְּמוּלָם

V. 4. Desert] From גָּמַל to retribute, or render, גְּמוּלָם here must most probably be rendred, their retribution, or rendering, i. e. according as they have rendred to others. In v. 3. 'tis said, they speak peace to their neighbour, but imagine mischief, i. e. design the hurt of them that are their neighbours, and deserve no ill of them, and to whom they profess great kindness. This therefore is their גְּמוּל their rendring, as much unkindness and rudeness as can be, and that as little expected from them. And then for God to render them their rendering, (which the LXXII. exactly translate ἀπόδος τὸ ἀνταπόδομα αὐτοῖς αὐτοῖς, render to them their retribution, and so the Chaldee and Latine) is to deal the like measure to them, to bring mischiefs on them unexpectedly; and this, as the clear explication of what is in the beginning of the verse, give them according to their deeds—And thus it belongs to Davids argument to God in the whole Psalm, that he should not be used as wicked men are used, that as he hath dealt unkindly, or treacherously with none, so he should not be forsaken by God, when he stands in most need of the completion of his promise to him.

ו.

V. 7. With my song] In this place the Hebrew being very perspicuous, and void of ambiguity, the LXXII. (and from them the Syriack, Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick) have very far departed from it. The account of it is very hard to be given, unless we suppose them to have read the words otherwise placed, than now they are. We now read וַיַּעֲלֹז לִבִּי וּמִשִּׁירִי אֲהוֹדֶנּוּ and my heart exults, and in my song I will praise him; but the LXXII. καὶ ἀνέθαλεν ἡ σάρξ μου, καὶ ἐκ θελήματός μου ἐξομολογήσομαι αὐτῷ. and my flesh hath reflourished, and from my will I will confess unto him. Here the only way of according this vast difference seems most probably this; to suppose לִבִּי and וּמִשִּׁירִי transposed, and וּמִשִּׁירִי set fore-most, and lightly changed into וּבְשָׂרִי, and my flesh, which being joyned with וַיַּעֲלֹז from עָלַז was merry, (and being applied to plants, flourished, or look green, and so metaphorically applied to a body, when it returns to verdure again) ariseth that part of their rendring, ἀνέθαλεν ἡ σάρξ μου, my flesh reflourished. And then לֵב the heart being not unfitly taken for the will, the other two words לִבִּי אֲהוֹדֶנּוּ with

לִבִּי

with my heart will I praise him, will be naturally enough rendered ἐκ διαλόγου μου ἐξομολογήσομαι αὐτῷ, from my will I will confess to him; הוֹדָה in Hiphil, which we render praise, ordinarily signifying to confess, and that oft taken in the notion of praising. הוֹדָה

f. V. 8. Saving strength] From עוּז was strong, and עוֹ strength, is מָעוֹז a strong place, or fortification. So Jud. 6. 26. build an altar in the top of this (rock, we read but in the margine) strong place. So Dan. 11. 7. and shall enter בְּמָעוֹז into the fortress or strong hold; and so it signifies here, and with ישועות salvations added to it, must be rendered, the fortress or strong hold of deliverances. מָעוֹז יְשׁוּעוֹת

The Twenty Ninth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

A Psalm of David.

The Twenty ninth Psalm seems to have been compo- by David after his subduing the Kings and heathen people, 2 Sam. 8. the Philistines, Moabites, Syrians, &c. whom he therefore inviteth to the service of God, and thus bespeaketh them:

a. b. 1, 2. O ye Governors of the heathen people, which have now experimented the power of God in subduing you, there is nothing so reasonable to be done by you, as to come in, and make your oblations and homage to his sanctuary, and acknowledge his supreme power and dominion over you; to magnifie him in all his glorious attributes, and adore him in that sacred Majesty, wherein he hath revealed himself to the world, but especially to the Jews his peculiar people.

1. Give unto the Lord, [a] ye mighty, give unto the Lord glory and ‖ strength.
2. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his Name; worship the Lord in † the [b] beauty of holiness.

‖ power or empire: see note on Ps. 96. b.
† or, his holy majesty.

c. 3. Gods thunder in the clouds is most terrible over all the people in the world, when it breaks out of them, it is an emblem of his majestick presence, and almighty power, by which he can subdue, when he pleaseth, the most puissant or populous nations on the earth.

3. [c] The voice of the Lord is upon the waters, the God of glory thundereth, the Lord is upon * many waters.

* or, great רַבִּים

4. If he send out these weapons of his, there is no possible resisting; they bring with them an awful reverence to all creatures.

4. The voice of the Lord is powerful; the voice of the Lord is full of majesty.

5. This same thunder rends the stoutest and tallest Cedars in pieces, even those of Libanus, that is famous for them, (an essay, and evidence to all, that at his pleasure the most powerful Princes are subdued; as was lately exemplified in the Syrians, which are near to Lebanon, and were destroyed by David, twenty two thousand of them, that came out to succour the King of Zobah against David, 2 Sam. 8. 5. and became servants to David, v. 6.)

5. The voice of the Lord breaketh the Cedars: yea, the Lord breaketh the Cedars of Lebanon.

d. 6. Both these Syrians that border upon Lebanon, and all the other heathen nations near Mount Hermon, the Amorites, &c. are vanquisht and put to flight, when he once appears to take the part of his anointed.

6. He maketh them also to skip like a calf, [d] Lebanon and [d] Syrion like a young Unicorn.

7. His presence and interposition of his power, signified by this terrible majestick meteor, tears the air, and casts out many darts, or flashes of lightning with it, at once a formidable sound and flames of fire, and withal a succession of those flames: such is the dreadful power, and presence of God against his enemies.

7. The voice of the Lord divideth the flames of fire.

e. 8. And the same omnipotence of his hath ingaged it self for his servant David against the Moabites and Idumæans, and utterly subdued and subjected them to him.

8. The voice of the Lord shaketh the wilderness; the Lord shaketh the wilderness of [e] Kadesh.

f. 9. Puts them into that terrible fright, into which the thunder puts the hinds, when it makes them calve; drives them out of their holds, as the same thunder frights the beasts of the forrest out of their thickets. This therefore is to admonish all the whole world, every man living, to acknowledge his power and glorious Majesty, and come in and worship him, in these or the like words:

9. The voice of the Lord [f] maketh the hinds to calve, and discovereth the forrest: and in his Temple doth every one speak of his glory.

g. 10. The Lord judgeth and ruleth in the clouds, and so he shall continue to do for ever, and subject the proudest nations to his Kingdom.

10. The Lord sitteth upon the [g] floud; yea, the Lord sitteth King for ever.

11. And for those that he hath chosen and taken to himself, and that live constant and faithful in his service, he will protect, and strengthen them, and bestow upon them all the prosperity and felicity in the world, subjecting all their enemies, and restoring them to a durable, lasting peace.

11. The Lord will give strength unto his people; the Lord will bless his people with peace.

Annotations

Annotations on Pſalm XXIX.

a. V. 1. Ye mighty] From אֵיל fortitude is אַיִל and אֵל powerful, ſtrong, of which ſee note on Pſal. 22. a. And though that word come to ſignifie many other things, yet in the plural בְּנֵי אֵלִים is ſure the compellation of Princes, under the phraſe of [ſon of the potent or ſtrong.] Thus is Nebuchadonozor called אֵל גּוֹיִם the Prince of the Nations, or the ſtrong among the Nations, Ezek. 31. 11. Thus אֵילֵי מוֹאָב the Princes, we render, the mighty men of Moab, Exod. 15. 15. and thoſe particularly, in the number of thoſe to whom David is ſuppoſed to ſpeak in this Pſalm, after his ſubduing them, 2 Sam. 8. ſo again, 2 Kin. 24. 15. אֵילֵי הָאָרֶץ the mighty of the land. The Chaldee paraphraſeth this by כְּתִי מַלְאֲכַיָּא בְּנֵי אִילִים the aſſembly of Angels, ſons of God, taking אִילִים for Angels. The Syriack read ܒܢܝ ܬܪܥܐ, which is rendered filios arietum, young rams, in that notion of אַיִל for a ram; though as זָכָר in Hebrew, ſo in Chaldee, and Syriack and Arabick, דְּכַר is the male of any ſort. The LXXII. at leaſt theſe Copies which we have of their Tranſlation, do (as it is not unuſual in other places) render the words twice; firſt in the vocative caſe, by way of compellation, υἱοὶ θεοῦ, ſons of God, and then in the accuſative, υἱοὺς κριῶν, young rams, as doubtful which was to have place, and therefore ſetting down both of them: and in this the Latine and Arabick and Æthiopick follow them. But the plain ſimple rendring it by [ye mighty, or ye Princes] is moſt to be allowed of; and to thoſe this Pſalm is an invitation, that they will, being ſubdued by Gods power, come in to the acknowledgment and worſhip of him.

b. V. 2. Beauty of holineſs] Where the Hebrew reads בְּהַדְרַת in the glory, or beauty of holineſs, from הָדַר to honour, or beautifie, the LXXII. read ἐν αὐλῇ ἁγίᾳ αὐτοῦ, in his holy court, as if it were from חֵיר penetrale, thalamus, area, a cloſet, a marriage-chamber, a court; and ſo the Latine and Syriack follow them, and the Arabick, in his holy habitation: but the Chaldee have בְּשִׁבְהוֹרַת in the ſplendor, or beauty of holineſs, or in the holy beauty or majeſty (as v. 4. the LXXII. render the ſame word הָדָר μεγαλοπρέπεια, majeſty;) meaning thereby either the Ark, which the Prieſts and Levites with their Urim and Thummim carried, and where God was glorioufly preſent, as in the place of his worſhip, (ſee Pſ. 110. note a.) or elſe the ſacred majeſty of God himſelf, ſacrâ præditum majeſtate Jovam, ſaith Caſtellio, Jehovah indued with a ſacred majeſty, the God of heaven and earth, ſo glorious in all his attributes, that all, even heathen men, ought to give all glory and honour to him. This glory he here calls כְּבוֹד שְׁמוֹ the honour of his name, by which his attributes are to be underſtood, his power and dominion over all, &c. which for theſe heathen Princes to acknowledge, is in effect to become his proſelytes, and ſervants.

c. V. 3. The voice of the Lord] That קוֹל voice, in Scripture-ſtyle frequently ſignifies thunder, there is no queſtion; and then there will be ſmall cauſe of doubt, but that קוֹל יְהוָה the voice of the Lord here ſignifieth the ſame, when in the next words it follows, the God of glory thundereth. For this Pſalm being plainly an acknowledgment of Gods majeſtick preſence, and his thunders being in thoſe dayes, 1. the inſtruments ſignally to atteſt that, (as to Joſhua in the firſt conqueſt of Canaan, to Samuel againſt the Philiſtims, 1 Sam. 12. 15. and to David alſo againſt the ſame enemies, which therefore is called Gods rebuking the heathen) and 2. the ordinary means of conveying Gods oracles to them, which therefore were ſtyled בַּת קוֹל the daughter of thunder, and 3. the ceremony of Gods giving the law from Sinai; it was very fit in this Pſalm to make a peculiar elogy of this Majeſtick meteor, which is done throughout the Pſalm. By analogy herewith, the waters upon which this voice is ſaid to be, and the many waters from which, in the next words, he is ſaid to thunder, or to be upon them when he thunders, and the water-floods, upon which he is ſaid to ſit, v. 10. are ſtill thoſe waters (Gen. 1.) above the firmament, the clouds; agreeably to Pſal. 18. 11. He maketh darkneſs his ſecret place, with dark waters and thick clouds to cover him: At the brightneſs that was before him the clouds paſſed, (theſe watery clouds) hailſtones and coals of fire (the thunder ſhafts:) The Lord alſo thundered, &c. And theſe opinions and doctrines of the Jews might move the heathens, to think that they did adorare nubes, & cœli numen, adore the clouds, and that Deity of heaven, which is thus deſcribed in their Prophets to ſit and dwell there.

d. V. 6. Lebanon] Two things are here to be obſerved of Lebanon. Firſt, that it was a very high mountain, and ſeems thence to have taken the name from לָבָן white, in reſpect of the ſnow (mentioned on Lebanon, Jer. 18. 14.) that is always, even in the ſummer, white on the top of it. Thus ſaith Saint Hierome on Jerem. 50. 4. Nix de Libani ſummitatibus deficere non poteſt, nec ullo, ut omnis liqueſcat, ſolis ardore ſuperatur: Snow cannot fail on the tops of Lebanon, nor is it by any heat of the Sun overcome that it ſhould melt. The Chaldee Paraphraſe, Cant. 4. 11. uſeth the word אוּלְבָּנִין Olbanem, in the ſame notion, from אֶלְבֵּן Olben, which is the Syriack formation of לָבָן white. And with this the name of the Alpes, thoſe very high hills, ſeems to have affinity. Album, ſaith Feſtus, quod nos dicimus, à Græco, quod eſt ἄλφον, eſt appellatum, Sabini tamen Alpum dixerant; unde credi poteſt nomen Alpium à candore nivium vocitatum. The word Album, white, is from Alphon, a Greek word, which the Sabines called Alpum; whence the name of the Alpes may be believed to come, ſo called from the whiteneſs of the ſnow. And ſo the Etymologicum; διὰ τὸ πλῆθος τῆς λευκῆς χιόνος Ἄλπεις ἐκλήθη παρὰ τὸ ὄφος, from the multitude of the white ſnow the name of the Alpes is taken. Thus in Crete the tops of Mount Ida, a very high mountain, are called λευκὸς, white, on the ſame account, ſaith Theophraſtus de hiſt. Plant. l. 4. c. 1. ἐν τοῖς Ἰδαίοις ὄρεσι, καὶ ἐν τοῖς λευκοῖς καλουμένοις ἀπὸ τῆς ἄκρου, ὅπερ οὐδέποτε ἐκλείπει χιών, on the top of them there never wants ſnow. The ſecond thing to be noted of this high hill, is, the ſituation of it, that it is in Syria: Λίβανος ὄρος Συρίας, ſaith Stephanus, Libanus is a mountain of Syria. So Strabo, l. 16. There are, ſaith he, two mountains that incloſe Cœlo-Syria, Libanus and Antilibanus; Damaſcus is in Libanus, Zidon in Antilibanus. By both theſe put together we may conclude, what is poetically here meant by the mention of Libanus, viz. the Kings, or chief cities of Syria, firſt ſlaughtered in great multitudes, and then ſubdued by David, 2 Sam. 8. 6. With this is joyned Syrion, verſ. 6. another high mountain, known alſo by the name of Hermon, and Shenir, Deut. 3. 9. (which Hermon the Sidonians call Syrion, and the Ammonites call it Shenir.) So Cant. 4. 8. from the top of Shenir and Hermon. From Shenir it is that the Syriac here call it Sinir: of this St: Hierome de Loc. Hebr. tells us alſo, as of Lebanon, that it was ſo high a mountain, that Snow was to be found on it in the ſummer; and therefore the Chaldee, Deut. 3. 9. call it טוּר הַלְגָּא, the mount of ſnow, and ſo alſo Cant. 4. 8. but here טוּר מַקְרֵי פֵּרוֹ the mountain producing fruit in reſpect of the great fertility of the valleys, which was cauſed by the ſnow-water that came down from it. The ſnow of this mountain, ſaith S. Hierome, de loc. Heb. was carried to Tyre, and ſold there for the cooling of their wines, and was much deſired for the deliciouſneſs thereof; and in that reſpect poſſibly may by the LXXII. be here rendred ὁ ἠγαπημένος, the beloved (and thence by the Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick;) or rather becauſe שְׂרִיוֹן might by them be deduced from שׂוּר and שׂר in the notion of looking earneſtly upon, as on ones moſt beloved, from whence יְשֻׁרוּן Jeſchiron or Jeſchuron (the title of Iſrael) being by ſome * learned men deduced, and convertible into שִׂרְיוֹן, by tranſpoſition of י from the middle to the beginning of the word, is by the LXXII. rendred (as Syrion here) ὁ ἠγαπημένος, the beloved, Iſa. 44. 2. and Deut. 32. 15. This mountain was neer unto Libanus, Pameadi imminens, ſaith ‖ St. Hierome, hanging over the City Pameas (or Paneas, called Πάνιον by Ptolemee) and placed at the root of Libanus. And that gives an account of the conjunction of it here with Lebanon, and being all one with Hermon and Sion, by all which 'tis called by the ſeveral nations bordering on it, the Amorites, &c. and having on the top of it, ſaith St. Hierome, Templum inſigne quod ab Ethnicis cultui habetur, a famous Temple uſed for their worſhip by the Heathens, it is here poetically ſet to denote the heathen nations lying next that mountain on the eaſt of the holy land, (Hermon mons Amorrhæorum, ſaith St. Hierome, &c.) As for וַיַּרְקִידֵם he made them leap, from רָקַד to leap or dance (agreeable to Pſal. 114. 4. the mountains רָקְדוּ skipped like rams, &c.) the LXXII. that render it, Pſal. 114. ἐσκίρτησαν, leaped, do yet here render it λεπτυνεῖ, ſhall beat to powder, reading it, ſaith the Learned Schindler, וַיְדַקֵּם, from הָדַק uſed in that ſenſe; he ſhould have ſaid from הָרַךְ (which is a little more remote, כ for ק, as well as ד for ר) for that is it which he renders contudit, contrivit, beating to powder, from Job 40. But to me it ſeems more probable, that they ſhould uſe this word rather to paraphraſe, than to tranſlate the Hebrew; meaning thereby to ſignifie the putting thoſe nations to flight, diſſipating and ſubduing, and ſo beating them ſmall, as when an Army is routed, it is beaten to pieces.

e. קָדֵשׁ

V. 8. Kadeſh] The wilderneſs of Kadeſh was a vaſt deſet in Arabia, in part whereof the Iſraelites wandered ſo many years, that part wherein is the city of Kadeſh. Of that City it appears by Numb. 20. 16. that it is ſituate in the utmoſt of the borders of the Edomites. (The wilderneſs of Zin in which that is, v. 1. and c. 27. 14. is this wilderneſs of Kadeſh, Numb. 33. 36. Zin which is Kadeſh.) It borders alſo upon the Moabites; and accordingly, Jud. 11. from Kadeſh the Iſraelites are ſaid to have ſent (as to the Edomites, v. 17. ſo) to the King of Moab, in the end of the verſe, for his conſent to paſs through their land; and neither of them conſenting, they went along through the wilderneſs (this wilderneſs of Kadeſh, or Zin, called alſo here by the Chaldee, Recham) and compaſt the land of Edom, and of Moab, and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon, the border of Moab, v. 18. This wilderneſs therefore of Kadeſh is here very fit to ſignifie poetically the Kings or people both of the Edomites and Moabites, both which were terribly ſhaken, i. e. ſubdued by him, 2 Sam. 8. Moab he ſmote—— caſting them down to the ground, and ſo the Moabites became Davids ſervants, v. 2. and he put garriſons throughout all Edom, and all they of Edom became Davids ſervants, verſ. 14.

f. יְחִיל יְחוֹלֵל

V. 9. To calve] As יְחִיל from חוּל to be moved, or ſhaken with griefs or fear, ſignifies the ſubduing and ſubjecting the Moabites, v. 8. ſo from that there is another Synecdochical ſignification of the word, for pangs of travail or bringing forth; and ſo in Hiphil הֵחִיל ſignifies to force, or make bring forth: and in this notion the Chaldee underſtands וְיחוֹלֵל here, applyed to the Hinds, that the voice of the Lord, i. e. the thunder, makes them bring forth their young ones. For thus it is obſerved of that beaſt, that through the hardneſs of the womb they bring forth with much difficulty; but that the noiſe of thunder affrighting them, the womb opens, and they bring forth preſently. This ſeems to be the meaning of the LXXII. alſo, that render it κατορθοῦσαι ἐλάφους, preparing the hinds, viz. to bring forth. This is here ſet poetically to expreſs the great conſternation that the Moabites and Edomites (intimated in the former verſe) were in.

g. מַבּוּל

V. 10. The flood] That מַבּוּל from יָבַל to wither, ſignifies a flood of waters, or deluge, that layes all waſt, is certain. Such was that in Noahs time, vulgarly, and by way of eminence thus ſtiled, הַמַּבּוּל the deluge: and of that the Chaldee underſtands this place, God, ſay they, בְּדַר טוּפָנָא in the generation of the deluge ſat in judgment, and the LXXII. κύριος τὸν κατακλυσμὸν κατοικίει, God ſhall make the deluge to be inhabited, or make the world habitable after it: מַבּוּל קָבַל called back the deluge, ſaith the Syriack; reſtrained it, ſaith the Arabick (rendering יָשַׁב ſits, in the notion of יָשַׁב habitavit.) And thus it may properly be underſtood here, (the only place where the word is uſed, ſave in the ſtory of Noah) as reflecting on the great judgments of God on the old heathen ſinful world, which he ſtill continues (although not in the ſame way of execution) upon the heathen Princes, Davids and his enemies. But it is alſo poſſible, that as [waters] and many waters] ſignifie no more then the clouds, (ſee note c.) ſo here the flood, which is ſtill but a multitude of waters, may be taken for thoſe waters above the firmament, the clouds, or watery meteors, which when they were let looſe upon the old world, the windows of heaven were ſaid to be opened. But theſe withall very fit, poetically to ſignifie the armies of David and Gods enemies, which alſo, if not repreſt, lay waſt as a flood, and come in like a deluge. So a flood of mighty waters ſignifies, Iſa. 28. 2. and the enemies coming in like a flood, Iſa. 59. 19. See Jer. 46. 7, 8. and 47. 2. Dan. 9. 26. and 11. 22. Am. 9. 5. Nah. 1. 8. And in the like, though not the ſame ſtyle, David ſpeaks of his enemies, Pſal. 69. 2. and Pſal. 124. 4. And then Gods ſitting on them, will be his judging and executing puniſhments upon them, i. e. theſe heathen people here formerly mentioned.

The Thirtieth PSALM.

‖ A Pſalm of David, a dedicatory ſong for an houſe, or his houſe.

A Pſalm and ſong at the [a] dedication of the houſe of David.

Paraphraſe. 2.

The Thirtieth Pſalm was compoſed by David to accompany the feſtival at the dedication of his houſe, (the building whereof is mentioned 2 Sam. 5. 11. ſoon after the end of his war with Sauls houſe, and his being anointed King over Iſrael) and is the commemoration of his own great troubles and dangers, and Gods rich mercy in delivering him out of them.

1. I will extol thee, O Lord, for thou haſt † lifted me up, and haſt not made my foes to rejoyce over me.

1. I will magnifie thy mercy, O Lord, who haſt reſtored me peaceably to the throne, out of a very low and well-nigh loſt condition. Gods ſpecial favour to me had exalted me to the throne, and, as I thought, now ſecured me in it: But he was pleaſed for ſome time to withhold my reſt. For as after my firſt crowning I was ſeven years together exerciſed by enemies of the houſe of Saul, 2 Sam. 5. 5. ſo after this ſecond, other troubles aſſaulted me; thereby to inſtruct me, by what tenure it was that I held my ſecurity, meerly by his continued favour and mercy toward me. c.

Annotations on Pſal. XXX.

a. לְדָוִד שִׁיר חֲנֻכַּת הַבַּיִת

Tit. Dedication] The word לְדָוִד is generally uſed in the Titles of Pſalms, to denote the Author to be David, and ſo here may beſt be joyned in conſtruction, a Pſalm of David. Then שִׁיר and חֲנֻכָּה being joyn'd, and made one word by Maccaph, will be a dedicatory ſong. All the difficulty is concerning הַבַּיִת the houſe. For from חָנַךְ to initiate, to inſtruct, and, by a metaphor, to dedicate a houſe, is חֲנֻכָּה the initiation, dedication, either the conſecration of an holy houſe, or Temple, or the dedication, i. e. initiation, or entring on a common houſe new built, when the owner comes firſt to dwell in it: For this was wont to be obſerved and celebrated, as a day of ſolemnity and feſtivity; ſo we ſee (Deut. 20. 5.) care taken for him that hath built a new houſe, and hath not dedicated it, that he ſhall be permitted to return from the battel, as he that hath betrothed a wife, and not taken her, or planted a vineyard, and not eaten of the fruit of it, cuſtom among the Jews having made every one of theſe a ſolemn time of rejoycing. When a man firſt eats in a new houſe, ſay the Jews, he makes a feaſt and rejoyceth himſelf. And thus, I ſuppoſe, it was with David. When he was quietly ſeated in the Kingdom of Iſrael, as well as Judah, and after his taking of Sion, and dwelling in the fort, and calling it the City of David, and building round about from Millo and inward, 2 Sam. 5. 9. at length we read that Hiram King of Tyre ſent Meſſengers to David, and cedar trees, and Carpenters and Maſons, and they built David an houſe, v. 11. And this being finiſhed, this Pſalm may reaſonably be thought to have been fitted by him for a feſtivity, at the ἐγκαινισμὸς, (as the LXXII. render it) the dedication of his houſe. Thus the ſucceeding Church of the Jews have made uſe of this thirtieth Pſalm, at the firſt injoyment of the fruits of the earth, according to that feſtival manner preſcribed Deut. 26. 10. Maimonides tells us, this Pſalm was repeated by the Levites, in the Court of the Sanctuary, over thoſe that brought their baskets on their ſhoulders. And the חֲנוּךְ or dedication of an houſe was of the ſame kind, in a ſolemn and religious manner of entring on the poſſeſſion of it. And 'tis not impoſſible that ſuch days might be kept yearly, as the Natales of men and of cities were; and then here will be place for the conjecture of thoſe, which apply this Dedicatory Pſalm to Davids victorious return from the danger of Abſaloms rebellion. To this the matter of the Pſalm fitly agrees, ſee v. 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 11. And the building of a Royal Palace having been the effect of his eſtabliſhment in his Kingdom, 2 Sam. 5. 'tis not unlikely the feſtival remembrance of it ſhould be in a ſpecial manner obſerved, after ſuch an interruption as this rebellion gave it. The Chaldee indeed read בֵּית מַקְדְּשָׁא the houſe of the Sanctuary, and to that the Emphaſis in the Hebrew הַבַּיִת the houſe, inclines, as if David had built ſome ſuch houſe as he deſigned, 2 Sam. 7. 2. But we know he was not permitted by God to do it, v. 5. but the dignity was reſerved for Solomon, v. 13. Then indeed at the building of the Temple there was a feaſt, and ſong of dedication. Nay, four ſuch we find mentioned among the Jews: the firſt at the building it by Solomon, in Autumn, 1 King. 8. 63. the ſecond in the Spring, at the re-edifying it by Zorobabel, Ezra 6. 16. the third of the Altar, when Judas Maccabæus repaired it, after Antiochus's profanation, in the Winter, Joh. 10. 22. and the fourth at Herods building the ſecond Temple. But this of Davids here cannot be thought (by way of prophecy) to reſpect that, unleſs, as Kimchi fanſies, taking order for the future building of the Temple, 1 Chron. 28. 9. and giving a model of it to Solomon, he gave him alſo this Pſalm for the dedicating it, together with the ſilver and gold and braſs, and other materials for that ſacred work. This conjecture of his was not unfit here to be mentioned. But the Pſalm more probably belongs to his own houſe, which he built new at his being peaceably ſetled in the Kingdom of Iſrael, as well as Judah, and, as 'tis probable, celebrated with an Anniverſary ever after.

b. רֶגַע

V. 5. Moment] From רָגַע ſubito motus eſt, is a moment: but the LXXII. read it ὀργὴ, anger, either becauſe that is a ſuddain commotion of the ſoul, or elſe taking it for רֹגֶז anger; (ſo the Syriack reads ܒܚܡܬܗ in his anger, in the latter part of the verſe) meaning, I ſuppoſe, the effects of his anger, chiding, increpation, (as the Syriack ܒܨܥܪܗ is rendred) or other ſuch puniſhments: for otherwiſe that there ſhould be ὀργὴ ἐν τῷ θυμῷ αὐτοῦ, anger in his anger, would have no great ſenſe in it; and yet thus hath the Latine rendred it, ira in indignatione ejus.

c. לְהַרְרִי עֹז

V. 7. My mountain] לְהַרְרִי עֹז from הָרַר mountain) is literally ſtrength in or on my mountain, referring poſſibly to Sion the hill of David, ſince the time of the Arks being placed there. For thus is עֹז in both the notions, both for praiſe and ſtrength, applyed to the Schechinah, or preſence of God in the Ark or Temple; Pſal. 96. 6. ſtrength and beauty are in his Sanctuary, and Pſal. 132. 8. the Ark of thy ſtrength. And then the ſetting or eſtabliſhing ſtrength on that mountain, may be the placing of the Ark there. But the LXXII. for mountain read τῷ κάλλει, beauty or comelineſs: either reading לְהַדְרִי from הָדַר which ſignifies that, or elſe from the affinity of theſe words both in ſound and ſignification, (הָרַר and הֵדֶר mountain and glory) they thought fit to take in the ſenſe of the one, the more fully to paraphraſe the other. And thus if applyed only to Davids perſon, the ſenſe will bear, being in the Hebrew figurative, הֶעֱמַדְתָּה Thou haſt ſet or eſtabliſht ſtrength on my mountain; but in the LXXII. more clear, περιέθηκας (it ſhould be, I ſuppoſe, παρέσχες) τῷ κάλλει μου δύναμιν, thou haſt afforded ſtrength to my beauty, made my ſplendor (or proſperous ſtate v. 7. firm and durable: which may probably enough be the intire meaning of the phraſe, without referring to the Ark; yet was it not amiſs to mention the other in the Paraphraſe, as the means of his conceived ſafety.

d. שְׁמַע

V. 10. Hear] For שְׁמַע hear thou, the LXXII. read שָׁמַע hath heard, and ſo for הֱיֵה be thou, הָיָה thou haſt been; and ſo convert the petition of David, into a report of Gods having granted it, which is the ſubject of the next verſe.

V. 11. Dancing]

e. מְחוֹל

V. 11. Dancing] From חָלַל to bore, is חָלִיל a pipe, or hollow musical instrument, ordinarily used in singing or dancing, and from thence מָחוֹל here for dancing. So the Chaldee renders it, לְרִקּוּדִין into dancing, and so the Interlineat: and though the copy of the LXXII. antiently, as well as now, read it εἰς χαρὰν, into joy, and so is followed by the Latine, Syriack, and Arabick; yet the conjecture of our learned Country-man Mr. Nic. Fuller is very probable, that their original reading was εἰς χορὸν, to dancing, not εἰς χαρὰν, to gladness, the Hebrew word thus exacting, and the conjunction with מִסְפֵּד, wailing and lamentation not unfitly agreeing thereto, for to that is opposed, and properly succeedeth dancing, see Matth. 9. 17. To this is here added פִּתַּחְתָּ שַׂקִּי, literally, thou hast opened my sackcloth. For in time of mourning the manner was to gird it on, so 2 Sam. 3. 3. Rend your clothes, and gird you with sackcloth, Joel 1. 13. Gird your selves and lament —— and so Isa. 32. 11. gird upon your loyns. In stead of that melancholy cincture, gladness here becomes a cincture, as if sorrow, like a conquered enemy, were to be carried in triumph, adding to the glory of the victory, and taken in as an ingredient in our joy.

L. 3. c. 9.

פִּתַּחְתָּ שַׂקִּי

f. כָּבוֹד

V. 12. My glory] What is here meant by כָּבוֹד glory, is somewhat uncertain. The Chaldee render it יְקָרִי עַל כָּל אַרְעָא the honourable of the earth, that they may praise thee; the Syriack read it, as after the verb of the first person, אזמר לך בכבשי I will sing to thee glory; but the LXXII. ὅπως ἂν, that my glory may sing, and so the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick) in the notion of glory, for the tongue or heart of man, praising God, as elsewhere, and here the context directs to interpret it.

The Thirty Firſt PSALM.

Paraphraſe. TO the chief Muſitian, a Pſalm of David.

The Thirty Firſt Pſalm is an excellent mixture of prayer and praiſes, and conſtant affiance in God: it was compoſed by David, and committed to the Prefect of his Muſick.

1. O Bleſſed Lord, I place my whole affiance and confidence in thee; do not thou forſake and diſappoint me, but make good thy promiſed mercies and deliverances unto me.

1. In thee, O Lord, do I put my truſt, let me never be aſhamed; deliver me in thy righteouſneſs.

2. Receive my prayer, and haſten to my relief: be thou to me as a fortreſs, and place of refuge, whereto I may confidently reſort, and find ſafety.

2. Bow down thine ear to me, deliver me ſpeedily: be thou my ſtrong rock, for an houſe of defence to ſave me.

3. And ſuch indeed have I conſtantly experimented thee to be, whenſoever I have made my applications to thee, thou haſt ſuccoured and ſecured me; and ſo, I do not doubt, thou wilt ſtill continue to do, and (though I have no title of claim thereto, but only thy free mercy and moſt gracious promiſe) direct and conduct me in all my ways.

3. For thou art my rock and my fortreſs; therefore for thy names ſake || lead me, and guide me.

|| or, thou ſhalt lead me תַּנְחֵנִי

4. Reſcue me, I pray thee, out of the miſchief that is treacherouſly prepared and deſigned againſt me, for thou art my only helper.

4. Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me, for thou art my ſtrength.

5. To thee I offer up my very ſoul, that part which alone is worth thy having; to thee I give it in pledge, as to one, that having already wrought ſo many deliverances for me, haſt obliged me to be wholly thine, and withal ingaged thy ſelf by thoſe pawns of thy goodneſs, to do the like again in all my neceſſities.

5. Into thy hand I || commend my ſpirit: thou haſt redeemed me, O Lord God of truth.

|| commit, depoſite, give in pledge. אַפְקִיד

a. 6. I deteſt all the Gentile practices, of conſulting auguries and divinations, which, alas, never ſtand them in any ſtead, deceive and fruſtrate their confidences: All my addreſſes ſhall be made to thee, O Lord, and in thee will I repoſe all my confidence.

6. [a] I have hated them that regard † [a] lying vanities, but I truſt in the Lord.

† or, vanities to no purpoſe.

7. All my delight and joy ſhall be in recounting thy continual goodneſs toward me, how thou haſt regard to my neceſſities, and owned me, and relieved me in my loweſt condition,

7. I will be glad and rejoyce in thy mercy: for thou haſt conſidered my trouble; thou haſt known my ſoul in adverſities;

8. And not delivered me up into the power and malice of my adverſaries, but as yet preſerved me in a ſtate of liberty.

8. And haſt not ſhut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou haſt ſet my feet in a large room.

9. Yet are not my troubles at an end, O Lord; I have long waited for reſt, but have not yet attained to it. This is very grievous unto me, painful to my ſoul, my ſenſitive faculty, and to my bowels, the ſeat of thoſe affections, and of moſt accurate ſenſe: O be thou graciouſly pleaſed to look upon me.

9. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am in trouble; my eye is conſumed with grief, yea, my ſoul and my belly.

b. 10. For the continual diſtreſſes and troubles wherewith I have been exerciſed have even exhauſted me; thy puniſhments for my ſins have brought me very low: I am ready to ſink and fail under them.

10. For my life is ſpent with grief, and my years with ſighing: my ſtrength faileth becauſe of mine [b] iniquity, and my bones are conſumed.

11. My enemies ſcoff at me; and ſo alſo do my friends in a great degree, ſeeing me, after all my confidence, to continue thus helpleſs. This makes them from whom I have moſt reaſon to expect relief, to be afraid to afford me any; and ſo I am avoided, and left deſtitute by all men.

11. I was a reproach among all my enemies, *but eſpecially among my neighbours; and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did ſee me without fled from me.

* and very much וְלִשְׁכֵנַי מְאֹד

12. I am no more conſidered or cared for by them, than as a man dead and buried, and forgotten by his aſſociates. I am lookt on, as one irrecoverably loſt; and am therein reſembled to a potters veſſel, which if broken, cannot be made whole again, Jer. 18. 11. and ſo as that refuſe potſheard, caſt out as good for nothing.

12. I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind, I am like a broken veſſel.

c. 13. Many, and thoſe no mean ones, I have heard reproaching and taunting me, calling me fugitive, a loſt and undone perſon; hereby indeed expreſſing their wiſhes, and enterprizes, being all riſen up in arms againſt me, and jointly reſolving to deſtroy me utterly.

13. For I have heard the ſlander of many; [c] || fear was on every ſide, while they † took counſel together againſt me, they deviſed to take away my life.

|| fear on † aſſembled סָבִיב בְּהִוָּסְדָם ſee note on Pſal. 2. c.

14. But

14. But I trusted in thee, O Lord; I said, Thou art my God.

14. Mean while I reposed my trust in thee, O Lord, incouraging my self with the meditation of thy mercy and tender care, which would certainly secure me.

15. My [d] times are in thy hand: deliver me from the hand of my enemies, and from them that persecute me. d.

15. As for the fittest season of affording me deliverance, it must in all reason be referred to thy choice, O Lord, when thou seest it most opportune, be thou pleased to do it for me.

16. Make thy face to shine upon thy servant: save me for my mercies sake.

16. Restore thy favourable aspect unto me: deliver me of thy great kindness and mercy to me.

17. Let me not be ashamed, O Lord, for I have called upon thee: || let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be [e] † silent in the grave. e.

17. Lord, I have addrest my prayers to thee, relied and depended on thee, thine honour is concerned and ingaged in my preservation; should I be disappointed in my confidence, it would redound to thy reproach. It is the wicked mans portion to expect and miss deliverance, and so to perish with shame and ignominy.

|| or, the wicked shall be ashamed יֵבֹשׁוּ

† or, cut off

18. * Let the lying lips be put to silence, which speak grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous.

18. Thus is it ordinary for the slanderer to be disappointed in his designs, and brought to shame, and so for all others that scoff and deride the faithful servants of God, and that with the greatest pride and contumely.

* or, the lying lips shall —— תֵאָלַמְנָה סְגֹרוּ

19. O how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee, which thou hast wrought for them which trust in thee, before the sons of men!

19. But as for those that serve thee faithfully, and repose their whole trust in thee, and so use no other artifices to advantage themselves, but those which are perfectly allowable in thy sight, there is abundant mercy laid up for them with God, his works of deliverance and exaltation are constantly shewed forth to them, in a visible and eminent manner.

20. Thou shalt hide them || in the [f] secret of thy presence from the pride of man; thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues. f.

20. Thy favour and providence over them, represented by the Cherubims wings in the Ark, is their sure refuge and guard, and defence, whatsoever contentious proud men can design, or threaten against them.

|| with the covering of thy countenance.

21. Blessed be the Lord, for he hath shewed me his marvelous kindness in a strong city.

21. And thus hath God (his Name be ever praised for it) given me evidence of his wonderful mercies, securing me, as in a fortified city, from all the attempts of mine enemies.

22. For I said [g] in my † haste, I am cut off from before thine eyes: nevertheless thou heardest the voice of my supplications, when I cryed unto thee. g.

Annotations on Pſal. XXXI.

a. שְׂנֵאתִי שְׂנֵאתָ שָׁוְא

V. 6. I have hated] שְׂנֵאתִי I have hated, (which the Chaldee retein in like manner in the firſt perſon) the LXXII. render μισησας, thou haſt hated, (and ſo the Latine, Syriack, &c.) miſreading, it ſeems, שְׂנֵאתָ in the ſecond perſon. But שָׁוְא, that follows in the verſe, ſeems to be by them moſt ſignificantly rendred, ἀναιτως, in vain, adverbially, ſo as to affect מְשַׁמְּרִים thoſe that obſerve] precedent, and not to joyn with הַבְלֵי vanities; for if they be ſuch, the addition of lying] will add little to them. The ſenſe lies thus, that heathen men, when any danger or difficulty approacheth them, are ſolemnly wont to apply themſelves to auguries and divinations, and ſo to falſe Gods, to receive advice and directions from them: but doing ſo, and obſerving their reſponſes moſt ſuperſtitiouſly, they yet gain nothing at all by it; their applications and addreſſes are in vain, return them no manner of profit. And theſe David deteſts, and keeps cloſe to God, hopes for no aid but from him. And thus the Latine and Arabick underſtand it alſo, though the Chaldee read paraphraſtically [works like to vanity and a lye,] and the Syriack, [vain worſhips.]

b. בַּעֲוֹנִי עָוֹן עָנִי

V. 10. Iniquity] From עָוָה the verb, is the noun עָוֹן ſin, iniquity; and ſo בַּעֲוֹנִי becauſe of my iniquity. But this the LXXII. read ἐν πλωχείᾳ, in poverty, (and from thence the Syriack and Latine, &c.) as if it were בַּעֲנִי in poverty or affliction. The word עָוֹן as it ſignifies ſin, ſo it ſignifies alſo the puniſhment of ſin, Iſai. 53. 6, 11. and ſo here it ſeems to ſignifie, ſo as to connect with grief, and ſighing precedent, and to denote thoſe miſeries which his ſins had brought upon him. The learned Caſtellio renders it, in hoc ſupplicio, in this puniſhment: and that conſideration perhaps, joyned with the affinity of the word עָנִי, might move the LXXII. &c. to render it poverty, for that, as it is evil, is a puniſhment of ſin.

[c. תָּגוּר רַבִּים

V. 13. Fear was on every ſide] גור ſignifies to dwell, inhabite, and with the prepoſition מ from, to fear, 1 Sam. 18. 14. Job 41. 17. Pſal. 33. 8. Hence מָגוֹר here ſignifying fear, is by the LXXII. rendered in that other ſenſe of inhabiting, (and ſo Pſal. 34. 4. for מְגוּרוֹתַי my fears] ſome copies of the LXXII. have παροικιῶν μου, my habitations, but others read θλιψεων, and the Latine and Arabick tribulationibus,) and as if it were connected with רַבִּים many] foregoing, (which it cannot do) πολλῶν περικύντων κυκλόθεν, of many that dwell on every ſide; whereas the רַבִּים belonging to דִּבַּת going before, the reproach of many or of great ones,] מָגוֹר fear muſt be joyned with מִסָּבִיב following, fear on every ſide, both governed of שָׁמַעְתִּי I have heard, in the beginning of the verſe. For it muſt here be remembred, what Jeremy ſaith to Paſhur, Jer. 20. 3. the Lord, ſaith he, hath not called thee Paſhur, but מָגוֹר מִסָּבִיב, we render it there as a proper name, Magor-Miſſabib, but in the margent, fear round about, or on every ſide; and the interpretation of the phraſe is added, v. 4. For thus ſaith the Lord, I will make thee a terrour to thy ſelf, and to all thy friends, &c. even a deſtruction and deportation, in the end of that verſe. This then was a proverbial phraſe, frequently uſed, and fit for a Prophetick and Poetick writing, to ſignifie utter ruine and deſtruction; and being here uſed by enemies againſt David, as a taunt, it ſignifies their threatning him utter deſtruction. I heard, ſaith he, דִּבַּת רַבִּים the reproach of many, or of great ones: and then 'tis not ſtrange he ſhould ſpecifie and ſet down the very form of their reproach, Fear round about, i. e. an abject, loſt, ruin'd fellow, as elſewhere he mentions their crying Ah, Ah, &c. And ſo this is the moſt perfect rendring of the place. For as to this no-notion of reproach, for which this is proverbially uſed, it is yet more evident from Jer. 20. 10. I heard the defaming of many, Fear on every ſide; juſt as here, I heard the ſlander of many, Fear on every ſide: and as here it follows, they deviſed to take away my life; ſo there, to the like purpoſe, All my familiars waited for my halting, ſaying, he will be entiſed, and we ſhall prevail againſt him, and we ſhall take our revenge on him. Mean-while fear] here muſt be taken, as oft it is in Scripture, for the matter and cauſe of fear, danger. So Iſai. 66. 4. וּמְגוֹרֹתָם and their fears will I bring upon them, i. e. thoſe things which they feared: and ſo Pſal. 34. 4. where 'tis rendred tribulations.

d. עִתֹּתַי

V. 15. Times] From עָתַת opportune fecit, or locutus eſt, doing or ſpeaking opportunely, is עֵת a ſeaſon or opportune time; and ſo עִתֹּתַי ſignifies here, the fit ſeaſons of Gods relieving him. The Chaldee reads it וְמַנֵּי פוּרְקָנִי the times of my redemption. For this the Copies of LXXII. read οἱ κληροι μου, and the Latine from thence ſortes meæ, my lots; and ſo Apollinarius, ωι κληροι, my lots, and the Arabick and Æthiopick, my inheritance. But the Syriack read ܙܒܢ times; and ſo the old Roman Pſaltery, tempora mea, my times: which makes it very probable, that the purer reading of the LXXII. was καιροι μου, my ſeaſons, but that by the Scribes antiently diſguiſed into κληροι μου, my lots.

e. יִדְמוּ

V. 17. Silent] יִדְמוּ from דָּמָה, which ſignifies both to be ſilent and to be cut off, is here by the addition of לִשְׁאוֹל in the grave, confined to the latter ſenſe, cut off, deſtroyed. The Chaldee have been willing to take in both ſignifications, Let them be put to ſilence, and deſcend into the grave; the LXXII. no more than καὶ ἀχθήτωσαν, Let them be brought down——

f. סֵתֶר פָּנֶיךָ

V. 20. Secret of thy preſence] That Gods face or preſence, promiſcuouſly expreſt by פָּנִים his faces, is frequently attributed to the Sanctuary, the peculiar place of his gracious reſidence, appears by the phraſes of ſeeking his face there, and coming before his face, and many the like indications. Now this preſence of his being ſaid to be hid under the wings of the Cherubims, the phraſe here סֵתֶר פָּנֶיךָ the covering of thy countenance, or preſence, is evidently deſigned to ſignifie this bleſſing, preſence and favour of Gods, exhibited in the Sanctuary: as more manifeſtly appears by the enſuing mention of סֻכָּה Pavillion, or Tabernacle, the place of Gods inhabiting, or reſidence. And this very fitly expreſſeth a place or guard of perfect ſecurity; Gods gracious preſence, or interpoſition, being moſt eminently ſuch.

g. בְּחָפְזִי

V. 22. My haſte] חָפַז ſignifies to make haſte, ſo as they that fly; thus Exodus the 12th and the 13th Verſe, they were to eat the Paſſover in haſte: and accordingly according to fly through fear, 2 King. 7. 11. where the LXXII. read σαμβεῖσθαι, to be ſore afraid, as Pſal. 103. 8. 'tis rendred δειλιᾶζειν, to be afraid, and Pſal. 48. 5. ἐσαλεύθησαν, they were ſet a ſhaking: and ſo alſo to be in an amazement, as fearful men are under a terror. In this laſt ſenſe the LXXII. render it here ἔκστασις, aſtoniſhment, or ecſtaſie, the Latine, exceſſus mentis, exceſs of minde, and ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick: but the Syriack reads חפשתי וסחלי in my ſwiftneſs, and the Chaldee more fully בְּאִתְבְּעוּתִי לְמֵעְרוֹק when I ſought to fly. And this is moſt probably the meaning of it, בְּחָפְזוֹ in the time of Davids flight, that his greateſt danger, and exigence (and ſo again, Pſal. 116. 11. בְּחָפְזִי in my flying, the Chaldee read בְּמִסְעַרְקִי when I fled) or in his great fear, ſuch as he was in, when he fled from Saul.

h. אֱמוּנִים נֹצֵר

V. 23. Preſerveth] Where the Hebrew reads אֱמוּנִים נֹצֵר preſerveth the faithful, the Copies which now we have of the LXXII. read ἀληθείας ἐκζητεῖ, requireth truth: but 'tis probable the right reading was ἀληθεῖς: and then ἐκζητεῖν, to require] being uſed by them for Gods avenging, or taking the part of innocent perſons againſt thoſe that injure them, they might well ſet that as the paraphraſe for נֹצֵר Gods preſerving his faithful ſervants, and evidencing this by avenging them on their enemies. But in the latter part of the verſe the difficulty is greater, ariſing from the ambiguity of the word גָּאָה for נָאָה ſignifying elatus eſt, eminuit, that is taken ſometimes in a bad ſenſe, for pride and arrogancy, Pſal. 10. 2. ſometimes in a good ſenſe, for ſplendor, magnificence, ſtrength, excellence. In this latter ſenſe 'tis uſed of God, Pſal. 68. 35. וְעָזּוֹ גַּאֲוָתוֹ, his height, or excellence, and ſtrength are in the clouds. And in this notion of the word עֹשֶׂה גְּאָיוֹת he that doth high things, or excellent things, is a fit title for God, and ſo in conſtruction with וּמְשַׁלֵּם עַל יֶתֶר, and ſhall abundantly reward,] the rendring is very prompt and perſpicuous, the Lord preſerveth the faithful, and he that doth excellent things abundantly rewards them; ſo עַל יֶתֶר from יָתַר abundavit, ſuperfuit, reliquum fuit) is beſt rendered full meaſure, and running over, what they want, and more, ſhall God give them.

גַּאֲוָתוֹ וְעָזּוֹ

The Thirty Second PSALM.

A Pſalm of David, a Maſchil. a.

Paraphraſe.

The Thirty Second Pſalm is principally ſpent in declaration of the nature of true bleſſedneſs, conſiſting in Gods pardon, and juſtification, and was ſet to the tune known by the Title of Maſchil.

1. Bleſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven, whoſe ſin is covered.

1. All the felicity that can be attained to in this life, or in another, depends wholly not on the merit of any mans performances, but only in Gods free and favourable acceptance, his gracious pardon to our many frailties, and fouler ſins, (purchaſed for us by the merit of the ſufferings of the Meſſias, given to the World in Gods free promiſe to Adam, immediately after his fall.)

2. Bleſſed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and b in whom there is no guile.

2. Happy therefore, O thrice happy is he, who is thus accepted by God, whoſe b.

ſtate is ſuch, as that God approveth him (in Chriſt;) who though he have ſinned, yet upon his ſincerity of humiliation, confeſſing and forſaking all known ſin, and his impartial obedience to the whole will of God, (the condition without which Gods reconciliation cannot be regain'd) is by God received again into favour and juſtified. See Rom. 4. 7, 8.

3. When I kept ſilence, my bones waxed old, through my roaring all the day long.

3. Time was, when my condition was very ſad and miſerable; whilſt with horror reflecting on the foul ſins whereof I had been guilty, but not addreſſing my ſelf, as I ought to have done, to thee in confeſſion and contrition, and begging of thy gracious pardon, the weight of the ſorrow conſumed me, my grief was violent and continual.

4. For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me, and c my moiſture is turned into the drought of Summer. Selah.

4. Thy wrath and diſpleaſure, under which I lay, was a moſt unſupportable weight and preſſure; the burthen of it conſumed and wearied me out, ſcorcht and dryed me up, like the earth when 'tis parcht by the ſcorching heat of the Sun about the Summer Solſtice. c.

‖ againſt me my עָלַי פִּשְׁעִי

† or, tookeſt away נָשָׂאתָ

5. I acknowledged my ſin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid: I ſaid, I will confeſs ‖ my tranſgreſſions unto the Lord, and thou † forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin. Selah.

5. But at length, when I better bethought my ſelf, I repaired to, and caſt my ſelf down before God, in true ſorrow and humiliation, confeſſing and bewailing my foul tranſgreſſions, laid all open and bare before him, without any diſguiſe, concealment, or extenuation: inſtead of excuſing, I aggravated my ſin againſt my ſelf: And then immediately upon the ſincerity of my confeſſion (and forſaking) I obtained free and full pardon from God.

* but as for the inundation of great waters.

6. For this ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee in d a time when thou mayeſt be found; * ſurely in the flouds of great waters they ſhall not come nigh unto him.

6. All this being duely conſidered, 1. how bleſſed a thing it is to have God reconciled unto us, 2. what d.

a ſad weight, to lye under the guilt of ſin unpardoned, 3. how ready God is to be reconciled upon our confeſſing and forſaking, is abundantly ſufficient to ſtir up every man, that hath but any the leaſt care of piety, or his own good, to make all poſſible ſpeed to return to God, and implore his favour, leſt by delay ſuch pretious opportunities be loſt; for as for wicked ungodly men, their prayers ſhall never be heeded by God.

c. 7. In the list of the former sort I hope to be found, and so to have thee my refuge, to which I may humbly, but cheerfully resort for relief; and approving my self to thee, rest securely confident, that thou wilt continue to preserve me, and again, as heretofore, bless me with victory, and gratulatory Songs at my return.

7. Thou art my hiding place; thou shalt [e] preserve me from trouble; thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah.

f. 8. Let me therefore instruct thee, thou proud obdurate sinner, teach thee a more regular course, than that which thou art in: I will for once take upon me the severer office of a tutor or guide (so Psal. 34. 11.) and this shall be the sum of my admonition;

8. I will instruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I [f] will || guide thee with mine eye.

|| counsel thee; mine eye upon thee, or, mine eye shall be upon thee.

g. 9. That at length timely you begin to relent, shew your selves docile and tractable, to follow his guidance obediently, and not to imitate the unmanaged horse and mule, that notwithstanding bit and bridle, all means of reducing or subduing them, will not be drawn that way that the owner directs; and such are ye, if when ye are out of the way, departed from God by your sins, ye refuse to obey those divine methods of his, which he useth to reduce you. Those that are tractable he will draw and bring home to him; but as for the obstinate and imperswasible, their condition is very sad.

9. Be ye not as the horse or as the mule, †which have no understanding; whose mouth *must be held in with bit and bridle, ‡ lest they come neer unto thee.

† or, in not understanding.
* shall be, or is held with bit and bridle; yet they come not to thee.

10. But if ye be thus obstinate, ye shall dearly rue it. Wicked men shall gain little by their course; many an heavy stroke is their portion (as it is of the undocile mule, v. 9.) but the obedient and docible, that relyes and waits on God, and in humility and confidence adheres to him, and observes his directions, all the felicities of all sorts are his inheritance.

10. Many sorrows shall be to the wicked; but he that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about.

11. This therefore, to conclude, is abundant matter of joy, and delight, and exultation, to all sincere faithful, and obedient servants of his (though of horror to all others.) Which was the thing undertaken to be proved at the beginning, v. 1. and being so fully deduced, may now conclude, as it began the Psalm.

11. Be glad in the Lord and rejoyce, ye righteous; and shout for joy all ye that are upright in heart.

Annotations on Psal. XXXII.

a. חַמַשְׂכִּיל Tit. Maschil] From שָׂכַל to understand, is מַשְׂכִּיל a wise, prudent, intelligent person. It is here, and twelve times more, used as the title of a Psalm, to denote the sort of melody, the tune to which it was set, (so saith Kimchi on Psal. 3.) known among the Hebrews by that name, from some famous song first set to that tune; either from the wisdom contained in it, as when it is styled Maschil of Heman and Ethan, Psalm 88, and 89. (those being two eminent wise men, 1 King. 4. 31.) or else, as beginning with that word. The Chaldee render it שְׁכָלָא טָבָא a good understanding, the LXXII. συνέσεως, of knowledge, or understanding. More literally it signifies the concrete, the wise or intelligent; but being added to לְדָוִד to or of David, it undoubtedly signifies a Psalm of his, set to that tune, and nothing else; and so in all the other Psalms, where it is prefixt in the title. See note on Psalm 88. b.

b. בְּרוּחוֹ V. 1. In whose spirit] Where the Hebrew hath in his spirit, (which the Syriack, Latine and Æthiopick follow, some reading, in his spirit, some, in his heart, which is all one) the LXXII. as now we have their Translation, have ἐν στόματι αὐτῶν, in their mouth, and so the Arabick also. This, 'tis possible, from the double notion of רוּחַ; either for the spirit and soul, or else for the breath, which is the instrument of speech. But 'tis more probable that some scribe may have thus mistaken, by reason of the affinity of the words, and set στόμα for πνεῦμα, mouth for spirit. S. Hierome in Ep. ad Suniam & Fretil. affirms the LXXII. to have read πνεῦμα, and that στόμα was inserted from Symmachus. רוּחַ

c. V. 4. My moisture] The last part of this, v. 4. is so rendred by the LXXII. and Latine, &c. as hath no affinity with the Hebrew, as now we have it, and as it is understood by the Chaldee. The Hebrew hath נֶהְפַּךְ לְשַׁדִּי בְּחַרְבֹנֵי קָיִץ, The chief difficulty is in לְשַׁדִּי. Yet that is well cleared by the Chaldee, rendring it רְוָטְבִי my freshness, or moisture; and so לְשַׁדִּי is best rendred from שׁוּר or שַׁד a dugge, or breast, (the ל, saith Abu-Walid, being pleonastical) and that from an old word שׁרא to moisten (in which sense the Arabs ثرا) so Num. 11. 8. לְשַׁד הַשֶּׁמֶן, the freshness, or juice, or fatness or moisture of oyle. This, saith the Psalmist, was converted (from הָפַךְ to turne) into the droughts (from חָרַב exaruit) of summer. So קַיִץ signifies from קוּץ tædet, molestum est, because of the wearisomeness of summers heat. But the LXXII. seem to have misread at least three of these words. For נֶהְפַּךְ is turned, they read ἐστράφην, I was turned, as if it had been נֶהְפַּכְתִּי in the first person. For לְשַׁדִּי my moisture, or freshness, they read, εἰς ταλαιπωρίαν, into misery, (in which sense also the Jewish-Arab takes it) as if it were לְשָׁדָה in angustiam (שָׁדָה grief, or calamity, from שָׁדַד proscidit, vastavit.) For בְּחַרְבֹנֵי into droughts, they read ἐν τῷ πεπηγέναι, in being fixt or strucken into, from that old notion of חָרַב, in which חֶרֶב a sword comes from it, the instrument of transfixion; from whence this other notion seems to have been derived, because when an arrow or the like is entred into the flesh, it causeth a burning in it. Lastly, for קַיִץ summer, they read ἀκανθῶν, a prick or thorn, from the same theme. And by thus varying the sense in every word, they have yet given us but another expression of the same matter, fit enough for a paraphrase of the Psalmists great sorrow for sin, thus; I was turned into great misery, when the thorn entred into me, i.e. to signifie the sharp sense of his transgression. The Syriack paraphrase it in a plainer manner, grief turned in my breast to the killing of me; and the Arabick, thou hast reflected on me cares or troubles warring in my heart. But the Jewish-Arab followeth another construction; day and night thy plague is heavy upon me, נֶהְפַּךְ turneth, or is turned upon me, לְשַׁדִּי to the grieving me, or, and grieveth me, בְּחַרְבֹנֵי קָיִץ as the heats, or hot winds of summer.

d. עֵת מְצֹא V. 6. In a time when thou mayest be found] In this v. 6. the weight seems to be laid on עֵת מְצֹא a time of finding, a time when God will hear and grant their prayers: and that suggests another rendring of the latter part of the verse, than the antient Interpreters have taken notice of, thus; רַק לְשֶׁטֶף מַיִם רַבִּים but as for the inundation of many or great waters (hereby signifying the wicked man, that like a torrent breaks over the banks, transgresses the Laws, and sweepes and carries לא יגיעו carries all before him) אליו לא יגיעו they will not come nigh, or at all approach unto him, i. e. to God; they run on obſtinate in their courſe, they care not, nor ever look after God. Thus the oppoſition ſeems to exact: and the change of the perſon from thee to him is no objection againſt it, being frequent in other places of this poetick writing. On this it regularly follows, thou art my hiding place, I deſire to be in the number of the humbly pious, that make a ſeaſonable and ſucceſsful addreſs to thee, and ſo to have my part in thy protection, &c. And then for all other, the obſtinate, &c. I will inſtruct them, v. 8.

e. תצרני V. 7. Preſerve me] The LXXII. their reading here is very far from the Hebrew. For תִּצְּרֵנִי thou ſhalt keep, from נָצַר, they ſeem to have read תְּצֹרְרֵנִי thou haſt beſieged, from צוּר, and ſo render it, רנני περιχύσεις με, beſieging me. For רִנֵּי acclamations, or ſongs, from רָנַן to ſing for joy, they render τὸ ἀγαλλίαμά μου, my rejoycing, as if it were רִנִּי my exultation. Then פַּלֵּט the infinitive, in the notion of the gerund in di, they read as in the Imperative, λύτρωσαί με, deliver me. Laſtly, תְּסוֹבְבֵנִי thou ſhalt incompaſs me, they render ἀπὸ τῶν κυκλούντων με from them that incompaſs me, as if it were מְסוֹבְבַנִי. Thus alſo the Latine, à tribulatione quæ circumdedit me, exaltatio mea, erue me à circumdantibus me, from the tribulation which incompaſt me, my exaltation, deliver me from them that incompaſs me. And ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick. But the Syriack are neareſt the Hebrew, נטלני ופלט, &c. preſerve, or free me, and imbrace, or incompaſs me with glory and deliverance; and the Chaldee exactly according to the Original, thou ſhalt preſerve me from tribulation, with ſongs of redemption ſhalt thou incompaſs me, i. e. with ἐπινίκια, or gratulatory ſongs for victory, ſuch as the joyful matrons meeting him at his return from conqueſt, incompaſſing him, or caſting themſelves into a ring, chanted out unto him, 1 Sam. 18. 6. one ſide anſwering the other.

f. אוֹעֲצָה V. 8. Guide thee] From יָעַץ conſuluit, is אוֹעֲצָה here, I will counſel thee, i. e. direct, inſtruct, or guide thee, meaning the proud and haughty ſinner, v. 6. expreſt by the irregular overflowings of many waters, I will teach thee in what channel thou ſhalt paſs, and ſo guide thy courſe. To which is added עָלַיִךְ עֵינִי mine eye upon thee, by way of explication of the former, I will counſel or guide thee, ſo as the eye of the rider doth the horſe, of the Tutor the Scholar, but eſpecially the guide of an unknown way, who is inſtead of eyes, Num. 10. 31. The Chaldee read, I will counſel thee, and ſet my eye upon thee for good: but the LXXII. ἐπιστηρίσω, I will confirm, or ſtrongly ſet my eye upon thee, moſt probably reading it אֵיתִיצָה from יָצַב to be firm or ſtrong.

g. אֵין הָבִין V. 9. Leſt they come neer unto thee] The difficulty of this, v. 9. will, I conceive, be beſt explicated by obſerving the phraſe אֵין הָבִין: which is literally [not to underſtand,] being in the infinitive mood; but may beſt be rendered in the notion of a gerund, thus, Be not like the horſe and mule, in not underſtanding, i. e. which underſtand not; their [not underſtanding] being the thing, wherein the parallel betwixt ſuch beaſts, and obſtinate men, expreſt by inundation of many waters, v. 6. conſiſts. This being obſerved, בַּל קָרֹב in the end of the verſe, being another infinitive mood, muſt in reaſon agree with that, and in like manner be rendered, in not coming neer, (ſo קָרַב ſignifies, acceſſit, appropinquavit) or they come not neer, אֵלֶיךָ to thee: and then that which is between, בְּמֶתֶג וָרֶסֶן עֶדְיָם לְבִלּוֹם with bit or bridle his jaw or mouth to be held, or muſt be held (as ל with an infinitive mood oft ſignifies, Hoſ. 9. 13. Ephraim לְהוֹצִיא literally, ad educendum, to bring forth, but in ſenſe as we render it, ſhall bring forth,) muſt be underſtood, not as the means to keep the beaſt from coming to or nigh, but as the means deſigned to make the beaſt come to, but when uſed to an obſtinate, unnurtured, unruly beaſt, uneffectual to that end. For it muſt be obſerved what is the uſe of the bit and bridle, when applyed to an horſe, &c. viz. to direct and guide which way the rider or leader will have him go. So Iſa. 30. 28. the bridle in their jaws cauſing them to erre, is a bridle to lead them into a wrong path; as here to lead them into a right way, v. 8. ſo Iſa. 37. 29. a bridle in thy lips to turn thee back, &c. And ſo Jam. 3. 3. the bit in the horſes mouth is to turn about their whole body. But then a ſturdy, untamed, ſtiff-necked, or headſtrong horſe, will not be thus turned, or lead, or perſwaded to do what you would have him; but like the undiſciplinable torrent, the fury of the great waters, v. 6. that would not come nigh him, ſo theſe here, they will not come neer to the owner or maſter. And ſo this is the meaning of the whole verſe: ſome unmanaged horſes and mules there are, which will not be taught or inſtructed, will not go or follow the way that you would teach or lead them, (and ſo this connects with v. 8. which hath tendered them inſtruction and teaching in the way that they ſhould go, and guiding——) are ſo far from being guided with the Maſters eye, v. 8. that his bit and bridle together, the moſt forcible means that are ordinarily uſed, for ſubduing or reducing them, will not work upon them, when they are a turning away and going from thee, are not ſufficient to compel them to come to thee: But ſaith the Pſalmiſt, be not ye like to ſuch ſtiff-necke cattel. Our Engliſh, that renders, leſt they come neer unto thee] ſuppoſeth, without reaſon, that the uſe of the bridle is to keep the horſe and mule from doing violence to thee, as if they were Bears and Tigers, and the like ravenous beaſts. The true uſe is quite contrary, to make them come to thee, or go, or turn, the way that thou wouldſt have them; and their not doing ſo (meant by בַּל קָרֹב אֵלֶיךָ not come neer thee) is the effect of their obſtinacy and want of managery, and that is it wherein we are here forbidden to be like them. Thus I ſuppoſe the Chaldees לא יתקרב is to be rendred; not, ne accedant, but, non accedent, they will not come to thee. So the Syriack expreſly, Be not like the horſe and mule which are not wiſe, (or docile) which they tame with a bridle from their youth, and they come not to him. And the LXXII. to the ſame effect, ἐν χαλινῷ καὶ φιμῷ τὰς σιαγόνας αὐτῶν ἄγξαι τῶν μὴ ἐγγιζόντων σοὶ σύ, bind their jaws with bit and bridle which come not neer to thee; and ſo the Latine, and Æthiopick. But the Arabick more looſely, by way of paraphraſe, Be not like horſe and mule, which have not underſtanding, and are not drawn with the bridles that are in their mouths; ſo do thou repreſs the jaws of thoſe that come not to thee.

The Thirty Third PSALM.

Paraphrase.

THe Thirty Third Psalm is an acknowledgment of the great power and wisdom and goodness of God, in his Works of Creation and Providence, wherein all are obliged to sing praises to his Name, and faithfully to serve and depend on him.

1. O bless and magnifie the name of God, all ye that apply your selves to a careful performance of all offices of Justice and goodness, and herein delight and please your selves. 'Tis the employment of the blessed Saints in heaven, to be continually singing praises to God; and there can be none other more proper for Saints on earth, who have innumerable obligations to it, and from whom it is most graciously accepted by God, and to whom it is also matter of the greatest present delight, to be busied in recounting Gods glories, and abundant mercies to them.

1. Rejoyce in the Lord, O ye righteous; for praise is || comely for the upright. || or, desireable, [illegible]

a. 2. To this purpose those musical instruments that are in use among men in Festivities, the Harp and Viol, &c. will be most fitly used in the singing of Psalms and Hymns unto God.

2. Praise the Lord with harp, sing unto him with the || Psaltery, and an [a] instrument of ten strings. || Psaltery of ten strings.

3. And the choisest and rarest ditties, and the best composed Musick, and the most excellent melodious voices, are all to be called in, to perform this great duty of thanksgiving unto God.

3. Sing unto the Lord a new song; play skilfully with a loud noise.

4. For all that God saith or doth is excellently good; his commands are of those things which are infinitely best for us, his promises abundantly gracious, and certain to be performed, and his very threats and prohibitions acts of special mercy, to keep us from those things which are most pernicious to us. As for all his works of providence, they are most just and merciful.

4. For the word of the Lord is right, and all his works are done in truth.

5. Mercifulness and justice are of all things in the world most approved and valued by him, and are by him exemplified to us, in all the daily acts of his providence among us.

5. He loveth righteousness and judgment: the earth is full of the goodness of the Lord.

6. The whole body of the heavens and all that is in them, the Sun, Moon, and all the Planets and lesser Stars, were created by his bare speaking the word, commanding that they should have a being. Which as it is a most illustrious evidence of his absolute omnipotence, so is it of his great goodness also to us, for whose benefit they were all created.

6. By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.

b. 7. So in like manner did he sever the waters, which covered the face of the earth, and confined them to hollow places; where though they swell much higher then the shore, yet they do not overrun it, but are gathered into a round gibbous form, and so remain constant within their channel. And in those vast cavities of an unfathomable depth he hath laid up the whole Ocean, as safe, and as far from hurting, or drowning, or overrunning the earth, as corn laid up in a granary, as money in a treasury, is safe from running out of it. (A joynt evidence again of his infinite power and goodness.)

7. He gathereth the waters of the Sea together, [b] as an heap; † he layeth up the deep in store-houses. † he layeth them up in the store-houses of the deep.

8. As therefore he is thus able to set bounds to that vast element, so can he and doth he to the most enormous power of men; which may therefore be a just cause of awe and dread to all the men in the world.

8. Let all the earth fear the Lord; let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him.

9. For as a bare word of his immediately created all the world; so is every command of his now most certainly obeyed: as he pleaseth to dispose, so shall it infallibly be.

9. For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast.

c. 10. Whatsoever godless men (see note on Psal. 10. m.) design, or propose to themselves, contrary to his will, he blastes and frustrates it, dissipates all their contrivances, be they never so prudently managed by whole multitudes and assemblies of them.

10. The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought; he maketh the devices of the people of none effect. [c]

11. Onely that which he hath decreed and purposed, shall immutably come to pass.

11. The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations.

12. O then, thrice happy is that Nation and people, which have betaken themselves to the sincere service of so great, and powerful, and gracious a God, and whom he hath in so special a sort made choice of, to be peculiarly his, among them to reveal himself in so eminent a manner.

12. Blessed is the man whose God is the Lord, and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance.

13. The

13. The Lord looketh from heaven, he beholdeth all the ſons of men:
14. From the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth.

13, 14. All the men that are in the earth, the inhabitants of the whole world are within the compaſs of his moſt particular providence: though he reſide in heaven, in a peculiar manner; yet from thence he exactly ſurveighs and beholds all and every their actions, and even moſt ſecret thoughts.

15. He faſhioneth their hearts ‖ alike; he conſidereth all their thoughts.

‖ together, or, one by one.

15. As he is ſeverally and equally the creator of them all, and former of their ſouls, as well as bodies, ſo he is certainly able to diſcern particularly all the operations of their very hearts; and is no idle ſpectator, but weigheth and and judgeth all, and accordingly rewards every man.

16. There is no King ſaved by the multitude of an hoſt: a mighty man is not delivered by much ſtrength.

16. 'Tis not the multitude or ſtrength of an Army, that hath power to ſecure any Potentate; not the valour or puiſſance of the moſt giantly perſon, to preſerve himſelf.

17. An horſe is a † vain thing for ſafety, neither ſhall he deliver any by his great ſtrength.

† עֶקֶר וּ

17. An horſe is the moſt vallant and docile beaſt, and generally the moſt uſed in Military affairs, in reſpect both of his courage, and ſwifneſs, vigour, and activity: yet he that depends thereon for his ſafety, or good ſucceſs in a battel, oft finds him a very deceitful falſe aid, is pitifully diſappointed by him.

18. Behold the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy,

18. The only ſecurity is to be ſought from the favour and protection of God; and the way to qualifie our ſelves for that is, by conjoyning our uniform ſincere obedience to him, and our unſhaken conſtant relyance on his mercy.

19. To deliver their ſoul from death, and to keep them alive in famine.

19. To ſuch as are thus qualified, his protection will not fail, whatſoever the danger be, how great ſoever the ſeeming deſtitution.

20. Our ſoul * waiteth for the Lord: he is our help and our ſhield.

* נַפְשֵׁנוּ חִכְּתָה

20. The Lord is our only aid and protector; to him therefore is all the deſire of our ſouls.

21. For our heart ſhall rejoyce in him, becauſe we have truſted in his holy name.

21. And whatſoever befalls us, we ſhall moſt cheerfully (and not only patiently) ſupport it, as having full aſſurance, and confidence in him, that he will either reſcue us out of it, or elſe convert it to our greateſt advantage.

22. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us, according as we hope in thee.

22. O Lord, our full truſt is in thee; let thy mercy come down upon us, we beſeech thee.

a. נֵבֶל

V. 2. Inſtrument of ten ſtrings] From נָבַל aruit, emarcuit, to be ſhriveld or withered, is נֵבֶל a leathern bottle, or veſſel to put wine in, 1 Sam. 1.24. and from the likeneſs, a muſical inſtrument, called nablium in Latine, De Arte Am. l. iii.

Diſce etiam duplici genialia nablia palmâ.
Vertere, conveniunt dulcibus illa modis.

in Ovid. Anſwerable to it is the Greek ψαλτήριον, (and ſo 'tis here rendred by the LXXII.) of which Grammarians tell us, that it is an inſtrument more ſweet and pleaſant than a harp; like it in forme, but differing from it. Accordingly we render it ſometimes a Pſaltery, as here, and Pſal. 144. 9. ſometimes a Viol, Iſa. 14. 11. As for עָשׂוֹר, which is added to it, and ſignifies decachord, or inſtrument of ten ſtrings, it is not ſet (as here, and Pſal. 144. 11. it is in our Engliſh) for a third ſort of Inſtrument, but in appoſition with נֵבֶל, a Pſaltery or Viol of ten ſtrings. And ſo all the antient Interpreters uniformly render it: the LXXII. ἐν ψαλτηρίῳ δεκαχόρδῳ, on a decachord Pſaltery; the Chaldee בנבלא ועסרתי ניסין on a nablium of ten ſtrings; who yet Pſal. 92. 4. where עָשׂוֹר and נֵבֶל are diſjoyned, עלי עשור ועלי נבל upon the decachord, and upon the Pſaltery] render it, upon the harp of ten ſtrings, and upon the nablium,] ſignifying that of ten ſtrings to belong to both Harp and Pſaltery, cithara and nablium, which yet (as was ſaid) differ one from the other.

עָשׂוֹר

V. 7. As an heap] From נוּר and נָדַר to be moved, to flie, is נֵד an heap, and נאד a bladder, or skin, or bottle. In this place all the antient interpreters ſeem to have read the latter of theſe נֹאד, as a bottle; ſignifying the waters of the Sea to be ſo kept within the banks, as water is which is put into a bottle. And ſo in like manner it is rendred, Pſal. 78. 13. where yet it belongs to another matter, the receding of the red ſea to the Iſraelites, and not the framing of the Ocean in the creation. But the modern copies of the Hebrew have in both places נֵגֶד, which is beſt rendred, as an heap. Thus the word is uſed, Exod. 15. 8. the floods ſtood up נִצְּבוּ נֹזְלִים כְּמוֹ נֵד as an heap: where the Targum read כשור as a wall; the LXXII. ὡσεὶ τεῖχος, as a wall; and ſo the Samaritan; the Arabick, as mountains: but the Syriack, as in bottles (ſo as here,) but certainly amiſs, as will appear from the paſſage of ſtorie (both there and Pſal. 78. referred to) Exod. 14. 22. where 'tis ſaid, that the waters were a wall unto them. In this variety, the context here will be fitteſt to determine, and that may be thought in one reſpect to incline it in this one place to the former ſenſe, in which the ancient interpreters read

b. נֹאד

it, ὡσεὶ ἀσκὸς, as a bottle. For the matter in hand is the miraculous congregating of the waters in the creation, that is set down, Gen. 1. 9. God said, let the waters under the heaven be gathered into one place, and let the dry land appear, and v. 10. the gathering together of the waters called he Seas. Here the one place for the waters, or the one place whereto they are confined, may be fitly compared to a vessel, or bottle, which keeps them from running over, and so severs them from dry land. And this also agrees with what here follows, he layeth them up in the deep, as in store-houses: for thus the words are to be rendred, נתן giving, or he gives, or puts them, באוצרות תהומות in the treasures of the deeps; so the Chaldee verbatim reads it, he puts them, i.e. the waters, in the store-houses of the deeps: and so the sense exacts, the deep, or abysse (the great cavities which God created) being the place wherein the water of the Sea is put, and laid up, as in a repository, store-house, or treasury, where it is kept safe from hurting any thing. Accordingly Seb. Castellio renders it, undis in cellas conditis, the waters being laid up in cellars or repositories. The LXXII. indeed read ἐν θησαυροῖς ἀβύσσου, the deeps in treasures; and so the Syriack and Arabick; but the former, that of the Chaldee, is as literal, and that which the sense exacteth, for 'tis the waters that are laid up in the deeps, and not the deeps themselves. And so still to this consideration very fitly accords the notion of נאד for bottle, or other such vessel, that gathers and holds water; and not the other of נד for an heap, which in Exodus it certainly signifies. But beside this act of Gods mercy in restraining the Ocean, and so keeping it as a bottle doth; there is another act of Gods providence very remarkable in the creation of the Ocean, viz. that it is demonstrably of a gibbous, circular form, and stands above the shore, which yet confines it. And this instance of providence is most perspicuously adumbrated by this scheme of an heap, viz. that it riseth into a cumulus; and to that most properly belongs the gathering here mentioned, for that any collection naturally makes an heap. And therefore it seems best not to follicite the ordinary reading, but to take it in the notion of נד an heap, which most certainly belongs to it in those other places, Exod. 15. 8. and Psal. 78. 13.

נתן באוצרות תהומות

V. 10.] In the end of this v. 10. the LXXII. over and above what we find in the Hebrew, add c. καὶ διατῶν βουλὰς ἀρχόντων, and frustrates the counsels of Princes; and so from them the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick. But the Chaldee and Syriack have it not, but agree with our Hebrew copies, and give us reason to resolve that those Greek Translators took the liberty of Paraphrase, and kept not themselves to the strict bounds of literal interpreters.

V. 15. Alike.] For יחד simul, the LXXII. read κατὰ μόνας, the Latine, sigillatim, severaly; they are therefore thought to have read יְחִיד unicum, separatum, and that taken adverbially. But 'tis more likely that they took יחד in that sense, from the verb that signifies to make one, and so may in the adverb fitly signifie, one by one; and that is all that is meant by κατὰ μόνας, or severally. d. יחד

The Thirty Fourth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

The Thirty Fourth Psalm was composed by David in remembrance of the time when, in his flight from Saul, he was brought to Achish King of the Philistims, (called here after their style, Abimelech, i. e. my Father the King;) at which time being by them descryed to be David, so famed for his Victories over them, 1 Sam. 21. 11. he thought fit to personate a mad-man, v. 13. and thereupon was dismist by Achish, v. 15. and escaped to the Cave of Adullam. c. 22. 1.

A Psalm of David, when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech, who ‖ drove him away, and he departed.

‖ dismist him, וַיְגָרְשֵׁהוּ see note on Psal. 56. a.

1, 2. I will never cease lauding and magnifying the Name of God. I will rejoyce, and esteem my self most happy that I have such a Protector to betake my self to in all my distresses, and proclaim this to all pious men that depend on his aid, that they may rejoyce and give thanks with me, saying.

1. I will bless the Lord at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth.

2. My soul shall † make her boast in the Lord; the humble shall hear thereof, and be glad.

† bless it self, תִּתְהַלֵּל

3. O let us all thus joyn hearts and voices to praise and bless his holy Name.

3. O magnifie the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together.

4. When I was in my greatest danger, discerned by the servants of Achish, and brought in to him, as his most powerful enemy now fallen into his hands, I addrest my prayers to God; and he came in to my relief, inclined the King to send me out of his house, and check his servants for bringing me in to him; and by that means I escaped my great danger.

4. I sought the Lord, and he heard me, and delivered me out of all my fears.

a. 5. This dealing of God with David shall be matter of great reviving to all that are at any time in distress, who shall from hence take courage and confidence, and what ever their condition be, apply themselves to God, and not fear being disappointed by him. For thus shall they encourage one another by Davids example;

5. a They looked unto him, and were lightened; and their faces were not ashamed.

6. * The

This זה 6. * The poor man cryed; and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles.

6. Loe there was a man in a state of extreme distress, and he betook himself immediately to God in prayer; and his prayer was answered with speedy deliverance out of all his streights.

7. The Angel of the Lord incampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.

7. And thus shall it be with all truly pious men, such as obediently serve, and wait on God; they have the promise of his protection, and, as the instruments thereof, of whole hosts of Angels to incompass them, and secure them from all approach of dangers.

8. O tast and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in him.

8. Let any man make the experiment, keep close to God in obedience and relyance on him, and he shall soon discern, that he is a most gracious master, and that there is no such assured tenure in, or title to all the felicity in the world, as this, of constant faithful dependance and affiance in him.

9. O fear the Lord, all ye his Saints; for there is no want to them that fear him.

9. There is no more prudential politick course for any pious man, no greater security from all worldly streights and wants, than to adhere to him, who is the unexhausted spring of all plenty; never taking in any unlawful prohibited aids, but preserving an uniform obedience to him.

10. The [b] young Lions do lack and suffer hunger: but they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing.

10. Such as use themselves to rapine and injustice, by that means to secure b.

themselves of wealth, have oft that curse of God attending and blasting them, and their posterity in this world; that from great wealth they come to great want, and utter destitution: and indeed their very rapacity and covetousness, and perpetual insatiate desires of gaining, keep them still beggerly, and miserable, in the midst of their greatest plenty, their abundance yields no kind of satisfaction to them. On the other side, the pious man, that keeps him close to God, depends on, and implores his blessing on his honest indeavours, and never admits of any unlawful means, either for the getting or preserving of wealth, he shall never want that which is best for him in this world, and shall have a reserve of all wealth truly satisfactory, all manner of felicity hereafter.

11. Come, ye children, hearken to me; I will teach you the fear of the Lord.

11. 'Tis therefore very well worth the consideration of every one that desires to be advised of his own welfare, what rich rewards the pious obedient servants of God is secured of even in this life.

‖ dayes to see good, ימים לראות טוב

12. What man is he that desireth life, and loveth ‖ many dayes that he may see good?

12. If a man would project for the injoying a long life in this world, and the greatest tranquility and prosperity and contentation in it.

13. Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile.

13. There is not a more probable hopeful ways for the attaining it, then to begin with his tongue, and restrain that from all contumelious, injurious, and deceitful speaking; which though it be ordinarily designed to the advantage of him that useth it, yet most frequently brings mischievous effects, the greatest real disadvantages:

14. Depart from evil, and do good; seek peace, and ensue it.

14. And then to cleanse his actions from all known sin, (which, if continued in, must needs be the forfeiting of Gods protection, and bring his blasts and curses upon him) and so regularly proceed to superstruct all works of piety to God, and justice and charity to men: particularly, to live peaceably with all men, to be as industrious in that pursuit, as the most malicious person is in pursuing his designs of revenge, and withall to be a peace-maker among others.

15. The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry.

15. And then, besides the natural tendency of this method to a quiet, and so a prosperous and long life, (which on the contrary is frequently shortned, but constantly disturbed and made miserable, by contentions and unpeaceableness) there is an assurance of Gods protection and preservation; which duly waits over all obedient, faithful servants of his, to bless and prosper all they undertake, and to grant whatsoever they request of him, either in kind, or in equivalence, what they choose to desire for themselves, or what he chooses (as seeing best) for them.

16. The [c] face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth. c.

16. (Whereas, on the other side, Gods displeasure and punishments pursue ungodly men, to the utter eradication of them and their posterity.)

‖ They cry. 17. ‖ The [d] righteous cry, and the Lord heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles. d.

17. ‖ Whensoever they implore Gods aid, he is ready to answer their request, and send them seasonable deliverance.

18. The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit.

18. All humble-minded men, sincerely changed from all their former sins, have assurance of Gods special favour to them, and of the effects thereof, his merciful deliverances whensoever they stand in need of them.

19. Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth them out of them all.

19. Though pious and good men fall into many afflictions, Gods providence, for their exercise, and other wise ends, so disposing, or permitting it; yet he in his chosen season relieveth them out of all.

20. He

20. The providence of God pertaineth to every the leaſt part of the body of every ſervant of his, and evidenceth it ſelf in a ſignal preſervation of ſuch from all dangers. (This had a more eminent and literal completion in our bleſſed Saviour, whoſe legs were not broken, when they were of both the Theeves that were crucified with him, Joh. 19. 36.)

20. He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken.

e. 21. On the other ſide, the (perhaps fewer) afflictions that befall wicked men, ſhall be the utter deſtroying of them: and generally the aphoriſm will be found to hold, That they that deſign miſchief to good men, ſhall be remarkably puniſht in this world.

21. [e] Evil ſhall ſlay the wicked, and they that hate the righteous ſhall be deſolate.

f. 22. Whilſt the obedient ſervants of God, that rely and depend on him, have aſſurance of being delivered, and never forſaken by him.

22. The Lord redeemeth the ſoul of his ſervants; and ‖ none of them that truſt in him [f] ſhall be deſolate.

‖ all they ſhall not לֹא כָל הַחוֹסִים

Annotations on Pſal. XXXIV.

a. V. 5. They looked] the LXXII. render the verſe in the Imperative, which the Hebrew, as now we have it, doth not bear. This makes ſome think, that they read otherwiſe than now we do, not הִבִּיטוּ they looked, but הַבִּיטוּ look, or come, or addreſs; and ſo render it προσελθατε, and the Latine accedite, come ye; and then נֶהָרוּ being taken, as it may, in the imperative, and ſo rendred φωτισθητε, be ye inlightned, the change will be eaſie from פְּנֵיהֶם their faces, to פְּנֵיכֶם προσωπα ὑμῶν, your faces. But it is more likely, that the LXXII. choſe to render the ſenſe, not the words, and ſo put it into the Imperative mood, thereby moſt perſpicuouſly to expreſs it, (and herein the Syriack, as well as the Latine and Arabick and Æthiopick follow them:) to which they might be inclined, by ſeeing that there was no antecedent immediately foregoing, to which the relative [they] ſhould be thought to refer. Only the Chaldee adheres literally to the Hebrew, and will both of them be beſt interpreted by referring to the humble, v. 2. and by making David himſelf to be the [him] to whom the humble looking, and ſeeing how God had dealt with him, were inlightned, revived, and encouraged by that means; and ſo to them alſo may be fitly applyed the ſixth verſe, as the ſpeech of theſe humble, The poor man cryed, i.e. David in his diſtreſs; and the Lord heard him, &c.

הִבִּיטוּ נֶהָרוּ פְּנֵיהֶם

b. V. 10. Young Lions] Where the Hebrew reads כְּפִירִים young lions, (and ſo the Chaldee from them בְּנֵי אַרְיָוָן ſons of lions) the LXXII. render πλουσιοι, the rich; and herein the Latine and Syriack and Arabick and Æthiopick follow them: not that they can be thought to have read the original any otherwiſe than now we do, but after their wont rendring the ſenſe, rather than words; and ſo as in prophetick writings, Ezek. 38. 13. בְּפִירֶיהָ his young lions] is by the Chaldee paraphraſed מַלְכָהָא his Kings, ſo here cruel and rapacious men being compared to lions, they have choſen for [lions whelps] to ſet rich men] viz. ſuch, whoſe wealth is gathered by the rapine of their parents.

כְּפִירִים

c. V. 16. The face] What פְּנֵי faces here ſignifies, will be beſt learnt from Maimonides, More Nevoch. par. 1. c. 37. It is uſed, ſaith he, for anger and indignation: to which purpoſe he cites 1 Sam. 1. 18. where, ſaith he, the phraſes וּפָנֶיהָ לֹא הָיוּ לָהּ עוֹד her faces were no more to her, ſignifies, her anger continued to her no longer: (and to this ſenſe the Arabick renders it, her countenance was no more changed for the exprobration of her rival] expreſſing it to be the paſſion of jealouſie, and that is anger, which is there ſpoken of.) So Lam. 4. 16. we read, the anger (it is פְּנֵי faces) of the Lord divided them. So Lev. 20. 5. I will ſet my face, i.e. my anger againſt that man——and ſo frequently elſewhere: and ſo, ſaith he, it is in this verſe. Accordingly, the Chaldee read, but the countenance of the Lord is angry againſt them: and ſo the conſequents inforce, to cut off——Upon the ſame grounds it is that אַף, and נֹחַר parts of the face, ſignifie anger, becauſe paſſion immediately diſcovers it ſelf there. So Dan. 3. 18. the forme of Nebuchadnezzars viſage was changed; and Gen. 2. 5. Cain was very wroth, and his Countenance fell.

פָּנֵי

V. 17. The righteous cry] The placing of צָעֲקוּ they cryed, in the beginning of this v. 17. may be worthy to be taken notice of. That it belongs to righteous, or pious men there can be no doubt; and accordingly all the Interpreters thus ſupply it; ἐκέκραξαν οἱ δίκαιοι, the righteous cryed, ſay the LXXII. and ſo all the reſt. But how it comes to be ſo, when the verſe immediately precedent belongs to them that do evill, is the only matter of difficulty. And the anſwer is obvious; that the ſixteenth verſe is to be read as in a parentheſis, and the word righteous (v. 15. who are there ſaid to cry) will be the immediate antecedent, to which [they cryed] muſt neceſſarily refer. And therefore it will be beſt ſo to include, v. 16. and in token thereof, to affix the moſt literal rendring to צָעֲקוּ They cryed, and not, The righteous cryed.

d. צָעֲקוּ

V. 21. Evil ſhall ſlay] For תְּמוֹתֵת ſhall ſlay, which we read from the Hebrew, the LXXII. ſeem to have read תְּמוּתַת occiſion, for ſo they render it in conjunction with רָעָה, θανατῳ ἁμαρτωλων πονηρος, the death of ſinners is evil. But the Syriack adhere to our vulgar reading, ڒڠڡڐ ڒڢڡڢڐ ڒڢڡڢڐ Evil ſhall ſlay the wicked, by רָעָה underſtanding the ſame that רָעוֹת v. 19. had ſignified, i. e. afflictions, or evil of puniſhment: which being applyed to the righteous, though in the plural, prove not ruinous or hurtful to him, the Lord delivers him out of them; whereas here evil in the ſingular ſlayes the wicked; to ſignifie the difference of Gods economy toward righteous and wicked men. The former is permitted to fall into many preſſures; the latter is not ſo frequently exerciſed with them: yet the many that befall the one, do him no hurt, but work good for him; whereas the fewer that befall the wicked, perhaps the רָעָה one ſingular affliction of his life, is the utter ruine of him.

e. תְּמוֹתֵת רָעָה

V. 22. Shall be deſolate] אָשַׁם to be laid waſt or deſolate] ſignifies alſo to be guilty, or culpable: accordingly לֹא יֶאְשְׁמוּ ſhall not be deſolate] which the Chaldee (with the Syriack) renders לָא מִתְחַיְבִין ſhall not be condemned; is by the LXXII. rendred οὐ μη πλημμελήσωσι, by the Latine, non delinquent, ſhall not offend; but this certainly after that part of the Helleniſts dialect, wherein ſin ſignifies ſometimes the puniſhment of ſin, and accounting guilty is condemning to vengeance.

f. לֹא יֶאְשְׁמוּ

The

The Thirty Fifth PSALM.

A Pſalm of David.

Paraphraſe.

The Thirty Fifth Pſalm is a complaint of Davids againſt his enemies, joyned with an appeal to God, and a prayer for his deliverance.

1. || Plead my cauſe, O Lord, with them that ſtrive with me: fight againſt them that fight againſt me.

|| Contend רִיבָה

1. Lord, in all the perſecutions and aſſaults that are made upon me, be thou pleaſed to take my part, to eſpouſe my cauſe, to contend and fight for me.

2. Take hold of ſhield and buckler, and ſtand up for mine help.

2. Let thy protection be my ſhield, and only defenſive weapons.

3. Draw out alſo the ſpear, [a] and † ſtop the way againſt them that perſecute me: ſay unto my ſoul, I am thy ſalvation.

† a ſhort ſword to meet them.

3. Thy ſtrength and proſpering hand my offenſive, to meet, and diſcomfit my enemies: be thou graciouſly pleaſed to aſſure me of thy help and ſtrength, and then I ſhall not want deliverance. a.

4. *Let [b] them be confounded and put to ſhame, that ſeek after my ſoul: || let them be turned back, and brought to confuſion, that deviſe my hurt.

* They ſhall bluſh and be aſhamed. || they ſhall.

4. Thoſe that deſign my miſchief and my ruine, ſhall (I perſwade my ſelf) undoubtedly be diſappointed, and put to flight, and diſſipated. b.

5. † Let them be as chaffe before the wind; and * let the Angel of the Lord chaſe them.

† they ſhall. יִהְיוּ * the Angel ſhall.—

5. They ſhall be ſcattered as chaff or duſt in the winnowing of corn on an high and open place, where the wind comes freely: and if no viſible ſtrength of mine be able to do it, yet the Angels, the Miniſters of Gods vengeance, ſhall thus deal with them.

6. || Let their way be dark and ſlippery: and † let the Angel of the Lord perſecute them.

|| their way ſhall be.— יִהְיֶה † the Angel ſhall.

6. Purſuing them to their greateſt miſchief, as thoſe that fly in the dark (and tumble into mire and pits,) in ſlippery places, and ſo frequently fall and wound themſelves in their flight.

7. For without cauſe have they hid for me * a [c] net in a pit, which without cauſe they have digged for my ſoul.

* the pit of their ſnare.

7. For without any injury or provocation of mine, they have deſigned miſchief and treachery againſt my life.

8. || Let deſtruction come upon him at unawares, and † let his net that he hath hid catch himſelf; into that very deſtruction * let him fall.

|| Deſtruction ſhall come— ſee note b. † his— ſhall. * ſhall he—

8. And accordingly when they little expect it, and by ways which they apprehend not, deſtruction ſhall ſeize upon them, and that by thoſe very means, by which they deſigned to bring it on other men. c.

9. And my ſoul ſhall be joyful in the Lord; it ſhall rejoyce in his ſalvation.

9. And this being a ſignal work of God's delivering me, when I am leaſt able to do it my ſelf, obligeth me to rejoyce, and give thanks to him.

10. All my bones ſhall ſay, Lord, who is like unto thee, which deliverеſt the poor from him which is too ſtrong for him; yea, the poor and the needy from him that ſpoileth him.

10. And every member of my body ſhall joyn in the acknowledgment of the mercy, ſuch as could not have been from any other means, and ſuch as is moſt worthy of a juſt judge, and gracious father, and omnipotent God, reſcuing the weak and impotent from the power of the ſtrong, the oppreſſed and injured from the violent and oppreſſor.

11. Falſe witneſſes did riſe up; they || laid to my charge things that I knew not.

|| interrogated, or queſtioned me of, שְׁאֵלוּנִי

11. And ſuch indeed was my condition, being moſt falſly accuſed to Saul (1 Sam. 24. 9.) of that of which I was moſt guiltleſs.

12. They rewarded me evil for good, to [d] the † ſpoiling of my ſoul.

See Pſ. 8. 19. and Matth. 27. 11. † depriving.

12. Thoſe whom I had obliged, made me this very unkind return, deſiring to have me put to death. d.

13. But as for me, when they were ſick, my cloathing was ſackcloth: I humbled my ſoul with faſting, and my prayer returned into my own boſome.

13. When any evil befel them, I mourned and faſted, and prayed earneſtly for them. And it ſeems all was caſt away, fruſtrate, and loſt on them; my greateſt charity abated not their malice, my faſtings and devotions had no effect on them (ſee Jer. 55. 11.) returned empty of the deſerved ſucceſs, as a gift ſent to an uncivil perſon, who inſtead of grateful acceptance, return it back unto the donour. Theſe are the only returns I receive from them. But my charity ſhall not loſe its reward; God will abundantly recompenſe it to me.

e. 14. In all their ſufferings I was affected with the ſame tenderneſs of compaſſion, as toward a friend, or brother, or child, or parent, (the relations of the deareſt affections.)

14. [e] I *behaved my ſelf as though he had been my friend or brother: I bowed down heavily, as ‖ one that mourneth for his mother.

* walked as ‖ or, a mourning mother.

f. g. 15. But when any misfortune befell me, they triumphed and ſcoffed; and ſo in like manner other vile and wicked men, never provoked by me in the leaſt degree, at all their meetings reviled me, and railed at me continually, without any the leaſt cauſe for what they ſaid.

15. But in [f] mine adverſity they rejoyced, and gathered themſelves together: yea, the very [g] abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me, and † I knew it not; they did tear me, and ceaſed not.

† I knew not.

h. 16. Onely, as buffones and flatterers make it their buſineſs to pleaſe thoſe that give them bread, by bringing them falſe tales of other men, jeering and ſcoffing at them, without conſidering how blameleſs and guiltleſs they are whom they deride; ſo have they dealt with me, moſt cauſeleſsly, yet moſt contumeliouſly, invéighing againſt me.

16. With *hypocritical mockers in [h] feaſts, they gnaſhed upon me with their teeth.

* delators, that ſcoff, and deride for a cake.

17. Lord, be thou pleaſed at length to interpoſe thy hand, to conſider my deſolate low eſtate, and the cruelty of mine enemies; and relieve me in it, or deliver me out of it.

17. Lord, how long wilt thou look on? reſcue my ſoul from their deſtruction, my ‖ darling from the Lions.

‖ onely ſo, Pſal. 22. 20.

18. And I ſhall be eternally obliged to bleſs and magnifie thy mercies in the ſolemn aſſembly.

18. I will give thee thanks in the great congregation: I will praiſe thee among much people.

19. O let not mine unjuſt cauſeleſs enemies have matter of rejoycing and ſcoffing at me; as they will, if thou leaveſt me in my diſtreſs.

19. Let not them that are mine enemies wrongfully rejoyce over me; neither let them wink with the eye that hate me without a cauſe.

i. 20. For inſtead of kindneſs and friendly uſage, which is due from them, they deſign nothing but fraud and treachery againſt me, who heartily deſire to live moſt peaceably and quietly under Sauls Government.

20. For [i] they ſpeak not peace, but they deviſe deceitful matters againſt them that are quiet in the land.

21. And not only ſo, but they have openly railed upon me, as one that ſeeks his life, and pretend to ſpeak from their own ſight, and certain knowledge, when they deliver that which is moſt far from truth.

21. Yea they opened their mouth wide againſt me, and ſaid, Aha, Aha, our eye hath ſeen it.

22. 'Tis certain they have ſeen no ſuch thing, as they falſely pretend. On the contrary, thou, O God, who ſeeſt all things, ſeeſt and knoweſt my innocency, and the integrity of my heart: Be thou pleaſed to teſtifie for me, by delivering me from the evil which they deſigned againſt me.

22. ‖ This thou haſt ſeen (O Lord) keep not ſilence; O Lord, be not far from me.

‖ Thou haſt ſeen, רָאִיתָה

23,24. O thou that art my gracious God and powerful Lord, be thou pleaſed at length to take part, to defend and to vindicate my innocence, to teſtifie thy approbation of my doings, and ſeaſonably to interpoſe thy hand for the relieving me, and diſappointing my enemies.

23. Stir up thy ſelf, and awake to my judgment; even unto my cauſe, my God and my Lord.

24. Judge me, O Lord my God, according to thy righteouſneſs; and let them not rejoyce over me.

k. 25. Preſerve me out of their hands, leſt they applaud themſelves in their actions, their moſt wicked and bloody enterpriſes, if they prove ſucceſsful to them.

25. Let them not † ſay in their hearts, Ah, [k] ſo would we have it: let them not ſay, We have ſwallowed him up.

† in their hearts applaud themſelves, or ſay well to their ſouls.

26. And thus I am confident thou wilt in thy due ſeaſon diſappoint, and diſcomfit thoſe that are moſt malitiouſly bent againſt me, and moſt proudly triumph over me at this time.

26. Let * them be aſhamed and brought to confuſion together, that rejoyce at my hurt; ‖ let them be cloathed with ſhame and diſhonour, that magnifie themſelves againſt me.

* they ſhall † they ſhall.

27. And by ſo doing thou ſhalt give matter of joy and gladneſs to all that wiſh me well, cauſe them to bleſs and magnifie thy goodneſs, and fidelity of thy promiſes, when they ſee me ſignally favoured by thee, of whoſe ſincerity and uprightneſs they have ſuch aſſurance.

27. † Let them ſhout for joy and be glad, that favour my righteous cauſe: Yea, * let them ſay continually, Let the Lord be magnified, which hath pleaſure in the proſperity of his ſervant.

† they ſhall * they ſhall

28. As for me, I ſhall by this thy mercy be obliged to promulgate and proclaim thy fidelity, and the care thou haſt of thoſe that adhere to thee, and for this to laud and bleſs thy name continually.

28. My tongue ſhall ſpeak of thy righteouſneſs, and of thy praiſe all the day long.

Annotations

Annotations on Psalm XXXV.

a. סְגֹר V. 3. Stop] It is uncertain what סְגֹר here ſignifies. The Chaldee reads טְרוֹק ſhut] in the Imperative mood, and the LXXII. συγκλεισον, ſhut up. But if this be the right rendring, and it be applyed to that which went before, [draw forth, i. e. unſheath, (ſo the Chaldee read) the lance or ſpear,] it muſt then be the direct contrary, viz. ſhut it up again: and to apply it to any thing elſe, (as our Engliſh applies it to the way, and ſo ſuppoſes an ellipſis, and then ſupplies it thus, [ſtop the way] &c.) the context gives us no reaſon. The Syriack reading (for the lance) the ſword, render, unſheath, and make it ſhine;] and that agrees well to it when it is drawn, but hath no affinity to the notion of the Hebrew סָגַר occluſit, coercuit. The Arabick therefore reads, repel them, as from the notion of coercere, to repreſs, or repel. But then they take no notice of לִקְרָאת in occurſum, which follows, (and will not be reconciled with this rendring) but without it read סְגֹר רֹדְפַי repel them that perſecute me. In this uncertainty the learned || Schindlers obſervation deſerves to be heeded, that the accent Tiphcha joyns וְסָגֹר with חֲנִית lance] præcedent, in the conſtruction, and then being a ſubſtantive it muſt be taken for a ſort of weapons; and ſo it appears to ſignifie a ſort of ſword called from hence σάγαεις, and ordinarily ſpoken of by Herodotus and other Hiſtorians among the Perſians: of which ſaith Heſychius, Σάγαεις. πλάκιον μονόστομον, 'tis a little axe with one edge; and Suidas, κόπις πολεμικὴ, an axe, uſed, ſaith he, without s. in Xenophon joyning τόξον Περσικὸν καὶ φαρετρὰν καὶ σάγαριν, a Perſian bow and quiver and ſagari, διάπερ Ἀμάζονες ἔχουσι, ſuch as the Amazons have, adding, that it ſignifies an inſtrument to open a vein, λυσιπλαγῆ σάγαριν, and τὰ ἐν χερσὶν ὅπλα, hand-weapons. To theſe acceptions of the word Heſychius and Phavorinus add, ἄροτρον, a plough, that part which cuts the earth, and is like to the Perſian acinaces, or ſhort ſwords, ſcimitars. And ſo this is by much the moſt probable meaning of the word, and rendring of the place; draw forth the lance and ſhort ſword, לִקְרָאת in occurſum, to meet my perſecuters. To this agrees Kimchi, both in his Comment, and in his Dictionary, making it a ſort of weapon; and ſo Abu Walid before him.

b. יִבָּשׁוּ V. 4. Let them] That יִבָּשׁוּ, from בּוּשׁ erubuit, is in the future tenſe, there can be no doubt: and then the moſt regular rendring will be not, let them, but, they ſhall bluſh; and ſo in the reſt that follow, יִבָּלְמוּ they ſhall be put to ſhame, from בָּלַם pudore affecit. And ſo the whole Pſalm, inſtead of ſo many forms of execration, or imprecation againſt enemies, ſhall be really no more than ſo many teſtimonies of his aſſured confidence, that God, that hath made him ſuch ſure promiſes, will make them good to him, in his preſervation, and that diſappointment and diſcomfiture of his enemies. And according to this meaſure, all the other Pſalms which ſeem to be filled with curſes againſt his and Gods enemies, ought to be underſtood, and accordingly are explicated in the Paraphraſe.

c. שַׁחַת V. 7. Net in a pit] שַׁחַת רִשְׁתָּם is literally, the pit of their ſnare, שַׁחַת from שׁוּחַ inclinavit, ſignifying a pit very frequently, though the LXXII. here render it διαφθορὰν, corruption, as Pſal. 16. 10. they do (as from שָׁחַת corruptus fuit,) and רֶשֶׁת being the known word for a net, or ſnare, or toyle, to catch beaſts or birds, or fiſh in; and not improbably from it the Latine rete. This the LXXII. here render παγίδα, a ginn, or ſnare; and ſo the Syriack and Latine and Arabick. And then the whole phraſe denotes the manner of toyles among the Jews; digging a hole, and ſlight covering it over, and hiding it, and ſetting a ſnare in it, that they that (not ſeeing) preſt the clod, and fell therein, might be caught, and held from getting out again. To this alſo belongs חָפְרוּ, that follows, from חָפַר to dig: which the Chaldee therefore renders Paraphraſtically בְּמָנוּ they inſuared, or laid wait for; but the LXXII. from another notion of חָפַר exprobravit, render it ὠνείδισαν, reproached; and ſo the Latine and Arabick from them.

d. שְׁכוֹל V. 12. Spoiling] The word שְׁכוֹל orbitas, deprivation, moſt frequently applied to loſs of children, and ſo here rendred by the LXXII. ἀτεκνίαν, childleſsneſs, being applied, as here it is, to the ſoul, ſignifies the loſs or deprivation of life; the ſoul being then deprived, when it is by death ſeparated from the body, the only companion which it hath. And accordingly, as the Chaldee renders it more literally, they ſeek to deprive my ſoul, ſo the Syriack expreſſeth the ſenſe more paraphraſtically, they deſtroyed my ſoul from among men; and ſo the Arabick, they deſtroyed my ſoul, i. e. indeavoured to do ſo. But the Latine from the LXXII. read, ſterilitatem, barrenneſs; and the Æthiopick, they deprive my ſoul of the births thereof.

e. דַּלּוֹתִי חָלַכְתִּי V. 14. Behaved my ſelf] From הָלַךְ to walk, is, הִתְהַלַּכְתִּי here in Hithpael, I have walked, or made my ſelf to walk, the mourner diſcovering his paſſion as by his dreſs, ſo by his gate: Thus Ahab walked ſoftly, and Iſaiah expreſſeth mourning by bowing down the head like a bulruſh. This the LXXII. according to their wont render εὐηρέστουν, I pleaſed. So Gen. v. 22, 24. and 6 9. and 17. 1. and 24. 40. and 48. 15. Pſal. 26. 3. and 115. 9. they render the ſame word: and from them the Apoſtle, Heb. 11. 5. But here the context confining the diſcourſe to mourning, wearing ſackcloth, and faſting, going before, v. 13. and bowing down, and mourning, following after, it is in reaſon to be taken in that ſenſe: (and ſo 'tis expreſly uſed, Pſal. 38. 6. I walked mourning, and ſo Eccleſ. 12. 5. the mourners are ſaid to go about the ſtreets) I walked כְּרֵעַ רֵאַח לִי as if (it were) a friend or brother of mine (that had fallen into ſome miſchief.) But then in that which follows, כַּאֲבַל אֵם קֹדֵר שְׁחוֹתִי I bowed down as a mourner bewailing his mother, or as the Jewiſh Arab, joyning אֵבֶל to אֵם, as a mourning mother, expreſſing, ſaith he, his ſorrow by the ſorrow of a mother for her child, (which indeed is the fitteſt inſtance of a paſſionate ſorrow) the LXXII. have omitted the word mother, and render it ὡς πενθῶν καὶ σκυθρωπάζων, ὅτως ἐταπεινούμην; as one mourning, and ſore lamenting, ſo was I humbled or bowing down: And thus the Syriack and Arabick and Latine follow them. But the Chaldee read the mother with the Hebrew, as a mourner that mourneth for his mother.

כַּאֲבַל אֵם

f. צֶלַע V. 15. In mine adverſity] From צֶלַע latus, a ſide, is צֶלַע inclinatio ad latus, going down on one ſide, being lame, falling, calamity, adverſity;

ſity; and ſo בְּצַלְעִי will beſt be rendered, at my fall, (ſee Pſal. 38. 17.) the Chaldee read, in my tribulation, the Syriack, in my ſuffering, but the LXXII. ἐμοῦ, againſt me.

g. נְכִים

V. 15. Abjects] From נָכָה percuſſit, is נֶכֶה any baſe or vile, or wicked perſon. So the Chaldee here renders נְכִים by רְשִׁיעַיָּא wicked men; and ſo the Arabick, in the ſenſe that Deut. 25. 2. of a wicked man 'tis ſaid, if he be בֶּן הַכּוֹת filius percuſſionis, a ſon of beating, i.e. worthy to be ſcourged, a vile perſon. The LXXII. here render it μάστιγες, (as if it were from מַכָּה flagella) ſcourges, i.e. men fit to be ſcourged; and ſo the Latine, flagella, I ſuppoſe in this figurative uſe of the word. In the end of the verſe קָרְעוּ וְלֹא דָמּוּ they tare, or uſed me reproachfully, (Abu Walid conjectureth it to ſignifie ſpeaking lies, or falſe things) and ceaſed not] is by the LXXII. rendered διεχίσθησαν, they were divided, (the paſſive for the Active) καὶ οὐ κατενύγησαν, and had no compunction; for which the Arabick, they repented not. All the difficulty is, to what belongs וְלֹא יָדַעְתִּי and I knew not, in the midſt. And the reſolution will be moſt reaſonable, that we learn the meaning of it from v. 11. where the ſame phraſe is uſed for thoſe accuſations, whereof he was no way conſcious. Thus יָדַע fitly ſignifies to know] having oft the notion of being conſcious of. So 1 King. 2. 44. Thou knoweſt all the evill, which thy heart knows, i.e. is conſcious of. And ſo here, the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me, laid reproachful things to my charge, tare my good name and ceaſed not, uſed me moſt contumeliouſly, and did ſo continually; and all this was without any cauſe or provocation on my part, I knew not, I was not conſcious, or guilty of any thing; juſt as v. 2. without cauſe they bid their pit, without cauſe they digged for my ſoul.

קָרְעוּ וְלֹא דָמּוּ

וְלֹא יָדַעְתִּי

h. מָעוֹג

V. 16. In feaſts] From עוּג to bake, comes מָעוֹג a cake, 1 King. 17. 12. and ſo here it may ſignifie a cake, or any kind of meat, as that which Paraſites and trencher-friends, buffones and ſcoffers deſire to gain, by ſcoffing at others, and making mirth: a meals-meat is their beſt reward. This verſe the LXXII. ſeem to have rendered onely Paraphraſtically; for בְּחַנְפֵי לַעֲגֵי מָעוֹג with the hypocrites of mockings, or hypocritical mockers (or jeſters) for a cake, reading, ἐπείρασάν με, ἐξεμυκλήκιζόν με μυκλήσεσι, they tempted me, they jeered or laught at me; and ſo the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick: but the Chaldee, neerer the original, with words of flatteries jeering and deriding; where the words of flattery ſeem to be ſet to interpret מָעוֹג. For thoſe that flatter, according to the notion of παράσιτοι, table-friends, or Paraſites, do it on purpoſe to gain ſome ſuch reward; and nothing more common with ſuch kind of flatterers, than by deriding and ſcoffing of others to intertain them who give them their meat: and therefore as עֻגָה, a word of the ſame origination, ſignifies both a cake and a jeer; ſo thoſe that gibe for a cake may here be thought fit proverbially to expreſs thoſe that ſcoffe, and jeer, and reproach cauſleſsly, in the former verſe, and accordingly they are here ſtyled חֹנְפֵי the very word from which our Engliſh knave ſeems to be deduced. It ſignifies ſimulatores, men that act parts, and perſonate, and particularly delators, whiſperers, backbiters; and with לַעֲגֵי ſubſannationum (from לָעַג irriſit) added to it, it ſignifies that ſort of delators, that do it by way of jeer or deriſion. As for the prepoſition בְּ, which begins the verſe, it is beſt rendred cum, with, as that ſignifies like them, or after the manner of them; Impurorum helluonum ritu, ſaith Caſtellio, after the manner of ſuch. Another poſſible notion of מָעוֹג the learned Mr. Pocock hath ſuggeſted to me from the Arabick uſe of the word for perverſe, or crooked; as if it were mockers of perverſneſs, i.e. perverſe mockers.

לַעֲגֵי

i. לֹא שָׁלוֹם

V. 20. Speak peace] In this verſe the LXXII. have much departed from the Hebrew, as now we have it. For לֹא שָׁלוֹם יְדַבֵּרוּ they ſpeak not peace, they read, ἐμοὶ μὲν εἰρηνικὰ ἐλάλουν, they ſpeak indeed peaceable words to me, evidently reading לִי to me, for לֹא not;] which both the Chaldee and Syriack retein, though the Latine and Arabick, following the LXXII. leave it out. Then for וְעַל רִגְעֵי אֶרֶץ and againſt the quiet of the land, from רָגַע, quievit, which the Chaldee accordingly renders, againſt the righteous of the earth being quiet in the age, they read בְּרוּגְזָא, in anger; not miſreading it רֹגֶז anger, as ſome think, but taking רָגַע in that notion of anger, or commotion, as ſometimes it is acknowledged to ſignifie. The Latine follow them herein, but then add terræ, of the earth; which makes it probable, that ſo the LXXII. alſo read, ἐν ὀργῇ γῆς, but that Scribes deceived by the affinity of γῆ (the laſt ſyllable of ὀργῇ) to γῆς, chanced to omit it: however the Arabick and Æthiopick herein follow them, though the Latine do not.

רִגְעֵי

k. הֵאָה

V. 25. So would we have it] the phraſe of ſaying to their ſouls הֵאָה, as a token of joy or ſatisfaction, is very ordinary. The LXXII. have literally rendered it by ſaying to their ſoul, εὖγε, εὖγε, well, well; the Chaldee paraphraſtically, our ſoul is glad; the Syriack, our ſoul is at reſt (agreeable to that of ἀνάπαυε, ſoul take thy reſt, Luk. 12. 19.) The cleer meaning of it is, their applauding themſelves in their doings, and the proſperouſneſs thereof, rejoycing and triumphing therein.

The

The Thirty Sixth PSALM.

To the chief Musitian, A Psalm of David the servant of the Lord.

Paraphrase.
The Thirty sixth Psalm was composed by David, in reflection on himself, and his own sincerity and dependance on God, in the time of his distress, (when Saul persecuted him, saith the Syriack and the Arabick;) and it was committed by him to the Præfect of his Musick:

1. The transgression of the wicked saith within [a] my heart, that there is no fear of God before his eyes.

1. The actions of wicked men are such, so absolutely contrary to Gods laws, and threats, and promises, to all that we know of God, that a man that considers them, cannot choose but resolve, that either they do not believe at all that there is a God, or that they do not really and in earnest fear or care for him. a

2. For he ‖ [b] flattereth himself in his own eyes, untill his abominable sin be found out.

‖ hath smoothed it to him in his own eyes, when his iniquity is ready to be found out, and hated.

2. For committing these sins that God sees, and hates, and abhors, and is even ready to punish, they think they can put so fair a gloss upon them, that God shall not find any fault with them. They pretend, forsooth, that they have done nothing amiss, varnishing over the fouler parts of them with some specious colour of pious intentions, &c. And so impudent they are, that they do this, flatter God, and pretend to Religion, even then when their sin is ready to be found out, and punished by him. b

3. The words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit: he hath left off to ‖ be wise, and to do good.

‖ understand that he may do good. לְהַשְׂכִּיל לְהֵיטִיב

3. All their speeches are designed to mischief, and cheat others, and advance and benefit themselves; and for justice or charity, they give over all care or study of them, being so far from the practice of them, that they do not so much as desire to understand what belongs to them.

4. He deviseth mischief upon his bed; he setteth himself in a way that is not good; he abhorreth not evil.

4. They plot, and study, and meditate wayes of wronging others: there is nothing so ill, that they will not adventure on, if it be for their turn: they overcome those aversions, that even corrupt nature hath, to some greater more enormous sins; it will go down with them, if it seem contributive to their interests.

5. Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens, and thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds.

5. But from all their machinations I have my sure and safe resort to thy goodness and thy fidelity, O Lord; each of which are infinite, and unmeasurable, and shall never fail them that are qualified to receive benefit from them.

6. Thy righteousness is like the great mountains, thy judgments are a great deep: O Lord, thou preservest man and beast.

6. What thou hast once promised, shall most certainly be performed; thy faithfulness is unmoveable. What thou pleasest to have done, shall certainly come to pass, though by means unfathomable, and unsearchable, such as no man can give account of. Thy over-ruling and wisely disposing providence it is, by which all creatures have their being and preservation.

7. How excellent is thy loving kindness, O God? therefore the children of men ‖ put their trust under the shadow of thy wings.

‖ under the shadow of thy wings shall have confidence. בְּצֵל כְּנָפֶיךָ יֶחֱסָיוּן

7. Thy mercy, and favour, O Lord, is of all things in the world most highly valuable: and therefore for them that have their hold in it, that have not forfeited their tenure in thy favour, and fatherly providence, they may be most confident, that no evil shall befall them.

8. They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures.

8. All the good things of this life shall be in the greatest abundance of satisfaction reacht out unto them, their life shall be filled with pleasures, continually flowing in to them, in all their performances. 'Tis out of an unexhaunted magazin, that they are provided for; out of a most fluent stream of divine plenty, that they are filled.

9. For with thee is the fountain of life; and in thy light shall we see light.

9. God is an ever-flowing spring and vein of all felicity, of this and another life: All the good that any man injoyes, or aspires to, comes only from his free favour and mercy.

10. O continue thy loving kindness unto them that know thee, and thy righteousness to the upright in heart.

10. The continuance of those comprehends all manner of bliss. O blessed Lord, do not withdraw them from thy servants; make good those exceeding rich promises, which thou hast confirmed to all those that sincerely adhere to thee, and depart not from thee.

11. Let not the foot of pride come against me, and let not the hand of the wicked remove me.

11. O let not the violence of proud and wicked men be able to do me any hurt.

12. There are the workers of iniquity fallen: they are cast down and shall not be able to rise.

12. And in this I am confident thou wilt hear my prayer; and so I rely on thee for the performance as chearfully, as if they were already subdued, and brought so low, that they should never recover, or make any more assaults upon me.

Annotations

Annotations on Psalm XXXVI.

a. לִבִּי V. 1. My heart] For לִבִּי my heart, the Syriack reads לִבּוֹ his heart, The wicked man thinks wickedneſs in his heart; and the LXXII. ἐν ἑαυτῷ, within himſelf, as reading לִבּוֹ his heart. But the Chaldee accords with our reading of the Hebrew, in the middle לְבָבִי of my heart; and ſo we have all reaſon to continue it. And the meaning of it, though ſomewhat Poetically expreſt, will not be obſcure. For wickedneſs, by a proſopopœia, is made to ſpeak and declare what are the thoughts of that man wherein it is, viz. that he hath no fear of God before his eyes (i. e. I ſuppoſe in Hebrew ſtyle, before Gods eyes; as to fear before him, to do evil in his eyes, and many the like phraſes are obvious.) This, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, it declares, in the inner part of my heart; not to my ears, but to my underſtanding: it ſaith it in my heart, i. e. gives me reaſon ſo to reſolve and conclude it.

b. חֲלַקְלַק V. 2. He flattereth] The conſtruction of this v. 2. which is ſomewhat perplext, may beſt be cleared by obſerving the notion of הַחֲלִיק, which we render, flattereth, in the beginning. חָלַק as it ſignifies to divide into equal parts, ſo alſo it ſignifies lævigare, to ſmooth (and ſo in ſpeech to flatter;) and ſo in Hiphil it is here taken, and being applied to ſin, whether פֶּשַׁע in the former verſe, or עָוֹן in this verſe, it ſignifies to put a ſoft, and ſmooth, and fair guiſe on it, as if there were nothing courſe or rough, nothing amiſs in it. Next then, it muſt be conſidered to whom אֵלָיו to him, refers; which, by reaſon of the double antecedent, the wicked, and God, may ſeem uncertain, but is by our Engliſh referred to the wicked himſelf. But the deſign of the verſe being to prove, that the wicked hath no fear of God before his eyes, and that, as was ſaid, before Gods eyes, it will be moſt reaſonable to interpret אֵלָיו of God, he hath ſmoothed his ſin to him, i. e. to God, made it appear very fair and ſmooth; but this not really, but בְּעֵינָיו in his own eyes, to his own thinking. And thus certainly the LXXII. underſtood it, who render it paraphraſtically ἐδόλωσεν ἑαυτόν αὐτῷ, he hath dealt deceitfully before him, i. e. God, hath indeavoured to cheat God, and give him a very fair gloſs, and ſmooth appearance of his ſin. And then follows לִמְצֹא עֲוֹנוֹ לִשְׂנֹא when his ſin is ready to be found out, to be hated; ſo ל ſignifies, ſee Joſ. 2. 5. לִסְגֹר when the gate was ready to be ſhut: the Syriack renders it moſt fully, when the time was come that the gate is ſhut in the evening; and the Arabick, when the gate was to be ſhut, for it follows, they went out. This is a moſt perſpicuous rendering of thoſe words. The LXXII. have followed the letter very cloſe, τοῦ ἰδεῖν τὴν ἀνομίαν αὐτοῦ καὶ μισῆσαι, literally rendering the two infinitives by infinitives, but omitting only the prepoſition ל in both places, and ſupplying it by the article τοῦ, and ſo leaving it free to be rendered as ל imports, when his ſin is ready to be found out, meaning ſtill when God is ready to puniſh, i. e. to find out, and hate their iniquity.

The Thirty Seventh PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

A Pſalm of David.

The Thirty Seventh Pſam, compoſed by David, is an exhortation to contentment, and chearful ſubmiſſion to all Gods diſpenſations; eſpecially his eminent work of providence, in permitting wicked men to proſper for a while; with addition of reaſons to inforce that exhortation, the conſideration eſpecially of the far happier condition of godly men.

1. There is very little reaſon that any man ſhould envy the proſperous condition of wicked men in this world, or be excited or tempted thereby to * take the ſame courſe.

1. ‖ Fret not thy ſelf becauſe of evil doers, neither be thou envious againſt the workers of iniquity.

‖ Be not emulous. See note d.

* to be like them, or, born with them. Gould.

2. For their proſperity is not likely to be durable: though they flouriſh for a while, yet is this no more than the verdure of the graſs or herb of the field, which preſently fades away, and then it is cut down, and carried thence.

2. For they ſhall ſoon be cut down like the graſs, and wither as the green herb.

a. 3. Thy much more prudent and thriving courſe is, to adhere and cleave faſt to God, to place thy full truſt in him, and go on cheerfully in doing all the good thou art capable of; and ſo to continue and increaſe, to dwell, and feed and live in faith, to order all thy actions by the rule of Gods will and commands, as long as thy abode is on this earth.

3. Truſt in the Lord, and do good; † ſo ſhalt thou dwell in the Land, and verily thou ſhalt be fed.

† dwell in the land, and keep, or feed in, or by faith, or continually.

4. Let all thy deſignes, thy pleaſures, thy ſatisfactions be placed in God: let it be thy greateſt joy to do what is moſt acceptable to him: and then never doubt but he will beſtow on thee that which is abſolutely beſt for thee; and even whilſt he withholds from thee what thou moſt wiſheſt, give thee that which thou ſhalt find to be much more for thy turn, and ſo more eminently the object of thy univerſal deſires, thoſe of craving that which is moſt for thy advantage.

4. Delight thy ſelf alſo in the Lord, and he ſhall give thee the deſires of thy heart.

b. 5. Whatever thou wanteſt or deſireſt, leave it to God; make all thy applications to him, and depend on him, that he will either give thee in kind what thou deſireſt, or by æquivalence ſomewhat that is better for thee.

5. *b Commit thy way unto the Lord; truſt alſo in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſs.

* Devolve thy way on the Lord, and hope on him.

6. And what ſlanders or calumnies ſoever others ſhall lay upon thee, God will, in his time, by his own ways, vindicate thine integrity.

6. And he ſhall bring forth thy righteouſneſs as the light; and thy judgment as the noon-day.

7. ‖ c Reſt

‖ Be silent to—— † envy not, be not emulous.

7. ‖ [c] Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him: † [d] fret not thy self because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass. c. d.

7. Never think fit to repine, or complain, or murmur at Gods œconomy, to object, if it be but in thy heart, against the prosperity of wicked men, and the strange successfulness of their ungodly designs; much less be instigated by these considerations to imitate them: have patience a while, and thou shalt see much of Gods wisdom, and justice, and even of mercy in this dispensation of his;

* envy not so as to do evil also.

8. Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; * fret not thy self in any wise to do evil.

8. Such as may reasonably supersede all thy displeasure and dislikes, and secure thee from so envying their lot, as to think fit to imitate them.

9. For evil doers shall be cut off: but those that waite upon the Lord, those shall inherit the earth.

9. For the general common end of wicked doers is untimely excision, signal punishment even in this life, (and that certainly attended with the miseries of another life:) whereas the lot of pious men. that adhere and keep fast to God, is generally length of days, and prosperity in this world, (and if that fail, an abundant compensation of bliss in another world.)

10. For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

10. Those that now prosper most, and are lookt on as favoured by providence above others, shall, after a small space, be as remarkable for Gods judgments and vengeance, even eradication of them and their posterities.

11. But the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

11. When the patient waiters on God, that will not enterprise any unlawful course, to deliver themselves from any pressure, by some good motion of the divine providence, are returned to the most prosperous condition, to abundance of all felicity in this life.

12. The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth.

12. Atheistical wicked men are bitterly displeased at the righteous, and lay designs of treachery and mischief against such.

13. The Lord shall laugh at him; for he seeth that his day is coming.

13. But God dissipates their projects, frustrates and disappoints them, by bringing his vengeance upon them.

14. The wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay such as be of upright conversation.

15. Their sword shall turn into their heart, and their bowes shall be broken.

14, 15. When ungodly men have made all their cruellest preparations, for the oppressing all that are weaker, or more conscientious then themselves, and think they have great advantages on their side, by reason of their strength and policy, and forwardness to adventure on any thing, be it never so unlawful, especially when 'tis against those that want strength, make not use of secular wisdom, and abhor the admitting of any unlawful means for the preserving of themselves, it is very observable, how, against all humane likelyhood, God converts their projects into their own ruine, and secures good men from the evils that were designed against them.

16. A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked.

16. And therefore as there is an emptiness, and want of satisfaction in all wealth that is ill gotten; so there is also such a curse and blast attending it, that the meanest pittance well acquired is much to be preferred, in these (as in many other) respects, before all the possessions of all the wicked men in the world.

17. For the armes of the wicked shall be broken: but the Lord upholdeth the righteous.

17. For as God is in justice ingaged to subdue the power, and blast the prosperity of wicked men; so hath he, by his gracious promise, obliged himself to support the pious man; and either to deliver him out of his pressures, or to uphold him under them.

18. The Lord knoweth the dayes of the upright; and their inheritance shall be for ever.

18. The actions of good men are seen, and laid up, and will not fail of being rewarded by God, not only with the comforts of this life continued to them and theirs, but especially with the greatest and most valuable rewards, a never-failing possession in heaven secured to them.

19. They shall not be ashamed in the evil times; and in the days of famine they shall be satisfied.

19. In times of adversity, persecution and distress, they shall be richly provided for; and even when others want, they shall have a competency: as long as they rely on God, he will not fail them, nor destitute them.

‖ shall consume as the pretious part of rams, they shall consume into smoak.

20. But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall ‖ be [e] as the fat of Lambs: they shall consume, into smoak shall they consume away.

20. But refractory men, opposers of the wayes of God, shall be used as Gods sacrifices, slain in the midst of their prosperity, burnt to ashes, and consumed into smoak; they shall finally and utterly be destroyed. e.

21. The

21. There is great difference in the actions of pious and wicked men, and ſuch as, one would think, ſhould much tend to the inriching the wicked, and impoveriſhing the pious. The former parts with nothing, neither gives, nor lends, but on the contrary borrows as much as he can, and never thinks of repaying: but the latter is ſo far from ſuch injuſtice, that he abounds in all works of charity and mercy, and never expects the leaſt return for it. Or the wicked is generally in a broken, indigent, neceſſitous condition, is forced to borrow, and is not able to repay, and ſo incurs the miſeries of a wretched debtor, Mat. 18. 34. but the righteous is ſo far from this eſtate, that he is able to lend and and give to others.

21. The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the righteous ſheweth mercy, and giveth.

22. And the reaſon is clear: God hath the diſpoſing and diſtributing of the things of this world; and he hath promiſed his bleſſing to the pious and juſt and charitable, and denounced curſes to the unjuſt, impious, and withall penurious, and griping worldling: accordingly ſo it is, he proſpereth the former, and gives them and their poſterities a peaceable and plentiful being here; and blaſteth and curſeth, and rooteth out the other.

f. 22. For † ſuch as f be bleſſed of him ſhall inherit the earth: and * they that be curſed of him ſhall be cut off.

† the bleſſed, * the curſed.

23. As long as mens actions are conformable to the will of God, and the directions which he gives for the guiding of them, (as the actions of the juſt and charitable are) in an high degree, ſo long are they moſt acceptable, and well-pleaſing to him, and ſo ſure to be accepted by him.

23. The ſteps of a || good man are ordered by the Lord; and he † delighteth in his way.

|| man גֶּבֶר † ſhall accept יֶחְפָּץ

g. 24. They that are careful of theſe practiſes, when afflictions befall, ſhall not be ruined by them: for God, by his ſecret wayes of providence, ſhall ſupport them under, or deliver them out of them.

24. Though he fall, he ſhall not be * utterly g caſt down; for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand.

* caſt away, or, daſht to pieces.

h. 25. From the beginning of my life to this day, making diligent obſervation in this matter, I am now able truly to pronounce, that I never could ſee or hear of any example of a juſt, and pious, and virtuous man, that was eminently charitable and merciful-minded that ever brought himſelf or his poſterity to want by that meanes.

25. I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not ſeen the h righteous forſaken, nor his ſeed begging bread.

26. Though he be continually pouring out of his ſtore, in works of mercy, giving and lending freely to thoſe that want, which a man would think ſufficient to waſt and ruine his worldly plenty, and impoveriſh him, or at leaſt his poſterity; yet he that obſerves ſhall find it much otherwiſe, that the poſterity of ſuch ſcatterers generally thrive much the better for it.

26. He is || ever merciful and lendeth; and his ſeed is bleſſed.

|| all the day, or every day, כָּל הַיּוֹם

27. And therefore the moſt prudent thriving courſe imaginable is this; ſtrictly to abſtain from all known ſin, and to be carefully exerciſed in all good works, eſpecially thoſe of mercy; and then thou haſt the promiſe of a long and proſperous life here, and of heaven and immortal glory hereafter.

27. Depart from evil, and do good, and dwell for evermore.

i. 28. For the lives of juſt men are acceptable to God, and to merciful charitable men peculiarly the promiſe is made, that God will ſhew them mercy, and deal with them as they have dealt with others, relieve and ſupport them in their diſtreſs, and ſignally proſper them and their poſterity; and yet farther reſerve a rich reward for them in another world: whilſt his judgments remarkably ſeiſe on the poſterity of wicked men, eſpecially of the unjuſt and covetous oppreſſor.

28. For the Lord loveth judgment, and forſaketh not his † Saints: they are preſerved i for ever; but the ſeed of the wicked ſhall be cut off.

† merciful ones, חֲסִידָיו

29. Accordingly you ſhall obſerve, that juſt, pious, and merciful-minded man of have their peculiar portion of a long and proſperous life in this world, they, and their poſterity, if they walk in their ſteps.

29. The righteous ſhall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

30, 31. All ſuch mens thoughts and diſcourſes are buſied on the true ſaving (not worldly, carnal, or diabolical) wiſdom, on the practice of virtue, and the ſincere obedience to all Gods commands. And this God is ſure to reward with his aſſiſtance and ſupport, and accordingly preſerve them from all evil.

30. The mouth of the righteous ſpeaketh wiſdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment.

31. The law of his God is in his heart: none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide.

32, 33. 'Tis to be expected indeed, that wicked men ſhould uſe all arts, and attempts of treachery, to oppreſs, and even to undoe, and kill the pious and meek, charitable perſon, who is moſt weakly furniſhed with worldly aids to repel or ſecure himſelf from their malice: But then God will interpoſe for his relief, and avert their deſigned violence from him.

32. The wicked watcheth the righteous, and ſeeketh to ſlay him.

33. The Lord will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged.

34. Keep cloſe to God, and in obedience to all his laws, and in ſo doing rely and depend with confidence on him, and prepare thy ſelf contentedly to bear whatſoever he ſhall ſend; and doubt not but, in his due time, he will bring thee to a proſperous condition, even in this world (unleſs in his ſecret wiſdom he ſee it better for thee to expect thy full reward in another world, and that is infinitely more deſirable to thee:) and thou ſhalt live to ſee his puniſhments poured out upon the ungodly.

34. Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he ſhall exalt thee to inherit the Land: when the wicked are cut off, thou ſhalt ſee it.

35. I

35. I have ſeen the wicked ‖ [k] in great power, and ſpreading himſelf like a † green bay-tree.

35. It is matter of very vulgar obſervation, that wicked men are very great ‖ terrible. † green tree ſprung up in the place, or, a flouriſhing native.

and formidable for a while, flouriſh and proſper exceedingly, and have moreover all ſeeming advantages to æternize this proſperity to them and their poſterity, and are not diſcern'd to have any thing come croſs, to hinder their thriving in the world:

36. * Yet [l] he paſſed away, and loe, he was not: yea, I ſought him, but he could not be found.

36. And yet of a ſuddain, in a trice, they are deſtroyed, and no remainder of them is to be found; their very memory is utterly gone.

* And

‖ laſt part.] 37. [m] Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the ‖ end of that man is peace.

37. This you may generally obſerve, that ſincere and juſt (eſpecially if they be alſo charitable, merciful) men do (whatever preſſures they meet with for a time) at length recover a peaceable and proſperous condition to them and their poſterity.

† at once. * laſt part. 38. But the tranſgreſſors ſhall be deſtroyed † together; and the * end of the wicked ſhall be cut off.

38. But wicked men, on the contrary, come to utter ruine and deſtruction: and though it be long deferred ſometimes, yet it comes with a vengeance at laſt, to the eradicating them and their poſterities.

39. For the ſalvation of the righteous is of the Lord; he is their ſtrength in the time of trouble.

39. And the account is clear; God by his providence delivers the righteous and merciful men, defends and ſupports them in all their diſtreſſes.

40. And the Lord ſhall help them, and deliver them; he ſhall deliver them from the wicked, and ſave them, becauſe they truſt in him.

40. And a ſure tenure they have in his mercy for aſſiſtance and preſervation from all the machinations of wicked men, as being in the number of thoſe that rely and depend on God, according to his own promiſe; and ſo may from his fidelity expect and challenge deliverance.

Annotations on Pſalm XXXVII.

a. שְׁכֹן אֶרֶץ

V. 3. Dwell] The latter part of this v. 3. is variouſly interpreted. And firſt for שְׁכֹן אֶרֶץ, all the antients agree to render it in the Imperative, inhabit the land, or dwell in it. And then all the difficulty is, whether this imperative have not the ſenſe of a future, (as oft it hath,) If ſo, then our Engliſh hath rightly rendred it, ſo ſhalt thou dwell; and ſo the LXXII. which render this imperatively, κατασκήνωσον γῆν, inhabit the land, render the next word וּרְעֵה and feed, καὶ ποιμανθήσῃ, and thou ſhalt be fed. And thus it will bear a probable ſenſe; Truſt in the Lord, and do good; dwell in the land, i. e. by way of promiſe, thou ſhalt dwell in the land, and be fed, i. e. provided for, אֱמוּנָה (adverbially) conſtantly, continually: as v. 27. Do good, and dwell for evermore. But I ſuppoſe, the imperative ſenſe may alſo very fitly be reteined, and the force of it be diſcerned, either firſt, by taking it by it ſelf, (as if the precept were therein terminated, viz. in their dwelling in the earth) in reſpect of thoſe many commands, given to the Jews, of not going down into Ægypt, of not mixing, or converſing with any heathen; by force whereof this of dwelling in the land muſt be looked on as a ſtrict duty: or Secondly, by joyning it with (and making it preparative to) the latter; which that it may be perſpicuous, we muſt next examine the meaning of רְעֵה אֱמוּנָה. And here for רְעֵה feed, the Syriack rendring סְבֵי, and ſeek, ſeems to have read, with the change of a letter, ב for ר, בְּעֵה ſeek; and then the ſenſe is obvious, Seek truth. Nay רָעָה in Kal frequently ſignifies to love, to be a friend, ſee Pſal. 13. 20. and 28. 7. and 29. 3. Judg. 14. 20. and then 'tis, love, or be a friend, or companion of truth. But all the other Interpreters adhere to our Hebrew reading, and the notion of feeding: the LXXII. Latine, and Arabick, agree in ποιμανθήσῃ, thou ſhalt be fed; and the Chaldee, that renders it וְתֶחְסַן and be ſtrong in the faith, did moſt probably mean by that paraphraſe to expreſs it, food being the means of ſtrength. Then for אֱמוּנָה. The noun ſignifies either faith, or fidelity, or certitude and conſtancy. The LXXII. it ſeems take it to ſignifie riches, as being the things that worldly men moſt truſt in; and ſo they render it וὶ τῷ πλούτῳ αὐτῆς, with the wealth thereof, as taking ה for an affix, or pronoun, and אֱמוּן as all one with מָמוֹן mammon, riches. And thus alſo the Latine, and Arabick read from them. But there is no ground for this rendring. The only probable account is, that, if רְעֵה be taken for feeding, and אֱמוּנָה not taken adverbially, then, as a noun, it here ſignifies, as ordinarily it doth, faith, ſo as to accord with truſt in the beginning of the verſe: and then underſtanding (as 'tis frequent) the prepoſition ב, the plain rendring is, וּרְעֵה אֱמוּנָה and feed in faith; ſo as Hab. 11. 4. the juſt ſhall live בֶּאֱמוּנָתוֹ in his faith. To live in, or by his faith, is to ſpend his life, and order his actions according to the rule of faith, the will and pleaſure of God; which is the norma or ſquare of a juſt mans life and actions. And thus to feed, and live, is all one: and ſo to feed in, or by his faith, to keep faithfully to the commands and will of God, as ſheep, that keep in the fold, as the ſhepherd would have them. And then here is another probable ſenſe of theſe two laſt branches put together: Dwell in the land, and feed in faith, i.e. all the time that thou liveſt on the earth, dwell and feed in faith, continue in faith, and affiance, and adherence to God, fall not off from him into any evill courſe, whatever the temptations may be. Another not improbable way of interpreting the place may poſſibly be fetcht from the uſe of רָעָה among the Arabs, for obſerving, or keeping a command, or covenant, &c. as alſo to obſerve what will come of a thing: and then רְעֵה אֱמוּנָה will be, keep truth, or faith, adhere conſtantly to it; or again, obſerve what will come of it, what will be the end of it.

V. 5. Commit] גּוֹל from גָּלַל volvit, is literally, roll; ſee note on Pſal. 22. f. And ſo here it clearly ſignifies, Roll thy way on God, divolve all thy concernments on him. But the antient Interpreters generally render it, as if it were גְּלֵה from גָּלָה to reveal: ſo the Chaldee, Manifeſt thy way to the Lord; the LXXII. ἀπόκαλυψον, reveal; and ſo the Latine and Arabick;

b. גּוֹל

yea, and the Jewish Arabick translator, Discover to him thy occasions, or matters, or needs, but gives no account of his thus rendering of גול. But the Syriack read ܓܠ direct thy way before the Lord.

c. דום V. 7. Rest] דום signifies to be silent, and our English dumb seems to be deduced from thence; and the silence in this place appears to be that, which is contrary to murmuring or complaining. The Chaldee render it שְׁתוֹק, from שָׁתַק siluit, quievit, tranquillus fuit; the LXXII. ὑποτάγηθι, be subject, by way of paraphrase, the absolute subjecting and submitting our selves to Gods will, being the full importance of this silence. As for התחולל that follows, from חול in the notion of יָחַל expectavit, (and accordingly the Chaldee render it אוריך expecta) the LXXII. render it ἱκέτευσον, deprecate, as from חִלָּה, which thus signifies; and because the praying to God is not only reconcileable with patient expecting, but withall is the ground thereof, (we have no reason to expect any relief, which we do not pray for from God) therefore, I suppose, the LXXII. moved also with the affinity of the words חול and חִלָּה, chose to explicate it by this paraphrase: and the Syriack do more than imitate them, rendring דום be silent, by ܒܥܐ ܡܢ ܡܪܝ seek or aske from] as well as the other by [pray,] Aske of the Lord, and pray before him.

d. אל תתחר V. 7. Fret] אַל תִּתְחַר from חָרַר or the quadriliteral חרחר to envie, to contend, to emulate, to strive to be like or equal to, will here be best rendered, emulate, or envy not, so as to be incited to do what the wicked do, by seeing how well they prosper. Thus the LXXII. render it μὴ παραζήλου, envy or emulate not; so the Syriack, Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick. The Chaldee also to the same sense, לָא תְנַרֵג provoke not, instigate not thy self at the wicked, who succeeds in his way, the man that executes or performs the counsel of the wicked. And that this of envying, or emulating so, as to be stirred up (by way of emulation) to do the like, is here meant, appears farther by v. 8. where the same word is used again with this addition, אַךְ לְהָרַע to do evil also: ὥστε πονηρεύεσθαι, say the LXXII. so as to commit wickedness; and the Chaldee, be not incited or instigated that thou do evil; and the Syriack, emulate him not to commit iniquity; and the Arabick most expresly by way of Paraphrase, imitate not the evil man. And thus it was before, v. 1.

אך

e. כיקר בעשן כלו V. 20. Fat] From יָקַר pretiosum, is כִּיקַר here, as the pretious, i.e. the fat, כָּרִים of rams, or lambs; the fat being most pretious, and most useful in the sacrifices, and that which is burnt, and, as here it follows בְּעָשָׁן כָּלוּ is consumed in, or into smoak. Thus 'tis ordinary in Scripture to resemble wicked men, both in themselves, and in their punishments, to sacrifices, or holocausts, utterly burnt, or destroyed before the Lord. The sacrifice is first fatted, and then slaughtered and killed before the Lord: and so are wicked men permitted to prosper in this world and grow rich, and proud, and then they are cut off, and destroyed utterly and eternally. The Chaldee, that render it here, the glory of the rams, add by way of paraphrase, which are first fatted, and then their throats are cut; adding, so shall the wicked fail, and be consumed in the smoak of hell. And the Syriack in like manner, not by literal rendring, but by way of Paraphrase, The enemies of the Lord being fatted, are consumed, and go away like smoak. The LXXII. render it ἅμα τῷ δοξασθῆναι αὐτὸς καὶ ὑψωθῆναι, as soon as they are glorified and exalted;] taking יָקַר in the notion of being honoured, and for כָּרִים of rams, reading בָּרוּם, as from רוּם exaltatus fuit, and כ servile. And thus also the Paraphrase is good; as soon as they are honoured and exalted, ἐκλείποντες ὥστε καπνὸν ἐξέλιπον, they fail, or consume as smoak: and so the Arabick, when they are glorious and lifted up, they utterly fail, as smoak when it consumes. Other interpretations are given by the Hebrews. Abu Walid, and Aben Ezra mention the grass of the pastures, or wood, [or bushes] of the fields, which being burnt, are turned into smoak. The Jewish Arab reads, like the heavy [clouds] of the meadows (as יקרות is by Abu Walid and R. Tanchum interpreted, thick, heavy, involved clouds, Zach. 14. 6.) which seeming to lye heavy over the earth, suddenly turn into smoak, and vanish. This seems to have pleased R. Sol. Jarchi.

כיקר בעשן כלו

V. 22. Blessed] מְבֹרָכָיו the blessed of him, is by the LXXII. rendred εὐλογοῦντες αὐτὸν, in the active, they that bless him, according to the liberty that they frefrequently take of paraphrasing (instead of literal rendering) and taking in words of affinity, in order to that. And thus the sense well bears; Gods blessings generally belonging to those that are liberal, and such being said to bless God, because their liberality is an act of acknowledgment or thanksgiving, and what they do to his poor servants, he accounts as done to himself. But the Chaldee and Syriack read it in the passive, the blessed of God, or those that are blessed of him.

f. מברכיו

V. 24. Cast down] לֹא יוּטָל is variously interpreted. The LXXII. read οὐ ταραχθήσεται, which the Latine rightly renders, non collidetur, he shall not be dasht to pieces, as many things are by falling: but the Arabick, he shall not be troubled, as if they read it οὐ ταραχθήσεται, or καταταραχθήσεται, which thus signifies: but the Syriack more singly, he is not hurt; the Chaldee by way of Paraphrase, if he fall into infirmity, he shall not dy. The Hebrew טול signifies in Niphal either simply to be thrown, or else to be cast away, as when Jon. 1. 5. the wares in the ship are cast into the Sea, or Jonas himself, v. 12. and 15. and so it may signifie here, viz. so to fall, as to be cast away, or lost by the fall; but more probably, (and with more propriety to the mencion of falling) to be thrown (as that notes a real passive, together with the effect thereof, thrown) to the ground, so as to be dasht in pieces by the fall: and to that the LXXII. incline.

g. לא יוטל

V. 25. Righteous] That צַדִּיק righteous, frequently in sacred style signifies a charitable or merciful man, hath oft been observed, (see note on Mat. 1. 9.) And that here it must be taken in that sense, appears by the context, v. 21. the righteous sheweth mercy, and giveth, and v. 26. He is ever merciful and lendeth — and then there, as here, after all his profusion, his seed is blessed. But this must be taken with one caution, that this of almesgiving is but a part of the righteousness mere meant, not the whole of it; the word, as it oft signifies the almesgiver, so oft signifying other parts of our duty to God, and Man, and our selves, and all of them comprehended under it. And so the full importance of it here must be, he that to the other parts of a pious and good life, is observed to superadd (see v. 27.) a special degree of mercifulness and communicativeness to them that want, though of all other virtues that be most probable to diminish the possessions, yet it is the Psalmists observation, that he never saw any man impoverished by the most liberal practice of it, but, on the contrary, that his seed is blessed, his posterity is the more prosperous and flourishing by it.

h. צדיק

V. 28. For ever] In this place there is a concurrence of two things, which cast some suspicion on the Hebrew text, which now we have, as if it were some way altered from what the original copies read. For 1. this being an Alphabetical Psalm, as it is acknowledged, it is yet manifest, that the letter ו is omitted: 2. the LXXII. in this place put in two words, which are not found in our Hebrew; some copies read them ἄμωμοι ἐκδικηθήσονται, the blameless shall be avenged, and so the Arabick, others, ἄνομοι δὲ ἐκδιωχθήσονται, but the wicked shall be persecuted, and so the Latine, injusti punientur, the unjust unjust shall be punisht. And then 'tis the conjecture of some, that עוֹלִים being the Hebrew word for unjust, began that verse, and then there is the ע that was wanting. But then 1. it is certain, that neither the Chaldee nor Syriack acknowledge any such insertion, but follow our Hebrew herein exactly: 2. that far less change will afford us the ע which we want, to complete the alphabetical order of the verses; viz. by reading עוֹלָם נִשְׁמְרוּ for ever are they kept, without the preposition ל, (which elsewhere is omitted) and then beginning the division with that ע, which is in עוֹלָם. And this is the most probable account to be given of this difficulty

i. עולם

k. עָרִיץ

V. 35. Great power] From עָרַץ, timuit, is the noun עָרִיץ formidable, terrible: The Interpreters generally render it by way of Paraphrase; the Chaldee תַּקִיפָא, strong, powerful; the Syriack, boasting; the LXXII. ὑπερυψούμενον, exalted above measure, and so the Latine and Arabick. But in that which follows, they use greater liberty. The Hebrew hath מִתְעָרֶה כְּאֶזְרָח רַעֲנָן spreading himself as an indigena flourishing: for so מִתְעָרֶה, from עָרָה effudit, signifies in Hithpael, to dilate and spread it self; מִתְעָרֶה אֶזְרָח

אֶזְרָח, from זָרַח, ortus fuit, is indigena, born or sprung up in that place where he continues, and is here generally thought to be limitted by the adjunct רַעֲנָן flourishing, to the notation of a tree, אִילָן צָמִיחַ, a tree sprung up in the place, saith the Chaldee, any green root, or flourishing plant, saith Abu Walid, and the Jewish Arab, that springs in a moist fruitful place. And this, I suppose, because trees, &c. that grow where they first sprang up, without removing to any other place, do thrive and prosper fastest.

רַעֲנָן And accordingly רַעֲנָן, from רָעַן to be green, signifies it well provided with leaves, and so with verdure. And that perhaps is the reason, why some late Interpreters have rendered it a bay tree, because that, with some others, is all the year long green. But the truth is, after all this, the rendering it a tree, hath no certain foundation. אֶזְרָח signifies a free-born person, or citizen, as that is opposed to a stranger, Lev. 23. 42. every הָאֶזְרָח in Israel, i.e. Israelite born, יְצִיבָא saith the Chaldee, Indigena in Israel. So Lev. 24. 16. גֵּר כָּאֶזְרָח as well the stranger as he that is born in the land, &c. 19. 34. הַגֵּר כְּאֶזְרָח the stranger shall be as one born among you; αὐτόχθων a native, say the LXXII. and the word is never pretended to be used in Scripture, elsewhere, for any but a man, a native Israelite. That it should signifie a tree here, Interpreters have been induced to resolve, from the Epithet רַעֲנָן adjoyned to it. But sure that is of no force, being elsewhere applied to Nebuchadnezzar the King, Dan. 4. 4. I Nebuchadnezzar was at rest in my house, וְרַעֲנָן and flourishing in my palace. As for מִתְעָרֶה spreading, which is also appliable to a tree, neither is that of any force, in the Targums judgment, which renders it by no more then חֲסִין strong. As for עָבַר (following in the next verse) that is rather a prejudice to the notion of a tree, for a tree doth not use to pass by. And indeed, when the most flourishing tree dyes, it yet remains in the earth, and cannot be said to pass away, &c. untill it be cut down, and carried away root and all. And in brief, they that resolve אֶזְרָח here to be a tree, pretend not to know or determine what tree it is. It may therefore be competently probable, that it signifies here, as in all other places, a native Israelite: for such had many advantages, above a stranger, to secure his own being, and that of his posterity. For his estate could never be sold out-right; and as long as he had any brother or kin alive, he could never be without hope of issue, his next of kin was to marry his wife, and raise up seed to him that died without any. Whereas the stranger on the other side had no such priviledge, but was subject to usury, and all exactions. In these respects it is very reasonable thus to interpret David here, that being to express the sudden and miraculous decay of an ungodly person, that was most unlikely for such a fate, he should instance in a native Israelite, which was provided for, and secured by such priviledges, and moreover was 1. מִתְעָרֶה spreading, had many children, and branches of kindred, a numerous family, or, as the Targum renders it, חֲסִין strong, and so vital; 2. רַעֲנָן very fresh and flourishing; and notwithstanding all these advantages of stability, past by as a shadow, and left no memorial, or footstep behind him of his being. For all this the LXXII. hath ὑπερμεμέγεθυν ὡς τὰς κέδρους τοῦ Λιβάνου, exalted as the Cedars of Libanus; and so the Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick. This ‖ learned men suppose to be by their reading אַרְזָה cedar, for אֶזְרָח indigena, and † לְבָנֹן Lebanon, for רַעֲנָן green. But I rather believe, that according to their wont, they choose thus to paraphrase the darker expression; and the rather, because of this affinity of the words, which is frequently observed to have had force with them. And so the Syriack, that follows not them, doth yet use this other paraphrase, extol themselves as the trees of the wood; without question reading as we now read, but taking this liberty of expressing the sense by other not very distant words.

† See Grotius.

V. 36. Passed] The LXXII. here read in the first person, I passed by, where the Hebrew hath עָבַר he passed by: and the Syriack, as well as Latine and Arabick, follow the LXXII. But the Chaldee adhere to the Hebrew, וּפְסַק מִן עָלְמָא and he passed, or failed from the age or world, (according to the usual notion of עָלְמָא in Arabick,) and loe he was not——

V. 37. Mark] This v. 37. is somewhat ambiguous in the Original, and so is very distantly rendred by the antient Interpreters, from that which our English and late Interpreters give it. By the Chaldee, Keep Integrity, and respect uprightness, or straightness, for the end of a man is peace. Where 'tis evident, that תָּם and יָשָׁר, which are, as we render them, concretes, the perfect man and the upright, are by them rendred in the abstracts, שְׁלִימוּתָא and תְּרִיצוּתָא integrity and uprightness. And so the LXXII. (and Æthiopick) ἀκακίαν καὶ ἀδυπλία, innocence and rectitude; and the Syriack, perfection, or integrity, and rectitude; the Latine, simplicity and equity; the Arabick, mansuetude and rectitude. And so in like manner for שְׁמֹר and רְאֵה observe and see, they read, keep and see to; נְטַר וְחֲמִי in the Chaldee, keep and respect; φύλασσε καὶ ἴδε, in the LXXII. custodi & vide, in the Latine, &c. and the Hebrew words indifferently bear these. Again, for אַחֲרִית לְאִישׁ שָׁלוֹם the last part of or to that man is peace, which the Chaldee also retein, the LXXII. read ἔστιν ἐγκατάλειμμα ἀνδρὶ εἰρηνικῷ, there is a remnant to the peaceable man; and so the Latine and the Æthiopick: but the Syriack, with some change, there is a good end to men of peace; and the Arabick, there shall be an end to the peaceable. Here 'tis also clear, that the LXXII. from אַחַר after, take אַחֲרִית for a remainder; and so again, v. 38. and so Psal. 109. 113. אַחֲרִיתָם they render τὰ τέκνα αὐτῶν, his children: and then אִישׁ שָׁלוֹם will well bear, the man of peace. And so still there is nothing strange in that rendring; though that which our English hath given be most literal, and regular to the Hebrew, and the context, the whole Psalm being made up of observations of this kind, how in the end wicked men come to ruine, and good men to prosperity.

n. יִחְדָּו

V. 38. Together] From יָחַד to unite, and יָחִיד one, is יַחְדָּו, sometimes rendred together, sometimes, at once; and that when applied to destruction, &c. denotes utter destruction; because he that is destroyed at once, is so destroyed, as that there is nothing behind, nothing wanting, to final and total destruction. The LXXII. render it ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, at once. Thus Psal. 19. 9. when Gods judgements are said to be righteous, יַחְדָּו (ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, at once, say the LXXII.) the meaning is, they are so righteous, as nothing can be added thereto.

The Thirty Eighth PSALM.

A Pſalm of David, [a] to bring to remembrance.

a. Paraphraſe. The Thirty eighth is a mournful complaint of Davids, reciting his preſent miſeries, and calling to God to remember, and pity, and relieve him.

1. O God of all Juſtice, and yet of all mercy too, let not thy puniſhments, though moſt juſtly deſerved by my ſins, break out in extremity againſt me.

1. O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath, neither chaſten me in thy hot diſpleaſure.

b. 2. They are already very ſharp and heavy upon me.

2. For thine arrows [b] || ſtick faſt in me: and thy hand preſſeth me ſore.

|| are entred deep in me, and thy hand is come down upon me.

3. My ſins have moſt ſadly provoked thy wrath, and the effects of that are very ſenſible: mine eſtate is become like to thoſe that are under ſome ſore malady, that hath ſeized on every part of their bodies, and allows them no intermiſſion of pains and miſery, no reſt or ceſſation of their anguiſh.

3. There is no ſoundneſs in my fleſh, becauſe of thine anger: neither is there any reſt in my bones, becauſe of my ſin.

4. Or to thoſe that are plunged deep over head and ears in water, overwhelmed, and ready to be drowned by it; or to thoſe that, under ſome inſupportable weight or burthen, are preſt to the ground: the number and weight of my ſins is ſo great, and from thence my puniſhments ſo many, and ſo heavy, that I am oppreſt and overcharged by them.

4. For mine iniquities are gone over mine head; as an heavy burthen, they are too heavy for me.

c. 5. Or again, to one that hath received many ſore blows and bruiſes; which as they are very painful at preſent, ſo if they be not well lookt to, and the congeled blood carefully drawn out, they will ſoon putrifie and grow noiſome. And mine own abſurd and foul follies have brought all this upon me.

5. My [c] || wounds ſtink, and are corrupt, becauſe of my fooliſhneſs,

|| bruiſes.

d. 6. Like to one that with ſome chronical diſeaſe is extremely decayed, and bent down toward the earth, and ſo is forced to go continually in that ſad mournful poſture, that is wont to be uſed in time of lamentations.

6. I [d] am * troubled, I am bowed down † greatly: I go mourning all the day long.

* incurvate, † to extremity.

e. 7. Like to one that is full of boyles and ſwellings in ſeveral parts of his body, and ſo is very ſorely and painfully diſeaſed.

7. For my [e] * loins are filled with a || loathſome diſeaſe; and there is no ſoundneſs in my fleſh.

* flanks. || inflammation.

8. Laſtly, like to one that with long and terrible pains, through grieving, and ſighing, and roaring for them, is brought into a very weak and low eſtate, a conſumption of the whole body. And all this have my own ſins, moſt abſurdly committed, and moſt beſtially continued in for a great ſpace, moſt juſtly brought upon me.

8. I am feeble, and † ſore broken: I have roared for the * very diſquietneſs of my heart.

† brought low, or worn away. נִבְהֵיתִי

* groaning. פַּנְחַמַת

Septuagint LXXII.

9. O bleſſed Lord, thou ſeeſt my wants, and the continual miſery that I am in.

9. Lord, all my deſire is before thee, and my groaning is not hid from thee.

10. I am as one in an amazement or giddineſs, ready to ſink or tumble, his eyes dim, ſo that he cannot make uſe of them any more than if he had none.

10. My heart || panteth, my ſtrength faileth me: † as for the light of mine eyes, it alſo is gone from me.

|| turns round סְחַרְחַר

† and the light of mine eyes they alſo are not with me. וְאוֹר עֵינַי גַּם הֵם אֵין אִתִּי

f. 11. And in all my diſtreſs I was ſo far from receiving any relieſe or comfort from man, that they which were neereſt knit to me by the tyes of nature and friendſhip, were ſome of them afraid of owning me, others never conſidered me.

11. My lovers and my friends ſtand * aloof [f] from my ſore, and my kinſmen ſtand afar off.

* on the other ſide of my bruiſe.

g. h. 12. As for mine enemies that projected to take away my life, at leaſt to do me ſome great hurt, their actions, their words, their thoughts were continually intent on ſome kind of violence, miſchief, or deceit, or other.

12. They alſo that ſeek after my life || lay [g] ſnares for me; and they that ſeek my hurt, ſpeak † [h] miſchievous things, and imagine deceits all the day long.

|| uſe violence againſt † evil.

13, 14. And all this I bare with patience; I took no notice of their behaviour toward me, never rebuked the one nor the other, for what they did or ſaid unto me.

13. But I as a deaf man heard not, and I was as a dumb man that opened not his mouth.

14. Thus I was as a man that heareth not, and in whoſe mouth are no reproofs.

15. For

15. For in thee, O Lord, do I hope; thou wilt hear, O Lord my God.

15. My ſtill truſt and dependance is on thee, O Lord and my aſſured confidence, that thou wilt in thy good time interpoſe thy hand and deliver me.

‖ leſt peradventure they rejoyce.

16. For I ſaid, ‖ hear me, leſt otherwiſe they ſhould rejoyce over me: when my foot ſlippeth, they magnifie themſelves againſt me.

16. To thee therefore I make my petition, that thou wilt not leave me to mine enemies will, to rejoyce and triumph over me, as they are very forward to do, and to make their boaſts what victories they have obtained over me, if at any time any the leaſt evil befalls me.

פֶּן יִשְׂמְחוּ

† fall: ſee Pſal. 35. note f.

17. For I am ready to † halt, and my ſorrow is continually before me.

17. And now indeed this is my condition; for I am in continual danger, and expectation of ruine, if thou be not pleaſed to ſupport me.

* afraid of.

18. For I will declare mine iniquity: I will be * ſorry for my ſin.

18. And I muſt acknowledge and confeſs, that they are my many grievous tranſgreſſions, which have brought this anxiety upon me, given me reaſon continually to fear leſt by them I have forfeited thy protection; and then there is nothing but ruine to be expected.

‖ live and are

19. But mine enemies ‖ are lively, and they are ſtrong; and they that hate me wrongfully are multiplyed.

חַיִּים עָצְמוּ

19. And to this my fear agrees the proſperity of my unjuſt and cauſeleſs enemies, who live and increaſe in ſtrength, their forces are daily multiplyed: And this may well mind me of the increaſe of my ſins, to which this is imputable, for otherwiſe I am ſure I have not provoked them by any injury done to them; only my ſins againſt thee have thus ſtrengthened them.

20. They alſo that render evil for good are mine adverſaries, becauſe I follow the thing that good is.

20. To them I have done nothing but good, and yet they perſecute me, and make theſe unkind returns for all my kindneſs; having no other matter of quarrel to me, but my doing that which is juſt and good, and never wronging them, how much ſoever I am wronged by them.

21. Forſake me not, O Lord: O my God, be not far from me.

21. O God of power, do not thou leave me to their malice: O Father of mercy, and that to me thy ſinful ſervant, let not my ſins remove thee from me.

22. Make haſte to help me, O Lord my ſalvation.

22. O thou, whoſe title it is to ſave, and deliver thoſe that are in the greateſt danger, and even on ſinners to have mercy, and reſcue them from the due reward of their ſins, and haſt to me made moſt gratious promiſes of this kind, I beſeech thee no longer to defer, but in my greateſt extremity relieve me opportunely and ſpeedily.

Annotations on Pſal. XXXVIII.

Tit. To bring to remembrance] It is uncertain what לְהַזְכִּיר, in the title of this Pſalm, ſignifies. Some a. לְהַזְכִּיר of the Hebrews apply it to their Muſick, but give no clear account of their reaſons, or meaning herein. That which ſeems moſt probable, is, that, as the meat-offering, Levit. 2. 2. 9. 16. is called אַזְכָּרָה a memorial, an offering of ſweet ſavour to God, and elſewhere, לְאַזְכָּרָה for a memorial, Lev. 24. 7. or rather, as Gods remembring any man is his relieving and helping him; ſo a prayer to God in time of diſtreſs, may fitly be ſtiled לְהַזְכִּיר, to cauſe remembrance. Thus this Pſalmiſt elſewhere prayes, Lord, remember David and all his troubles, Pſal. 132. 1. and, remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies, Pſal. 25. 6. Remember thy congregation, Pſal. 74. 2. and many the like. And accordingly this Pſalm, and the ſeventieth, which have this title, are moſt earneſt prayers for relief. There, Make haſt, O God, to deliver me, make haſt, make haſt to help me, O Lord, &c. and here, O Lord, rebuke me not, &c. in the beginning, and forſake me not, O Lord, O my God, be not far from me; make haſt to help me, O Lord my ſalvation, in the end. What the diſtreſs was that cauſed ſo paſſionate a prayer for relief, will be hard to define particularly. The outſide of the words and expreſſions ſignifies a ſharp and noyſome diſeaſe. And 'tis not improbable that David ſhould have his part in that kind of affliction, who had ſo large a portion of other ſorts; or that, ſince his perſecutions have furniſhed the Church with ſo many excellent pieces of devotion, his bodily afflictions ſhould proportionably do ſo to: eſpecially, ſince we ſee King Hezekiah, both in his ſickneſs and his recovery, making attempts of this kind. But 'tis alſo poſſible, that Davids other diſtreſſes, of which we have more certain evidence in his ſtory, his perſecutions under Saul, and from his own Son Abſalom, might, by a Pſalmiſt, in Poetick ſtyle, be thus reſembled, and compared with the ſoreſt and moſt noiſome diſeaſes. And therefore I deemed it more ſafe to ſet the paraphraſe, with this latitude of ſignification, applying the words to his ſtreights in general, ſtore of which it is certain he had; rather then to confine them to noiſome diſeaſes, which we read not that he was viſited with at any time.

V. 2. Stick] From נָחַת deſcendit, are two words in this v. 2. diſtinguiſhable by the nouns to which they are applyed. The former נָחֹתוּ, applyed to arrows, ſignifies going down, i. e. entring deep into the fleſh. The LXXII. read ἐνεπάγησάν μοι, the Latine, and Syriack and Arabick, infixæ ſunt mihi, are faſtened in me; which is but a natural conſequent of entring deep, and ſo is ſet to paraphraſe it. The latter תָּנַחְתָּ, applyed to hand, ſignifies to come down, or deſcend, with ſome weight to fall upon him. This the Chaldee render שְׁרַת remained, and the Syriack ܫܪܝ and did reſt, as if they read it from נוּחַ to reſt. But the LXXII. ἐπιθέσθαι ἐπ' ἐμὲ τὴν χεῖρά σου, confirmaſti, ſaith the Latine, thou haſt confirmed thy hand upon me, i. e. let it fall hard upon me: the Arabick rightly expreſs their meaning, thy hand is become hard upon me; and ſo this is a good paraphraſtical explication of it.

b. נָחֹתוּ

תָּנַחְתָּ

V. 5. Wounds] From חָבַר convenit, ſociatus eſt, is חַבּוּרָה a bruiſe from any blow, becauſe the blood or matur aſſociates and gathers together in that place: it ſignifies alſo a boyle or apoſteme. Here 'tis in the former ſenſe, as cauſed by a blow or ſtroke, (and figuratively ſignifies any effect of Gods wrath or diſpleaſure,) and it is ſaid to putrifie, and to ſtink, for ſo the blood and humors thus congregated, and ſtanding ſtill, do putrifie immediately, and will be noiſome, if they be not drawn out. The LXXII. therefore fitly render it, μώλωπες, vibices, ſuch as come from blowes,

c. חַבּוּרָה

blowes; (but the Syriack, سحبلى boiles, in the other notion of it) and so I suppose the Chaldee also, from בּוּשׁ and בּוֹשׁ puduit, pudefecit, because such bruised parts look black and blew, and are matter of shame (from whence the Greek ὑπωπιάζειν, to give blowes under the eye, is frequently used for putting to shame;) and accordingly the Chaldee would more fitly be rendered vibices, than cicatrices, scars, as the Translation of the Targum and the vulgar Latine have it.

d. נַעֲוֵיתִי V. 6. Troubled] נַעֲוֵיתִי from עָוָה incurvatus est, is regularly to be rendered, I am incurvate: so the Chaldee עַקִּימֵית, from עָקַם incurvatus est, signifies. The LXXII. paraphrase it by ἐταλαιπώρησα, I was afflicted; the Syriack, ܐܬܚܡܝ I was in commotion, I was afraid. But the literal must be reteined, to connect it with שַׁחוֹתִי I was depress't, or bowed down, that follows; which the LXXII. rightly renders σκολιάμενον, I was crookt, or bent down. As עַד מְאֹד for the עַד מְאֹד usque valde, exceeding much, or to extremity, the LXXII. render it ἕως τέλους, until the end: so the Latine, usque in finem; and so the Arabick, for ever, in the notion of עַד for eternity. But in v. 8. where the phrase is used again, they render it ἕως σφόδρα, and the Latine nimis, in the notion of that word for very much.

c. בְּכָלְ V. 7. Loins] The notion of כֶּסֶל for the flank is known in Scripture, Lev. 3. 4. the kidneys and the fat which is upon them, which is over, or by הַכְּסָלִים the flanks: so Job 15. 27. fat on his כֶּסֶל flank. And so here it must be taken for that sinewy part of the body, next under the loynes, the groine, &c. wherein boils and plague-sores frequently rise. Some copies of the LXXII. render it ἀὶ ψόαι, and those the Latine follow, and read lumbi, loines: but Suidas tells us, what parts of the body ψόαι, (or, in Hippocrates's dialect, ψόες) are; ἐν ταύταις ἔγκειται οἱ νεφροὶ, saith he, the kidneys are situate in them. Athenæus, l. 9. out of Simarist us Συνωνυμ. l. 3. tells, ὀσφὺν μὲν ἐκ πλαγίων, σάρκας ἐπισήσεσθαι, ψόας, the word signifies fleshy (in opposition to bony) parts over against the loins; and out of Clearchus, περὶ σκελετῶν, l. 2. that they are σάρκες μυώδεις κατ' ἐκάτερον μέρος, musculous parts on each side, adding, that some call them νεφρομήτρας. This I see some learned men will have changed into νεφρομήτρας, the wombes of the reins, because as was said, νεφροὶ ἔγκεινται, the kidneys are placed in them. But I conceive that is not the importance of μήτρα, in composition, especially at the end of a word: certainly ὀρτυγομήτρα, Exod. 16. 13. Numb. 11. 31. Psal. 104. 40. Wisd. 16. 2. and 19. 12. is not the womb of the quails, but a great sort of quails, the mother quaile, as μητρόπολις, is the great, and so the mother City: and in this sense sure the ψόαι, cannot be called the νεφρομήτραι, the great, or the mother-kidneys. I shall therefore adhere to the vulgar reading, that they are in Clearchus called νεφρομήτραι, the great, or the mother nerves: for such indeed are the flanks, grissly, or nervous parts, beyond all others in the body; and that makes them very sensible when any inflammation or swelling is in them. Other copies of the LXXII. have instead of ψόαι, ψυχή μου, my soul, and the Arabick follows them. But the former is surely the truer reading. Then for נִקְלָה wherewith he saith his flank is filled, that from קָלָה vilipendit, is ordinarily rendered in the notion of foule or vile: the Latine renders it illusionibus, and the Arabick and Æthiopick to the same sense, with reproaches, from the Greek ἐμπαιγμῶν, which the Romane edition of the LXXII. have. But it must be remembred, that קָלָה signifies also to rost or burne, &c. and so the noun by analogy may signifie inflammation, (such we know all those boiles and sores are) and the Chaldee here renders it קְרִיחָתָא burning, from קָרַח to inflame or burne, and from thence is both קַרְחָה a feaver, or burning disease, and אֶקֶר a carbuncle, which as it signifies a gem, so a coal of fire, and a burning boile, or swelling also. And whereas those editions of the LXXII. which read ψόαι (not ψυχή) read (not ἐμπαιγμῶν, but) ἐνεργεμάτων, that must needs be a corruption, very probably for ἐμπρησμάτων, inflammations; and then there will be a perfect agreement betwixt the Hebrew and Chaldee and LXXII. and the rendring be clear, my flanks are filled with inflammations, by those signifying boiles, swellings, carbuncles in those nervous parts, very painful and sensible by that means.

נִגְעִי f. V. 11. Sore] From נָגַע to touch, or to wound, or to come near, is נִגְעִי here, my wound, or stroke, or bruise, the evils that have befallen me. The Chaldee render it מַכְתְּשִׁי my wound or contusion, the Syriack ܚܘܫܝ my grief; but the LXXII. as reading it נִגְּעוּ the verbe, and in the notion of approaching, render it ἤγγισαν, they came neer, ἐξ ἐναντίας μου ἤγγισαν καὶ ἔστησαν, they came neer me and stood over against me: and by this they have fully, though paraphrastically, exprest the sense of it; as Luk. 10. 31, 32. ἀντιπαρῆλθε, passing by over against him that was wounded, signifies, not taking any care of him.

וַיְנַקְּשׁוּ g. V. 12. Snares] וַיְנַקְּשׁוּ is certainly from נָקַשׁ, and that in Piel signifies collisit, concussit, prostravit, to destroy, saith Abu Walid, to lay grins or snares, saith the Jewish Arabick translator, any injurious, or violent usage, toward any; so Psal. 109. 2. יְנַקְּשׁוּ let the usurer catch, or take by violence all that he hath. The Chaldee there render it יְנַבְּבוּ, from נָבַב, which with them is to levy, take, or exact: and accordingly the LXXII. here render it ἐξεβιάζοντο, used violence; and the Latine, vim faciebant; the Syriack ܐܬܬܩܦ bound me, laid hold on me; and the Arabick, oppress me. Only the Chaldee that there rendred it rightly, yet here reading it, as from יָקַשׁ to lay snares; render it יַעֲבְדוּ פַּחִין laid snares; as on the other side the LXXII. which duly interpret it here, yet in that of Psal. 109. 11. read ἐξεφεύνησάτω, search; either taking it for יְבַקֵּשׁ, that so signifies, or respecting the notion wherein the Arabs use בקש, for discovering, or searching out, as it is in Kamus the great Arabick Dictionary.

הַוַּת h. V. 12. Mischievous] From הָוָה fuit comes the noun הַוָּה for an evil event, calamity, mischief: so Psal. 41. 3. the pestilence הַוּוֹת of hurts, we rightly render the noisome or noxious pestilence. So Mic. 7. 3. הַוַּת נַפְשׁוֹ the mischief of his soul; and so most probably, Prov. 10. 3. God will מהדף הַוַּת the mischief of the wicked; and Prov. 17. 4. applyed, as here, to the tongue, לְשׁוֹן הַוּוֹת we rightly render it a naughty tongue. Now because falseness, and deceit, and lying, is generally the means by which the tongue is enabled to hurt, therefore the Chaldee here render it, שִׁקְרָא a lye; and so the Syriack also, and the LXXII. ματαιότητα, vanity, by which they frequently signifie falshood also. But the more general notion of it for any kind of evil or mischief, seems most proper for it in this place, that of deceits following in this verse.

וָאָגָה i. V. 18. Be sorry] וָאָגָה signifies indeed sorrow, but that for the future, and that is all one with fear or solicitude; so Jer. 17. 8. shall not be careful in the time of dearth; Jer. 42. 16. speaking of the sword רוֹאֲגִים ye feared; Jer. 49. 23. on the sea דְּאָגָה we render sorrow, it is, fear or sollicitude, to express the faintheartedness precedent: so 1 Sam. 9. 5. וְיִרָאג, and take thought, i. e. be afraid for us. And so here אֶרְאַג מֵחַטָּאתִי I will be afraid of my sin, sollicitous concerning it, lest it bring mischief upon me, as it justly may.

The

The Thirty Ninth PSALM.

TO the chief Musitian even to Jeduthun, a Psalm of David.

Paraphrase.

The Thirty ninth Psalm, composed on the same occasion as the 37th. and 73d. viz. on the scandal David took at the prosperity of wicked men, whilst he was himself in misery, hath also a mixture of contemplation of the vanity of all worldly things, as a motive to repress all impatience in whatsoever adversity. It was composed by David, and committed to Jeduthun a skilful Musitian, 1 Chr. 16. 41, 42. and the Prefect of his Musick.

1. I said, I will take heed to my wayes, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me.

1. I have stedfastly resolved to keep a very strict guard over my self; especially over my tongue, that part of me which meets with most frequent provocations at this time, when mine adversaries, ungodly and wicked men, are so successful and prosperous in their wickedness, that I have need of all care and resolution to keep me from breaking out into some intemperate passionate speeches, as oft as I see or consider them.

2. I was dumb with silence, I held my peace even from good, and my sorrow was ‖ stirred.

‖ troubled נֶעְכָּר

2. My purpose therefore was, in the presence of these, or when my thoughts or other discourse were on them, to keep perfect silence; neither to use words to vindicate mine own innocence, nor to blame or reprove mine adversaries. But whilst I thus restreined my tongue, I could not repress my sorrow; that was rather increased by this method.

3. While I was musing, the fire burned; then spake I with my tongue.

3. And being so, it grew by degrees to such an heat and flame, that it required some vent toward heaven: though I restrained my tongue from all anger and impatience toward men, yet there was no reason I should repress it from making my mone to God. To him therefore in all humility I thus address my self.

4. Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know * how frail I am.

* What a frail, or ceasing man I am. מָה־חָדֵל אֲנִי

4. Lord, if it be thy sacred will that I should be cut off by mine enemies, that I should not long live to discharge that office to which thou hast called me; if my sins, which justly might provoke thee to this, have called forth this decree against me, as one unfit to be farther imployed, or honoured, or own'd by thee; then be thou pleased some way to reveal this part of thy will unto me, that I may know what to expect, and accordingly which way to turn and prepare my self.

5. Behold, thou hast made my days as [a] an hand-breadth, and [b] mine age is nothing before thee; verily every man † at his best estate is * altogether vanity.

† standing, or living, נִצָּב

* All כֹּל

5. I know right well that my life is very short, a meer nothing being compared with thine eternity: and this is common to me with all other men; for there is not a man living in the world, who is not as frail and mortal, and almost as short-liv'd, as any the meanest creature: Man is the compendium of this lower world, and so there is no degree of frailty, and brittleness, and fadingness in any creature, which is not to be found in man also.

a. b.

6. ‖ Surely every man walketh in a vain shew, † surely they are disquieted in vain: he [c] heapeth up * riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them.

‖ only in an image man walketh. אַךְ בְּצֶלֶם אִישׁ

† see note on Psalm. 73. 1. † yet אַךְ

* and knoweth not who shall carry them in.

6. Our life is but a picture, or image, shadow, or dream of life, it vanisheth in a trice; and when we are gone, we have no power of what we leave behind us: all the fruits, riches, honours, or whatsoever else is most desirable on earth, must suddenly be parted with, and we know not who shall possess them after us (and so this is an evidence of the perfect vanity of them all, a proof that they are not worth the least value, if we have them, or the least pains to acquire them;) and yet we silly and vain creatures carke, and labour, and turmoile to get together these transitory fraile nothings, as if they would continue to us to all eternity, and had some solid durable enjoyment and satisfaction in them.

7. And now, Lord, what wait I for? my hope is in thee.

7. There is nothing therefore upon the earth, even a Kingdom, that is worth the patience of expecting, or the sollicitude of averting the dangers of losing it. One thing onely there is in the world, fit to be matter of a sober mans ambition or hope; the favour of God, and the glorifying him in that condition, whatsoever it is, that he in mercy shall choose for us.

8. Deliver me from all my transgressions: make me not the reproach of the foolish.

8. For these therefore I make my humblest requests to thee, that thou wilt pardon my many horrible breaches of thy law, and free me from those punishments which are due to me for them: and not suffer wicked men, that are my deadly enemies, to prosper, lest they at once triumph over me and piety, and reproach the relying and depending on thee, as the greatest folly: for this will turn to the dishonour of thee and thy service.

9. I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it.

9. What is befallen me, I am far from repining or murmuring at: It comes, I know, from thee, whose disposals are most wise: and be it never so sharp, I am sure I have well deserved it.

10. Remove thy stroak away from me: I am consumed by the blow of thine hand.

10. Yet if it may be thy will, set now a period to my calamities, lest I be utterly destroyed by them.

11. When

11. If thou be diſpleaſed, as our ſins very oft provoke thee, the very withdrawing thy favour doth inſenſibly blaſt and conſume all our wealth, and greatneſs, health, and beauty, and whatſoever is moſt pretious to us. So ſure and viſible is it, that we men, and all we have, are meer nothing.

11. When thou with rebukes doſt correct man for iniquity, thou makeſt his ‖ beauty to conſume away [d] like a moth: † ſurely every man is vanity. Selah.

‖ pretious things.
† every man is only vanity.

12. Be pleaſed therefore, O Lord, to hearken to my ſad and mournful requeſt, which I now poure out before thee; that ſeeing my time, and all mens, is ſo ſhort and tranſitory in this world; (this being ſo contrary to a place of reſt or ſtability)

12. Hear my prayer, O Lord, and give ear to my cry: hold not thy peace at my tears; for I am a ſtranger with thee, and a ſojourner, as all my fathers were.

13. Thou wilt give me a little ſpace of relaxation, that I may ſerve and glorifie thee here on earth, before I dy.

13. * O ſpare me a little, that I may recover ſtrength, before I go hence, and be no more.

* Let me alone. הַשַּׁע מִמֶּנִּי See Job. 7. 19.

Annotations on Pſal. XXXIX.

a. יְפָחוֹת

V. 5. Hand-breadth] טְפָחוֹת ſignifies palmas, and being here applyed to dayes of mans life, certainly denotes the ſhortneſs thereof, as it were commenſurate to the breadth of the palme or hand. The copies of the LXXII. which now we have, read variouſly; ſome παλαιὰς, followed by ſeveral of the antients, others παλιρρὼς, without ſenſe. But methinks there ſhould be no doubt, but the Original rendring was παλαμὰς, or παλαιστὰς, either of which differs very little (even but by one letter) from παλαιὰς, which the Antients moſt commonly retein, and is alſo exactly anſwerable to the Hebrew. For παλαιστὴ, παλάμη, ſaith Heſychius, thoſe two words are Synonymous, τὸ πεντάδων δακτύλων μέτρον, called alſo σπιθαμή. And accordingly Symmachus renders ὡς σπιθαμὰς, as hand-breadths. The other interpreters render it paraphraſtically, the Arabick, ſhort, the Chaldee, light, the Syriack, with a meaſure, the Latine, menſurabiles; both theſe as from the Greek, taking παλαιστὰς for menſurabiles.

b. חֶלֶד

V. 5. Mine age] חֶלֶד ſignifies time, age, particularly this age of ours, which here we live; which belonging to the body, the Chaldee by way of paraphraſe, render it גִּשְׁמָא body, both here and in Job, and the LXXII. ὑπόστασις, ſubſtance, the Syriack life, the Arabick conſiſtence.

c. יְעָב

V. 6. Heapeth up] The difference of צָבַר and אָסַף muſt here be taken notice of. The former here appears to contain all the toyle of the harveſt, in reaping, binding, cocking, all congeſtion and heaping things together, bringing them from the ſeveral places where they grow, into a cumulus: the Chaldee אֲסֵם renders it by גְּנַשׁ to congregate. The latter notes the ſtowing, or houſing, laying it up, removing or carrying it out of the field, where 'tis heaped or cockt up, ready for carriage. For ſo אָסַף is ſometimes to lay up, ſometimetimes to take away. And accordingly חַג הָאָסִיף the feaſt of Ingathering, is the feaſt of Tabernacles, after this laſt part of harveſt was fully ended. This then is the deſcription of the vanity of our humane eſtate, that when a man hath run through all the labours of acquiſition, and hath nothing viſible to interpoſe betwixt him and his enjoyments, yet even then, he is uncertain, not only whether himſelf ſhall poſſeſs it at laſt, but whether his heir ſhall do it; nay, he knows not whether his enemy may not; he cannot tell who ſhall gather them into the barn, or enjoy them when they are there.

b. כָּעָשׁ

V. 11. Moth] For כָּעָשׁ as a moth, the LXXII. read ὡς ἀράχνην, as a ſpider, paraphraſtically expreſſing the ſame thing, viz. conſumption of that which is moſt pretious, the moth ſo conſuming the garment, and the ſpider his own vital faculties, when out of his own bowels he ſpins his web. The Chaldee reads it, like a moth broken aſunder. But the phraſe is in reaſon to be applyed to the moths conſuming other things, not being himſelf conſumed, Hoſ. 5. 12. I will be to Ephraim כָּעָשׁ as a moth, i. e. I will conſume them; Iſa. 50. 9. the moth ſhall eat them as a garment. The Syriack paraphraſe it another way, thou haſt made their deſires fly away as chaffe, by deſires] rendring חֲמוּדוֹ, which ſignifies any thing deſirable, from חָמַד deſideravit; and ſo may here be taken for beauty, for health, for ſtrength, for any thing that is moſt deſirable. In the end of the verſe, where in the Hebrew we read אַךְ הֶבֶל כָּל אָדָם onely vanity is every man, the LXXII. from ℣. 6. read ταράσσεται μάτην, is troubled in vain; which ſhews that they uſed this larger liberty, and kept not themſelves to ſtrict literal verſion. The Chaldee reads, is nothing, the Syriack, as a vapour, by way of paraphraſe alſo; and ſo we know St. James c. 4. 14. reſolves our life to be a vapour. The Syriack ܐܝܟ ܡܫܘ notes ſuch a vapour as comes out of the mouth in ſpeaking.

The Fortieth PSALM.

To the chief Muſitian, A Pſalm of David.

Paraphraſe.

The Fortieth Pſalm is an acknowledgment of Gods mercies to David, and of his obligations to God; and contains a prophetick mention of the mutual contract betwixt God the Father and Chriſt the Son. It was compoſed by David, and committed to the Prefect of his Muſick.

1. I waited patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry.

1. In the greateſt of my troubles, I repoſed my full truſt and confidence on the Lord; I waited his good time, and continued my conſtant prayers unto him, and in due ſeaſon he heard and granted my requeſt.

‖ a ſounding pit.

2. He brought me alſo out of ‖ an [a] horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and ſet my feet upon a rock, and eſtabliſhed my goings.

2. And though I were very deeply immerſt in calamities, and ſo as my condition was well nigh deſperate; yet he reſcued me out of all, and ſet me in a condition of ſafety and ſtability. a.

3. And he hath put a new ſong in my mouth, even praiſe unto our God: many ſhall ſee it and fear, and ſhall truſt in the Lord.

3. Thus hath he given me abundant matter of praiſe and thanksgiving unto his bleſſed name, who hath thus magnified his mercy to me. And this dealing of his with me may well allure all men to the conſideration of it, and thereby to the performing of all faithful obedience, and placing their full truſt and adherence on him.

† Many things haſt thou done, O Lord my God: thy wonders and thy thoughts toward us I am not able to ſet in order before thee.

4. Bleſſed is the man that [b] maketh the Lord his truſt, and reſpecteth not the proud, nor ſuch as turn aſide to lies.

4. There being no ſuch happy man as he that relyes not on any wit or aid or ſtrength of man, but repoſeth his full truſt in God, and on that ſecurity, never applyes himſelf to the practiſes of atheiſtical, inſolent, deceitful men, in hope to gain any thing by ſuch arts as theſe. b.

5. † Many, O Lord my God, are the wonderful works which thou haſt done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward; [c] they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee: If I would declare and ſpeak of them, they are more than can be numbred.

5. O thou God of power, and fatherly goodneſs toward me, thou haſt abounded to me in thy rich mercies: thy works, and thy counſels of grace to us are wonderful, and inexpreſſible: I would fain make ſome acknowledgment thereof to thee; but they ſurpaſs my arithmetick to recite, much more to make a juſt valuation of them. c.

6. Above all is that admirable work of thy mercy in giving the Meſſias. And upon this intuition, he ſhall moſt gladly, and with all delight and joy, ſet about the whole will and counſel of God, and go through the office aſſigned him very chearfully and heartily. 9. I will proclaim this, and all other thy works of evangelical infinite mercy before all that acknowledge and profeſs thy ſervice: my tongue ſhall never be confined, or ſilent in this matter, any more than, as thou knoweſt, hitherto it hath been.

10. I have not hid thy righteouſneſs within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulneſs and thy ſalvation: I have not concealed thy righteouſneſs and thy truth from the great congregation.

10. This goodneſs of thine, this performance of all thy rich promiſes, this work of redemption and ſpiritual deliverance, is too great to be meditated on in ſilence: 'tis fit to be proclaimed aloud, to be promulgated to all men in the world.

13. Be pleaſed, O Lord, to deliver me: O God, make haſt to help me.

13. O bleſſed Lord, let it be thy good pleaſure to afford me ſpeedy deliverance out of it.

14. Let not them proſper and ſucceed in their attempts, that deſign to take away my life, or do me any other miſchief; but do thou pleaſe to diſcomfit and diſappoint them all: And this I am confident thou wilt do.

14. ‖ Let them be aſhamed and confounded together, that ſeek after my ſoul to deſtroy it; let them be driven backward and put to ſhame that wiſh me evil. ‖ or, They ſhall.

f. 15. And reward their abominable actions, with confuſion and deſolation, that triumph over me in my diſtreſs, and ſcoffe at my placing my affiance and truſt in God.

15. † Let them be deſolate f for a reward of their * ſhame, that ſay unto me, Aha, Aha. † or, They ſhall. * turpitude.

16. By this means ſhall all pious men, that place their truſt in thee, and depend onely on thy aids and reſcue, be incouraged for ever in their hopes and adherence on thee, and praiſe and magnifie thy mercies, and applaud thee for them.

16. Let all thoſe that ſeek thee rejoyce and be glad in thee: ‖ Let ſuch as love thy ſalvation ſay continually, The Lord be magnified. ‖ and ſay alwayes, Let the Lord magnifie them that love thy ſalvation.

17. How low ſoever my condition is, my comfort is, that God hath a fatherly care of me. On thee, O Lord, is all my truſt, whether for deliverance or relief: O defer not the interpoſition of thy hand, but haſten ſpeedily to my ſuccour.

17. But I am poor and needy; yet the Lord thinketh upon me. Thou art my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God.

Annotations on Pſal. XL.

a. שְׁאוֹן

V. 2. Horrible pit] From שָׁאָה perſonuit, is שְׁאוֹן here, a noiſe or loud ſounding, and being applied to a pit, is a reſounding pit, or a pit of ſounding; it ſignifies the depth and watryneſs of it, from the conjunction of which proceeds a profound noiſe, or ſound, when a ſtone, or any ſuch thing is thrown into it. Thus the Chaldee underſtand it, rendring it אִתְרְגוּשְׁתָּא, from רְגַשׁ to make a tumultuous noiſe. The LXXII. read παλαιπωρίας miſery, and ſo the Latine miſeria, the Syriack, ܥܡܝܩܬܐ ſadneſs, the Arabick, perdition; either by way of paraphraſe to ſignifie the miſerable ſad eſtate of him that is ingulfed in ſuch a pit, or elſe referring to another notion of שְׁאוֹן, for a vaſt or deſolate place, ruine or perdition. But the notion of the word is beſt fetcht from Iſa. 17. 12. where we have the שְׁאוֹן noiſe of the people, כְּשְׁאוֹן מַיִם like the noiſe of many waters, יִשְׁאָון ſo ſhall they make a noiſe; ס יִתְרַגְּשׁוּן ſaith the Chaldee, they ſhall ſound tumultuouſly.

b. שָׂם

V. 4. Maketh] For שָׂם poſuit, ſet, or put, the LXXII. read שֵׁם name, and ſo render it ᾧ ἐστι τὸ ὄνομα κυρίου ἐλπὶς αὐτῷ, whoſe hope is the name of the Lord; and ſo the Latine, Syriack, Arabick, and Æthiopick: and the ſenſe is not at all wronged by it. Only the Chaldee reads דְּשָׁוֵי which hath put. In the end of the verſe, where the Hebrew hath יְשְׁטֵי כָזָב thoſe that decline to a ly, (for which the Chaldee hath thoſe that ſpeak lies) from שׂוּט to go out of the way, the LXXII. read χυμαίας ψευδεῖς, and lying madneſſes, as if it were from שָׁטָה, uſed among the Chaldees for being mad. The Latine follow the LXXII. inſanias falſas; but the Syriack agree with the Chaldee, lying ſpeech, and the Arabick, lying fables.

יְשְׁטֵי כָזָב

c. עָרוֹךְ

V. 5. Cannot be reckoned up] For the Hebrew אֵין עָרוֹךְ אֵלֶיךָ which is beſt rendred, I cannot ſet in order, i.e. recount, diſpoſe or enumerate before thee, the LXXII. read, by way of paraphraſe, οὐκ ἔστι τίς ὁμοιωθήσεται σοι, there is none that ſhall be likened to thee; perhaps from another notion of עָרַךְ to compare or aſſimilate. So Pſ. 89. 7. Who in heaven יַעֲרֹךְ ſhall be compared, or likened to the Lord? But the clear rendring of them, and of the whole verſe, lyes thus; רַבּוֹת עָשִׂיתָ אַתָּה, Thou haſt done great, or many things, O Lord my God, נִפְלְאֹתֶיךָ וּמַחְשְׁבֹתֶיךָ אֵלֵינוּ אֵין עָרוֹךְ אֵלֶיךָ thy wonders and thy thoughts to us-ward I cannot recount before thee: אַגִּידָה, &c. I will declare, or, If, or, when I would declare and ſpeak of them, עָצְמוּ מִסָּפֵר they are too ſtrong, or according to the ordinary notion of the word in Arabick, too great, or many above numbering, or to be numbred. The LXXII. expreſs it rightly, ἐπληθύνθησαν ὑπὲρ ἀριθμόν, they are multiplyed above number.

רַבּוֹת

d. אָזְנַיִם כָּרִיתָ

V. 6. Mine ear] אָזְנַיִם כָּרִיתָ לִי is literally to be rendred [thou haſt bored or opened my ear] ſo the Chaldee and Syriack underſtand it. Boring the ears, we know, was a ceremony uſed to a ſlave, that would not have his liberty, but loved his Maſter, and would not go out free, Deut. 15. 17. Exod. 21. 6. and the ceremony ſignificative; for boring of the ear ſignified opening it, and the opening the ear is a ſign of hearkning, as that is in order to, and all one with obedience. The Hebrew כָּרָה ſignifies alſo to cut; and 'tis poſſible it may ſo ſignifie here, the circumciſing of the ear, a phraſe frequent in Scripture to denote ready and willing obedience. For this the LXXII read σῶμα κατηρτίσω μοι, thou haſt prepared me a body, either from this of circumciſing the ear, which denotes the fitting and preparing the whole body, or perhaps from a ſecond notion of כָּרָה to prepare meat, to provide a feaſt, 2 King. 6. 23. be prepared וַיִּכְרֶה great proviſion כָּרָה for them. But this account will not ſerve for σῶμα, body, which they read in ſtead of ears: herein it is hard to define with any certainty. Only it is not improbable, that this reading of the modern copies of the LXXII. was not the original reading, but inſtead of σῶμα, body, ὠτία, ears. The antient Scholiaſts acknowledge this reading; and the Latine which generally follows the LXXII. in their variations from the Hebrew, doth here read, aures autem perfeciſti mihi, thou haſt perfected ears for me: by which they muſt be thought literally to have rendred the Greek ὠτία κατηρτίσω μοι, in the notion of κατηρτίζω, for perficio. And that thus it was read in S. Jeromes time, may be concluded from his Epiſtle ad Suniam & Fretellam, who had objected to him the moſt minute differences between the Latine and the LXXII. but take no notice of any difference in this. The ſame reading Euſebius Caſarienſis follows, and ſo interprets it, thou haſt perfected to me ears, and obedience to thy words. See Caten. Gr. Pat. in Pſal. à Dan. Barbaro, Venet. 1569. p. 463 and the Expo. Gr. Patr. in Pſalm. ſet out by Balthaſar Corderius, Tom. 1. Ed. Antw. p. 735. & 749. ὠτία δὲ κατηρτίσω μοι, ὑπακοὴν με ἀπῃτήσας μονὴν, ὥστα γὰρ τὴν ὑπακοὴν λέγει. Ears haſt thou prepared me, thou haſt required of me obedience only, for ears ſignifie obedience. And then it is moſt likely that the Apoſtle, Heb. 10. 5. reading σῶμα δὲ κατηρτίσω μοι, but a body thou haſt prepared me, by that means to fit it more perfectly to the incarnation of Chriſt, the copiers of the LXXII. here thought fit to accord it to the Apoſtolick ſtyle, and ſo put σῶμα inſtead of ὦτία. If then it be demanded, how it comes to paſs, that the Apoſtle reads it with that variation, both from the Hebrew and the LXXII. alſo; the anſwer is obvious, that the Apoſtle attended more to the ſenſe, than to the words, and citing it from the LXXII, changed it into thoſe words which more fully and perſpicuouſly expreſt the myſtery of Chriſts incarnation. This the Hebrew ſomewhat obſcurely expreſt, by my ear haſt thou bored, or opened, thereby noting his taking on him the form of a ſervant, ſuch as had their ears bored or opened; which implies his incarnation, and withall adds to it the principal end of it, to obey and do the will of him who ſent him. This was yet more obscure in the reading of the LXXII. (that which I suppose to be theirs, for the reasons forementioned) thou hast prepared or made me ears:] where yet ears being parts of a body, the making him them, is still the making him a body, and that in order to his hearing and observing his Fathers will exactly. But the Apostles reading, though it be far distant from the letter of the Hebrew, and in part from the LXXII. (as I suppose it to have been originally) yet is the most perspicuous interpretation of the * meaning of it; Christs body comprehending the ears, and that assumed on purpose to perform in it the utmost degree of obedience to the will of God, to be obedient even to death, and thereby to be as the Priest, so the Sacrifice also, that of which all the sacrifices and burnt-offerings under the Law were but types and shadows, and at the presence of which they were to cease, as we know they did, and as is expresst here in the following words, Burnt-offering and sin-offering hast thou not required: Then said I, Loe I come —— That this whole passage is an eminent prophecy of Christ, appears by the Apostle, Heb. 10. 5. who makes Christ, not David, to be the speaker here; wherefore when he, i. e. Christ, cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice —— which makes it less necessary for us in this place to seek for any first sense, wherein David might be interpreted to speak this of himself; but rather to account of it, as the great signal wonder of mercy, done by God to men, which, in the recounting of Gods wonderful works and thoughts to us-ward, v. 5. he seasonably brings in by the spirit of prophecy, viz. the birth of the Messias, and the Sacrifice of himself, wherein so many, even innumerable, and unexpressible mercies were comprised, and folded up. If it may be thus understood, as an instance brought in by David (prophetically) of Gods wonderful mercies, then will these three verses be no more but a description of Christs coming into the world; after which David again proceeds to the recounting of Gods mercies, more generally, vers. 9. But because there is no assurance of this, and the Apostles words, Heb. 10. 5. may refer only to the higher and Prophetick completion of the words, and yet not prejudice a first immediate sense of them, as belonging to David, it is not amiss therefore here (though not in the paraphrase) to annex that, viz. that God prefers obedience, noted, as was said, by opening the ear, before the richest oblations and holocausts; and that therefore David designes that, as his way of rendring his humblest thanks for Gods mercies, by performing faithful obedience to his commands. This is the literal meaning of [Sacrifices and burnt-offerings thou wouldest not desire, mine ears hast thou opened] the latter, that of ready willing obedience, thou hast much preferred before the former. And again to the same purpose, Burnt-offerings and sacrifice thou hast not required: Then said I, Loe, I come to do thy will, O my God, i. e. They are not sacrifices, in their greatest multitude, that God requires and expects of Kings, or such as David, as their returns for the greatest mercies; but a ready and cheerful obedience to his commands, such a discharge of the regal office, as may tend most to the honour and glory of God, such as was prescribed Deut. 17. 16. &c. where the duties of a King are set down, and in the close of them this, of his writing him a copy of the law in a book, and reading therein all the days of his life, v. 18, 19. In reference to which, as it may truly be said, In the volume of the book it is written of me, (of David, as of all other Kings, in this place of Deuteronomy;) so may that be fitly interpreted that follows, O my God, I have delighted therein, made thy service, the study and practice thereof, the great imployment and pleasure of my life: yea thy law is in the midst of my bowels; which was much more then the command of having it written in a Book; I am perfect in the knowledge, and continually exercised in the practice and performance of thy commandments.

* τὸ δὲ, Ὠτία δὲ κατηρτίσω μοι, ὁ μαθὼν Παῦλος τὸ σῶμα ἀπὸ βελῶν εὔρηκεν, ἵνα ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐξενίσθη, ἀλλὰ σῶμα τὸν ἴσον ἑαυτῷ τίτον χρηματισμὸν. Expos. Græc. Patr. a Balthas. Corder. edit. p. 749.

V. 7. In the Volume] From גָּלַל to roll or fold, comes מְגִלַּת, which Symmachus literally renders εἱλήματα, folding, and Theophylact on Heb. 10. 7. εἱλητάριον, a roll. The LXXII. read κεφαλίς, which must be understood in that sense, denoting the round form that a writing is in, when it is folded up (as in Architecture some round parts are called κεφαλίδες, in the LXXII.) and so saith Suidas, κεφαλὶς βιβλίου, ὅτι πρὸς εἱλημά ἐστι, the word being applyed to a book or writing, (as here) which some call the folding. As for סֵפֶר a book, that signifies any writing among the Jews, whose custom it was to write in a long roll, (see note on Luk. 4. a.) and that folded up to preserve it: and so here מְגִלַּת סֵפֶר is no more than a folded paper, or parchment of writing, a roll. Now as by this phrase any kind of writing is signified, and so, as it belongs to Davids person, it may fitly refer to the book of the Law, wherein the duty of Kings was set down, Deut. 17. So it must be remembred, that in such rolls were contained their contracts, as among us in indentures; and so here the roll of the book (as it belongs to Christ) is no more but a bill or roll of contract betwixt God the Father and him, wherein is supposed to be written the agreement preparatory to that great work of Christs incarnation, wherein he undertaking perfectly to fulfill the will of God, to perform all active, and also passive obedience, even to death, had the promise from God, that he should become the author of eternal salvation to all those that obey him.

V. 15. For a reward] For עַל עֵקֶב for a reward, the LXXII. seem to have read עַל עִקֵּב at the heel, and so render it κατὰχρῆμα, presently. As for בָּשְׁתָּם it signifies their turpitude, or filthy actions, and so their shame in that sense, as it is taken for any shameful thing; for that is it which is to be rewarded with desolation.

The Forty First PSALM.

Paraphraſe.
The Forty First Pſalm ſets forth the preſent reward of merciful-minded men in this life, and from thence aſcendeth to the aſſured mercies of God to his faithful ſervants that ſtand in need of them. It was compoſed by David, and committed to the Præfect of his Muſick.

TO the chief Muſitian, a Pſalm of David.

1. The bleſſings of God ſhall not fail to be poured out on the merciful-minded man, who is careful to conſider and ſuccour thoſe that are in ſickneſs, or any kind of miſery: God ſhall be ſure to ſuccour him, when afflictions come upon him.

1. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the ‖ poor: the Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble. ‖ ſick, חלה

2. Whatſoever his diſeaſes or dangers are, God will interpoſe for his relief, and if he ſee it beſt for him, ſignally ſecure his life, and reſtore him to a proſperous flouriſhing condition in this world; and whatever the malice of his enemies be, deliver him out of their hands.

2. The Lord will reſtore him and keep him alive, and he ſhall be bleſſed upon the earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.

3. When he falls into ſickneſs or diſtreſs, (for from thoſe the pious man is not ſecured in this life) the God of might and mercy will be his upholder; he will ſmooth and ſoften all that befalls him, and make it cheerfully ſupportable.

3. The Lord will ſtrengthen him upon the bed of languiſhing: thou wilt † make all his bed in his ſickneſs. † turne, הפכת

4. Upon this account I have all confidence to addreſs my prayers to God in time of my diſtreſs: This duty of mercifulneſs being one that as he preſcribes, ſo he eminently exemplifies to us by his own practice, (Luk. 6. 36.) To him therefore I make my addreſs, for mercy of the higheſt and moſt valuable ſort; his balſam to my wounded ſoul, his free pardon for my ſins, which have juſtly deſerved all the calamities that can fall upon me.

4. I ſaid, Lord, be merciful unto me: heal my ſoul, for I have ſinned againſt thee.

5. My enemies are very malicious againſt me, very induſtriouſly diligent to ſeek my ruine.

5. Mine enemies ſpeak evil of me; When ſhall he dye, and his name periſh?

6. When they are in my preſence, they ſpeak flatteringly and deceitfully: meanwhile they plot and project miſchief againſt me, and diſcourſe it abroad, wherever they have opportunity.

6. And if he come to ſee me, he ſpeaketh vanity: his heart gathereth iniquity to it ſelf; when he goeth abroad, he telleth it.

7. All mine enemies conſpire together ſecretly, and joyn their miſchievous indeavours, to do me what hurt they can.

7. All that hate me, whiſper together againſt me; againſt me do they deviſe my hurt.

a. 8. They are confident their calumnies ſhall miſchief me, and that I ſhall never recover or deliver my ſelf out of this pertinacious ruine, which now they have by their ſlanders contriv'd againſt me.

8. ‖ An [a] evil diſeaſe, ſay they, cleaveth faſt unto him; and now that he lieth, he ſhall riſe up no more. ‖ A word of Belial, מ, A wicked word cleareth to him. † the man of my peace.

9. And in this not only my known profeſt enemies have joyned againſt me; but one particularly that profeſt the greateſt kindneſs to me, a ſervant in whom I repoſed truſt, and that lived by my ſervice, (Achitophel probably, one of Davids Counſellors, 2 Sam. 16. 23.) hath moſt inſidiouſly and perfidiouſly ſet himſelf againſt me. (And herein was David a Type of Chriſt, betrayed by his own Diſciple, that was in a ſpecial manner intruſted by him, Joh. 13. 18.)

9. Yea † mine own familiar friend in whom I truſted, which did eat of my bread, hath lift up his heel againſt me.

10. But do thou, O Lord, preſerve me from their miſchievous purpoſes: reſtore me to my throne in ſafety, and I ſhall chaſtiſe this their wickedneſs.

10. But thou, O Lord, be merciful unto me; and raiſe me up, that I may requite them.

11. As yet my adverſaries have not been able to prevail againſt me, as fain they would; and thereby I diſcern thy watchful providence over me, which alone hath diſappointed them.

11. By this I know thou favoureſt me, becauſe my enemy doth not triumph over me.

12. Thou haſt undertaken the patronage of my cauſe, and not ſuffered me to periſh in mine innocence, but reſcued me out of their hands, and reſerved me for thy ſervice.

12. And as for me, thou upholdeſt me in mine integrity, and ſetteſt me before thy face for ever.

b. 13. And for this and all other his mercies, his glorious majeſty be now and ever magnified by me, and all the congregation of thoſe that profeſs his ſervice;

13. [b] Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael from everlaſting to everlaſting. Amen and Amen.

Annotations

Annotations on Psal. XLI.

a. דבר בליעל

V. 8. An evil disease] What is here meant by דבר בליעל, is matter of some difficulty. The Antient Interpreters generally render it a perverse, or mischievous, or wicked word; the Chaldee, a perverse word; the Syriack, a word of iniquity; the LXXII. λόγῳ μετρίῳ; the Latine, iniquum verbum, a wicked word; the Arabick, words contrary to the law. And so in all probability it is set to signifie a great slander, or calumny; that as men of Belial] are slanderous persons, so the speech of Belial] shall signifie a slanderous speech. And this is said to cleave to him on whom it is fastened; it being the nature of calumnies, when strongly affixt on any, to cleave fast, and leave some evil mark behind them: Calumniare fortiter, aliquid hærebit. 'Tis true indeed, דבר doth sometimes signifie a plague or pestilence: but there is no cause of rendering it so here. The consequents of [now that he lyeth he shall rise up no more,] are but a proverbial phrase among the Hebrews, applicable to any sort of ruine, as well as that which comes by disease: the Calumniator may destroy and ruine, as well as the pestilence; and from him was Davids danger most frequently, and not from a pestilential disease.

b. ברוך

V. 13. Blessed] This form of benediction here, and the like, at the end of every Book of the Psalms, is by the Jews said to be affixt by the Compiler of the Book, who having finisht it, praises God. So saith Aben-Ezra, on Psal. 89. 52. and gives for instance the perpetual custom of their writers, of closing with some comprecation. That which will make this more to be heeded is, that all the several books end in this manner, (see note on Title of Psalms.) Nor will it be more strange to say, that Ezra, or whosoever composed the books of Psalms in this form and division, added their conclusions to them, then 'tis to say, that the end of the last chapter of Deuteronomy was affixt to the Pentateuch by the Sanhedrim, or the Four and Twentieth verse of the One and Twentieth of St. John, by the Church of Ephesus, (see note c. on that Chapter.) 'Tis sure that the Psalter was antiently received in this division. Jerome in his Epistle to Marcella, recounting the Hagiographa, says, Primus liber incipit à Job, Secundus à Davide, quem quinque incisionibus, & uno Psalmorum volumine comprehendunt; The first begins from Job, the second from David, which they comprize in five divisions, as one volume of Psalms. So Epiphanius; Ψαλτήριον διῄλον εἰς πέντε βι- * de pond: & mens.
βλία οἱ ἑβδομήκοντα, ὅτι εἶναι καὶ αὐτὸ ἄλλην πενλάτευχον. The Hebrews divided the Psalter into five Books, so that it is another Pentateuch. And then they that thus distributed it, may reasonably be thought to have afforded every book those solemnities of conclusive benedictions, which we find they have, and which are so perfectly agreeable to the subjects of each book, lauding, and praising God.

The end of the First Book.

THE SECOND BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Forty Second PSALM.

Paraphraſe. The Forty Second is the firſt of the ſecond Book of Pſalms, in the Hebrew partition of them, (which ſecond Book reaches to the end of Pſalm LXXII. and contains one and thirty Pſalms.) It was compoſed in time of his diſtreſs, in his flight from Abſalom, and is chiefly ſpent in bemoaning his detention from Sion, the place of Gods ſolemn worſhip; and was ſet by him to the tune known by the name of Maſchil, (ſee note on Pſal. 32. a.) and committed to the Præfect of his Muſick, to be ſung by the Poſterity of Coreh, the ſons of Heman, 1 Chron. 25.4. ſtiled Heman the ſinger, 1 Chron.6.33. who came from Elkanah, Aſſir, Abiaſaph, v. 36, 37. three of the poſterity of Coreh. Exod. 6. 24. and 1 Chron. 6. 22.31. and were not ſlain, Num. 26. 11.

TO the chief Muſitian, Maſchil, for the ſons of Corah.

a. 1. No Deer, when he is in the greateſt inward inflammation, expreſſeth more ardent deſire and thirſt of water, than my heart is at this time affected with toward God and his publick ſervice.

1. As the ‖ hart [a] panteth after the water-brooks, ſo † panteth my ſoul after thee, O God.

‖ hinde † brayeth.

2. I am in a moſt impatient thirſt, much afflicted to be kept ſo long from that place, where God is pleaſed to exhibit himſelf to thoſe that come to worſhip him.

2. My ſoul thirſteth for God, for the living God: when ſhall I come and appear before God?

3. It is very great cauſe of continual ſorrow unto me, to hear men reproach me for my truſt in God, thinking that I am wholly forſaken by him.

3. My tears have been my meat day and night, while they continually ſay unto me, Where is thy God?

b. 4. This puts me into a great exceſs of ſorrow and impatience, when reflecting on what I have formerly injoyed. I remember how I was wont to go in the ſociety of many pious men, to the place of Gods worſhip, in a moſt cheerful, devout, alacrious manner; but now am, as in a wilderneſs, wholly deprived of theſe moſt divine, pleaſant, and valuable opportunities.

4. * When I [b] remember theſe things, I pour out my ſoul in me: for I had gone with the multitude; I went with them to the houſe of God, with the voice of joy and praiſe, ‖ with a multitude that kept holy-day.

[a] I remembred theſe things, and poured out my ſoul upon me: for I had gone into the covering, or had gone with the multitude, I had put them forward.
‖ a feſtival multitude, or multitude going in devotion.

5. But let me not be dejected, or diſturbed even with this, though as ſad a reflection as is poſſible, viz. to be deprived of theſe bleſſed advantages of ſolemn converſe with God: A full reliance, and reſignation to the divine will, is a medicine for this alſo: and I do not yet deſpair, but I ſhall find ſome way of eſcape, for which to pay my acknowledgments. The time will come, when God ſhall afford me occaſion to praiſe him (ſee v. 8.) for this deliverance alſo, and for the ſupports which his favour hath yielded me in the midſt of all this ſadneſs.

5. Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul, and why art thou diſquieted in me? Hope thou in God; for I ſhall yet praiſe him, for the help of † his countenance.

† or my, ſee note f.

c. 6. Mean-while in this great dejection of my ſpirit, flying from one place to another, from one ſide of Jordan, and the Countrey adjoyning, paſſing over that River, and then ſtill flying on the other ſide of it, from Hermon to Tabor, I have nothing to ſupport my ſelf, but meditation on that God which I have hitherto ſerved, and never been deſtituted by him.

6. O my God, my ſoul is caſt down within me: therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, [c] and ‖ of the Hermonites, from the hill Miſſar, ‖ Hermonim, from the little hill.

7. [d] Deep

† by the voice. * against me have passed by, or over.

7. [d] Deep calleth unto deep † at the noise of thy water-spouts: all thy waves and thy billows * are gone over me.

7. And by the same God, by the same most gracious providence, I have now been supported also. For though I have for a while been under thy displeasure, thy punishments lying heavy upon me, and by them my enemies incouraged to design me all mischief, (who seeing the effects of thy displeasure on me, are soon excited to add more weight to my pressures) and though by the conjunction of these I have been ready to be overwhelmed; yet at length all is past over without doing me any hurt. d.

‖ In the day commanded the Lord his benignity, and in the night was his song with me, my prayer—

8. ‖ Yet the Lord will command his loving kindness in the day time, and in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life.

8. And the account of it is clear. His gracious providence hath surrounded me day and night, my whole time hath been divided between receiving, and acknowledging, and again praying for mercies from him, as from one that delighted in doing me good. e.

9. I will say unto God, My rock, why hast thou forgotten me? why go I mourning, because of the oppression of the enemy?

9. Thus therefore have I constantly addressed my self to him in this mournful ditty, saying, O thou which art the only aid and support of my life, the only sure fortress wherein I can repose any trust, how am I despised and rejected by thee? what a black gloomy condition am I now in? mine enemies being permitted by thee to oppress me sorely.

10. As with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me, while they say daily unto me, Where is thy God?

10. Shimei hath reviled me bitterly, 1 Sam. 16.7,8. I am pierced hereby, and wounded to the very heart, like one that hath received a killing wound, or stroke in his body. And in this greatest exigence, this lowest depression, that either the scorn or malice of mine enemies can bring upon me, concluding by my pressures, that God hath utterly forsaken me.

11. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of [f] my countenance, and my God.

11. My soul shall still make a comfortable reflection in its constant recourse to God: in this my saddest condition, I have always had some hope and comfort left to support me, and keep me from being utterly cast down, or disturbed immoderately. And upon the strength thereof, I shall for ever incourage my self to rely and cast my self intirely on him; not despairing but that he will one day return in mercy to me, deliver me out of all my distresses, and shew forth his favour and loving kindness to me. f.

Annotations on Psal. XLII.

a. עָרַג

V. 1. Panteth] עָרַג signifies to cry, and is applyed to Beasts, especially to Deer, when they impatiently desire the water. This they are said to do, when they have eaten some vipers, which medicinally they are said to seek and eate, and then are inflamed thereby, and vehemently desire water to cool them. This they do again when they are hunted hard, that they may cool, and relieve themselves from the dogs that way. But the more prompt and ready interpretation is, that feeding in a dry and parched wilderness, they want, and oft-times can find no water, and then go about and make a mournful noise for it. And thus is it most fitly applyed to David, when in his flight from Absalom he was thus in the wilderness, destitute of the spiritual advantages of joyning with the people of God in his service. The word אַיָּל must be here taken in the fœminine gender, as appears by תַּעֲרֹג following; and accordingly the LXXII. read ἡ ἔλαφος, in the fœminine.

אַיָּל

b. אזכרה עלי נפשי

V. 4. Remember] The first words of this v. 4. are by the LXXII. literally rendred from the Hebrew. That reads אֵלֶּה אֶזְכְּרָה וְאֶשְׁפְּכָה עָלַי נַפְשִׁי where the future (as oft elsewhere,) being used for the preter tense, the rendring must be, I remembred these, and poured out my soul on my self, i.e. gave my self up into the power of my passion, let loose the reins to my grief; the word נֶפֶשׁ soul, being used for the sensitive part of the man, and so for grief and passionate sorrow. And thus the LXXII. render it, Ταῦτα ἐμνήσθην, καὶ ἐξέχεα ἐπ' ἐμὲ τὴν ψυχήν μου, I remembred these things, and poured out my soul upon me. But in the remainder of the verse there is some difference: אֶעְבֹר in the future for preter again, they render, διελεύσομαι, I will pass; whereas setting down the cause of his sorrow, and the object of his remembrance, it is most reasonable to render it in the time past, for, or because I had past. Then for בְּסָךְ אֲדִּיר, they read, ἐν τόπῳ σκηνῆς θαυμαστῆς, in the place of the wonderful tabernacle; in all probability reading אַדִּיר (which is a future verb, from דָּרָה) as if it were from אדיר magnificus, grandis, magnificent, great, excellent, and so wonderful. But of these words in the Hebrew if we take a closer inspection, we shall find them capable of a double rendring; and it will be very uncertain which shall be preferred. For the verb סָכַךְ from whence בְּסָךְ comes, hath a double notion; it signifies most frequently covering, but sometimes mixing or confounding. In the former notion, it will signifie the covering in the Tabernacle, called (from this theme) סוֹכֵךְ the covering, 2 Kin. 16. 18. and so the Chaldee here have rendred it טַלְלָא, (and the Jewish Arab Interpreter אלכלא to the same sense) umbraculum the covering, meaning no doubt the tabernacle; and so the Syriack, כְּשַׁלְּנִי (from סתר to cover) in thy covering: and then this is fully expresst by the LXXII. their reading, ἐν τόπῳ σκηνῆς, in the place of the tabernacle; and their meaning is plain, I will pass, for I had past, into the Tabernacle, I went with them to the house of God. But Abu Walid, mentioning the opinion of some who would here understand it in the notion of covering, rejects that, and prefers the other, of a company or multitude, or number of men: and the interpretation of the clause in his way is, When I passed in a company, or multitude, whom I set, or put forward to the house of God, i. e. whom I followed, or, drove, as it were, before me. For this he will have to be the signification of דָּרָה to put or set forward, and cause to move or go, as a nurse doth her child, (so the word is used in the Misnah) putting it forward to go. And so R. Tanchum renders the word, I caused them to go. The Jewish Arab Interpreter, in a note, saith, it implyes such a putting forward, or egging, as the Arabians use in their journyings, especially by night: So, saith he, our fathers used to incite

אֶעְבֹר

בְּסָךְ אֲדִּיר

and put men forward, saying, Arise, let us go up to Zion to the Lord our God. But this word רָהַ may likewise be compared with the Arabick راء, and then it will signifie, to go hastily, and to throng. And הָמוֹן חוֹגֵג to this agrees הָמוֹן חוֹגֵג in the end of the verse, which literally signifies the feasting multitude: the Chaldee read אִתְרְגוּשַׁת, &c. the tumult or noise of the people which come to celebrate the feasts at Jerusalem; but the LXXII. ἤχου ἑορταζόντων, the noise of the feasters, from that notion of הָמָה or הָמַן to tumultuate or make a noise, which refers to the noise and stir at going up to the feast from all parts of Judea. The Jewish Arab interpreter renders it נמהור אלראס the multitude of such as went in devotion [to the Temple.] And so Abu Walid explains it of such as came to the house of God, taking חגג in the notion wherein the Arabs usually take חג, to go in devotion, or visit some place accounted sacred. This notes the joy in undertaking the journey to Gods service, and not the festivity it self, when they were come up. Their very going up was a kind of procession, much more then their feasts themselves; in opposition to which the celebration of Idolatrous feasts is by the Jews called אֵיד a sadness: though the heathen Tacitus make the contrary observation, (as every one thinks fit to commend his own rites, and defame others) Romani lætos festosque ritus habent, Judæi tristes sordidosque; The Romans have joyful and festival Rites, the jews sad and sordid.

[c] V. 6. Hermonites] The land of Jordan is that which lies and is enricht by that river, whose head is at the foot of Lebanon. Of Hermon, a high hill on the other side of Jordan on the east, and known by four names, see note on Psal. 29. d. From this חֶרְמוֹנִים Hermonim here hath its name; and signifies the region betwixt Hermon and Tabor, and the inhabitants thereof: which being on a little rising, it may here be fitly expresst by מֵהַר מִצְעָר from the hill of littleness, or the little hill. But Solomon Jarchi and Aben Ezra render Hermonim as the common name of several hills, as the Alpes in Italy, the mountains of Ararat in Asia, the mountains of the Moon in Africk. And then Missar may likewise be the name of an hill, possibly that which bordered upon Soar. Gen. 19. 30. and then Missar and Hermon will be the gesses of Davids march, the length of the whole Countrey beyond Jordan, which he traverst in his flight from Absalom, 2 Sam. 17. 22.

d. V. 7. Deep] תְּהוֹם is an abysse, or deep pit, a תְּהוֹם place of much waters; sometimes the whole globe of earth and sea, Gen. 1. 2. sometimes the whole body of waters here below, Gen. 7. 11. Prov. 8. 24; and frequently the bottome of the sea, styled ἄβυσσος, the Abyss, Luk. 8. 31. Here it signifies literally a multitude of waters, either all breaking out of the earth, called the fountains of the great deep, Gen. 7. 11. (see the Targum on Eccl. 1. 7.) or else some pouring down out of the clouds (see note on Psal. 29. 3. some rising out of the earth: so saith the Chaldee, תְּהוֹמָא עִלָּאָה לְתְהוֹמָא אַרְעָאָה קָרֵי, the superior abysse calls unto the inferior abysse. Instead of calling some render meets; so Symmachus, ἀπήντα, one deep met another: and that notion the Jewish Arab interpreter embraces, אדא לקי אלגמר אלגמר deep meeting deep. And this no doubt may go for a significant paraphrase of it, and hath foundation in the affinity betwixt קָרָה to meet, and קָרָא to call. But the literal notation of קָרָא is certainly that of calling; and that is retained by the Chaldee, and Syriack, and the LXXII. and the rest of the antient interpreters: and the expression is poetical, their meeting together is, as it were, calling to, and answering one the other. And thus, we know, it was in the deluge (to which this probably refers) Gen. 7. 11. the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows or floodgates of heaven were opened. This their breaking out at the same time from both places, from above and from below, seems to be the fullest meaning of the abysse calling to, and answering one the other. And that which is supposed to begin, and so to call the other, is the Superior, that from the clouds (so saith the Chaldee:) and this calling is by means of the water-spouts, so the clouds are poetically styled צִנּוֹרֶיךָ thy (i. e. Gods) spouts (צִנּוֹר a pipe צִנּוֹרֶיךָ or spout, from whence is Assinarus the name of a river in Thucydides, l. 7. descending from a steep place in a deep channel.) The LXXII. read καταῤῥακτῶν σου, thy cataracts, pouring down of waters from a much higher place to a low, from the top of an hill or house; that as, when it rains apace, that which falls on the top of the house, being conveighed thence by spouts, (domatum fistulas, St. Jerome calls them) comes pouring down upon the ground, and makes a great noise in falling, (so Kimchi explains it, as the water from the house top flows down by the pipe, and causeth a great sound by its descent) and much increases the flood of water that was below: so God pouring out rain from the clouds, as by those spouts from the top of the house, first makes a great noise, then much increases the water which was formerly below, and makes the springs and brooks to rise, as it were in answer to this voice of the clouds, which by this means call upon them, and rouse them up. This makes it necessary to render לְקוֹל by the voice of the לְקוֹל water-spouts, as the instrument by which the superiour abyss calls to the inferior; as one calls, or signifies his pleasure, or summons another by a pipe. 'Tis true, the fountains in the earth, the meatus by which the waters pass into the sea, are by the Targum, Eccles. 1. 7. styled צִנּוֹרֵי תְהוֹמָא the water-pipes of the abyss; and that may seem to determine the phrase here to these inferiour waters. But 'tis as sure, that any other course of waters may be so called also; and so this opening of the windows of heaven, the cataracts from the clouds, that superior abyss, as here the Chaldee understands it. And this is a most poetical expression of miseries flowing in one upon another, some from God, and some from men; Gods punishments for sin inviting as it were, and calling out the infernal spirits, and the malice of men here below, which seeing God displeased, and so being permitted by him to be executioners of his wrath, break out violently upon him. And the same is farther expresst by the two words in the remainder of the verse. All מִשְׁבָּרֶיךָ thy collisions, or fractures] מִשְׁבָּרֶיךָ from שָׁבַר to break, i. e. all the effects of thy displeasure, which come like waves of the Sea, raising themselves, and then breaking and pouring out upon me. This the LXXII. read, ὁι μαλακισμοί σου· not in the notion of that word, which the vulgar understand it in, when they render it excelsa tua, thy high things; but as that word oft signifies wavering, and being driven uncertainly (see note on Luk. 12.[a]) and those we know are compared to the waves of the sea, driven by the winds and tost, Jam. 1. 6. The Syriack render it ܬܫܒܘܫܝ thy tempests, from חשל to break; and so also the Arabick, thy tempests. The other גַּלֶּיךָ עָלָי word גַּלֶּיךָ is best rendred by billows, from גָּלַל to roll or tumble together in an heap, as the sea doth its billows: and so the LXXII. express the meaning by κῦμάτα, which signifie these. To this the עָלַי following will be most fitly annext, All thy collisions and rollings on me. And then עָבְרוּ will stand by it self, and the best rendred עָבְרוּ passed by, or over, without doing me any harme at all.

So

So Pſal. 48. 4. The Kings of the earth were aſſembled, they paſſed by together, without any hoſtile attempt; as farther appears there, v. 5. they were troubled and haſted away. And thus the word עָבַר is moſt frequently rendred παρέρχομαι, paſſing over, or by. And then the following verſe, In the day commanded the Lord his benignity] connects very perfectly with it, as the account, why the colliſions and rollings on him, the ſea foaming and making a noiſe, did yet paſſe over, and not drown or hurt him, viz. becauſe God day and night continually protected him.

e. V. 8. The Lord] For the underſtanding of this v. 8. and connecting it with the antecedents and conſequents, the frequent obſervation of the future tenſe being uſed for the præter, will be moſt uſefull, and indeed perfectly neceſſary. For the former verſe being in the firſt part of it a ſad deſcription of his miſerable eſtate, and the effects of Gods diſpleaſure toward him, and the latter part of it (as hath been ſhewed) a thankfull acknowledgement of his deliverance from all the miſchievous effects of it; this v. 8. will be a fuller declaration of this mercy of God, to whom only the deliverance was due, In the day commanded the Lord——Not, The Lord will command his loving kindneſs——but more fitly and literally, יוֹמָם יְצַוֶּה יְיָ In the day time commanded the Lord his loving kindneſs, i. e. God was thus pleaſed to deal with me, all the day long to ſend out (ſo צִוָּה ſignifies to diſpenſe, to conferre) benefits and mercies on me, and in the night his ſong was with me; every day I received, and every night I made acknowledgment of his mercies to me: and my prayer to the God of my life, i. e. I ſtill lookt upon God as one that favoured me, and conſtantly preſerved me, and poured his benefits upon me, and ſo prayed to him with all joy and cheerfulneſs and alacrity, and as it follows v. 9. I will ſay unto God, My rock, why haſt thou forgotten me? And this ſeems to be the cleareſt meaning of this place; though the learned Caſtellio, having rendred עָבְרוּ obruunt, overwhelm, v. 7. hath accordingly affixt another interpretation to theſe verſes, ſolebat Jova, &c. Nunc mihi——God was wont to conferre his benefits in the day time, &c.——Now I muſt thus make my complaint unto my God.

V. 11. My countenance] פָּנַי here my countenance, may poſſibly have this difference from פָּנָיו his countenance, v. 6. (which the Chaldee there renders the redemption רְעוּתֵהּ קֳדָמוֹי which is from before him) that David firſt mentions the ſalvations of Gods countenance, i. e. his ſaving power and providence, and then cloſeth the Pſalm by applying it to himſelf, and acknowledging the particular mercy of his deliverance. Yet conſidering that all the Antients verſions, the Chaldee only excepted, ſeem to have read פָּנַי my countenance (πρόσωπα μου, faciei mei, my face) in both places, and that theſe words are the burden as of this, ſo of the following Pſalm, and that as the ſenſe is the ſame in other words, ſo in all likelihood the two Pſalms did correſpond in this; therefore 'tis not improbable, that the old reading was here in both places פָּנַי my countenance, as it is in both places of the following Pſalm. f. פָּנָיו

יוֹמָם יְצַוֶּה

The Forty Third PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

THe Forty Third Pſalm is exactly of the ſame mournful ſubject, and probably on the ſame occaſion, with the former, but perhaps lightly varied from thence on ſome other occaſion, ſuch as the Babyloniſh captivity, (as the mention of the ungodly nation inclines it v. 1.) and adjoyned to Pſalm 42. becauſe of its affinity to it. 'Tis a complaint of ill uſage from enemies, yet endeth with full relyance on God, and place of hope from thence, as the former did.

1. Judge me, O God, and plead my cauſe againſt the ungodly nation: O deliver me from the deceitful and || unjuſt man.

|| unmerciful לֹא חָסִיד

1. O God, what ever our ſins againſt thee have been, we have certainly not injured theſe which are maliciouſly bent againſt us. Be thou pleaſed therefore to vindicate our innocency in this, to clear us from the calumnies of theſe, and to reſcue us out of their treacheries, and bloody deſigns.

2. For thou art the God of my ſtrength: why doſt thou caſt me off? why go I mourning becauſe of the oppreſſion of the enemy?

2. To thee alone can we appeal, who art our only defender: O be thou pleaſed to reſtore us to thy favour; not to forſake us utterly, not to leave us to that ſad diſconſolate condition, to which the oppreſſions of our mortal enemies have brought us.

3. O ſend out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles.

3. O let thy mercy ſhew forth it ſelf, and thy fidelity in performing thy promiſe to us: let theſe be our guide and ſafeguard in our way, as thy pillar of cloud and fire to the Iſraelites, in their paſſage from Ægypt to Canaan; and at length reſtore us ſucceſſefully to that reſt and peace, that we may ſecurely reſort to thy publick ſervice, in the place which thou haſt appointed for it, where the Ark is.

† the gladneſs of my joy, or, of my youth, or, who makes my ſorrow joy.

4. Then ſhall I go unto the altar of God my [a] exceeding joy: yea upon the [b] harp will I praiſe thee, O God my God.

4. And that will be an happy time indeed, to go in the ſociety of the ſaints to offer ſacrifice to God; that God that revives out of the greateſt ſadneſs, is the only author of all the felicity of my life: when that time comes, we ſhall be moſt happy, and celebrate thy mercies and goodneſs to us in the moſt ſolemn manner of exultation, and never give over acknowledging thy goodneſs and fatherly bounty toward us. a. b.

5. Mean while there is a competent ſtay to our drooping ſouls, an argument that we ſhould not be too much dejected or diſturbed, that we have ſtill place of hope and truſt in God, that we ſhall yet live to receive deliverance from him, and injoy happy opportunities of acknowledging his mercies in the publick aſſembly, who is, even now that he thus permits us to be diſtreſt, the only comfort and ſupport of our lives, and our merciful loving father, even now that we are under his ſharpeſt chaſtiſement.

5. Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul? and why art thou diſquieted within me? Hope in God, for I ſhall yet praiſe him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

Annotations on Pſalm XLIII.

V. 4. Exceeding joy] The chief difficulty of this Pſalm is, how the שִׂמְחַת גִּילִי is to be rendred. As to that in Hebrew denotes commotion, and generally any kind of commotion, (as Abu Walid tells us, ſee note on Pſal. 2. k.) whether of joy or ſorrow. It is certain it moſt frequently ſignifies exultation and joy: and ſo it muſt be thought to do as oft as it is joyned with שִׂמְחָה rejoycing, by any conjunctive particle, as Pſal. 45. 15. with gladneſs and rejoycing ſhall they be brought; and ſo 'tis there rendred by the LXXII. ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει καὶ εὐφροσύνῃ; who yet in this place have rendred שִׂמְחַת גִּילִי much otherwiſe, τὸν εὐφραίνοντα τὴν νεότητά μου, God that makes merry my youth: and therein the Syriack, Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick follow them, and only the Chaldee otherwiſe, דִּי מִנֵּיהּ חֶדְוַת בַּר נַשׁ from whom is the joy of my exultation. Of this rendring of the LXXII. the account is ordinary, that they took גִּיל in a notion wherein 'tis uſed in Arabick, for age or generation. So in their rendring of Pſal. 79. 13. we will ſhew forth thy praiſe from generation to generation, מִן גִּיל אֶל גִּיל. So Gen. 3. 9. Noah was upright in his גְּנֵרָה generation. So Pſalm 112. 2. גִּיל the generation of the juſt ſhall be bleſſed. And Mat. 1. Theſe are אַבְיוֹת the generations. And then 'tis conceived that in this notion of generation, as that ſignifies the whole age and courſe of a mans life, the LXXII. taking the word, thought fit to render it νεότητα, my youth, viz. the former part of my age. But the word גיל in Arabick ſignifies alſo a fat well-grown youth; and the Arabick being but a dialect of the Hebrew, and the word גִּיל evidently thus ſignifying in the Arabick, 'tis moſt probable that thus it did ſignifie originally in the Hebrew, and the LXXII. their thus underſtanding it, and rendring it νεότητα, youth, is a fair evidence for it. And if indeed it thus did ſignifie in the Hebrew, then there is all reaſon to underſtand it ſo here, and to render it שִׂמְחַת גִּילִי the joy of my youth, i. e. of my whole courſe of life, from my youth till now, and to make that the title of God, that he hath always been ſuch to David, i. e. the only author of joy and rejoycing (ὁ εὐφραίνων) that ever David had. And thus the rendring is more literal, than either to read it, the God of my joy and gladneſs, (for there is neither any reaſon to make the former word to be in the genitive caſe, nor is there any conjunction between them and the Chaldee, that alone differs from the LXXII. yet read it in this other form, from whom is the joy of ——) or God, my exceeding joy. If this notion of גִּיל be not accepted, it may then be, as our Engliſh margine hath it, God the gladneſs of my joy, i. e. he that is the great author of all the joy I have. But if it may here be taken in the notion of the other contrary paſſion, or commotion, that of ſorrow, then שִׂמְחַת גִּילִי will be he that maketh glad my ſorrow, or turneth my commotions into joy. שִׂמְחַת גִּילִי

The Forty Fourth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The forty fourth Pſalm is a deſcription of the ſeveral conditions and ſtates of the Jewiſh Church, and therein a commemoration of Gods former mercies, as a ground of confidence in, and prayer to him, for deliverance out of preſent dangers; and was compoſed in ſome time of general oppreſſion by foreign enemies, v. 11, 12. and committed to the Prefect of the Muſick, to be ſung by the poſterity of Corah, (ſee Pſal. 42. 1.) to the tune called Maſchil, (ſee note on Pſal. 32. a.)

TO the chief Muſitian for the ſons of Corah, Maſchil.

1, 2. Thy doings in former ages, O Lord, are famouſly ſpoken of, and delivered down to us from father to ſon. How thou by thy power didſt eject the Canaanites, &c. and in their ſtead didſt place thine own people of Iſrael, having firſt brought them out of Egypt, reſcued them from the hands of thoſe heathen tyrants, ſmiting with ten ſeveral plagues the Egyptians that kept them in bondage.

1. We have heard with our ears, O Lord, our fathers have told us, what work thou didſt in their days, in the times of old.

2. How thou didſt drive out the heathen with thy hand, and plantedſt them; how thou didſt afflict the people, [a] and || caſt them out. a. || ſend

3. A ſpecial work of thine this: for 'twas not any proweſs of arms, or oppoſition of greater ſtrength, that got * the salvations of Jacob. יְשׁוּעוֹת יַעֲקֹב

4. Thou art my King, O God; command* deliverance for Jacob.

4. Thou therefore that hast thus magnified thy power and mercy, in delivering this people of thine, art in all reason to be adored by us, as our God, and supreme Conducter, to whom alone I am to make my address at this time for the deliverances which thou hast promised to give, and hast constantly afforded to thy people.

‖ gore נְגַבֵּחַ

5. Through thee will we ‖ push down our enemies: through thy name will we tread them under that rise up against us.

5. From thee must all our victories come, thou must furnish us with our offensive arms: such thou hast given to the beasts of the field, horns to the bull, &c. And thy presence and conduct must supply to us our natural want of these. And if thou be thus present with us, we shall certainly be as successful, as the most mighty of those creatures over the weakest assailant. As they first gore and wound them with their ‖ horns, and then trample them under their feet; so shall we deal with our stoutest enemies.

‖ So נֶגַח signifies

6. For I will not trust my in bow, neither shall my sword save me.

6. As for artillery and provisions of war, we use them, without any trust or relyance on them, either to secure our selves, or hurt others.

7. But thou hast saved us from our enemies, and hast put them to shame that hated us.

7. 'Tis thy strength only, and mercy to us, that hath wrought all our good successes, delivered us, and discomfited our enemies; and accordingly in that alone all our confidence is reposed.

‖ we have praised God, & will confess.

8. ‖ In God [c] we boast all the day long, and * praise thy name for ever. Selah.

8. All our victories have been hitherto due to thee; from thee we have received them, and to thee we have given all the praise of them: and consequently for the future, we have none else to rely on, none to acknowledge for our defender and reliever, but thee. c.

9. But thou hast cast us off, and put us to shame, and goest not forth with our armies.

9. But, alas, our sins have provoked, and removed thee from us; thou hast suffered us to be worsted by our enemies, and hast not of late shewn forth thy majesty for our aid and succour.

10. Thou makest us to turn back from our enemies, and they which hate us spoil for themselves.

10. Thou sufferest us to be put to flight, and chased by our enemies, and consequently to be despoiled and pillaged by them.

† for eating מַאֲכָל

11. Thou hast given us like sheep † appointed for meat, and hast scattered us among the heathen.

11. Thou hast permitted many of us to be slaughtered like sheep, (see v. 22.) such as are killed by the butcher, not the priest; for the shambles, to be freely used as men please, not for the altar, to which those that are set apart cannot be rudely handled without violation of religion. And as sheep again being worried by the Wolf, are driven from the flock and scattered upon the mountains; so are our armies destroyed and routed. k.

* for no (or, without any) possession, and dost not gain by--

12. Thou sellest thy people * for [d] nought, and dost not increase thy wealth by their price.

12. We are, alas, cast away by God, as the worst kind of slaves, which are not thought worthy to have any price demanded for them by their masters; sadly handled, without the comfort of bringing in any honour to God by our calamities. Thy Church among us is defaced, and no other people taken in, in stead of us, by whom thy Name may be glorified. d.

13. Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us.

14. Thou makest us a by-word among the heathen, a shaking of the hand among the people.

13, 14. Hereby we are rendred ridiculous, scoft and mockt at by those that are near us, and by our enemies made a proverb of reproach, to signifie and express the most abject despicable men in the world.

15. My confusion is continually before me, and the shame of my face hath covered me,

15. This is matter of so great shame to me, that I dare not shew my face: I cover it, like mourners, under a veil, desirous to hide my shame, (Mic. 3. 7.) but, alas, this covering will very ill conceal that, which indeed it doth betray, as being on purpose designed to hide it.

16. For the voice of him that reproacheth and blasphemeth, by reason of the enemy and avenger.

16. Betwixt their scorns and contumelies on the one side, and their designs of mischieving and destroying me on the other, I know not how to behave, which way to turn my self.

17. All this is come upon us; yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsly in thy covenant.

17. Yet doth not all this discourage us, or tempt us to fall off to any other religion, from that which we hitherto have profest, to forget our duty to God, or to fall from that fidelity of obedience which we have vowed to him.

18. Our heart is not turned back, neither have our steps declined from thy way;

18. We will still abide constant in our loyalty, whatever our portion be in this world.

19. Though thou hast sore broken us in the place of dragons, and covered us with the shadow of death.

19. Yea, though thou deal never so sharply with us, beat our armies to dust, and disperse us into the most desolate condition of horrour and darkness, the very next degree to death it self.

20, 21. For the sincerity of this constant resolution, we appeal to no other judge, but to the great searcher of hearts: From him we know we cannot be concealed, if either we slacken the diligence of our service to him, or fall off to any degree of Apostasie.

20. If we have forgotten the name of our God, or stretched out our hands to a strange God,
21. Shall not God search this out? for he knoweth the secrets of the heart.

22. And of this our very sufferings are our witnesses: the malice and cruelty of our enemies, which is so great and bloody, as to slaughter us daily, having no other ground of provocation from us, but our adhering constantly to thy service.

22. Yea for thy sake are we killed all the day long; we are counted as sheep to the slaughter.

23, 24. Lord, be thou graciously pleased at length to consider our distresses, to interpose thy hand for our rescue, and no longer to forsake us in our extremities, and leave us without thy aid and succour, (see note a.) to be thus sorely afflicted and oppresst by our enemies.

23. Awake, why sleepest thou, O Lord? Arise, cast us not off for ever.
24. Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and forgettest our affliction and our oppression?

25, 26. For we are now brought to the lowest and saddest state of depression. Now therefore be thou pleased to undertake our rescue, thereby in a fittest season to shew forth thy pitty to us; which we have no ground of soliciting, but what we fetch from thine own goodness, so frequently experimented by us.

25. For our soul is bowed down to the dust; our belly cleaveth unto the earth.
26. Arise for our help, and redeem us for thy mercies sake.

Annotations on Psalm XLIV.

a. תְּשַׁלְּחֵם

V. 2. Cast them out] The word שָׁלַח from whence וַתְּשַׁלְּחֵם comes doth generally signifie misit and emisit, sending, and sending out, or setting free and at liberty, which we call manumission, and in that notion the word is elsewhere used: and though by the LXXII. in this place, and one more Exod. 12. 33. it be rendred ἐκβάλλω, to cast out, in the notion of גָּרַשׁ, which is of such affinity to it, that, as Abu Walid observes, Jer. 38. 6. and 11. they are used promiscuously for the same; yet in many hundred places they render it elsewhere by ἀποστέλλω, to send, as in some hundreds more by ἐξαποστέλλω, to send out; by which also Aquila renders it here. And to this the Syriack accords, whether we read with the ordinary Copies (for then the rendring is not literal, but by way of paraphrase) thou hast afflicted the kingdomes ܐܬܝܬ ܠܝܬܗܘܢ and hast established them, or, which is much more probable, and the change very easie, but of a point, לִיתָּם from שָׁלַח to send, and thou didst send them out. And to this agrees the form of Gods mandate for the bringing out of the Israelites, Ex. 5. 1. שַׁלַּח אֶת עַמִּי thus saith the Lord, Let go, or send out, or manumit my people, &c. and therefore in all reason this is to be resolved the meaning of it in this place. And in that one other place where the LXXII. render it ἐκβάλλειν, it evidently signifies (as by our English 'tis rendred) sending out, Exod. 12. 33. The Ægyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the land in haste. The undoubtedness of this interpretation will be assented to, if the latter part of the verse be compared with the former. In the former 'tis expresly said, גּוֹיִם הוֹרַשְׁתָּ thou hast cast out the nations, וַתִּטָּעֵם and hast planted them; sure not the same whom he had cast out, but, as the Chaldee paraphrases, (the people of Canaan in the former, and) לְבֵית יִשְׂרָאֵל the house of Israel in the latter: and then by proportion, in the second part, as תֵּרַע לְאֻמִּים thou hast afflicted the nations] belongs to the Ægyptians; so must וַתְּשַׁלְּחֵם and thou hast sent them out] belong to the Israelites: and if the יָדְךָ by thy hand] in the beginning of the verse be (as reasonably it may) applyed to all that follows in the verse, then 'tis literally, thou hast manumitted them, i. e. set at liberty the Israelites. And so that is the full meaning of it.

b. אוֹר פָּנֶיךָ

V. 3. Light of thy countenance] אוֹר פָּנֶיךָ the light of thy faces, seems here to be set to signifie the majestatick presence of God, his visible presiding in their militia; for so the matter spoken of exacts, and the mention precedent of thy right hand, and thine arm. And accordingly the Chaldee render it נְהוֹר זִיו יְקָרָךְ, the light of the splendor of thy glory, by Gods glory ordinarily signifying the special presence of God (his Schechinah mentioned by them v. 10.) however evidenced or testified; and that is frequently the interpretation of פָּנִים faces, even when it is rendred πρόσωπον by the LXXII. so Gen. 3. 8. the faces, i. e. presence of the Lord, as we render it; so Gen. 4. 16. Cain went out from the faces, we duly read, from the presence of the Lord; and often elsewhere. And so here v. 24. the hiding his faces, is by the Chaldee rendred, the taking away שְׁכִינַת יְקָרָךְ the Schechinah or majestatick presence of his glory. And so that will be the best rendring here, the light of thy presence, (as God, we know, testified his presence to the Israelites by a light shining cloud going before them, and conducting them) and not the light of thy countenance, as that is all one with his favour; the mention of that following in the next words, as the original, and reason of this his shining presence, and not as the thing it self.

c. חַלַּלְנוּ

V. 8. Boast] הָלַל in Piel signifying to praise or celebrate, הִלַּלְנוּ is regularly to be rendred here, [we have praised.] And the preposition בְּ prefixt to אֱלֹהִים makes no difference, being many times a pleonasm; and then נוֹדֶה, the future from יָדָה, will be best rendred in the future, we will confess thy name for ever, by the former signifying what is past, as the pledge and pawn of his future mercies, whereon he is resolved to depend for the future. And thus in both parts the Syriack renders it, we have praised, and, we will confess. נוֹדֶה

d. הוֹן

V. 12. Nought] הוֹן signifies wealth, or any kind of valuable possession, and so fitly follows וְלֹא רַבִּיתָ i. e. literally [and hast not multiplied] but it must best be rendred [and hast not gained] or made advantage, or increase, as men are wont to do by the sale of those things that are any way valuable. The Romane Copies of the LXXII. read (as 'tis evident S. Augustine did) οὐκ ἦν πλῆθος ἐν τοῖς ἀλαλάγμασιν αὐτῶν, and there was no multitude in their jubilations, and Asulanus's Copy reads yet worse, ἐν ἀλλαγμασιν. But it is apparent, both by the Latine, which reads in commutationibus, and so by the Syriack also, that the true reading was ἐν ἀλλάγμασιν, according to their use use of ἀναγνῶ for a price. The plain meaning is, that as things that are useless and burthensome, are not sold for any valuable price, but allowed to be taken away by any that will have them; so are they dealt with by God at this time, not regarded by him, and so permitted to be conquered, and carried away captive by every one that will assault them. The Arabick here hath, contrary to use, rendred it with some difference from the LXXII. thou hast diminished the multitude of their numbers; seeming thereby to refer to the first captivity in Ægypt, where servitude encreased their numbers, they multiplyed in Children, as their task-masters encreased their tale of brick: But here their captivity is not thus recompended, but the contrary is the effect of it.

The Forty Fifth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

|| the six stringed instruments. † the beloved maids, יְדוּתוֹת׃

TO the chief Musitian upon || Soshannim, for the sons of Coreh, Maschil, a song of † loves.

The Forty fifth Psalm is thought to be an Epithalamium, or marriage-song, upon the nuptials of Solomon and the King of Ægypts daughter, 1 King. 3. 1. (but is withall mystically, and in a most eminent manner, applicable to * Christ) composed in the persons of her bride-maids, and committed to the Præfect of the Musick, to be sung by the posterity of Coreh, to the tune known by the name of Maschil.

b. || hath prepared. † my compositures I will recite, or deliver, or speak unto the——

1. My heart ᵇ || is inditing a good matter; † I speak of the things which I have made touching the King: My tongue is the pen of a ready writer.

1. I have meditated and composed a festival nuptial hymn, brought it ready prepared, as an oblation Eucharistical, and I will now recite it to the King, (as he is a type of the great God and King of heaven, the King by whom Kings Reign, the Messias, who shall espouse a church of believers here on earth;) my tongue being alacriously and chearfully bent speedily to deliver it.

* See the Chaldee v. 2. מְלַכָּא מְשִׁיחָא O King Messias—The spirit of prophecy in thy lips—so also Kimchi, and Aben-Ezra, and Sol Jarchi understand the whole Psalm of the Messias.

* seeing that, or because כִּי.

2. Thou art fairer than the children of men: grace is poured into thy lips; *therefore God hath blessed thee for ever.

2. O how gloriously beautifull is this bridegroom above all the men in the world? what gracious and lovely and excellent speech comes from him? God having accomplisht and adorned and blessed him in a most illustrious degree and manner. (And in the Mystical sense, The Messias is infinitely beyond all the men in the world; a divine person, speaking as never man spake, all the fulness of the Godhead dwelling bodily in him.)

h

3. Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty.

3. Thou art a mighty Prince; it becometh thee to appear in a glorious and majestick manner, as it doth any man of valour to be girt with a belt and sword. (In the mystical sense, O thou mighty God and Prince of Peace, be thou pleased to set up thy spiritual kingdom in our hearts, by the power of thy grace to rule and reign in them.)

c

|| Prosper thou in thy majesty, ride for the word or cause or business of—† he shall teach thee terrible things with or by thy right hand.

4. ᶜ || And in thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth and meekness and righteousness: and † thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things.

4. And mayst thou long and prosperously injoy this thy dignity, reign successfully and all manner of justice and charity. And making such use of thy power, no doubt God will establish thee in it, and give thee all manner of strange successes, and make thee formidable to all about thee. (In the mystical sense, God grant him all good success in his regal office, in subjecting all mens hearts unto his spiritual regiment. And as his installment shall not be by riding on the regal mule, or being mounted on a proud and sprightfull horse, or in any other guise of secular pompe, but in a much more excellent and divine equipage, all kind of the most eminent virtues drawing in his triumphal chariot, and carrying him aloft to victory: so may the mighty God of heaven prosper him in those great affairs on which he is imployed; 1. of bringing all men to the faith; 2. of subduing all the prides of the hautieſt heathen obdurate hearts, and making them meek, and gentle, and lowly, humble toward God and man; 3. of planting all degrees of justice and charity among Christians. In the discharge and execution of this great office of spiritual soverignty, God shall be with him, enabling him to do miracles, to cast out the heathen false gods, or devils, out of their temples, out of mens hearts, and out of the bodies of those that are possest with them, and so to bring down an ocean of religions whereſoever Christianity enters.)

|| the people shall fall under thee) in the heart——

5. ᵈ Thine arrows are sharp || in the heart of the Kings enemies, whereby the people fall under thee.

5. Thy power shall be sufficient to bring down thy greatest enemies, and many shall feel the effects of it, being conquered by thee. (In the mystery, the grace of Christ shall come with great efficacy to the converting of idolatrous heathens, and shall be mightily successful in bringing the Gentile world to subjection to his kingdom.)

e

6. ᵉ Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre.

6. The kingdom of the Messias is never to have an end: the Laws by which 'tis administred are admirably good and just, most agreeable to the dictates of true reason, and the nature of man, not seduced or corrupted with passion. And herein is Solomon a type of him: the kingdom of Judah, now settled on him, shall indure till the time of the Messiah's coming, and entring on his immutable kingdom. And they are divine laws, of Gods own prescribing, by which he shall administer his government.

7. Thou lovest righteousness and hatest wickedness, therefore God thy God hath anointed thee with the oyl of gladness above thy fellows.

7. He hath eternally espoused the cause of all goodness & justice, hath wrought by his precepts and promises and grace effectually, to bring the practice of all virtue into the world, and beareth a perfect hatred against vice, and by strict prohibitions, and threats of eternal hell, and by suffering himself upon the cross for our sins, (an example of Gods great wrath against sin, chusing rather to punish it on his own Son, than to suffer it to go unpunisht) hath laboured to cast that out of mens hearts: And therefore God the Father hath advanced and dignified nified him above all Angels and men, (ſee note on Matth. 26. c. and Act. 10. 10) exalted him to his own right hand, there to reign for ever, and to diſpence his graces abundantly and freely into all mens hearts. Herein alſo was Solomon a type of the Meſſias, whoſe choiſe of wiſdom, rather then of all ſecular wealth, was highly rewarded by God, beyond all other men.

f. 8. This Brid groom's garments are very richly perfumed, the odour of them comes out from the magnificent rooms wherein he takes pleaſure, and ſo commonly reſides in them. (And ſo the myſtical Bridegroom Chriſt, his graces ſend forth a moſt fragant perfume, moſt grateful and pleaſant to all to whom they come.)

8. † All thy garments ſmell of Myrrhe, Aloes, and Caſſia, out of the Ivory palaces, * whereby f they have made thee glad.

† Myrrhe, Aloes and Caſſia are all thy garments, from—— * wherein thou takeſt delight. f in thy train or magnificence.

g. 9. He is very magnificently attended, many royal beauties are in his train; and his Bride the Queen is placed at his right hand in the moſt glorious nuptial array. (Proportionably the faith of the Meſſias ſhall be received by many perſons of great rank in the world, and the Church his ſpouſe ſhall be advanced by him to a moſt flouriſhing condition.)

9. Kings daughters were ‖ among g thy honourable women: upon thy right hand did ſtand the Queen in gold of Ophir.

10. It will now be happy for the Bride, if ſhe will conſider the true dignity ſhe is advanced to, and the advantages ſhe may reap by it; if ſhe will utterly forſake the Idolatries wherein ſhe hath been brought up in Ægypt, (as the new-married ſpouſe entring into a new family muſt relinquiſh all her old relations, and not preſerve ſo much as her former name) and give up her faith and obedience uniformly to the law of the true God, which here is worſhipt. (And ſo in the myſtical ſenſe, the Jews being aſſumed, after their many adulteries and divorces, unto that better wedlock, celebrated in the Goſpel, muſt think themſelves obliged to forget their old relations, all the rites of their law, nay, the diſtinctive marks of their extraction from the loins of Abraham, circumciſion, &c. and ſo recommend themſelves to their Lord and Bridegroom. And ſo generally they that will come to be members of the Chriſtian Church, muſt forſake all their old wicked courſes, and perform all diligent, faithful, chearful obedience to the commands of Chriſt; or elſe they will be little the better for being Chriſtians.)

10. Hearken, O daughter, and conſider, and incline thine ear: forget alſo thine own people, and thy fathers houſe.

11. So ſhall ſhe become truly amiable to her husband, Solomon the King, the type of the Meſſias, that eternal ſon of God, who when he comes into the world, ſhall be the very God of heaven in our humane nature, and is therefore (he and none but he) to be adored by all men in the world, and ſo ſhall be acknowledged and worſhipt by the Chriſtian-Church (ſee Juſtin Martyr Dial. cum Tryph. p. 287. B.)

11. So ſhall the King greatly deſire thy beauty; for he is thy Lord God, and worſhip thou him.

12. The Tyrians ſhall bring him preſents, (ſee 1 King. 5.) and ſo the greateſt and moſt potent of his Neighbours ſhall court him, and be ambitious of his friendſhip. (And ſo ſhall the heathen people come in to the faith of Chriſt, and in proceſs of time the Emperors and greateſt Princes.

12. And the daughter of Tyre ſhall be there with a gift; even the rich among the people ſhall intreat thy favour.

h. 13. The ſpouſe being of a regal extraction, is a very accompliſht perſon, both in reſpect of inward virtues and outward ſplendor and magnificence. (And ſuch ſhall be the Chriſtian Church, gathered firſt and made up of the pious faithful remnant of the Jews)

13. The Kings daughter is all glorious within; her cloathing is h of ‖ wrought gold.

‖ eyes of gold.

14. She ſhall be conducted to the Bridegroom in a very ſumptuous and glorious guiſe, and attended with her Bride-maids after the nuptial manner. (And this ſignifies the Churches glory; inward, from the graces of God, humility, charity, &c. with which it is content, without any others; and yet hath alſo the acceſſion of outward, from the good Providence of God waiting over it, and advancing it to a very flouriſhing condition. Nor ſhall this Elder ſiſter, the daughter of Sion, the Jewiſh believers, come ſingle to theſe nuptials: But the Gentile Churches, as virgins to accompany the Spouſe, ſhall likewiſe come in to the faith, be preſented to him a glorious Church, not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, but holy, and without blemiſh, Epheſ. 5. 27.)

14. She ſhall be brought unto the King in † raiment of needle-work: The virgins her companions that follow her ſhall be brought unto thee.

† embroidered raiment.

15. And this ſhall be a very joyful and feſtival meeting. (And ſo ſhall the reception of the Chriſtian faith in the heathen world, their entring into the * church, the palace, and houſe of God, and their giving themſelves federally to the obedience of Chriſt: there being no ſtate of life in this world ſo bleſſed, and matter of ſo much inward real ſatisfaction and joy, as the life of a ſincerely humble and charitable Chriſtian.)

15. With gladneſs and rejoycing ſhall they be brought, and ſhall enter into the Kings palace.

* vulg LXXII.

16. As ſhe parts with royal parents in Ægypt, ſo now ſhe ſhall be a mother of royal children; her poſterity ſhall ſucceed in the kingdom of Judah. (And ſo in the antitype, Abraham by being diſowned from being the father of the Jewiſh Synagogue, (circumciſion the ſeal of that covenant being deſtroyed) ſhall not loſe, but gain a better title to that name, enjoying the completion of that prophecy, which ſpake him the father of many nations, and ſhall then be the Patriarch of the whole world of faithful perſons; and the Jewiſh Synagogue, honoured before with the dignity of having a believing and righteous father, ſhall now be more highly honoured, in having a multitude of faithful and pious children, by Chriſt begotten, and by her brought forth unto God. And ſo likewiſe in reſpect to the Gentiles, in ſtead of Idolatrous anceſtors, there ſhall be a ſucceſſion of † pious Chriſtians, which ſhall become governors of the Church, (ſo the firſt Converts were made Biſhops over all the world)

† juſt men ſhall be thy children, Chald.

16. In ſtead of thy fathers ſhall be thy children, whom thou mayſt make Princes in all the * earth.

* or land אֶרֶץ

17. This nuptial ſong ſhall perpetuate thy memory, and bring thee continual praiſe and honour among all poſterities. And ſo ſhall the Church of Chriſt be for ever illuſtrious and viſible upon the earth; and this very Pſalm be lookt on by Chriſtians, as the deſcription of theſe bleſſed ſpiritual eſpouſals betwixt Chriſt and his Church.

17. I will make thy Name to be remembred throughout all generations: therefore ſhall the people praiſe thee for ever and ever.

a. שׁשַׁנִּים Tit. Shoſhannim] שׁשַׁנִּים from שׁשׁ Six, in all probability ſignifie inſtruments of ſix ſtrings. The Chaldee render it יָתְבֵי סַנְהֶדְרִין the aſſeſſors of the Sanhedrim, as if it were from שְׁנַיִם a title of the Doctors of the Jews. The LXXII. render ὑπὲρ ἀλλοιωθησομένων, and ſeem to refer to the cuſtome of alternate ſinging (of which we have ſpoken on Pſal. 24. a.) one verſe by one, another by the other part of the quire; which alternation as it is not unfitly expreſt by ἀλλοίωσις, ſo it might by them be thought to be noted by this word, deduced by them, as alſo by the Chaldee, from שָׁנָה to change or vary. Of the ſons of Coreh ſee Pſal. 42. 1. of Maſchil ſee Pſal. 32. note a. As for יְדִידוֹת in the fœminine plural from יָדִיד beloved, it muſt ſignifie the female or virgin friends, they that had the ſame reſpect to the Bride, as the friends of the Bridegroom had to him, John 3. 29. (ſee note b. on that chapt.) Theſe are the attendants of the ſolemnity, and their chief buſineſs is to increaſe and ingage the love of the Bride to her Huſband: And in their perſons this Pſalm is indited, as if it were ſpoken by them, and ſo is called שִׁיר יְדִידוֹת a canticle of theſe beloved, or friends of the Bride, the Bride-maids; the LXXII. read ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀγαπητῶν, for the beloved, and ſo the Latine, as if it were יְדִיד not יְדִידוֹת.

יְדִידוֹת

b. רָחַשׁ V. 1. Inditing] That רָחַשׁ, uſed only in this one place in Scripture, ſignifies ebullivit præ fervore, to boil or ſeeth out through exceſs of heat, is agreed by all: The LXXII. render it ἐξηρεύξατο, the Latine eructavit the ſtyle ordinarily uſed of a ſpring or fountain; and ſo the Jewiſh Arab Interpreter renders it by אנבע from נבע which belongs to the ſpringing forth of water, originally, but is applyed to any new invention, or good thing, produced by the mind. So Abu Walid alſo would have it rendred, that ſo firſt his heart ſent forth, and then his tongue uttered what that produced or dictated. He obſerves alſo the affinity of רחש with the Arabick רשח wherein the radicals are the ſame, only tranſpoſed, which ſignifies to ſwell forth or diſtill, as water out of an hill or rock. And indeed רחש in Arabick, without tranſpoſition, ſignifies motion or commotion; and ſo Kimchi renders the Hebrew word. And thus the word is deemed applicable to ſpeech, which is thus ſent out from the heart at the mouth, and is produced by the heat or motion of thoughts or meditation; my heart was hot within me, and the fire kindled, and at laſt I ſpake with my tongue. But it is not improbable, that the metaphore ſhould here be taken from boiling over the fire in a pot or pan, which is the way of dreſſing or preparing of meat. So the word ſignifies, and is by the Chaldee rendred בְּעָא ferbuit, calefactus eſt: and from that notion of it we have מַרְחֶשֶׁת τήγανον, a frying-pan, Lev. 7. 9. that wherein the mincha or meat-offering was dreſt with oyl, v. 10. And to this it very well agrees, that a ſacred hymn prepared by a Prophet, firſt compoſed by the ſpirit in his heart, then readily brought forth by his tongue, (which in that reſpect being here compared to the pen of a ready writer, agreeth alſo with another notion both of רָחַשׁ and בָּעָא for making haſt) ſhould be here expreſt by a peace-offering, or ſacrifice of thanksgiving, dreſt with oyl over the fire, whether fried or boiled, (the ebulliency denoted in רָחַשׁ being equal in both of them) and then by the ſacrificer preſented to God, Lev. 2. 8. as this here is to the King in the next words. So that not queſtioning the original notion of the word for ebullivit, we may yet beſt expreſs the metaphor here by preparing, which is a general word, common to the dreſſing of meat or offering, and to the compoſing of any hymn, which is the ſpiritual oblation, and is here part of the nuptial feſtival compoſed for the celebrating of it. As for דָּבָר טוֹב טוֹב by the LXXII. λόγῳ ἀγαθῷ, verbum bonum in the vulgar, the good word, or ſpeech, or matter, it will by analogy ſignifie a feſtival hymn, as טוֹב ſignifies lætus, as well as bonus, and יוֹם טוֹב a good day, is a feſtival day, a day of rejoycing, and the feaſt being a marriage feaſt דָּבָר טוֹב a good or feſtival hymn will be diſtinctly an Epithalamium. And then that which followeth אֹמֵר אֲנִי מַעֲשַׂי לְמֶלֶךְ, will be beſt literally rendred, my compoſures will I deliver, or recite to the King, (ſo the Chaldee exactly in the ſame form, reading only צְבָנַי for מַעֲשַׂי which is the ſame, any kind of works, or compoſures.)

דָּבָר טוֹב

אֹמֵר אֲנִי

c. וְהַדְרְךָ צְלַח רְכַב עַל דְּבַר דָּבָר וְתַדְרֵךְ

V. 4. And in thy Majeſty] The fourth verſe is literally to be rendered, וְהַדְרְךָ צְלַח and proſper with thy honour or majeſty, i. e. we wiſh it long continuance, רְכַב ride upon the horſes of the Kingdome; ſaith the Chaldee, עַל דְּבַר for or upon the word, or buſineſs of truth——ſo the phraſe ſignifies, דָּבָר being uſually taken for matter, as well as words; and ſo the Chaldee here, צְלַח עֲסַק for the buſineſs: the word ſignifies a cauſe depending in debate, a contention, and then more generally negotium, tractatus; and accordingly ſo muſt דְּבַר be here underſtood. Then follows וְתַדְרֵךְ and he, that is, ſaith the Chaldee, God ſhall teach thee terrible things with, or by thy right hand. Againſt this rendring there is but one objection, viz. that תַּדְרֵךְ is in the fœminine gender, and ſo cannot ſo well be ſpoken of God. Why then may it not belong to the immediate præcedents, whether צֶדֶק righteouſneſs, or עֲנָוָה meekneſs, or אֱמֶת truth, that all or any of thoſe, i. e. God by them, ſhall teach him terrible things by his right hand; or, as the fœminine is oft taken neutrally, his riding or ingaging for the cauſe of theſe ſhall bring Gods bleſſing upon him, and ſo cauſe him, or teach him to do theſe terrible things with his right hand? The LXXII. indeed read ὁδήγησόν σου δεξιά σου. But the Chaldee ſuggeſts a more probable rendring.

d. בְּלֵב V. 5. Thine arrows] The fifth verſe may moſt conveniently be read with a parentheſis; Thy arrows are ſharp (then as an effect of that, [the people ſhall fall under thee] for that is an evidence of the ſharpneſs of arrows, when men are thereby wounded and killed) בְּלֵב in or upon or againſt the heart of the enemy of the King; thoſe being the mark againſt which his ſhafts are directed, and the ſharpneſs of them experimented upon them. This our laſt Engliſh deſigned in tranſpoſing the words, firſt, thine arrows are ſharp in the heart of the Kings enemies] and then [whereby the people fall under thee.] This the Jewiſh Arab agrees to, and for taking away the harſhneſs of the parentheſis, tranſpoſeth the words in like manner, thus; And thine arrows being ſharp fall into the heart of the Kings enemies, and the nations fall under thee. So the Chaldee, having rendred the former part of the verſe, [Thy arrows are brought out to ſlay armies, the people ſhall fall under thee] They then add וּבְנֵי קֶשְׁתֶךָ and the ſons of thy bow, i. e. the arrows in the beginning of the verſe, ſhall be ſent againſt the heart of the Kings enemies. Yet are theſe words capable of a rendring, without either tranſpoſing, or parentheſis, thus; Thine arrows are ſharp, people ſhall fall under thee, in the midſt of the Kings enemies, i. e. being preached by thine arrows in the midſt of thine enemies armies. Thus לֵב heart, is elſewhere uſed for the midſt of a thing; as Deut.

Deut. 4. 11. לֵב הַשָּׁמַיִם the heart, i. e. the midſt of heaven, and Exod. 15. 8. בְּלֵב יָם in the heart, i. e. the midſt of the ſea, ſo the heart of the earth, for the midſt of it. And in the Arabick, קלב which ſignifies the ſame with the Hebrew [קֶלֶב] is the proper ſtyle for middle or main body of an army.

e. V. 6. Thy throne] The difficulty here is, to whom this verſe and the following are literally and primarily appliable. And the doubt ariſeth from the ſtyle, which is here inhaunced from the King, to God. 'Tis אֱלֹהִים true indeed, אֱלֹהִים which is here uſed, is ſometimes applied to others beſides God: 1. to the Gods of the אֱלֹהֵי הַגּוֹיִם Gentiles, who are ſo called Iſa. 35. 18. אֱלֹהֵי הַגּוֹיִם the Gods of the nations: 2. to Angels, Pſal. 86. 8. בָּאֱלֹהִים Who is like to thee בָּאֱלֹהִים among the Gods? the Chaldee reads, among the high אֲנָגְלֵי, the Greek Ἀγγέλοι, Angels, transformed by them: 3. to divine and excellent men, Prophets, and Judges, or Princes, &c. So Exod. 22. 28. Thou ſhalt not vilifie אֱלֹהִים the Gods] is explained by what follows, nor curſe the ruler of thy people; and Exod. 21. 6. his maſter ſhall bring אֶל אֱלֹהִים him אֶל אֱלֹהִים to the Gods; we duly render it, to the Judges; and Exod. 4. 16. thou (Moſes) ſhalt be לֵאלֹהִים to Aaron לֵאלֹהִים for a God, לְרַב for a Prince, ſaith the Chaldee. And accordingly 'twere not ſtrange for אֱלֹהִים to be applied to King Solomon here. But the Apoſtle to the Hebrews c. 1. 7. affirming expreſly, that theſe words are ſpoken to Chriſt the Son of God; and the Targum interpreting the King v. 2. (and ſo the whole Pſalm) of the Meſſias, and ſo Kimchi, Aben Ezra, and Jarchi alſo; It is not reaſonable or ſafe to apply them to any other but him; and ſo to take אֱלֹהִים in the principal ſignification, wherein it is moſt frequently uſed for the one God of heaven and earth, and of him to underſtand theſe two verſes, as alſo v. 11. allowing to Solomon only an imperfect, limited, partial ſenſe of them, as he was a type of this Meſſias. Which may well be reconcileable with the underſtanding the reſt of this Pſalm literally of Solomon, and only myſtically of Chriſt; it being not unfrequent with Prophets of the old Teſtament, ſpeaking of ſome other matter myſtically referring to Chriſt, but immediately to ſomewhat of preſent concernment, to be carried by the Divine Spirit, whereby they were acted, to ſpeak immediately of Chriſt. Of this ſee Juſtin Martyr in his Dialogue with Tryphon the Jew, p. 287. where he concludes from this teſtimony, ὅτι καὶ προσκυνητὸς ἦν καὶ Θεὸς καὶ Χριστὸς, that he was to be worſhipt, being God and Chriſt, v. 11. As alſo S. Auguſtine de Civ. Dei, l. 17. c. 16.

f. V. 8. Made thee glad] The former part of v. 8. being read, as it lies in the Hebrew, Myrrhe and Aloes and Caſſia all thy cloaths, i. e. they are ſo perfumed with theſe odors, as if they were nothing elſe; that which follows will be clear alſo, מִן הֵיכְלֵי שֵׁן from the palaces of tooth, thereby, ſaith the Chaldee, meaning the Elephants tooth brought from Armenia, (it may more probably be ſaid from Africa) with which it ſeems their choice rooms were beautified (of this Solomons throne is ſaid to be made, 1 King. 10. 18. and ſo Ahab made an Ivory houſe, 1 King. 22. 39.) from which as the bridegroom paſſeth, or from whence, as he abideth therein, his garments yeeld this high perfume over all the adjoyning rooms. As for that which is added in the cloſe, מְנִי שִׂמְּחוּךָ, with which they have delighted thee] it muſt be underſtood according to the vulgar Hebraiſme, oft taken notice of (ſee Luk. 16. note b.) they have delighted thee, i. e. thou art delighted or pleaſed with them.

g. V. 9. Thy honourable] From יָקַר pretioſus, honorabilis fuit, is יְקָר honour, glory, ſplendor; and ſo here in the plural, בִּיקָרוֹתַיִךְ in or among thy ſplendors, thy honours, thy ornaments, i. e. thy magnificent train. The LXXII. renders it ἐν τῇ τιμῇ σου, in thy honour, to this ſenſe clearly.

h. V. 13. Of wrought gold] Of the difference between שִׁבְצָן here and רִקְמָה in the next verſe, this only need be obſerved: that the former ſignifies ocellare, to work a garment full of eyes, which eyes being here of gold, are probably ſuch as are with us called oes, as being of the form of an eye; the latter is to paint with a needle, i. e. to work upon cloth &c. divers colours and figures, to imbroider with ſeveral coloured ſilks, thereby imitating the various plumes of birds, from whence thoſe artificers are called plumarii. (See the learned Nic. Fuller Miſcell. l. 1. c. 20.)

The

The Forty Sixth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

To the chief Muſitian for the ſons of Corah, a ſong upon [a] Alamoth.

The forty ſixth Pſalm is a profeſſion of all truſt and confidence in God, and ſeems a.

to have been written in the time of that tranquillity which is mentioned 2 Sam. 8. 5. 1 Chron. 18. 14. And was committed to the Præfect of the Muſick, to be ſung by the poſterity of Corah, to the tune known by the title of Alamoth.

|| ready נִמְצָא

1. God is our refuge and ſtrength, a very || preſent help in trouble.

1. All our hope and truſt is in God, from whom all our aid and auxiliaries muſt be expected, and fetcht down by our daily and conſtant prayers; wherein if we continue faithful and diligent, he will never fail to anſwer, and be found by us, being always ready at hand, in time of diſtreſs, to ſuccour thoſe that thus ſeek him.

2. Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and though † heart לֵב

the mountains be carried into the † midſt of the ſea:

2. This gives us courage in all that can befal us, be our ſtate never ſo much worſe than already 'tis; in time of the moſt formidable concuſſion of our armies, (proportionable to the terribleſt earthquake) in time of the moſt viſible unavoidable danger, (ſuch as it would be, if the ground we ſtand on were removed from its ſtable foundation, and caſt into the midſt of the ſea, and then ready to ſink the next minute, and to be ingulphed in that abyſs.

3. Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains ſhake with the ſwelling thereof. Selah.

4. When our enemies both threaten, and act moſt proudly and arrogantly, and accordingly are ready to ſtrike a terrour into the valianteſt heart among us;

* The ſtreams of the river, or, The river by his ſtreams. נְהָר פְּלָגָיו

4. * There is a river, the ſtream whereof ſhall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the Tabernacles of the moſt High.

4. Yet ſhall the people of God injoy tranquillity and delight in him, fetch continual matter of pleaſure and refreſhment from him: the contemptible trenches of the brook Geon, which water Jeruſalem, (the waters of Siloah that go ſoftly, Iſai. 8. 6.) ſhall not envie the proudeſt ſwelling ſtreams, as having the ſupreme Creator and Governour of the world in a peculiar manner reſident among them.

|| at the appearing of the morning, || and [b] that right early.

5. God is in the midſt of her, ſhe ſhall not be moved: God ſhall help her, b.

5. This ſpecial favourable providential preſence of God is a ground of the greateſt ſecurity: when ever calamity or danger approaches, he comes inſtantly and ſeaſonably to their relief, as to the Iſraelites he did, Exod. 14. 23.

6. The heathen raged, the Kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice, the earth melted.

6. When the Philiſtines and other heathen nations about us began to threaten, and prepare war againſt us, God interpoſed his hand, declared his good pleaſure and favour toward us, (as diſcernibly as if it had been by voice from heaven, or by a thunderbolt ſhot out from the clouds;) and preſenly they were all diſcomfited, and diſperſed, (as when a flaſh of lightening or thunderbolt melts or diſſolves any thing.

|| fortreſs, or, high place מִשְׂגָּב

7. The Lord of hoſts is with us, the God of Jacob is our || refuge. Selah.

7. Thus is Gods preſence among us our ſecurity, he being the Lord to whom all armies are ſubject, the ſtrong tower or fortreſs, to whom we may ſafely retire in whatſoever difficulty or danger.

8. Come, behold the works of the Lord, what deſolation he hath made in the earth.

8. 'Tis worthy of conſideration to all, what remarkable judgments God hath ſhewn upon the heathen nations about us, that have ſet themſelves hoſtilely againſt us, what ſtrange deſtructions and deſolations he hath wrought among them.

† ſhields,

9. He maketh wars to ceaſe unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the ſpear in ſunder; he burneth the [c] † chariot in the fire.

9. 'Tis he that loveth charity and peace among men, and therefore diſcomfiteth thoſe that are hoſtilely diſpoſed, and 'tis not all their military proviſions will ſecure them: when he pleaſeth to interpoſe himſelf, he preſently brings all to nought, as if a conſuming fire were come amongſt them. c.

10. Be ſtill, and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.

10. This therefore may teach the wicked and heathen people, what is moſt prudent for them, even to give over their hoſtilities, to lay down their arms taken up againſt the people of God. For 'tis certain, they ſhall not finally proſper; God will ſubdue all their proweſs, and magnifie himſelf upon them, and demonſtrate that there is nothing gained by reſiſting of him:

* high place, or fortreſs.

11. The Lord of hoſts is with us, the God of Jacob is our * refuge. Selah.

11. Nor conſequently by oppoſing of thoſe with whom God is preſent, to ſupport and relieve them in all their dangers.

Annotations on Pſalm XLVI.

a. עַלְמוֹת Tit. Alamoth] This Alamoth we find mentioned 1 Chron. 15. 20. where in bringing up the Ark from Obed-Edom, the ſingers Heman, Aſaph and Ethan, i. e. theſe ſons of Corah here mentioned, were appointed to ſound with Cymbals of braſs, and Zechariah, &c. with Pſalteries on Alamoth, and Mattathias, thim, &c. with harps on the Sheminith, or the eighth to excel, or overſee (ſee note on Pſal. 4. a.) what it is, Chimchi informs us upon Pſal. 3. the name of a tune, or melody, or muſical key, to which this Pſalm was ſet, and to be ſung by the ſons of Corah. And conſidering that Pſal. 9. intitled עַל מוּת לַבֵּן, it is not improbable that this ſhould refer to that, and being ſet to the ſame key or tune, be ſaid to be a ſong עַל עַלְמוּת upon this tune, ſo called, and vulgarly then known by that title. The LXXII. referring to the notion of the theme עָלַם occultavit, render it ὑπὲρ τῶν κρυφίων, for the hidden; and the Latine, pro arcanis: and the reſt of the antient Interpreters take the ſame courſe; the Chaldee referring it to Coreh, and thoſe that were hidden, i. e. ſwallowed up, by the earth with him, whilſt theſe ſons of Coreh eſcaped; as if the mention of the ſons of Coreh in the title, by whom this ſong was to be ſung, referred the whole Pſalm to that ſtory. Accordingly verſe 2. when the Hebrew reads, Though the earth be removed, they paraphraſe it [When our Fathers were changed from the earth.]

b. לִפְנוֹת

V. 5. Right early] What לִפְנוֹת is referred to, and how 'tis to be rendred, is not agreed on by Interpreters. 'Tis ordinarily joyned in conſtruction with בֹּקֶר, and is then to be rendred with it, in, or at the mornings appearing. And this will certainly be the ſenſe of it, if we compare it with other places, where the ſame phraſe is uſed; as Ex. 14. 27. the ſea returned to his ſtrength, לִפְנוֹת בֹּקֶר at the appearing of the morning, we render, when the morning appeared, LXXII. ἐπὶ ἡμέραν, toward day. So Judg. 19. 26. we read in the dawning of the day, the LXXII. πρὸς τὸν ὄρθρον, early in the morning. Thus alſo לִפְנוֹת עֶרֶב Gen. 24. 63. at the appearing of the evening, or at eventide, and Deut. 23. 12. When evening cometh on, or looketh toward. And being here ſpoken of Gods aids afforded to his people, it may either allude to that deliverance, Exod. 14. 27. where at the appearing of the morning the ſea returned for the drowning of the Ægyptians; or elſe be a proverbial ſpeech, for an opportune and ſeaſonable deliverance, becauſe that then afforded to the Iſraelites was ſuch, as [in the mount it ſhall be ſeen] is proverbially uſed in this ſenſe. Aben Ezra ſeems to like the rendring it בְּכָל יוֹם every day, i. e. as oft as the morn appears; and ſo the Jewiſh Arab Interpreter, according to the return or courſe of the day daily. But the Syriack, according to the notion of it in thoſe other places, Exod. 14. &c. expreſs it clearly to be בְּעִדַּן צַפְרָא in the time or ſeaſon of the morning; and ſo the Chaldee, by their paraphraſe, [the Lord will aid her with the juſtice of Abraham who prayed לְעָרְנִי צַפְרָא in the morning ſeaſon] appear to have underſtood it; and ſo Kimchi, at the approach of the morning of deliverance, after the night of affliction. Which well accordeth with the ſtyle of S. Paul, Rom. 13. 12. Ἡ νὺξ προέκοψεν, ἡδὲ ἡμέρα ἤγγικεν, the night is gone over or paſt, and the day approacheth, meaning the night of perſecution, and the day of relief or reſcue, σωτηρία, their deliverance, v. 11. The copies of the LXXII. vary in this place; ſome read τὸ πρωὶ πρωΐ, which the Latine ſeem to have read, and render, mane diluculo, in the morning at the dawning of light, and perhaps our Engliſh from thence have their [right early,] but the Romane, τῇ πρωϊνώτητι, with his countenance. But indeed neither of theſe ſeem to be their original reading, but a third compoſed between both theſe, τῇ πρωϊνώτητι προσώπου, by his countenance in the morning, as rendring לִפְנוֹת by τῇ πρωϊνώτητι, and בֹּקֶר adverbially, in the morning; by this means probably applying it to God, that he would help her by his countenance, or by looking upon her: but that would better anſwer בִּפְנוֹת then לִפְנוֹת, which here we have, and therefore the rendring will ſtill be moſt proper [at the mornings appearing, or] when the morning appeareth.

c. עֲגָלָה

V. 9. Chariot] From עָגַל is עָגוֹל round or circular; and from thence עֲגָלָה a wheel, and by Synecdoche a Chariot, Num. 7. and Gen 46. But it ſignifies alſo a ſhield or buckler, as being round alſo; and ſo 'tis rendred by the Chaldee here, תְּרִיסַיָּא עֲגִילִין round ſhields, and by the LXXII. θυρεοὺς, ſhields. And ſo it is moſt probable, being joyned here with bow and ſpear, weapons of war, the military Chariots, which alone can be thought to be reſpected here, being conſtantly expreſt by another word, רְכָבִים, not עֲגָלוֹת.

The Forty Seventh PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The forty ſeventh Pſalm is a ſummons and invitation to all to bleſs and acknowledge God in his power and mercy, expreſſ remarkably to the Jews in ſubduing the heathen nations about them, but myſtically to the Chriſtian Church, in bringing the Potentates of the world to be members of it. It was committed to the Præfect of the Muſick, to be ſung by the poſterity of Coreh, and probably to be ſung at the ſolemn feaſts when the whole nation of the Jews aſſembled to the houſe of God at Jeruſalem.

To the chief Muſitian, A Pſalm for the ſons of Coreh.

1. Let all the ſervants of God praiſe and magnifie him, recount his acts of power and mercy afforded to us, ſolemnize the victories which he hath wrought for us with triumphs and ovations and jubilees.

1. O clap your hands, all ye people; ſhout unto God with the voice of trumpet.

2. For the God of Iſrael is the only powerful God, moſt formidable to all his, and his Churches enemies, the only Ruler of all the world.

2. For the Lord moſt high is terrible; he is a great King over all the earth.

a. 3. It hath been his immediate and peculiar work, to ſubject the Canaanites and the reſt of the ſeven nations, and give us poſſeſſion of their lands, and to ſuppreſs the Philiſtims and the other adjoyning nations alſo.

3. a He ‖ ſhall ſubdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet. ‖ or hath ſubdued.

4. It hath been his free act of mercy, grace and goodneſs, to ſeek out and loved. Selah.

4. He † ſhall chuſe our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he † or hath choſen eſpy,

espy, Ezek. 20. 6. for us of the seed of Jacob so rich a portion, and withal to afford us the benefit of his sanctuary, that excellence of our strength, Ezek. 24. 21. and herein to advance us above all other people of the world, out of his meer love and favour to us.

5. God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet.

5. He hath a peculiar presence in that place where his people assemble to his service. And so the serving him there is another matter of triumphant joy to the pious man; the shout and the trumpet call men together thither, and so attend that, as they do the triumphs of a conqueror.

6. Sing praises to God, sing praises: sing praises to our King, sing praises.

6. Let us therefore all joyn in the continual magnifying of him, as of our God, which hath chosen us to himself, and as of our King that hath most prosperously fought all our battels for us, and now in peace expects our offerings of peace, to be honoured and praised by us.

7. For God is the King of all the earth: sing ye praises [b] with understanding.

7. He is the supreme Governour of all the world, and is therefore duly to be acknowledged and glorified by all. b.

8. God reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness.

8. He hath signally subdued the Idolatrous heathen nations, subjected them to the throne of David, and among his own people the Jews he exhibits himself in a divine and powerful manner in the Sanctuary, the place of our assembling, and his constant residence. (In the mystical sense, He will subject the heathen world to the faith of Christ, and exercise a spiritual dominion in their hearts.)

9. The Princes of the [c] people are gathered together, even the people of the God of Abraham: for the shields of the earth || belong unto God; he is greatly exalted.

|| are the Lords.

9. And thither do the rulers of the tribes, and all the people of Israel assemble at the appointed times of his service, the solemn feasts, so many times a year: and though at such times the country be left naked, and in a manner desolate, no company remaining at their houses to guard them from the violence of the neigbouring nations; yet hath God undertaken to protect them from all invasion, having promised that none should desire their land, when they went up to the place that he should choose, Exod. 34. 24. And this he hath signally made good, working in the hearts of all the adjacent heathen a great dread and awe of us. (In the mystical sense is further contained a prediction, that the Jews that stood out against Christ should at length come in, many of them, and receive the faith, some before the destruction by Titus, others in Adrians time, at which time the whole nation became Christian, (see note on Revel. 2. f.) and not only they, but the heathen nations also, who should universally come in to Christ, become Christian.) And this both in the first literal, and sublimer mystical sense, is to be lookt on as a signal act of Gods power and providence, and so to be acknowledged by all.

Annotations on Psal. XLVII.

a. 3. He shall subdue] 'Tis so frequent for the future to be used in the preter tense, and the matter doth so signally direct it to do so here v. 4. and 5. that it is strange any interpreters should retain the future sense in their rendring. The place belongs evidently to Gods giving the land of Canaan to the Israelites, and that sure was past at the writing of the Psalm, and accordingly the LXXII. render it in both verses, ὑπέταξε, he hath subdued, v. 3. and ἐξελέξατο, he hath chosen, v. 4. There is nothing then of farther difficulty to be here explicated, unless it be, that גְּאוֹן excellence, magnificence, pride, from גָּאָה being high or excellent, doth here denote that excellent portion, that fat and fruitful land, which God had chosen for the Israelites to possess, they and their posterity; but especially the place of Gods publick worship among them, which is styled the excellence of their strength, that which secured to them all their victories over their enemies, and the desire of their eyes, Ezek. 24. 21. a priviledge which of all others ought to be most pretious, and desirable to them.

יִבְחַר בְּנוּ גְּאוֹן

b. V. 7. With understanding] 'Tis ordinarily resolved that מַשְׂכִּיל here signifies with understanding: טָבָא בְּשִׂכְלָא with a good understanding, saith the Chaldee: συνετῶς, intelligently, say the LXXII. and sapienter, wisely, the Latine. But the word being a noun, is not elsewhere to be found adverbially, and is therefore by the interlinear rendred intelligens. But neither will that without much streining be fitted to accord with זַמְּרוּ sing ye, in the plural. It is not therefore improbable, that מַשְׂכִּיל being so oft used in the titles of the Psalms, for the name of a tune or key in Musick, (See note on Psal. 32. a.) should here also be taken in that sense, being joyned with זַמְּרוּ sing praises to God in that tune or key, which was then well known by that title. But this being only a conjecture, 'tis sufficient here to have thus mentioned it, and no more.

מַשְׂכִּיל

זַמְּרוּ

V. 9. People] This last verse is thought capable of some variety of rendring, first in respect of the word עַם, the people. This the LXXII. appear to have read with Chirec עִם, and so have rendred it μετὰ, with: and the Latine follows them, cum Deo Abraham, with the God of Abraham. But passing by this, and taking עַם for a noun, 'tis yet not improbable, that it should be read in the notion of לְעַם as in the Dative case, thus, the Princes of the people נֶאֱסָפוּ were aggregated or joyned עַם אֱלֹהֵי אַבְרָהָם to the people of the God of Abraham, populo, saith the Interlinear, i. e. to the Jews. And then still the LXXII. their rendring will be as to the sense expressive enough, Ἄρχοντες λαῶν συνήχθησαν μετὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ Ἀβραάμ, The Princes of the people have been joyned with the God of Abraham: for that is in sense exactly the same with joyning with the Jews, who worshipt that God; as it was all one to be a proselyte to God, and a proselyte to the Jews, and as it is all one to associate and joyn with Christ, and with Christians. Lastly, it may be read עַם, as in the nominative, or perhaps the genitive case, and joyned by opposition either to the Princes or the people foregoing, as in our English, The Princes of the people, even the people— And so the Chaldee render it, עַמְמַיָּא דִּי מְהֵי מְנִין the people that are faithful to the God of Abraham; and thus 'twill note the whole nation of the Jews, as many as continue constant to that obedience, and that worship which God hath by law established among them. And thus will the words fitly and literally be understood, in reference to the universall assembling of all the nation of the Jews at the feasts at Jerusalem, Princes and people together, the whole people of Israel, or children of Abraham: and to that will belong what follows, concerning the shields of the earth, or land, howsoever we understand them. The words seem capable of a double interpretation. If מָגִנֵּי אֶרֶץ the shields

c. עַם

נֶאֱסָפוּ

מָגִנֵּי אֶרֶץ

ſhields of the earth] be taken literally, for the inſtruments of protection and preſervation, then לאלהים to the Lord] will ſignifie, that all ſuch means of ſafeguard, wherein the whole land can be concerned, are in Gods power, and at his command or diſpoſing, ſo that he can ſurely give what he hath promiſed, the moſt perfect defence and ſafety to them that in obedience to him reſort to Jeruſalem to worſhip, and leave no number of men at home to defend their country from invaſions. But both the Jewiſh-Arab Interpreter, and Abu-Walid, by מגני ארץ the ſhields of the earth, will have here meant אולא אלנאס ורוסאהם the nobleſt of men, and chief of them. And ſo alſo Aben Ezra, and Kimchi; and ſo the word is uſed, Hoſ. 4. 18. מגניה her ſhields: רבריהון her great men, ſay the Chaldee; and we rightly render it, her Rulers. And ſo here, though the Chaldee render it literally תריסי ſhields, yet the Syriack hath ܣܝܡ̈ܐ which their Latine doth not rightly render territoria, the territories of the earth: it ſignifies the dominions or powers (אוחרן power or principality, from אחר or אזז to hold, to poſſeſs) and ſo the LXXII. read θεῦ κραταιοὶ τῆς γῆς, the mighty of the land are God's; not as the Latine, dii fortes terræ, the ſtrong Gods of the land, (ſure it ſhould be Dei, anſwerable to θεῦ, and לאלהים) but the mighty of the land are God's, in the ſenſe as Rev. 11. 15. we read, ἐγένετο βασιλεῖαι τῦ κόσμυ, τῦ κυρίυ ἡμῶν, the kingdoms of the world became our Lords, i. e. were converted to Chriſt, (ſee note on Rev. 11. f.) And then, as there it follows, κ) βασιλεύσει, and he, i. e. God or Chriſt, ſhall reign for ever and ever; ſo here סאו נעלה be, i. e. God, is highly exalted: not ὑπερύψωται in the plural, as the LXXII. and Latine, and others from thence; but as the Chaldee and Syriack, in the ſingular, God is exalted, as ver. 8. God reigneth over the heathen, and ver. 7. God is the King of all the earth; God being then ſaid to be exalted and to reign, when men come in to acknowledge and obey him. And this will be moſt fully underſtood in the prophetical meaning of the words, as they had a larger completion under Chriſt, at the converſion of the Jews and Gentiles alſo, for that is the aſſembling both of, and to the people of the God of Abraham, that Father of the faithful, whoſe myſtical or ſpiritual Children are ſtyled the people of God, by way of eminence, and the converſion of heathens or incredulous Jews into ſuch, is the reigning of God or Chriſt among them.

The Forty Eighth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The forty eighth Pſalm is a Hymn in honour of Jeruſalem, as particularly choſen for the place of Gods worſhip, and ſo defended by his more immediate care from all hoſtilities of invading enemies; a chearful form of ſinging lauds to God, particularly for that mercy of permitting men to meet in his ſolemn ſervice, (and ſo in the myſtical ſenſe, an acknowledgment of his glorious mercies afforded to the Church of Chriſtians under the Goſpel) the greateſt dignation in the world. It ſeems to have been compoſed after ſome ſignal defeat of an invading army, v. 4. and was appointed to be ſung by the poſterity of Coreh, in the † Munday ſervice.

A Song and Pſalm for the ſons of Corah.

† διτέρᾳ σαββάτυ, LXXII.

1. The God of Iſrael is a God of all power and Majeſty, and ſo hath illuſtriouſly ſhewed himſelf to that people which he hath choſen to himſelf; and therefore ought in all reaſon to be ſolemnly adored and magnified by all the inhabitants of this land, by bringing up their offerings to Jeruſalem, that place where he hath ordained to be worſhipt.

1. Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holineſs.

a. 2. The hill of Sion, where the Ark is now placed, and the ſervice of God is performed, is in it ſelf a moſt pleaſant delightful place; the ſituation very advantageous for beauty, the moſt delectable of any in the whole land. It is on the North ſide of Jeruſalem, and ſo fenceth it from the moſt boyſterous winds; and God the King of all the earth in a moſt ſignal manner inhabites and preſentiates himſelf there. And ſo in the myſtical ſenſe, the being a member of the Church of Chriſt is in many regards a delightful ſtate, much more prizable by any rational conſidering man, than all the pleaſures and advantages of ſin; 'tis a guard from the fierceſt temptations, and hath the bleſſing and gratious preſence of God always adjoyned to it.)

2. [a] Beautiful for ſituation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Sion, ‖ on the ſides of the North, the city of the great King.

‖ on the North ſide יַרְכְּתֵי צָפוֹן

3. Here in this fort of Sion, this high and fair building, is the ſolemn reſidence of the Ark of the Covenant, and ſo of God himſelf, who is to be worſhipt and conſulted there, and from thence gives relief to all that addreſs themſelves to him there.

3. God is known in her palaces for a refuge.

4. Of this we have had a late eminent experience. For when the Kings of the heathens round about us confederated, and joyned both their counſels and forces againſt the people of God, in fine they departed without any attempt. (See note on Pſal. 42. c.)

4. For lo the Kings were aſſembled, they paſſed by together.

5. They ſoon diſcerned Gods taking our parts, were aſtoniſhed at it, and in great perturbation and diſorder fled away, ſeeing the * wonders and ſigns that were wrought by God for us, and againſt them.

* Chald.

5. They ſaw it, and ſo they marvelled: they were troubled, and † haſted away.

† affrighted נִבְהָלוּ

6. The terrors that vehemently and ſuddenly ſurpriſed them, cannot better be expreſt, than by the pangs and throws of a woman bringing forth.

6. Fear took hold upon them * there and pain, as of a woman in travel.

* there was pain שָׁם וְחִיל

7. Thou

7. Thou breakeſt the ſhips of [b] Tarſhiſh with an Eaſt wind.

5. Thus when thou pleaſeſt, thou diſappointeſt the b.

Tyrian merchants, when they come home with their lading of gold and ſilver, and other metals, as rich as the moſt proſperous voyage can make them; a wind of thy ſending ſhatters their fleet, and caſts them away, and their wealth with them.

8. As we have heard, ſo we have ſeen in the city of the Lord of hoſts, in the city of our God: God will eſtabliſh it for ever. Selah.

8. And ſo in all other things God doth magnifie his power and mercy to his people: the promiſes which he hath made to Abraham are fulfilled on us, and ſo will certainly be performed to all that follow and adhere to the faith of Abraham, to the Jewiſh firſt, and (on their defection) to the Chriſtian Church to the end of the world.

9. We [c] have ‖ thought of thy loving kindneſs, O God, in the midſt of the Temple.

‖ awaited

9. To thee, whenſoever we have wanted any thing, hath been our conſtant reſort and addreſs; we have diligently made our prayers to thee in thy appointed place of hearing requeſts, and then quietly attending thy time, with full confidence of a ſeaſonable audience from thee, we have never been diſappointed. c.

10. According to thy Name, O God, ſo is thy praiſe unto the ends of the earth: † Thy right hand is full of [d] righteouſneſs.

† or righteouſneſs conſecrateth thee.

11. Thy Name is ſpoken of over all the world, and where-ever the mention of it is come, men admire and celebrate thy glorious works of mercy to thy people. Innumerable are the acts of goodneſs which have been wrought by thy right hand, through the ſpecial interpoſition of thy power for us thy unworthy ſervants, and thereby art thou ſet out moſt holy and moſt renowned in the eyes of all men, thy juſtice and thy mercy being for ever diſcernible in the exerciſe of thy power. d.

11. Let mount Sion rejoyce, let the daughters of Judah be glad, becauſe of thy judgments.

11. Let Jeruſalem the Metropolis, and all the leſſer cities of Judah, and the people therein, joyn all in a feſtival celebration of thy great and wondrous works of deliverance, and all ſorts of bleſſings which God hath afforded them.

12. Walk about Sion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof.

12. There is nothing ſo deſerving our ſolemneſt meditations as this goodneſs of God unto his people, exhibited in his Sanctuary, in anſwer to their prayers. A man may very comfortably and profitably ſpend all his time in contemplation of it, walking about the city, and ſeeing whether God have not exactly guarded it, not any one tower of it demoliſht; but eſpecialy conſidering this his Sanctuary on the hill of Sion, ſurveighing the very external fabrick, numbring the towers of it as emblems, but very imperfect ones, of the luſtre and magnificence of that God that inhabits there, and from thence ſignally anſwers the prayers of his people.

13. Mark ye well her bulwarks, [e] ‖ conſider her palaces, that ye may † tell it to the generations following.

‖ divide, ſever, diſtribute.
† number them
תִּסְפְּרוּ

13. Spend your time in a diligent conſideration of the fortifications and ſtately lofty buildings thereof, ſurvey them ſeverally; that ye may be able perfectly to decipher them to poſterity: and by that imperfect meaſure, think what a powerful and admirable Deity it is that inhabits there, and what a glorious Church he will provide himſelf in the days of the Meſſias, of which this is but a dark, feeble adumbration. e.

14. For this God is our God for ever and ever; he ſhall be our guide [f] unto death.

14. Let us therefore all praiſe and magnifie this glorious God of Iſrael, and adhere conſtantly to him, in deſpite of whatſoever temptations to withdraw us from him, and be guided and ruled by him to the end of our lives. f.

Annotations on Pſalm XLVIII.

a. יְפֵה נוֹף

V. 2. Beautiful ſituation] For יְפֵה נוֹף fair in ſituation, (in the notion of נוֹף for a clime, or province, or tract of ground) the Roman LXXII. reads ἀγαλλίαμα, ſome other antient Copies εὐφρόνη, for ſo Apollinaris hath it; and (as the Latine of that) S. Auguſtine and S. Ambroſe read dilatans, dilating. This latter may not improbably have reſpect to a notion of נוֹף, uſual in the Miſneh for the boughs or top branches of a tree; which ſome of the Jews alſo would have take place here, as comparing Sion to a beautiful well-ſpreading tree. But the vulgar hath fundatur: which though it imperfectly expreſſeth ἀγαλλίαμα, yet it ſeems rather to reſpect that then εὐφρόνη, and gives us reaſon to read it otherwiſe than the ordinary copies now will have it, neither ἐυφίζων with the Roman, nor ἐυελίζω with * Kircher, but ἐυελίζον, an adjective neuter, agreeing with [ὄρος Σιὼν, the hill of Sion] for which again the ordinary copies read corruptly ὄρη Σιὼν, the hills. That theſe two errors of the Scribe are thus to be amended, appears by the Latine, Fundatur — mons Sion, the mount Sion is founded, rooting and founding being ſo neer in ſenſe, that there can be no doubt, but they thus rendred ἐυελίζον. And of this rendring the account alſo may moſt probably be fetcht from the forementioned notion of נוֹף, for boughs: for though the boughs be contrary to the root, and ſo נוֹף to עֵקֶר, yet the well ſetting of the roots being the cauſe of the flouriſhing of the boughs, the one may paſs for a periphraſis of the other. But the other notion of נוֹף, for a clime, or tract of ground, may well be accepted; and then יְפֵה נוֹף will be no more then among us Bellofitum, faire in ſituation. And to this alſo the Greek ἐυελίζον may well accord, the ſituation being not unfitly expreſt by ἕλιξ, root, and the ἐυ being a denotation of the beauty. But of this the Latine fundatur] is not expreſſive. Here follows in our reading of the LXXII. ἀγαλλίαμα, imitated alſo by the Latine exultatione. But here alſo 'tis not improbable

* Concord. T. II. p. 286.

bable the Copies of the LXXII. are corrupt, being ſo eaſily changed from ἀγαλλίαμα, or ἀγαλλιάμα᾽ν, a rejoycing, or a kind of rejoycing of the whole earth, as the Syriack, as well as the Chaldee, literally render. And that being admitted, the LXXII. which are now remote enough, will be exactly anſwerable to the Hebrew, ὑψηλὸν, ἀγαλλίαμα πάσης τῆς γῆς, ὄρος Σιὼν· τὰ πλευρὰ τὰ βόρεια, The hill of Sion is well rooted, or well ſeated, the perfection of beauty, Pſal. 50. 2. Lam. 11. 15. (built very advantagiouſly in reſpect of Situation) the joy of the whole land; ſo again Jeruſalem is ſtiled Lam. 11. 15. the ſides (literally according to the original יַרְכְּתֵי) of the North, i. e. on the north ſide of Jeruſalem——

b. תַּרְשִׁישׁ

V. 7. Tarſis] Of Tarſis, what place it is, and how variouſly interpreted by the Antients, is ſet down at large by the learned Bochart, whoſe opinion of it he hath ſolemnly confirmed; viz. that it belonged to Spain neer to Gadir or Gades (now ſoftned into Cades) and was the ſame that Authors call Tarteſſis or Tarteſſus, a moſt opulent place (by the Poets therefore turned into the Elyſian fields) and by Geographers called Hercules pillars, beyond which was no paſſing. That in this place were αἰσπαλλα χρυσοῦ καὶ ἀργύρου, mines of Gold and Silver, ſee Stephanus Byzant. ſub Πολ. in the word Ἰβύλλα, a city of Tarteſſia, ſaith he, i. e. Tarſhis, who adds Tinn alſo in the word Ταρτιωνὶς· and Strabo both braſs and iron, of which ſorts, as alſo of ſilver, ὑπάρχει τῆς γῆς ὅτε ποσὴ, νῦν ὅπως ἀγαθὲς ἐξήτασται χωρίων μέχρι νῦν, ſaith he, there is neither ſo much, nor ſo good as yet diſcovered to be in any part of the earth. Hence was it that the Phœnicians, i. e. the old inhabitants of Canaan, ejected by Joſuah, and retired up to the Sea ſide, to Tyre and Sidon, and ſetting up for Navigation and Merchandize, made their very ſucceſsful Voiages thither, ἀγοράζοντες τὸν ἀργυρον μικρῆς τινος ἀνηδόσεως ἄλλων φορτίων, ſaith Diodorus Siculus out of Poſidonius, buying Silver at the very cheap rate of other mean Commodities which they carried with them. The one known place in Ariſtotle, * Θαυμασ. Ἀκουσμάτ. will make all farther Teſtimonies unneceſſary: Τὰς πρώτας φησὶ Φοινίκων ἐπὶ Ταρτησσὸν πλεύσαντας λέγεται πρῶτον ἀργύριον ἀντεμπορήσασθαι ἔλαιον καὶ ἄλλην ναυτικὴν ῥοπὴν εἰσαγαγόντας, ὥστε μηκέτι ἔχειν δοῦναι, μήτε ἐπιδέξασθαι τὸν ἀργύριον, ἀλλ᾽ ἀναγκασθῆναι ἀποπλέοντας ἐκ τοῦ τόπου, τά τε ἄλλα πάντα ἀργυρᾶ οἷς ἐχρῶντο καλασκευάσασθαι, καὶ ὁ καὶ τὰς ἀγκύρας πάσας· They ſay the firſt Phœnicians (which he carefully by the word [firſt] diſtinguiſhes from thoſe which in the following words he ſtyles Φοίνικας τὰς καπικὰς τὰ γάδειρα καλοῦντας, the Phœnicians that inhabit Gadir or Gades, i. e. Cades, for this was after theſe firſt Phœnicians made theſe ſucceſsful Voiages) ſailed to Tarteſſus, and brought back their Ships fraught with ſo much Silver, which they bought for Oil, and other ſuch mean lading, that they could neither carry nor would receive any more, but were forced at their departure to make all their Utenſils of Silver, and even their very Anchors. This which hath been ſaid, as it gives a clear account of that Character of Tarſhis given Ezech. 27. 12. Tarſhiſh was thy merchant (with whom thou, i. e. Tyre or Phœnice tradedſt) by reaſon of the multitude of all kind of Riches, with Silver, Iron, Tin and Lead they traded in thy Fairs; ſo it renders us the reaſon of this phraſe here, the Ships of Tarſhis, viz. thoſe that the Phœnicians or Tyrians, the next borderers on Iſrael, uſed in fetching in all their wealth from thoſe remote parts, and therefore were excellently well built by thoſe great Navigators, (Φοινίκης ναυτιλλοῖοι, in Homer. Odys. 15. Οἱ πρῶτοι νήεσσιν ἐπειρήσαντο θαλάσσης— ſaith * Dionyſius, the Phœnicians famous for ſhipping, who firſt exerciſed that trade of Navigation, and ſo of merchandiſe by Sea. Πρῶτοι δ᾽ ἐμπορίης ἀλιδρόμου ἐμνήσαντο.) Theſe Ships of theirs, the only tools and inſtruments of their wealthy trading, God when he pleaſes, ſplits upon a rock, toſſeth and breaks to pieces by a contemptible deſpicable means, by a winde, which no man knows whence, or on what errand it comes, which there is no preventing, or appeaſing, or flying from, but comes of a ſudden, and ſhatters the Ships, doth great execution among them: πνεῦμα βίαιον, ſaith the LXXII. a violent blaſt, ſuch, it ſeems, the Eaſt wind was wont to be in thoſe parts; ſo we have Exod. 14. 21. a ſtrong Eaſt wind, ſuch as made the Sea go back, and turned the Channel into dry land, as there it follows. And Job 27. 21. with the tempeſts and ſtorm hurling him out of his place, is joyned, the Eaſt wind carrieth him away, and he departeth. So Jer. 18. 17. I will ſcatter them as with an Eaſt wind, to note a moſt violent ſcattering; as Iſai. 27. 8. the day of the Eaſt wind is a terrible day, and Hab. 1. 9. they ſhall come all for violence, they ſhall ſup up as the Eaſt wind. All evident teſtimonies, that the LXXII. their paraphraſe was very reaſonable, whilſt for רוּחַ קָדִים the Eaſt wind, they read, a violent blaſt, the means by which God thus diſappoints the greedy Phœnician merchants.

c. דְּמִינוּ

V. 9. Have thought] The Hebrew דּוֹם and דָּמַם and דָּמָה belong all to the ſame ſignification, of quiet, reſt, ſilence, patient expecting, thinking, conſidering, and muſt be determined to any of theſe ſenſes by the context. And here that of expecting or patient waiting with affiance in him, and without all diſtruſt or repining at his delays, ſeems to be moſt proper for it. For coming to the Sanctuary to pray for mercy, 'tis moſt agreeable to ſay, we wait for it there, as in the place where he hath promiſed to afford it, in return to prayers. The Syriack renders it, we hoped; the LXXII. ὑπελάβομεν, we expected. What follows in their ordinary Copies, ἐν μέσῳ τοῦ λαοῦ σου, in the midſt of the people, and ſo is followed by the Arabick and Æthiopick, is doubtleſs an errour of the Scribe, for Ναὸν, Sanctuary; and ſo appears by the Latine and Syriack, who both ſeem to follow the LXXII. and yet render it Temple.

d. צֶדֶק

V. 10. Righteouſneſs] The acception of צֶדֶק righteouſneſs for charity and mercy and loving kindneſs, is ſo ordinary, that it needs only to be mentioned here, for the clearing the ſenſe of this verſe, (which then flows currently) צֶדֶק מָלְאָה יְמִינֶךָ righteouſneſs fills thy right hand, or conſecrates thee, for ſo filling the hand conſtantly ſignifies in the Hebrew idiome, (from that ceremony in the Law at the conſecration of a Prieſt to fill his hands with parts of the ſacrifices) and is oft rendred τελειῶν, to conſecrate, Exod. 29. 9. and 35. and elſewhere.

מָלְאָה יְמִינֶךָ

e. פָּסַג

V. 13. Conſider] The Hebrew פָּסַג ſignifies to exalt, but in the Chaldee notion of it, to divide or diſtinguiſh; and ſo the LXXII. here render it, διαδιήλατε, diſtribute, ſeparate each from other, which in things that cohere, is neceſſary to be done, or elſe it will be impoſſible to number them exactly.

V. 14. Unto

f. על מות

V. 14. Unto death] There is little reaſon to doubt, but the right reading here is על מות till death. Yet 'tis probable the Chaldee, who render it, בימי טליותנא in the days of our childhood, did read it in one word עלמות which ſignifies childhood. But the dividing it into two words, which is exactly rendred, to or till death, is acknowledged by Kimchi among the Jews, and followed by S. Jerome, and beſt accords with the antecedent, he is our God for ever: and 'tis poſſible, the Chaldee being not a verſion but a paraphraſe, might from the affinity of theſe two, על מות, and עלמות, make choiſe of this expreſſion, not as a literal rendring of the word, but as that which competently ſecured the ſenſe, [from our youth] ſignifying [from the beginning to the end of our life;] and ſo likewiſe, that the LXXII. who read εἰς τὸν αἰῶνας, did not read either על מים ſecula, as 'tis conceived, or על מות, in the feminine, to that ſenſe, but indeed rendred על מות till death] by that other phraſe εἰς αἰῶνας, for ages, or for ever, the end of our life being the concluſion of our aids, our age, or our ever. Yet after all this, the Jewiſh Arab Interpreter doth profeſſly take it for one word, deriving it from עלם or עלמה, and renders the paraphraſe, he ſhall reduce or reſtore us to the ſtate דצבאונא of childhood or youth, i. e. return us to the condition from whence we are fallen. But the whole Pſalm being an Encomion, or ſong of triumph, and having nothing of ſadneſs in it, cannot ſo fitly end with ſuch hopes of reſtitution only. The confidence of perſevering in their preſent ſtate of joy, and ſo of Gods guidance על מות till death, is more agreeable to it. The Syriacks reading is more plauſible, he ſhall lead us, ܢܕܒܪܢ ܡܢ ܡܥܠ above from death.

The Forty Ninth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

TO the chief Muſitian, a Pſalm for the ſons of Coreh.

The forty ninth Pſalm is a conſolation againſt the terrors of death, in time of old age or ſickneſs, and withal a meditation of the tranſitorineſs of all worldly greatneſs and proſperities here, which are ſo ſure to fade ſuddenly. It was committed to the Prefect of the Muſick to be ſung by the poſterity of Coreh.

1. Hear this all ye people; give ear all ye inhabitants of the world,
2. Both [a] low and high, rich and poor together.

1, 2. The matter of this inſuing Pſalm is very fit meditation for all ſorts of people in the world, Jews and Gentiles, of the meaner and poorer, and of the nobler and wealthier rank; a ‖ wiſdom חכמות

† underſtanding תבונות

3. My mouth ſhall ſpeak ‖ of wiſdom; and the meditation of my heart † ſhall be of underſtanding.

3. Being that which I have learnt from God, and conſequently is not of certain truth only, but moſt valuable and profitable to be conſidered by all, much more for our turns, than any ſecular wiſdom of the ſubtileſt worlding: This therefore ſhall be the ſubject of my compoſitions at this time.

4. I will incline mine ear to a parable; I will open my [b] dark ſaying upon the harp.

4. And I will perform it carefully, weigh it as exactly as I can, do as Muſicians do, when they tune their inſtruments, lay their ear cloſe to them, that, if there be any harſhneſs or unevenneſs in the ſound, they may diſcern it; ſo will I carefully obſerve my preſent compoſure, being on a matter well worth every mans heeding, and therefore I will ſet it to the harp, by that means to ſweeten and inſtil it into all minds. And this is the ſum of it by way of anſwer to this queſtion. b

† evil heels

5. Wherefore ſhould I fear in the days of evill, when [c] the * iniquity of my † heels ſhall compaſs me about?

5. When days of ſadneſs, and the diſcomforts of old age approach, and make their cloſe ſiege about me, and death it ſelf is juſt ready to ſeize upon and devour them, can this be any real matter of terror to a truly pious man, that hath placed all his truſt and confidence in God? Undoubtedly it cannot. Or wherefore ſhould I ſubject my ſelf to thoſe terrors which are apt to haunt men at ſuch times? c

‖ Confident men boaſt themſelves in their wealth, and the—— † One ſhall not by any means redeem, man ſhall not give his ranſome to God,
* ſhall be pretious, and ſhall ceaſe——
‖ He ſhall yet live.
‖ ſhall ſee the wiſe die, together ſhall the fool and brute periſh * or ſtrangers.

6. ‖ They that [d] truſt in wealth, and boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their riches,
7. † None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ranſome for him;
8. (For the redemption of the ſoul * is pretious, and it ceaſeth for ever)
9. ‖ That he ſhould ſtill live for ever, and not ſee corruption.

6, 7, 8, 9. 'Tis ordinary for the bold temerarious confident men of the world to place their full truſt in wealth, and never fear any thing elſe, if they have but abundance of that. But 'tis not in their power to reſcue either any other, or themſelves from death. This ſentence which ſin brought into the world, will certainly paſs on the richeſt and proudeſt and ſtouteſt of them; none can ever buy his own, or any other mans immunity or liberty from this, ſo as to be quit from ever dying: That indeed of immortal duration, being a gem of too great a price for all the wealth in the world to purchaſe: there is but one way of coming to it, and that is by death and reſurrection, and that alſo is the work of the Meſſias, who by dying once, offering one ſingle ſacrifice for him, never to be repeated, Heb. 9. 25, 26, and 10. 13. ſhall overcome death, work an eternal redemption, Heb. 9. 11. and then ſit down at the right hand of God, Heb. 10. 12. and there live and reign for ever. This he ſhall do in the fulneſs of time, in the end of the age, then coming in the fleſh to atchieve this victory, and more fully in the end of the world, when he ſhall call all that are dead out of their graves to judgment, on which ſhall follow an everlaſting life. d

10. For he ‖ ſeeth that [e] wiſe men die, likewiſe the fool and the brutiſh perſon periſh, and leave their wealth to * others.

10. Mean while the moſt pious vertuous men muſt expect to die, their piety, e

the one true wiſdom, will not reſcue them from that which Chriſt himſelf Gods eternal wiſdom ſhall once taſte. As for wicked men, whoſe irrational folly hath equalled them to brute beaſts, 'tis certain the ſame fate expects them: their ſouls being ſo little removed above that of a beaſt, 'tis leſs wonder that they ſhould die as a beaſt doth; and though they may be thought by themſelves or others to have provided againſt this danger, to have fenced and ſecured themſelves, yet ſhall they come together, and after the ſame manner to the grave, and ſo be fain to take leave of thoſe poſſeſſions which they have acquired with ſo much induſtry. And then no man knows into whoſe hands their wealth ſhall fall, whether ſtrangers, or perhaps enemies, ſhall live to injoy the fruits of all their labours.

11. Whoſoever they are, the poſſeſſion being now ſetled in them, ſhall never revert to the former owners: theſe new comers ſhall eſtabliſh themſelves in their room, and ſo impoſe their names upon their dwellings; the very memory of the former inhabitants being ſoon loſt.

11. ‖ Their inward thought is that their houſes ſhall continue for ever, and their dwelling places to all generations: they call their lands after their own names.

‖ Among them their houſes ſhall be for ever, their Tabernacles from age to age: they have impoſed their names on their lands.

f. 12. And ſo the concluſion is moſt certain, and general, reaching to all; How flouriſhing ſoever their condition is at the preſent, there is no poſſibility of continuance here: be the man never ſo great, he comes to a ſpeedy end, as the beaſts of the field do, is perfectly like them in his death, and not ſo long lived as many of them: our ſpace of abode here is not ſo long as to be fitly compared to ſo much as a nights lodging in an Inn, no conſiſtence of ſteddy reſt is to be had for the leaſt ſpace. And the tenure which his poſterity hath, is of the ſame nature, very ſhort and uncertain alſo; nay, oft-times the greateſt honours and wealth, unjuſtly gotten by the parent deſcend not to any one of his poſterity, (as the beaſts when they die leave nothing behind them to their young ones, but the wide world to feed in) but fall into other hands immediately, for which he never deſigned to gather them.

12. † Nevertheleſs man * being in honour [f] abideth not, but is like the beaſts that periſh.

† And * Abides not in honour.

g. 13. They flatter themſelves, that they ſhall perpetuate the wealth and greatneſs which they have gathered; but are very wide of their expectations, find themſelves foully deceived and fruſtrated. And yet they that ſucceed them in their eſtates go after them in the ſame track, imitate that folly which was ſo fatal to them, and think themſelves happy that they ſhall enjoy the fruits of it.

13. This their way is [g] ‖ their folly; yet their poſterity approve their ſayings. Selah.

‖ or folly to them; yet their followers are pleaſed with them.

h. 14. But then death comes upon them all, and deſeats all their expectations. As ſheep, or other ſuch creatures, they die, remove from all their ſplendid poſſeſſions to thoſe dark inviſible plains, where they continue as a flock in a paſture, till that great morning of the reſurrection, when the righteous ſhall be aſſumed by God to aſſiſt in judicature, and ſo ſhall ariſe in their old ſhapes, when the earth ſhall give up her dead; and the grave, wherein their beauty, ſtrength, and form decayed and was conſumed, ſhall at length it ſelf decay and loſe its ſtrength, death having loſt its ſting, and the grave its victory, and ſo being no longer the manſion for the bodies of juſt men.

14. Like ſheep they are † laid in the [h] grave: death ſhall * feed on them, and the upright ſhall have dominion over them in the morning, and their ‖ beauty ſhall conſume in the grave from their dwelling.

† put into Hades. * conduct them. ‖ form ſhall do ſo, when Hades ſhall fail to be an habitation to it.

i. 15. And accordingly my comfort is, that God will after my death one day reſtore me again to life, into his hands I commend my ſpirit, not doubting but he will hereafter receive me to glory. And ſo for all others that conſtantly adhere to, and wait on God, whatever terrors they meet with here, they have this full matter of confidence, that God hath particular care of them, and will either deliver them out of their dangers, or convert them to their greateſt good, rewarding them abundantly in the reſurrection.

15. But God will redeem my ſoul from the power of the grave; for he ſhall [i] receive me. Selah.

16. It is therefore moſt unreaſonable to be troubled at, or to envy the increaſe of worldly riches, or honour, or any kind of greatneſs or proſperity to the worldly man.

16. Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, when the glory of his houſe is increaſed.

17. For death will ſoon overtake him, and then he cannot carry his wealth with him; his preſent glory and greatneſs ſhall not then yield him the leaſt advantage.

17. For when he dyeth he ſhall carry nothing away; his glory ſhall not deſcend after him.

k. 18. Indeed might his own word be taken, he were an happy man, for ſo he flatters himſelf that he hath goods laid up for many years, and as long as this life laſts, he entertains no other thoughts. But when death comes, all theſe flattering fallacies vaniſh. 'Tis not thine own mouth but others, whoſe commendation will be worth the having; and that will not be had, but for the real kindneſſes and good turns thou doſt unto thy ſelf, in doing that which will prove thy durable good, and not in ſaying magnificent things of thy preſent ſtate, applauding thy temporal felicities.

18. [k] ‖ Though whilſt he lived he bleſt his ſoul; † and men will praiſe thee when thou doſt well to thy ſelf.

‖ for in his life time. † but thou ſhalt be praiſed for doing well unto thy ſelf.

l. 19. The juſt ſhall be gathered to their fathers in peace, die indeed, as their fathers did before them; but the wicked ſhall be deſtroyed for ever, their death ſhall be their entrance into endleſs unexpreſſible darkneſs and miſery, and to that they ſhall be for ever confined.

20. The concluſion then is, There is not a more bruiſh creature (more fit to be pitied than envied) than a worldly wicked man, advanced to greatneſs in this world, and pleaſing himſelf in it: he doth not at all underſtand his own condition, he triumphs, and thinks himſelf very happy; and whilſt he doth ſo, death unexpectedly ſeiſes upon him, and confutes him, ſweeps him away, helpleſs, and friendleſs, as a beaſt of the field, that juſt now took himſelf for one of the greateſt men in the world; juſt as they periſh and leave all behind them, ſo doth he. (Only the wiſe and virtuous, the upright, v. 10, 14. have better hopes, and ſhall not fail of atteining them.

19. [l] He ſhall go to the generation of his fathers: they ſhall never ſee light.

20. Man that is in honour and underſtandeth not, is like the beaſts that periſh.

The

Annotations on Psalm XLIX.

a. אִישׁ

V. 3. Low and high] The difference between אִישׁ and אָדָם may here briefly be noted. The former is taken for a great or eminent person, in any respect, of virtue, extraction, strength, &c. So 1 Sam. 26. 15. Art thou not אִישׁ a man? is expounded by what follows, and who is like thee in Israel? signifying there the military valour and reputation of Abner; and many the like. Whereas אָדָם from אַדְמָה earth, signifies an earthy, or frail, mortal, mean man. And so בְּנֵי אָדָם here, sons of this mean man,] are the lower and ordinary sort of men: γηγενεῖς, sons of the earth, say the LXXII. not that they read אַדְמָה earth, for אָדָם, but because they would in their reading allude to the original of the word, as oft they do. And then בְּנֵי אִישׁ are the contrary to these, persons of the higher quality. The Chaldee expreſs the former phraſe by the ſons of old Adam, the latter by the ſons of Jacob; making this difference between the reſt of mankind, and the people of Iſrael, and giving the latter the preeminence over all other; and ſo they make them comprehenſive words, containing Gentiles and Jews, i. e. all the men in the world: and that very fitly, the Pſalm following being the equal concernment of them both. But 'tis more likely, that the phraſes denote only the ſeveral conditions of men, of the lower, and higher rank; for ſo the conſequents interpret it, rich and poor; the former (according to the ſacred ſtyle frequently obſervable) explicative of the latter of thoſe, and the latter of the former by way of ἐπεξήγησιν.

b. מָשָׁל

V. 4. Dark ſaying] The Hebrew מָשָׁל a proverb or parable, is of great latitude: ſignifies primarily any ſimilitude, by which another thing is expreſt; thence a figurative ſpeech, either by way of fiction and fable, ſuch are riddles or ſignificant apologues, as that of Jotham, Jud. 9. 7. and many others in Scripture, both in the old and new Teſtament; or by way of application of ſome true example or ſimilitude, as when the ſluggard is bid go to the ant, the impenitent ſinner to the ſwallow and crane, which return at their certain ſeaſons, and ſo are fit to preach returning or repentance to ſinners. And finally it belongs to all moral doctrine, either darkly, or only ſententiouſly delivered, becauſe the wiſe men of the world were wont to deliver that in ſhort conciſe ſentences, or γνωμαὶ, ſometimes in ſchemes or figures, ſometimes without, (as we ſee in Solomons מִשְׁלֵי Proverbs or Parables, many of them are plain moral ſayings, ἀσχημάτιστοι without any figure, or darkneſs, or compariſon (from whence yet they are called παραβολαὶ,) in them, as, The fear of God is the beginning of wiſdom, &c. and ſo 1 Sam. 24. 13. as ſaith the Proverb of the Antients, Wickedneſs proceedeth from the wicked.) Of this ſort is that which is here ſpoken of, a moral ſentence, not much veiled with figures, nor ſo conciſe as ordinarily Proverbs are, but a larger declaration of this wiſe Ethical maxime, the vanity of all wicked mens proſperity: and this is by the LXXII. rendred παραβολὴ, which ſignifies literally a compariſon, but is more looſely taken for any moral ſentence; as is alſo παροιμία, which Heſychius fully defines βιωφελὴς λόγος, a ſaying profitable for mens lives, and Παροιμίαι παραινέσεις, παραμυθίαι, νουθεσίαι, ἐπῳδαὶ ἐγκωμίων καὶ ψόγων ἐπανορθώσεις, exhortations, adviſes, admonitions, for the rectifying of manners and paſſions; ſo called indeed, as being παρὰ τὴν ὁδὸν, or ἔξω, beſide the ordinary road, in figures or artificial ſchemes, or poetical, and ſo not vulgar expreſſions, (many of which will be diſcovered here in this Pſalm); but uſed more looſely alſo, and indifferently for thoſe which have no figure in them. And of the ſame kind is חִידָתִי my riddle, that here follows, from חוּר to ſpeak acutely or darkly, uſed for a riddle in the ſtory of Samſon, Jud. 14. for queſtions of ſome difficulty, ſuch as the Queen of Sheba askt Solomon, 1 King. 10. 1. and accordingly 'tis here rendred by the LXXII. τὸ αἴνιγμά μου, my Problem or difficult queſtion: which yet is not only the asking of ſuch a queſtion, (which is here done, v. 5.) but the anſwering of it alſo, (as 'tis there in the following words) and ſo the ſtating or reſolving, or giving an account of any difficulty (as we know thoſe of Ariſtotle and Aphrodiſæus were, and ſome of them moral, as well as natural;) and then it belongs very fitly to the matter in hand, the wiſe, moral, γνῶμαι, here delivered, but ſomewhat obſcurely in the reſt of the Pſalm.

חִידָתִי

c. עֲוֹן עֲקֵבַי

V. 5. Iniquity of my heels] What is meant by עֲוֹן עֲקֵבַי evil of my heels, will be beſt judged by taking the words aſunder. And firſt עָוֹן ſignifies evil both of fault, and puniſhment; frequently in the former, but ſometimes in the latter alſo. So 1 Sam. 28. 10. when Saul ſware to the witch, that no עָוֹן (that muſt be puniſhment) ſhould happen to her for this. So Iſa. 53. 11. he ſhall bear עֲוֹנֹתָם, their iniquities, we read, it muſt be the puniſhments of their iniquities; and ſo v. 6. The Lord hath laid on him עֲוֹן כֻּלָּנוּ, not the iniquity, but the puniſhment of us all: and ſo Pſal. 31. 10. my grief and my ſighing, and עֲוֹנִי my (not iniquity, but) puniſhment, belong to the ſame matter, and interpret one the other. And thus moſt probably 'tis taken here. Then for עֲקֵבַי my heels, 'twill beſt be underſtood in the notion which Aben Ezra and Jarchi have of it: עקבי, my heels, ſaith Sal Jarchi, סוף my latter end, and ſo it frequently ſignifies in Arabick; and then the evil of my heels, ſaith Aben Ezra, is יְמֵי הַזִּקְנָה the days of old age, called the evil days, Eccl. 12. 1. and to this the Chaldee here may ſeem to refer, adding in their paraphraſe בְּסוֹפִי in my end. And this evil of our heels is ſaid to incompaſs us, when old age and approach of death ſurround us on every ſide, and ſo is ready inevitably to ſeize upon us. This therefore is no obſcure interpretation of the queſtion-part of this probleme, or parable, on the underſtanding of which all the ſubſequent part of the Pſalm depends, Why ſhould I fear in my decrepit age, in ſickneſs, or in death? Is there any reaſon for a pious man to apprehend death with any diſquiet, when it begins its cloſe approaches, and is moſt unavoidably ready to ſeize on him?

עֲקֵבַי

d. הַבּוֹטְחִים

V. 6. Truſt] הַבּוֹטְחִים from בָּטַח confidit, ſignifies confident, ſecure men: ſuch was he that ſaid, he had goods laid up for many years, and thereupon gave himſelf up to enjoy the pleaſures of this life, to eat, drink, and be merry. Of theſe ſaith the Pſalmiſt here, יִתְהַלָּלוּ, they will glory, triumph, or applaud themſelves עַל חֵילָם over, or for, or in their wealth, וּבְרֹב and in the ſtrength, or multitude of their riches. This is the moſt literal importance of the verſe, making of it ſelf a complete propoſition, Confident men boaſt themſelves in their wealth, &c. and then follows, with good connexion, אָח לֹא פָדֹה יִפְדֶּה a brother by redeeming ſhall not redeem, i. e. no man ſhall in any wiſe be able to redeem either another or himſelf.

יִתְהַלָּלוּ

אִישׁ לֹא יִפְדֶּה, &c. a man ſhall not give his ranſome to God, i. e. no meer man ſhall ever be able to pay λύτρον ἰσόρροπον, a price of equal value, to reſcue one ſinner from the power of death, to which he is ſentenced. This the LXXII. ſeem to have thus read, though now in the copies it is much deformed; 'Tis now thus read, Ἀδελφὸς ὁ λυτρῶται, or λυτρώσεται, λυτρώσεται ἄνθρωπος, ὁ δώσει τῷ θεῷ ἐξιλασμὸν ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ. But with a light change of the punctation, and of λυτρώσεται, for λυτρῶται, 'tis exactly conſonant to the Hebrew, Ἀδελφὸς ὁ λυτρώσεται, λυτρώσεται, ἄνθρωπος ὁ δώσει, &c. A brother ſhall in no wiſe redeem, a man ſhall not give, &c. Then follows וְיָקַר פִּדְיוֹן נַפְשָׁם for the redemption of their ſoul or life ſhall be pretious, i. e. of a great and high rate, וְחָדַל לְעוֹלָם and ceaſeth for ever; ſhall be a high-prized redemption, which coſts very dear, but then it is alſo a ſingular eternal redemption, that being once wrought, ſhall need never to be repeated again: whereon it follows, and he ſhall yet live for ever, ſo וִיחִי עוֹד לָנֶצַח is literally to be rendred, and ſo the Chaldee paraphraſes it וְיִחֵי תּוּב לְחַיֵּי עָלְמָא and he ſhall yet live an eternal life, never dying any more, death having no more dominion or power over him. And thus it belongs expreſly to Chriſt, of whom the Apoſtle reſolves, for in that he died, he died unto ſin, or to put away ſin once, or but once, but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. And ſo certainly the next words לֹא יִרְאֶה הַשָּׁחַת he ſhall not ſee corruption] are peculiarly applyed to Chriſt, Pſal. 16. 10. and in that ſenſe frequently appealed to by the Apoſtles, Act. 2. 27, and 31. c. 13. 35, and 37. to which purpoſe the words of Moſes Hadarſan are very obſervable. This verſe, ſaith he, is ſpoken עַל מֶלֶךְ מָשִׁיחַ of the King Meſſiah, שֶׁימּוּת לִפְדּוֹת אֶת הָאָבוֹת וְאַחַר יִהְיֶה לָנֶצַח לֹא יִרְאֶה שַׁחַת who ſhall dye to redeem the fathers, and after that ſhall live for ever, he ſhall not ſee corruption: which expreſly interprets the whole paſſage to this matter. And the gloſs of Siphra and Midras Tehillim is worth taking notice of: אַל יֹאמַר, &c. A man ſhall not ſay, my father was righteous, by his merit I ſhall eſcape, or be delivered, Abraham delivered not his ſon Iſhmael, and Jacob delivered not his brother Eſau; he ſaith a brother ſhall not, &c. to ſignifie that no meer man ſhall redeem any.

V. 10. Wiſe men] The difference in this place betwixt wiſe men, and fooliſh is to be taken from the general uſe of Scripture, where, according to Sacred idiome, the nouns are uſed in a moral practick ſenſe, for piety and impiety. And thus it is moſt agreeable to the aim of the Pſalm deſigning to ſhew the different future ſtate of the good and bad: חֲכָמִים the wiſe may dye as their redeemer did, who was wiſdome it ſelf, but then כְּסִיל the fool, or wicked man, he, וּבַעַר and the brute, or brutiſh perſon, יַחַד יֹאבֵדוּ ſhall (more then dye) even periſh together, and then no longer poſſeſs or receive benefit from their wealth, in which they ſo much confided, but leave it לַאֲחֵרִים to ſtrangers; ſo the LXXII. render it, ἀλλοτρίοις, to others, which are not of their family, and for whom they never deſired to gather it. Of which ſtrangers it follows, v. 11. קִרְבָּם among them, i. e. among theſe ſtrangers, that ſucceed to their poſſeſſions, בָּתֵּימוֹ their houſes ſhall abide or continue for ever, never reverting to the kindred of the former poſſeſſor, מִשְׁכְּנֹתָם their Tabernacles the places of their tranſitory abode ſhall abide from generation to generation: and then as the antient poſſeſſors are irreverſibly gone, ſo is their memory; the new poſſeſſors קָרְאוּ call by their names over their land, i. e. (by an uſual hypallage) impoſe their names on their lands, or call the lands after their names. And ſo this is a very literal and obvious ſenſe of theſe words, which the antient Interpreters have generally miſtaken, reading their ſepulchres for קִרְבָּם, either from the vicinity of קֶבֶר a ſepulchre, to קֶרֶב, the middle or inner part, or becauſe קֶרֶב may ſignifie the inner part, or cloſer receſs of their large and nobler ſepulchres, Davids being ſo large, as to receive the bodies of many of his ſucceſſors, (Abrahams from the name Machpelah is ſuppoſed to have been double) and the Heroes being among the antient heathens buried in adytis, in the receſſes or vaults of the Temples, from whence conſequently the Reſponſes of Oracles were deliyered.

V. 12. Abideth not] The Hebrew יָלִין ſhall not abide, is viſibly miſtaken by the LXXII. for בַּל יָבִין ſhall not underſtand, which they after found, v. 20. and accordingly they render it here, as there, ἐσυνῆκε, underſtood not: And herein the Syriack, and Latine, and Arabick follow them; but the Chaldee accord with our Hebrew, לָא יְבִית ſhall not lodge, or ſtay a night, for ſo the Chaldee בּוּת (the root from which is בַּת houſe) ſignifies.

V. 13. Their folly] כִּסְלָם is literally folly to them, i. e. though this their way (the worldlings truſt in his wealth,) ſeem to them a piece of ſpecial wiſdome, yet in the event it proves otherwiſe, it becomes perfect folly to them (the LXXII. ſeem to have read כֶּשֶׁל ſcandal) when they come to diſcern their fruſtrations. And then it fitly follows, their ſucceſſors, they that poſſeſs what they part with, בְּפִיהֶם יִרְצוּ are pleaſed at their mouth, i. e. (as פִּי is as an expletive, Exod. 12. 14.) with them.

V. 14. Grave] That שְׁאוֹל is here taken for the ſtate of the dead, there can be no doubt, the whole contex inforcing it, which is of the periſhing of men like ſheep, v. 10, 12, 20. So that this phraſe כַּצֹּאן לִשְׁאוֹל שַׁתּוּ as ſheep they are put into that ſtate of the dead, is exactly parallel to [they are compared to the beaſts that periſh] twice repeated in this Pſalm: for as [כַּצֹּאן as ſheep] is directly all one with their being compared to beaſts] ſo לִשְׁאוֹל שַׁתּוּ being put in Scheol] is the paraphraſe of periſhing.] This then will be a key to the opening the next next part of the expreſſion, מָוֶת יִרְעֵם death ſhall deal with them as a ſhepherd with a flock of ſheep, ὁ θάνατος ποιμανεῖ αὐτούς, death ſhall do with them as a paſtor doth, ſay the LXXII. The Hebrew רָעָה is to give the ſheep paſture, or look to them, when they are feeding, Gen. 29. 7. water ye the ſheep and go רְעוּ feed them, or lead them to their paſtures, for that purpoſe. So Gen. 30. 32. אֶשְׁוּבָה אֶרְעֶה צֹאנְךָ אֶשְׁמֹר I will return, I will feed, I will keep thy ſheep: where רָעָה contains under it all the care and conduct, in order to their feeding, as שָׁמַר the defending, and ſeeing that they come to no harm. Now this feeding of ſheep is very diſtant from feeding on them, as much as the Kings office of preſerving his people from the enemies invaſive arms for the ſlaughtering them. The ſame word is frequently uſed for ruling, governing; and ſo 'tis generally, when 'tis applied to men, the ruler of whom is ordinarily ſtyled ποιμὴν, paſtor, in all dialects. In this place the metaphore of ſheep muſt needs rule the ſignification of it. As ſheep are put into a paſture, there to continue together in a common place; ſo men are put into שְׁאוֹל, ᾅδης, the ſtate of the dead, in the former words, and to that regularly follows, death יִרְעֵם is as the ſhepherd that conducts or leads them into this paſture (thoſe Elyſian fields.) An excellent piece of divine poeſie, to ſignifie, how men like ſheep, like beaſts, go by flocks and herds out of this life; or more plainly, that men die as ordinarily, and regularly, as ſheep, are lead to their paſture. Then for the next part of this verſe, וַיִּרְדּוּ בָם יְשָׁרִים לַבֹּקֶר which the LXXII.

LXXII. render not amiss, κατακυριεύσουσιν αὐτῶν οἱ ἰυθεῖς τὸ πρωΐ, the just shall have dominion of them in the morning, the full meaning of it will be, that after this night of death shall follow a morning in the resurrection, in which the just shall judge the world, and so subjugate the wicked worldlings to all eternity. Then follows, וְצוּרָם and their beauty, or form, or figure, (so צוּרָה signifies from צוּר effinxit, formavit, צוּרָם being a contraction of צוּרֵהֶם) which being an imperfect sense, must be supplied from that which went before, and their form, i.e. so likewise shall their form do; as the upright shall in the resurrection have dominion over the wicked, rise and raign joyfully, so likewise shall their form, or figure, referring to the restauration of their bodies, they shall rise again in their old shapes לִבְלוֹת שְׁאוֹל מִזְבֻּל לוֹ to the failing of Hades from an habitation to it, i.e. where Hades shall fail to be an habitation to it, i. e. when the grave, or common repository of the dead, in which their beauty, form, and figure was consumed, shall it self decay and lose its strength, death having forfeited her sting, and the grave her victory, no longer to be a mansion to the bodies of the just. And this being here spoken in general of all just men, is by David particularly applied to himself,

v. 15. But God will deliver my soul from the power of the grave, &c. For צוּרָם] the LXXII. read ἀ βοήθεια αὐτῶν, their help] (as from צוּר petra, a rock, and by metaphore, strength, refuge, and so help:) and the Latine follows them: but Syriack reads ܬܘܪܥܝܗ their form or image. And so this is the interpretation of this whole verse, the principal part of difficulty in this parable, or dark saying for, which this Psalm was designed.

נְקֹר

וְצוּרָם

V. 15. Receive me] Gods receiving here is to be understood in the same sense as Enochs being received, or taken by God, Gen. 5. 24. or as we find Psal. 73. 34. thou shalt after receive me to glory. Thus Jonah, 4. 3. he prays, take, I beseech thee, my life——And then it will signifie Gods future receiving him to glory.

i. יִקָּחֵנִי

V. 18. Though whilst he lived] The Hebrew of the 18. verse is thus literally and clearly rendred, כִּי נַפְשׁוֹ בְּחַיָּיו יְבָרֵךְ for in his living, or life time, he blest his soul; the impious worldling applauded much his own present state, וְיוֹדֶךָ but men shall praise thee, or, thou shalt be praised, כִּי תֵיטִיב לָךְ if, or when thou dost well to thy self, i. e. for doing well to thy self, for doing that which may tend really and eternally to thy good, and not for saying well, for applauding thy present felicity.

k. בְּחַיָּיו

וְיוֹדֶךָ

V. 19. Shall go] To go or to be gathered to the fathers, is a known expression of dying in peace, and the same is the importance of the phrase here תָּבוֹא עַד דּוֹר אֲבוֹתָיו he shall go to the generation of his fathers; So the Chaldee read it, תֵּיעוֹל &c. the memory of the just shall come, and be added to the generation of their fathers, but the wicked shall never see light.

The Fiftieth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

A Psalm ‖ of Asaph.

The Fiftieth Psalm is a solemn magnifying of Gods power and majesty, and a description of the calling of the Gentiles, and of the true Evangelical way of worshipping God. It was composed (‖ probably by David) and appointed to be sung by Asaph a Levite, appointed by David to attend the Ark, and to record, and to thank, and to praise the Lord God of Israel, 1 Chron. 16. 5.

‖ but the Chaldee seems to make Asaph the Composer of it, עַל יְדֵי אָסָף by the hand of Asaph.

1. The decree is gone out from the Omnipotent God of heaven, the supreme eternity, Lord and Judge over all the world, that he will assemble and convocate the whole Nation of the Jews from Dan to Berlsheba, from sea to sea, from East to West, to reduce and take them off from their hypocritical and abominable practises, and bring them to the due acknowledgment and pure worship of the true God, and the practise of all virtue.

1. The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and * called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

‖ for, לְ

* he will call וַיִּקְרָא

2. To this end, as God hath fixt his Tabernacle on Mount Sion, presentiated himself as illustriously there, as he did at the giving the Law on Mount Sinai, so shall the Son of God, in the fulness of time, descend to this earth of ours; the true light, John 1. 9. shall shine forth; the Messias shall be born of our flesh, of the seed of David, and (having preacht repentance to the Jews, and being rejected by their Sanhedrim, and Crucified by them) he shall rise from death, and ascend to his Father, and then send his Spirit on his Apostles, thereby commissionating them to reveal his Gospel to all the world, Beginning from the place where God hath been pleased in a special manner to reside, this most beautiful mount of Sion: there he now presentiates himself, and from thence he shall then begin to shine forth and inlighten the heathen world; the preaching of his Gospel to all the world shall commence and proceed from thence.

2. † Out of Sion the perfection of beauty, God ‖ hath shined.

† From Sion from the perfection— מִצִּיּוֹן מִכְלַל

‖ will shine. הוֹפִיעַ

a. 3. What is thus decreed shall certainly come to pass in its appointed time, and be lookt on as an extraordinary and signal work of Gods power, wherein much of his divine presence shall be discernible; and the immediate attendants of it shall be very dreadful and terrible, above that of the giving the Law to the Jews from Mount Sinai.

b.

3. Our God shall a come, and shall not * keep b silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

* be idle, delay.

4. And it shall begin with a summons as to a solemn Assises, for the examining the actions of men, good and bad, those that have resisted and despised the Messias, and those that have subjected themselves to him. All shall be judged by him; the former punished, and the latter rewarded. And * Angels and Men shall be summoned and called in, to be executioners of these his judgments.

4. He shall call to the Heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people.

* יִקְרָא לְאַנְגְּלֵי he shall call the Angels, &c.

5. And the good Angels his ministers of preservation shall be appointed to take special care of all the pious believing Jews, (Mat. 24. 31. Rev. 7. 3.) who have sincerely given themselves up to his service, received the Christian faith, and in their baptism made vow of performing it faithfully, which adore, and † pray constantly to him; and not to suffer any harm to come nigh to these.

5. Gather my Saints together unto me, those that have made a Covenant with me ‖ by sacrifice.

‖ for, or concerning עָלָי

† בְּצַלּוֹתָא &c. which give themselves to prayer, which is like sacrifice, Chald.

6. And so accordingly shall ‖ they do, rescuing all faithful believers out of the calamities that attend the crucifiers: A thing much to be taken notice of, as an act of most righteous judgment in God, and a testimony that all that should pass, should be from Gods particular disposing. (And so it was in the story before the fatal siege of Hierusalem, all the Christians, in obedience to Christs admonition, Mat. 24. 16. fled out of Judea, unto Pella; and so none of them were found in Judea at the taking of it. See note on Mat. 24. 8.)

6. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness; for God is Judge himself. Selah.

‖ אֲנָן מְרוֹמָא Chald. the high Angels——

7. Then shall he establish a new law with these his faithful servants the disciples of Christ, the members of the Christian Church, entring into a stedfast covenant of mercy with them, ratified and sealed in the death of his Son.

7. Hear, O my people, and I will speak, O Israel, and I will testifie against thee; I am God, even thy God.

8. And abolish the old Mosaical way of Sacrifices, and holocausts of bullocks, &c. constantly offered up unto God by the Jews,

8. I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices, or thy burnt-offerings, † to have been continually before me.

† before me continually. לְנֶגְדִּי תָּמִיד

9. And never any more put the worshipper to that chargeable gross sort of service (of burning of flesh upon Gods Altar, that the smoak might go up to heaven, and Atone God for them, as was formerly required, whilst the Jewish Temple stood.)

9. I will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he-goats out of thy fold.

10,11,12,13. For indeed this kind of service was never appointed by God, as that which he had any need of, or pleasure in it. If he had, he might have provided himself whole hecatombs, without putting the Israelites to the charge or trouble of it, having himself the plenary dominion of all the cattel on the earth, and fouls of the air, and the certain knowledge where every one of them resides; so that he could readily command any or all of them, whensoever he

c.

10. For every beast of the forrest is mine, and the cattel upon a thousand hills.

11. I know all the fouls of the mountains; and the c wild beasts of the field are * mine.

* with me. עִמָּדִי

12. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee; for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof.

13. Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?

pleased. But it is infinitely below God to want or make use of any such sort of oblations: sure he feeds not on flesh and blood of calves, as we men do. There were other designs of his appointing the Israelites to use these services; viz. to adumbrate the death of his own eternal Son, as the one true means of redemption and propitiation for sin, and the more spiritual sacrifice of prayer and thanksgiving, and alms to the poor members of Christ, which may receive real benefit by our Charities, which cannot be imagined of God.

14. Offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay thy vows unto the most High.

14. And such are the sacrifices which under the Messias are expected and required of us, 1. That of the Eucharist, (the blessing God for all his mercies, but especially the gift of his Son to dye for us) and this brought to God with penitent, contrite, *mortified hearts, firm resolution of sincere new obedience, and constantly attended with an offertory, or liberal contribution, for the use of the poor, proportionable to the voluntary oblations among the Jews, and these really dedicated to God, and accepted by him, Phil. 4. 18. Heb. 13 16.

* זְבַח תּוֹדָה Repress thy evil desire, and it shall be accounted before God as a sacrifice of confession. Chald.

15. And call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorifie me.

15. 2. That of prayer and humble address unto God in all time of our wants, to which there is assurance of a gracious return; and that must ingage us to give the praise and glory of all to the Messias, in whose name our prayers are addrest to God.

16. But unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my Covenant in thy mouth?

17. Seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee.

16, 17. But as for those that make no other use of these mercies of God, than to incourage themselves to go on in their courses of sin, which think to perform these sacrifices of prayer and praise, and yet still continue * in any wilful known vice unreformed, make their formal approaches unto God, but never heed his severe commands of reformation; these have no right to the mercies of this Evangelical Covenant, and do but deceive themselves, and abuse others, when they talk of it; and the more so, the more solemnly they pretend to piety, and talk of, and perhaps preach it to others.

* which prevent not, and pray in prevarication. Chald.

18. When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers.

18. Such are not only the thief and adulterer, those that are guilty of the gross acts of those sins, but such as any way partake with them in these.

19. Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit.

19. Such the evil speaker and lyer.

20. Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother, thou slanderest thine own mothers son.

20. The backbiter and slanderer.

‖ w. I delay'd, or let thee alone, see note b.

21. These things hast thou done, and ‖ I kept silence: thou thoughtest that I was altogether such a one as thy self; but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

21. When men commit such sins as these, God doth not always inflict punishment on them immediately, but defers and gives them space to repent and amend, that they may thus prevent and escape his punishment. And some make so ill use of this indulgence and patience of his, which is † designed only to their repentance, as to interpret it an approbation of their course, and an incouragement to proceed securely in it. But those that thus deceive themselves, and abuse Gods mercies, shall most deerly pay for it: God shall bring his judgments upon them here, cut them off in their sins, and pour out ‖ his indignation on them in another world.

† אוֹרְכִית deferred, or expected that thou mightest repent. Chald.

‖ אַסְדַּר דִּין גֵּהִנָּם I will ordain the judgment of hell in the world to come. Chald.

22. Now consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver.

22. This therefore is matter of sad admonition to every impenitent sinner, that goes on fearless in any course of evil, immediately to stop in his march, to return betimes: lest if he defer, Gods judgments fall heavily upon him, seise him and carry him to that place of torment, for then there is no possible escaping.

(‖ disposeth his way. שָׂם דֶּרֶךְ

23. Whoso offereth praise, glorifieth me; and to him that † ordereth his conversation aright, will I shew the salvation of God.

23. Whereas on the other side, the Christian duties required, v. 14. Repentance and charity, &c. and the orderly spending of these few days of our life in this world, are, beyond all the sacrifices of the Law, an eminent means of glorifying God, and providing for the present bliss, and eternal salvation of our souls.

Annotations on Psalm L.

a. יָבֹא אֱלֹהֵינוּ

V. 3. Shall come] The notion of Gods coming must here first be established, as that on which the due interpretation of the whole Psalm depends. The coming of God ordinarily signifies in Scripture any judicial proceeding of his, Gods punishments and vengeance on his enemies (see Psal. 18. note d.) But this Psalm seems peculiarly to look forward to the times of the Messias, and so to denote some coming of his. The Chaldee applies it to the יוֹם דִּינָא רַבָּא the day of the great judgment. But this phrase, I suppose, may be taken in some latitude, in that Paraphrast, not to denote the last judgment (though thus * St. Augustine will have this Psalm understood, de judicio Dei novissimo, of the last judgment of God) but as their Paraphrase on v. 2. seems to interpret it, some great destruction that was to be wrought in the שְׁרוּי בְּרֵישִׁית עָלְמָא beginning of the creation of the age; meaning, I suppose, by the age, the age of the Messias, which, as 'tis there said, was to come out of Sion, which is not applicable to any other age but that. Now there be three comings of Christ expresst in the Scripture. The first in humility, by his being born in our flesh; the last in glory, for the judging of the whole world in the day of the universal doom: And a middle coming, which was not to be corporal, but spiritual, a mighty work wrought in the world by the power of that spirit which raised Jesus from the dead, beginning in a terrible vengeance upon his crucifiers, the notable destruction of the Jewish Temple, and of Jerusalem; and so of the Mosaical worship, and the Judaical politie, and proceeding to the propagation of the Christian Faith to all the world; wherein were many glorious acts of Gods power and mercy, and are all together oft stiled in Scripture the coming of Shiloh, of the desire of all nations, of the kingdom of God, of the son of Man, of Christ, (see note on Mat. 16. 0. 24. b. Joh. 21. b.) And this is it to which this Psalm most signally seems to belong, (as also Psal. 96. 10, 11, 12, 13.) and conteins these several stages or branches of it: 1. the terrible manner of this his coming, v. 3. Secondly, the formality of it, a judicature used in it, v. 4. Thirdly, the preservation and rescue of the believing Jews out of the common ruine, v. 5, 6. Fourthly, the rejection of legal worship, of sacrifices of beasts, v. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Fifthly, the establishing of the Christian service, the spiritual oblation of Prayer and Thanksgiving, v. 14, 15. and Lastly, the destruction of the impenitent Jews, which having received the Law of God, and entred into Covenant with him, would not yet be reformed by Christs preaching, v. 16. &c. to the end.

* De Civit. l. 20. c. 24.

b. חָרַשׁ

V. 3. Silence] The Hebrew חָרַשׁ hath several significations. But that which is most agreeable to this place, is that of doing nothing, being idle, delaying, tarrying, as applied to the actions, not the speech only. So 2 Sam. 10. אַתֶּם מַחֲרִישִׁים is best rendred, Why do you defer or delay to bring back the King? Κωφεύετε, say the LXXII. Why are you silent? in that other notion applied to the tongue: but the Chaldee שְׁתִיקִין is a word which belongs to the actions, as well as words; the learned Schindler there renders it, cessatis, cunctamini, defer or delay. The Syriack there renders it ܡܫܗܐ from תוש, whence is אחתוש, and the participle מחתוש, which hath that signification among others, of cessavit, moratus, tardatus fuit, and is by the Latine translator rightly rendred hæsitatis: and so the Arabick appears there to understand it. And so the context inforces by another phrase, used there in the same matter, v. 11. and 12. Why, saith he, אַחֲרֹנִים are ye last to bring back the King? i. e. very backward and dilatory. So the Arabick expresses that also, Why do you defer or neglect? And so Psal. 28. 1. the sense carries it, אַל תֶּחֱרַשׁ מִמֶּנִּי do not defer or neglect to answer me; neglect me not, saith the Arabick. And thus 'twill best be rendred here, Our God shall come and not delay: not neglect, saith the Arabick, as in the place of Samuel. And the Chaldee לָא יִשְׁתּוֹק &c. which though it may signifie shall not keep silence, yet it is also not defer, or delay, and so is determined here by the remainder of their paraphrase לְמֶעְבַּד פֻּרְעָנוּת to work vengeance for his people. So the Jewish Arab. ולא ימסך עינה and shall not withhold or refrain from it. And thus the phrase seems to be made use of, and interpreted by the Apostle, Heb. 10. 37. ἥξει, χ᾽ οὐ χρονιῖ, he will come, and not delay, or tarry, i. e. he will certainly come. Which I suppose to be the reason of the learned Castellio's rendring this place, veniet Deus noster sine dubio, Our God shall come without doubt; the coming and not delaying being all one with his [certain coming.] The word חָרַשׁ is again used, v. 21. and rendred by the Chaldee אוּרְכִית I stayed or expected, that thou mightest repent; which is a full proof of this notion of the word for delaying. Where the Jewish Arab reads, as here, I withheld from thee, adding, מטהלה delaying.

c. וֵז

V. 11. Wild beasts] For וֵז beast, the LXXII. seem to read וֹז beauty, and render it ὡραιότητος, and the Latine pulchritudo, the Chaldee חַרְנְגוֹל בְּרָא the cock of the wood (whose feet stand on the earth, and his head touches the heaven) of which Elias Levita in his Thisby, p. 273. taking notice, adds וְזֶה דָּבָר חָדוּשׁ this is a new thing, not without reason expressing his wonder at their rendring: but the Syriack is clear ܘܚܝܘܬܐ and the beast.

THE

The Fifty First PSALM.

|| had come
בָּא

1 To the chief Musitian, A Psalm of David, when Nathan the Prophet || came unto him, after he had gone in to Bathsheba.

Paraphrase.

The Fifty first Psalm was composed by David, after the commission of those many sins in the matter of Uriah, 2 Sam. 11. when by Nathan the Prophet his message to him from God, he was brought to a due humiliation for them, which he expresst in this penitential Psalm; and to make it the more publick, to remove the scandal of so many notorious sins, he committed it to the Prefect of his Musick to be solemnly sung.

† mercy, or benignity
חֶסֶד

רַחֲמִים

2 Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy † loving kindness: according to the multitude of thy * tender mercies blot out my transgressions.

1. O thou Father of all mercies and compassions, permit me, thy most unworthy servant, foully guilty of many horrid crimes, to make mine humblest approach to thee; and out of the riches of thy benignity, out of the abundance of thy melting compassions to those that are in the greatest distresses, be thou graciously pleased to look upon me, to be atoned and reconciled toward me.

2 Wash me throughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.

2. O let not any the least of these crimes, that I have been guilty of in this matter, be permitted to appear in thy sight, or rise up in judgment against me; but seal me thy perfect pardon for every one of them.

|| continually
תָּמִיד

3 For I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is || ever before me.

3. For I do most willingly confess, that I have committed, in the compassing of one carnal pleasure, many horrid and odious sins. These are a perpetual terror to my conscience, an amazing prospect continually outfacing and tormenting me.

† To thee, to thee only.

4 † Against thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight; that thou mightest be justified * when thou speakest, and || be [a] clear when thou † judgest.

4. And though the dignity and office wherein thou hast placed me over thy people, leave me not liable to any humane process or judicature among men; yet am I most sadly culpable and liable to vengeance from thee the pure God of heaven, the transcendent Ruler over all the Kings of the earth. Thou mayest most justly proceed against me, as against the most criminous rebel, indite me, and arraign me of adultery, drunkenness, and murther also: and whatever suit thou wagest against me, thou art sure to cast me; whatsoever vengeance thou exactest to be inflicted on me, I must most deservedly and inevitably fall under it. a;

5 Behold, I [b] was * shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me.

5, 6. Lord, I am a most polluted creature: the corruption of my nature, the bare inclinations of my will to any unlawful object ought in any reason to be strictly watched, and industriously rejected by me, and thy grace continually sollicited, to inable me to overcome them, and not in the least degree favoured, or indulged, or yielded to; when I so well know, that thou requirest purity of the heart and affections, and forbiddest the very first thoughts of any unlawful injoyment, and beside this revelation of thy will, that I should thus keep my self pure, art pleased to grant me thy grace to make me inwardly sensible of this part of my duty: and this is a great inhauncing of my sin, committed against all these obligations. b; c;

6 Behold, thou || desirest [c] truth in the inward parts; and in the hidden part thou † shalt make me to know wisdom.

7 Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean: wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

7. Lord, be thou pleased to absolve me, and solemnly to declare and seal to me thy reconciliation, after the same manner || as the priest is wont to do, when upon the unclean thing he sprinkles water mixed with the ashes of an heifer, and of cedar wood, and of hyssop, and of scarlet, Lev. 14. 6, 7. Num. 19. 6. the solemn ceremony for the purification of sin, v. 9. and whereby the blood of the lamb of God, the death of the Messias was præfigured: and then I shall again be restored to that blessed state, from which I have so sadly fallen by my outragious miscarriages. || so the ch.

8 Make me to hear joy and gladness; that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoyce.

8. I am in a most sad and wretched condition; thy just displeasure and wrath for my sins, as long as it continues over me, is the setting my soul upon the torture, my own conscience being the executioner under thee: O be thou pacified and reconciled toward me, and it shall be the joyfullest news that ever came to any poor tortured suppliants ears, when he is taken off from the rack, and all his bones set, and restored to ease again.

9 Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities.

9. Lord, pardon my sins, and return to thy wonted favour toward me.

10 Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me.

10. I have sadly fallen from my wonted purity and sincerity; Lord, by the good work of thy grace upon my heart, restore me to it again, and renew me inwardly and throughly, my very thoughts as well as my actions, that I never fall into the least beginning of any such pollution again.

11 Cast me not away from thy presence; and take not thy holy spirit from me.

11. Lord, it is just with thee to reject me from all spiritual commerce and communication with thee, who have resisted thy spirit, and wasted my soul by so many wilful commissions against thee; just that thou shouldest withdraw thy grace, to which I have done such despite: O do not thou thus severely punish me, by withdrawing that which now more than ever I stand in need of.

12. Restore

12. Without thy help and aids I am utterly unable to get out of this broken condition; the free and voluntary assistances of thy spirit are so perfectly necessary to me, that I can never think a good thought, make the least attempt toward recovering the purity from whence I am fallen, without them: O be thou pleased to restore them to me, and thereby to support and establish me.

12. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free spirit.

13. And this thy exceeding mercy to a sinner, so sadly laps'd, may be a means to bring wicked livers home to repentance, I shall be able to incourage them to return, by proclaiming mine own success, who have fallen as sadly as any of them can have done. And being thus incouraged by my example and experience, many, I doubt not, by the assistance of thy grace, shall be brought home to thy service, and the practice of the duties of new life.

13. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee.

14. Oh, that sin of murther is an horrid and crying sin, of a black and deep dy; and though mine own hands have not been polluted with it, yet my conscience assures me the guilt of the murther of Uriah lies on me, who projected and contrived it by others: O thou blessed Lord, from whom all my deliverance must come, be thou pleased to deliver me from this one, as from those other foul Commissions, and it will be most joyful news to me, and with the greatest exultation of heart shall I proclaim thy abundant mercies to me.

14. Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O God, thou God of my salvation; and my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness.

15. This work of grace from thee shall set my lips wide open, in praising and magnifying thee.

15. O Lord, open thou my lips, and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise.

16. 'Tis not any the richest hecatombe or most charg able oblation for my sin, that thou expectest or requirest of me. The truth is, my sins are of such a sort, as for which the Mosaical law allows no reconciliation, no sacrifice for such wilful sins, Heb. 10. 26.

16. For thou desirest not sacrifice, ‖ else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt-offerings.

‖ that I should give it, אֶתֵּנָה

17. 'Tis my sincere humiliation, confession, and renovation, which alone thou admittest, and even in this foulest condition, thou art mercifully pleased to have respect to them, and look on them, as the most acceptable oblation. And whensoever that is presented to thee from an honest heart, it is sure to find a welcome and hospitable reception.

17. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and contrite heart, O Lord, shalt thou not despise.

18. O be thou thus merciful to me, and to all that love and fear thy name, and meet in the place by thee appointed for thy service: defend and succour all, and preserve them from falling into such wilful presumptuous sins.

18. Do good in thy good pleasure to Sion: build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

19. And then our sacrifices of all sorts, and all that is typified by these shadows, and what is much more valuable then any of these, Mar. 12. 33. our prayers, and our praises, our solemnest acts of the most ardent love and devotion, and the diffusion of that in acts of charity and mercy to our brethren, shall, upon the altars of our very hearts be presented to thee in an humble, but cheerful confidence, to be accepted by thee.

19. Then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness, with burnt-offering and whole burnt-offering: then shall they offer bullocks upon thy altar.

Annotations on Psalm LI.

a. וְזַכֵּה

V. 4 Clear] The word זָכָה is ordinarily rendred mundus fuit, clean, or clear, or pure; and so the Chaldee takes it here, and renders it by חַכְּרוּ, from בָּרַר purgavit. But this, as the context evinces, must be understood in a forensick sense, as pure is all one with free from guilt; and so there is a second notion of the word for overcoming, meaning that sort of victory which belongs to him that carries the cause in judicature. Thus the LXXII. render it here, καὶ νικήσῃς, and overcome; and thus the Apostle takes it from them, Rom. 3. 4. and the Syriack there renders that of the Apostle by ملنبا the same word which both the Hebrew and Syriack have here in this psalm: which is a sure evidence, that the word here used doth certainly signifie as the LXXII. rendred it, and was no way mistaken by them; and that very reconcileable with the notion of mundus fuit, for he that doth νικᾶν ἐν τῷ κρίνεσθαι, overcome in the suite or contention, so κρίνεσθαι signifies, to be a party in a suite) is fitly said to be cleared or quitted by the Law; and that is also the importance of תִּצְדַּק justified in the forensick sense also, as that is opposed to cast or condemned. The only remaining difficulty is, to what part of the antecedent speech this is to be connected, לְמַעַן that thou mightest be justified —— This, say the Jews, is not to be joyned to the words immediately precedent in the former part of this verse; but either to the prayer, Have mercy upon me, v. 1. or, I acknowledge my transgressions —— v. 3. putting the beginning of this verse, Against thee, —— in a parenthesis. But the former of these hath little of probability in it; and the latter, which is more tolerable, may very reasonably be rejected also, the immediate antecedents being very fit to bear this consequence, and indeed much fitter than either of those which are more remote. For if in the beginning of the verse, the emphasis be laid, as the thrice repeating shews it ought, on the לְךָ to thee, לְבַדְּךָ to thee only, and בְּעֵינֶיךָ in thy sight, the importance of it will certainly be, what S. Ambrose and S. Chrysostome and others have observed, that David, being a King, was not liable to punishment from any but God: and though he had in this business highly offended against others, against Bathsheba, and especially against Uriah, whom he had caused to be made drunk, and afterward slain, and, in the next verse confesseth the guilt of his blood, and therefore must not be understood, saith Chrysostome, as if he said, ἐπὶ τῷ Οὐριαν in ipsum, that he had not wronged Uriah; yet could not be be impleaded or judged by man for this, but only by God: Βασιλεὺς ἦμην, ἐφοβούμην μᾶλλον ἁπάντων ἡμῶν, ἵνα μὴ φοβούμενον τὸν δεσπότην ἐγκαλέσῃ μοι τῶν, κατηγόρους μὴ ἔχων ἄνθρωπον, ἀλλὰ φειδόμενος δικῆς σὺ, μὴ τι καὶ ἐν milibus ἐκδύσῃς, saith Chrysostome, Being a King I feared not him whom I wronged; he being my subject, could not punish me: all my fear was for thee, lest thou shouldest call me to account. And then this most regularly introduceth this consequence, (for so לְמַעַן is not ἀποδοτικὸν, but ἐκβατικὸν, a note of consequence only) ἵνα δὲ, that thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, or doings (so דָּבָר ordinarily signifies a deed, and not only a word or saying) and overcome when thou contendest. Thus, if any other but God should implead, or judge, or punish me for this, I should have just reason to complain, God having placed me in a condition of judging and punishing others, without being my self subjected to any other humane tribunal. But for all this I stand most justly chargeable, and punishable by God: To thee I have sinned, from thee I deserve, and may most reasonably expect punishment. In thy sight I have done this evil, i. e. so as to be most justly liable to thy vengeance; though לְךָ I am thus liable to thee only, to none else but thee; לְמַעַן, that (noting this to be the natural consequence) thou mightest be justified in thy doings, and overcome when thou contendest or impleadest me, i. e. whatsoever bill of indictment thou putteſt in against me, though to charge upon me the highest rebellions against thee, and bring upon me the severest sentence of eternal rejection out of thy favour and presence, and infliction of the direfullest torments, thou art sure to overcome and cast me in the suite, I have nothing in the least to pretend, or plead against it. The only seeming objection to this rendring is fetcht from בְּשָׁפְטֶךָ, which from שָׁפַט judicavit is thought to signifie, in thy judging. But there is another acknowledged notion of the word in Niphal, for litigare, contendere, causam agere, to contend, or plead, or go to law with another: and though in Kal it ordinarily signifie to judge, yet 'tis evident the LXXII. and the Syriack took it here in the other sense; and so the former renders it τῷ κρίνεσθαι, i. e. in pleading or contending (so the word κρίνεσθαι signifies in the Hellenists dialect, see note on Rom. 3. b.) and not as the Latine, more to the word than idiome, render it, cum judicaris, when thou art judged. And so the Syriack render it ... from דין, which both in Hebrew and Syriack signifies to contend in judicature, to plead, and not only or so frequently to judge. And so the sense both here, and to the Romans best bears: here, for being justified in the forensick sense, as that is opposed to condemned, doth more properly belong to the litigants, or persons that contend in judgment, than to the Judge, and so to be cleared also; but most necessarily so it is in the reciting these words to the Romans, where he that is said to overcome, must necessarily be one of the contendents, and not the Judge: And accordingly that which the text is there brought to prove, is, Let God be true, and every man a liar: where God and man being supposed to have a controversie, in like manner as Mich. 6. 2. and so brought in as pleaders or contendents (and not as a judge and a delinquent) the verdict is given on Gods side, (Let God be true, which is a pronouncing that God is true, a clearing or justifying God) and against man, who is pronounced a liar, and so this text verified, God is justified and cleared, or overcomes in lite, in the supposed matter of debate between them; κείσεται μοιχεύων, ἐὰν εἰς ἐμὲ ἀναφέρῃ τὸ ἁμάρτημα, καὶ οὐ φείσεται τῶν ἐμῶν, faith * Chrysostome, the business being debated and brought before a judicature between God and me. * Tom. 1. p. 709. l. 22.

לְמַעַן
S. Paul Fagius in Exod. 22.

V. 5. Shapen] For the understanding of this verse, 3. things must be observed. 1. What is meant by the two verbs חוללתי and יחמתני. The former of them, from חִיל, and חול which signifies sorrow or labour, but especially that of the woman in travail, signifies the birth of a child; and so is rendred by the Chaldee אִתְיְלִידַת, I was born, (and though the Syriack בטנא from בֶּטֶן venter, may signifie conception, or carrying in the womb, and so may agree with the LXXII. συνελήφθην. and the Latine conceptus sum, I was conceived; yet it signifies bringing forth also. So Isa. 54. 1. חָלָה travailing with child is but the explication of יָלְדָה going before, bearing or bringing forth the child. So Jer. 4. 31. I heard the voice כְּחוֹלָה as of one that travaileth, or bringeth forth; and frequently elsewhere. And so 'tis best here to be rendred, I was born, or brought forth. And the vulgar Latine, that reads otherwise, hath made a gross tautologie, Conceptus sum, & concepit me — I was conceived, and my mother conceived me; which even those Antients that follow them saw necessary to avoid. Then for the latter, it is from יָחַם, incaluit, and is ordinarily taken for the act of conception (see Gen. 30. 38, 39, 41.) and cannot reasonably be applyed to that of cherishing in the womb after conception, as some would have it. And so that is the meaning of the verbs, I was born, or brought forth into the world, and not only so, but even conceived by my mother in iniquity, and in sin: and accordingly * St. Hilary, that with the vulgar reads in the first place conceptus sum, I was conceived, reads in the latter, peperit me mater, my mother brought me forth: and so doth † St. Ambrose also. Secondly then, for the conjunction of the verbs and nouns, or the notion of his being born and even conceived in sin, instead of setting down the surmises of some modern Interpreters, it will not be amiss to inquire, what the antient Fathers of the Church have said. And herein we shall find, that they have with some, though but small, variety delivered themselves. For as most of them have lookt on it as a Text whereby to confirm the Catholick Doctrine concerning Original sin, so one of them being prest with it by hereticks for the maintenance of a foul error, hath been thought to interpret it otherwise. St. Paul the Apostle tells us of the hereticks of the first times, (the abominable Gnosticks) that they interdicted marriage, 1 Tim. 4. 3. The same heresy, saith Irenaus, l. 1. c. 30. was continued and propagated first by Saturnius and Marcion, then by the Encratitæ or followers of Tatianus. Now for the confirming of this their interdict, they affirmed, that none could be saved but unmarried or single men and women, saith Epiphanius; τὸν γάμον ἀπὸ τοῦ διαβόλου λεγόντων. saith Clemens, Strom. l. 3. that generation was simply an accursed thing; γάμου τε ἀδοξίαν, ἢ φθορὰν; saith Irenæus, l. 1. c. 31. that marriage was pollution or corruption, and fornication: and they brought several places of Scripture to prove this, (most of them those very texts that are brought from the Old Testament, to affirm the doctrine of our corruption of nature) and among them this of the Psalmist, In sin hath my mother conceived me. These their objections are touch't on by * Clemens Alexandrinus, and the account he gives of them is by the learned

* Strom. l. 3. ed. Sylburg, p. 562.

Author of the Pelagian Hiſtory, l. ii. par. 1. p. 160. interpreted as an evidence, Clementem non ſatis intelleziſſe, that Clement did not ſufficiently underſtand the doctrine of Original ſin. For having applied the Pſalmiſts words of mater mea, my mother, to Eve, the mother of all living, (a ſenſe which Aben Ezra cites from ſome of the Jews, ויש אומרים, &c. ſome ſay Eve is hereby underſtood, who did not bear till after ſhe had ſinned) he adds, καὶ εἰ ἐν ἁμαρτίᾳ συνελήφθη, ἀλλ' οὐκ αὐτὸς ἐν ἁμαρτίᾳ· ἦν μὲν ἁμαρτία αὐτὸς, and if he were conceived in ſin, yet he was not himſelf in ſin, nor indeed was he himſelf ſin. And ſomewhat leſs obſcurely ſome few lines before, (on the occaſion of the words of Job, There is none pure from filthineſs, though he be but one day old) he hath theſe words, λεγέτωσαν ἡμῖν, πῶς ἐπόρνευσεν τὸ γενηθὲν παιδίον, ἢ πῶς ὑπὸ τὴν τοῦ Ἀδὰμ ὑποπέπτωκεν ἀρὰν τὸ μηδὲν ἐνεργῆσαν· Let them tell us where the new born child did fornicate, or how that which hath acted nothing is fallen under the curſe of Adam. Inſtead of a larger examination of his words (which indeed have too much of obſcurity in them, to be a teſtimony of much force to prejudice or eſtabliſh a point of doctrine) this one conſideration may, I ſuppoſe, ſuffice, that being not there ingaged by his buſineſs in hand to give the full interpretation of that place, any farther than was uſeful to refute the objectors before him, the Pſeudonymous Gnoſticks and Encratites, it cannot be juſt any farther to extend his words, than the refuting of them makes it reaſonable to extend them: viz. firſt, that by his mothers conceiving him in ſin, he meant not his immediate mother, as if her conception were an act of ſin in her, (which indeed had been for the Encratites turn, who deteſted generation as ſinful, and ſo condemned marriage) but rather Eve, who had ſinned before ſhe conceived Cain, and ſo all mankind after her were conceived in ſin. Secondly, that as by his γένεσις, conception and birth, his mother committed no ſin in conceiving him, ſo neither the child it ſelf being conceived committed any fault. Thirdly, that neither doth any child of Adam, by the bare pollution of birth, fall into that accurſed ſtate wherein the Encratites thought Adam to be involved, and all that were propagated from him by generation, and thereupon profeſt to deteſt generation and marriage. For this was one ſpecial part of the hereſy of theſe Encratites, that Adam was certainly damn'd, ἀντιλέγουσι τῇ τοῦ πρωτοπλάστου σωτηρίᾳ, they reſiſt Adams ſalvation, ſaith Irenæus, l. i. c. 30, 31. and conſequent to that, that his ſin being imputed (as they had learnt from the Orthodox) to all his poſterity, the ſame damnation devolved upon all, and that all that were thus born, had not only ſome ſinful corruption born with them, but were themſelves ἐν ἁμαρτίᾳ, in ſin, i. e. either guilty of ſome actual ſin, by being begotten (as his queſtion πῶς ἐπόρνευσεν; imports) or elſe were ſpread all over with nothing but ſin, (in a ſenſe ſomewhat proportionable to that of the Phariſees of him that was born blind, Joh. 9. 34. Thou wert altogether born in ſins) and ἁμαρτία αὐτὸς, themſelves ſin in the abſtract, and nothing but ſin. Now none of theſe would that learned Father allow to be concluſible from theſe texts; but on the contrary he thinks it moſt ridiculous, that either the child ſhould be ſaid to ſin, or that every child ſhould be ſaid to be thus wholly immerſt in ſin, as to be himſelf ſin, and nothing elſe, when yet he hath committed no ſin, or that the ἀρὰ τοῦ Ἀδὰμ, the curſe of Adam (not in Origens ſenſe, Contra Cels. l. iv. where he ſaith ἡ ἀρὴ τοῦ Ἀδὰμ κοινὴ πάντων ἐστὶ, the curſe of Adam is the common curſe of all, but in the notion of the Encratites, as that was, in their opinion, certain damnation to Adam who commited it) ſhould fall on all that ever were born from him. The falſeneſs and ridiculouſneſs of which, in all the parts, may well be granted, and yet the doctrine of Original ſin, as it was believed by the Antients, remain true, and this text of this Pſalm be one teſtimony of it, viz. that though Adam ſinned, and thereby loſt the image of God, in which he was created, deforming it into Satans image, whoſe temptations he hearkened to; and though this he did, as a common Father, and repreſentative of all mankind, and ſo in him all his poſterity were concluded under the breach and penalty of the firſt Covenant, and all being begotten after the Image of laps'd Adam, were begotten in a corrupt, polluted ſinful ſtate, and had many ſad effects of Adams fall connatural, and born with them; yet Chriſt was given for all, and by that gift, firſt Adam himſelf was redeemed from ſo much of the curſe belonging to ſin, as concerned his eternal ſtate, and ſo alſo all others of his poſterity, that did not by their own actual and habitual ſins and impenitence (their redemption notwithſtanding) bring down that curſe upon them. That this doctrine of Original ſin, as it was maintained againſt Pelagius, is very remote from the Doctrine of the Encratites, is moſt certain and viſible, and cannot be doubted by any. The Encratites thought generation could not be without ſin, that Adam was damned, and all were born heirs apparent to that curſe, and ſo deteſted generation and marriage: but the doctrine of Original ſin ſuppoſes marriage to be honourable, and that the conjugal bed may be kept pure and undefiled, and that neither is ſin committed by the parents in begetting, nor by the child which is begotten; and though the child be born in ſin, after ter the image of laps'd and ſinful parents, yet allows a medicine as univerſal as the diſeaſe, and ſo acknowledges this corruption of our nature not only reconcileable with, but uſeful and contributive to our eternal good. And this Clemens in that place ſeems to acknowledge, and to make another part of his anſwer to thoſe Hereticks: for having mentioned τὰς πρώτας ἐκ γενέσεως ὁρμὰς, the firſt incitations, which proceed from our natural corrupt ſtate, and thoſe as ἀσεβείας, impieties, or averſions from God, καθ' ἃς θεὸν οὐ γινώσκομεν, in reſpect of which we are ignorant of God, (which ſhews him to be no enemy to the doctrine of Original ſin) he adds, εἰ δέ τις κατὰ τοῦτο λέγει κακὴν τὴν γένεσιν, κατ' ἐκεῖνο ἐπαίνου ἀγαθὴν, καθὸ ἐν αὐτῷ τὴν ἀλήθειαν γινώσκομεν, but if any man in this reſpect calls nativity ill, let him in that other reſpect acknowledge it good, becauſe thereby we come to the knowledge of the truth. In which words he ſeems to refer to the following verſe in this Pſalm, Behold thou deſireſt truth in the inward parts, and in the hidden part thou ſhalt make me to know wiſdom:] which, by the way, as it is an aggravation of every wilful actual ſin committed by any child of Adam, (becauſe though it be committed in compliance with natural corruption, yet 'tis in oppoſition to grace, and the both outward and inward directions of Gods Spirit, which were given to mortifie our natural corruption, and to beget us to a new ſpiritual life;) ſo it is full matter of conviction to the Encratites, that generation and marriage is good, and not evil, becauſe it brings forth children to the grace and mercies of Chriſt, to Baptiſm, that fœderal rite of receiving every the tendereſt Infant into the Covenant of grace, whereby the original ſtain or corruption ſhall be be diſabled from bringing any eternal miſery upon them, that do not call it on themſelves by thoſe wilful acts of ſin, that might have been reſiſted by them, if they had not been foully wanting to themſelves. Which conſideration being ſo much more proper to the point which Clemens had in hand, (the refuting of the Encratites) than the inſiſting on the doctrines, and aggravations of original corruption, we cannot reaſonably wonder, that he ſhould there confine his diſcourſe to that which was only pertinent (and ſo he goes on to ſhew grounds of mercy and pardon, from the very nature of our temptations, δυναπὶ ἀκατεργάστοι οἱ κοσμοκράτορες τῆ σκότους, διὰ τῦτο αἱ συγγνώμαι; and the way to contend and overcome in our Chriſtian agonies, by St. Paul's ὑπωπιάζω, as he reads it, and δυλαγωγῶ, ſubduing, and bringing under the fleſh, and not abſteining wholly, but οἷς ἐκεῖνον ἐγκρατῶς χρώμενος, temperately uſing thoſe things which we judge fit for us, and ſo atteining the incorruptible crown, οὐχὶ δὲ ἀκονιτὶ στεφανίμενοι, but ſo as not to be crowned without fighting) and not inlarge to that which was more than granted by his adverſaries, with whom he had then to do, even improved into dangerous heretical doctrine: for ſo Tatianus having learnt from Scripture, and the doctrine of the Church, and of his teacher * Juſtin Martyr, that by Adam's fall all mankind were ingaged in ſin and death, he thinking the act of generation was the committing the ſame fault that lay ſo heavy on Adam, and by not conſidering well the benefits of the Second Adam, prepared for all that were loſt in the firſt Adam, fell into a diſlike and deteſtation of marriage and propagation; which heretical improvement of the Catholick doctrine Clemens refuting, had no occaſion, at leaſt neceſſity, to ſpeak of the true doctrine which was more than granted by thoſe Hereticks. This being the only teſtimony out of antiquity which is thought to be leſs favourable to the doctrine of Original ſin in general, and particularly to the interpreting this text of the Pſalmiſt to that ſenſe, I have thus largely inſiſted on it. And for the farther clearing of it, ſhall adjoyn the interpretation of St. Chryſoſtome, which ſeems to me to proceed in the ſame way as Clemens did, but withal to give us a much more perſpicuous underſtanding of the full deſign of it. Clemens interpreted the mothers conception to be underſtood of Eve; and ſo ſaith * Chryſoſtome, In ſin hath my mother——Ἄνωθεν, φησὶ, καὶ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἡ ἁμαρτία κεκράτηκε, φθονᾶλε γὰρ τῆς Εὔας σύλληψιν τῆς ἐνθολῆς ἡ παράβασις——From the beginning ſin prevailed, for the tranſgreſſing of the commandment was before the conception of Eve; for it was after the ſin, and ejection from paradiſe, that Adam knew his wife, and ſhe conceived, and brought forth Cain. This therefore was the Pſalmiſts meaning, ὅτι δὲ ἡμελίφαν φθορὰν κρατήσασα ἡ ἁμαρτία, ὀδὲν πνα καὶ τέλειον διὰ τῦ γένους εἰργάσατο, that ſin prevailing over our firſt parents, wrought a way and path through mankind. Then, whereas Clemens indeavours to free the text from favouring the Encratites, by ſhewing the good and benefits of propagation, out-weighing the evil that was inſeparable from it, and by inſiſting, that as the child new born did not commit fornication, ſo he fell not under Adams curſe; St. Chryſoſtome proceeds alſo on that matter, but much more perſpicuouſly, and ſo, as is viſibly moſt agreeable to the Catholick Doctrine: Διδασκόμεθα δὲ διὰ τῦτων ἁπάντων, οὐχ ὅτι φυσικὴ τῆς ἁμαρτίας ἡ ἐνέργεια, (* ἢ γὰρ ἂν, ἦμεν ἀναίτιοι τιμωρίας) ἀλλ' ὅτι ἔστιν ἡ φύσις ἐπὶ τὸ πλαίειν, ὑπὸ τῶν παθημάτων ἐνοχλυμένη· πολὺ δὲ ἦμες ἡ γενέσεως πόνος συνέρχεται κ.τ.λ. But by all this we learn that the act of ſin is not natural (for if it were we ſhould be free from puniſhment) but that nature inclines to falling, being diſturbed by a tumult of paſſions: but yet reſolution making uſe of induſtry overcomes. Adding, in reference particularly to the Encratites, ὁ τοίνυν, ὡς τινες δυσκόλως ὑπέλαβον, τῦ γάμυ κηλητηρίῳ, ὕτω γεγονόσι, τὸ ἐν ἀνομίαις συνειλῆφθαι, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἄνωθεν ὑπὸ τῶν περιόντων πολυθρύλητον παρανομίαν εἰς μίσος περιφέρει, καὶ κατεύνης λόγον γεγενῆσθαι τῶν ῥευμάτων τύτων τοῦτον, They are therefore fooliſhly miſtaken, that ſuppoſe David to accuſe marriage here, thus underſtanding thoſe words, I was conceived in iniquities (as if his mother ſinned, when ſhe conceived him;) That is not his meaning, but he mentions the tranſgreſſion of old committed by our firſt fathers, and ſaith of that, that it was the fountain of theſe ſtreams. εἰ γὰρ ἐκεῖνοι, φησὶ, μὴ ἥμαρτον, οὐκ ἂν ἐδέξαλο τὸ θανάτυ τὸ ἐπίμοιρον, θνητοὶ δὲ μὴ ὄντες, κρείττους ἂν ἦσαν φθορᾶς, τῇ δὲ ἀφθαρσίᾳ πάντως ἂν καὶ ἀπαθείας συνῆν· ἀπαθείας δὲ πολιτευομένης χώραν οὐκ ἂν ἔσχεν ἡ ἁμαρτία, for, ſaith he, if they had not ſinned, they had not undergone the puniſhment of death, but not being mortal, had been above corruption, and then to incorruption apathie, abſence of paſſions, had been concomitant; and apathie being admitted, ſin had had no place. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἐξήμαρτον, φθορᾷ παρεδόθησαν· φθαρτοὶ γενόμενοι, τοιέτες, καὶ γεννήσαν παῖδας, τοῖς δὲ τοιέτοις ἐπθυμίαι, καὶ φόβοι, καὶ ἡδοναὶ συμπαρέπονλαι. ὅσοις δὲ ταῦτα καὶ λογισμὸς ἀγωνίζεται, καὶ νικήσας μὲν ἀνακηρύτλεται, ἡττηθεὶς δὲ αἰσχύνας ὑφίσταται, But ſeeing they ſinned, they were delivered to corruption; being become corruptible they begat children like themſelves, and to ſuch, deſires and fears and pleaſures were together conſequent. Againſt theſe reaſon contends, and if it overcomes, is pronounced or proclaimed to be rewarded; but if it be overcome, it is a debtor of ſhame, is puniſhed with reproach. Thus far this holy Father in that place, expreſſly giving us his own opinion (and, I ſuppoſe, ſufficiently clearing Clemens doctrine) in this matter: that though David impute not any of his foul, actual tranſgreſſions to nature, or the force of Original ſin, becauſe he had thoſe other aids from God, which might have reſiſted ſucceſsfully, if he had not been wanting to himſelf; yet he here mentions Adams fall, as the fountain of all vitious corrupt ſtreams, as that which ſhewed ſin the way into the world, brought tumultuous paſſions (which he * elſewhere calls πολὺν παθῶν ὄσμον, a large ſwarm of paſſions) together with mortality after it, and ſo an inclination and tendency in our nature to ſtumble and fall: which inclination, or ῥοπὴ φύσεως εἰς τὸ πταίειν, is all one with the πρῶται ὁρμαὶ γενέσεως ὁμμαὶ, the firſt incitations from our nativity, in Clemens, which he mentions as impieties, and therefore ſins; though, ſaith Chryſoſtome, λογισμὸς, reaſoning, ſuch diſcourſe as a Chriſtian is capable of, and γνώμη, reſolution, with induſtry making uſe of the means that God hath given us (he adds elſewhere πνεῦμα τὸ βοηθῦν, the ſpirit helping us Chriſtians, and βάπτισμα τὸ νεκρῶσαι δυνάμενον, baptiſm able to mortifie) may not only oppoſe and incounter this ſwarm and rout of paſſions, but overcome them alſo. What the Latine Fathers thought of this place is viſible from ‖ Hilarie, in his Enarration on Pſal. 119. the flesh, so more expresly, originis vitium, the vice of his beginning, and peccata humanæ naturæ, the faults of his humane nature) and under the law of sin; but be therefore chooseth to meditate in the law of God, that he may live. And to the same purpose † St. Ambrose, ‖ Omnes homines sub peccato nascimur, quorum ipse ortus in vitio est, dicente David, Ecce in iniquitate —— All men are born in sin; our very birth is in fault, as David saith, Behold, I was conceived in sin —— And many others concur to the same sense, in their Scholia on this Psalm. As for the doctrine it self of Original sin, as it is founded on many other places of Scripture, as well as on this, the concordant testimonies of the Antient Church are set down at large by the Author of the Pelagian Hist. l. 11. Par. 1. from Justine, Tatianus, Irenæus, Origen, Macarius Hierosolymit. and Macarius Ægyptius, Athanasius, Cyril of Jerusalem, Basil, Gregory Nazianzen, Chrysostome, Leontius, Olympiodorus (of the Greek Church;) and from Tertullian, Cyprian, Arnobius, Reticius, Olympius, Hilarie, Ambrose, Optatus, Hilarius Diaconus, Hierome (of the Latine;) as well as from St. Augustine, and those that followed him. And ‖ Vincentius's words are remarkable, Quis ante prodigiosum discipulum ejus Cœlestium reatu prævaricationis Adæ omne genus humanum negavit astrictum? Before Cælestius, Pelagius's prodigious scholar, who ever denied that all mankind was bound by the guilt of Adams sin? This I suppose sufficient to assure us of the sense of the Universal Christian Church in this Article. And what from this and the like places of the Old Testament the old Jews doctrine was, may be concluded from these words of St. Chrysostome, Οὐκ ἀρκεῖταί τῷ ἑνὸς, ἵν' ὅλαν λύσῃ σου ὁ Ἰουδαῖος, Πῶς, ἑνὸς κρίθεντος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἡ οἰκουμένη ἐσώθη; Συνθῆς ἀνθρῶ λέγειν, Πῶς, ἑνὸς πεσόντος τοῦ Ἀδὰμ, ἡ οἰκουμένη κρίνεται; The reason of St. Paul's phrase so oft repeated [as by one] Rom. v. was, that when a Jew shall aske, how the world should be saved by the well-doing of one, the righteousnesse of Christ; thou mightest be able to say to him, How should the world be condemned by one Adams sinning? By which words of his it appears, that this doctrine of the whole worlds being under condemnation for the sin of Adam, was such, as he thought no Jew would doubt of; for else it could be no fit means to silence his objection against the redemption of the whole world by Christ. To this of the Jews belongs their ordinary style of יֵצֶר הָרַע the evil formation, (which the Chaldee lightly vary into יִצְרָא בִישְׁתָּא meaning our evil affections, or concupiscence) and יֵצֶר חַטָּאת the formation of sin, or proclivity to sin from their frame or fabrick. So Eccl. 10. 1. זְבוּבֵי מָוֶת the flyes of death are by the Chaldee rendred יִצְרָא בִישְׁתָּא evil concupiscence, which abiding at the gates of the heart, brings the cause of death into the world: and Psal. 103. 14. where we read יִצְרֵנוּ our frame, the Chaldee have יִצְרָא בִישְׁתָּא דְמַחְטֵי וְחָנָא the evil concupiscence which impells us to sin. So Psal. 119. 70. יִצְרָא דְלִבְהוֹן the figment of the heart. So say the Rabbins, three men subdued אֶת יִצְרָם their concupiscence; Joseph, Gen. 39. Boaz Ruth 3. Phalati 1 Sam. 25. 44. Where by the example of Joseph, &c. it is evident, that the desire of carnal forbidden objects, such as another mans wife, is comprehended by them under this style of יֵצֶר formation: And this from Gen. 8. 21. where of the יֵצֶר לֵב הָאָדָם imagination, or formation, or figment of the heart of man, it is said, that it is רַע מִנְּעוּרָיו evil from the youth. So in the Midras Tehillem, on Psal. 34. וַיֵּצֶר הָרַע, &c. Now the evil figment is born with a man, and goes about with him all his days, as 'tis said, the imagination of mans heart is evil from his youth; and if it can find occasion to overthrow him, when he is twenty years old, or forty, or seventy, or eighty, it will do so. And this the † Talmudists, saith Buxtorfe, observe to be called by seven names in Scripture: 1. רַע evil, 2. עָרְלָה foreskin, 3. טָמֵא unclean, 4. שׂוֹטֵא the enemy or hater, 5. מִכְשׁוֹל a stumbling-block, 6. אֶבֶן a stone, 7. צְפוּנִי the hidden thing. What they say of these is much of it indeed phansiful and Talmudical, and their writings are too full of such stuff to be here set down. See Buxtorf Lex. Rabbin. who farther refers the reader to Caphtor, fol. 55. 1. Cad. habkemoch, fol. 35. 2. Aseat Ruchel, fol. 12, 1. In the forecited place of Succa they add, that לָעָתִיד לָבֹא, &c. in time to come God shall bring the evil figment, or evil concupiscence, and slay it before the just and unjust; and that as long as the just live, נִלְחָמִים עִם יִצְרָם they fight with their concupiscences, Berish. Rabba sect. 9. elsewhere 'tis given for a rule, that this concupiscence is not בָּהְאי עָלְמָא in that (i. e. the future) world. See Basra, fol. 58. 1. So the question being asked in Sanhedr. fol. 91. 2. from what time this evil figment obteins dominion on a man, whether from time of his birth, or of his formation in the womb; the answer is; מִשָּׁעַת יְצִירָה from the time of his formation, &c. The like dispute is in Bereshi. Rab. sect. 34. Elsewhere they say, that in the beginning 'tis like a thred of a spider, but in the end הֲעֲבוֹתוֹת הָעֲגָלָה 'tis like a cart-rope; and again, that at first it is as a stranger, afterward as a guest, and at length בַּעַל הַבַּיִת a Master of an house. See More Nev. par. 3. c. 22. and Vaiikra Rabba Sect. 17. The beginning of יֵצֶר הָרַע is sweet, וְסוֹפוֹ מַר and the end bitter. So R. Solomon on Psal. 78. 39. for the wind that passeth away, and cometh not again, reads ויצר הרע טמון בלבם the evil figment hidden in the heart, which הוֹלֵךְ בְּשׁוּמְיָתוֹ וְלֹא וְשׁוּב goes when a man dyes, and returns not again. And Midras Tebill. to avert the argument drawn from that text against the resurrection of the dead, says, אלא וה יצר הרע the evil figment is meant in this place (not the soul) אֲשֶׁר הוֹלֵךְ עִמּוֹ בְּשָׁעָה מִיתָה which goes with a man at the hour of death, וְאֵינוֹ שָׁב עִמּוֹ הַשְׁעָה שֶׁיַּעֲלוּ הַמֵּתִים and returns not with him at the hour of the resurrection of the dead. So when Ps. 16. 3. there is mention of the saints that are in the earth, Midras Tebill. understands the words, as of those that lye buryed there, adding, God calls not here the righteous קְדוֹשִׁים Saints till they be buryed in the earth; לְפִי שֶׁיֵּצֶר הָרַע מְצוּר לְאָדָם בָּעוֹלָם הַזֶּה because the evil figment is in a man in this age; and (as it follows) God doth not fully confide in man, till he be dead. So Kimchi on Ps. 103. 14. and Aben Ezra on this very verse of Psal. 51. where he resolves the Psalmists meaning to be, that in the hour of his nativity the evil figment was planted in his heart; and on ver. 10. that this evil concupiscence had drawn him to sin, and therefore he prays to God, that he would help him against the evil figment, that he might no more be misled by it, or admit sin. To conclude, the Talmud it self tract. Berach. hath a very sober and Orthodox account of this matter. And so this may suffice for the second thing, the notion of Davids being born and conceived in sin. Thirdly then, it may be demanded, how this mention of his conception and birth in sin comes in here? or how it is a fit ingredient in a penitential Psalm, the humbling himself for so many gross actual sins, as he stood guilty of at this time? And the reason of the doubt is, because the sin of our conception and birth, being no act of our own wills, and yet farther a spring of all our corrupt streams, a strong tendency to our actual sins, the mention of that might seem rather a means of extenuating, than aggravating our actual guilts. To this I answer, 1. that if Christ, the second Adam, had not repaired the errors of the first Adam, if original corruption had inevitably betrayed David to his his adultery and murther, &c. if he had not had power to resist his corrupt inclinations, or repress them from breaking out, as they did, into those gross sins, there would then be reason in the objection. But the doctrine of Original sin supposes not any such inevitable necessity, but on the contrary acknowledges the gift of Christ to be an antidote fully proportioned to the poison of our nativity, and his grace a sufficient auxiliary to inable men not only to resist, but overcome temptations, and in some degree to mortifie corruptions. The Philosopher was said to overrule his nativity and stars: and sure Davids divine Philosophy had thus inabled him, if he had not sinned against grace and strength. And so to him that was thus inabled, the consideration of his natural corruption could be no competent matter of extenuation. The more turbulent his passions were, the stronger his inclinations to sin, the more he was obliged to devotion and watchfulness: the one, constantly and frequently to pray for grace, which he stood so much in need of; and the other, to imploy his utmost industry, not to betray, but make the best use of those aids, to secure him from so visible and imminent a ruine. And to this sense some of the antients understand the next verse, Behold thou desirest truth in the inward parts, and (as the LXXII. read) τὰ ἄδηλα καὶ τὰ κρύφια τῆς σοφίας ἐδήλωσάς μοι, thou hast manifested to me the secret and hidden things of thy wisdom; Though by nature I am corrupt and unclean, yet thou, by thy special grace, and revelation and communication of the secrets of thy wisdom, thy Christ unto me, hast elevated me above that low pitch of my natural corruption. And thus 'tis not extraordinary in Scripture for two things to be mentioned one after the other, when the latter only is principally intended, and to the purpose; and the former only as it is preparative and introductory to the latter. And if this be the meaning of the place, then the account is clear, that the former verse taken alone, as it cannot be an extenuation, so neither need it be lookt on as an ingredient in the aggravation of Davids present actual guilts; but only as an introduction to the latter verse, Gods divine revelations to him, which were very proper to aggravate his sins, as being committed against special grace and illumination, and so neither of weakness nor ignorance. But then Secondly, though his natural inclination to sin were no ground for the aggravation of his actual sins, yet being not, as hath been shewed, useful for the extenuation of them, it may fitly come in to bear its part in a penitential Psalm, eo ipso as it is a sin, though but of our nature. For he that is truly sensible, and humbled for his grosser actual enormities, will, and ought to confess to God his lesser and inferior guilts, even his sins of ignorance and infirmity, and by no means to omit his natural corruptions, and all the branches thereof; First, the darkness of his understanding, Secondly, the unrulines of his affections, and Thirdly, the crookedness of his will, the bending down of that toward the carnal part, and great proneness to gratifie it: Which last, as it differs very much from the complacency of the senses in their proper objects, or the inclinableness of the flesh to that which is prohibited, which were in our first parents in Paradise (the beauty and sweetness of the apple were then grateful to two of their senses, and fit to be desired by them) and therefore no sins; so is it a degree of aversion from God, and so contrary to that degree of love with all the heart, which is commanded us by the Law, and consequently an ἀνομία, or breach of Gods Law, and a sin. And being so, and withall so connatural to the will, since the fall, that it is not perfectly rooted out of us in this life, it may sure be very fit to be put into the Catalogue, and fill up the number, and increase the weight of those sins for which men are to humble themselves before God at all times, but especially upon conviction of any one or more gross actual sins. For then the more truly sensible we are, the more wounding will every the least obliquity, or but inclination of the will to evil, appear to us; the least weight adding to his pressure, that is so much overladen already. And so this is a second use of this reflexion on his natural corrupt state, in the work of his repentance. But S. Chrysostome hath another notion of this passage, that it was used by David to introduce his prayer for that pardon which is promised sinners by Christ. For this he makes the meaning of the next verse, that God had revealed Christ unto him, enabled him to prædict his birth, passion, resurrection, and ascension; and therefore as these were means of cure for the corruption of our nature, and of obtaining pardon for the infirmities thereof, so the Psalmist prays to God, who desireth and loveth truth, that knowing τὴς φύσεως τὴν ἀδύναμιαν, the weakness of our nature, he will communicate his φάρμακα συγγνώμης, medicines of pardon to them that beg them of him by prayer; and † again, that he that had been taught this mystery of our redemption before-hand by the holy Spirit, prayed that he might obtain his part in that grace which he predicted to others, and therefore cried out, v. 8. Thou shalt purge me with hyssope——And in this understanding of it, as a part of a plea for pardon in Christ, it will be perfectly fit also for a penitential Psalm, (though it tended not in the least to his humiliation) Deprecation of punishment being as proper a part of such an office, as aggravation of sin can be supposed to be. But the former seems to me the more probable design of the Psalmist in this passage, and that in either part is matter of aggravation of sin; and to that I have confined the Paraphrase, though the other being honoured with so great an Author, was not wholly to be forgotten or omitted.

† p. 711. l. 34.

V. 6. Truth] From טוח to cover, is טְחוֹת kidneys or reins, because they are covered over with fat. So once more 'tis used in Scripture, Job 38.36. where, as here, our English renders it inward parts, somewhat too generally. The Chaldee expressing it more particularly by כְּלָיָן in the reins, and these in the Scripture stile being frequently taken for the seat of the affections, the purity whereof is most contrary to the natural corruption or inbred pollution, in the preceding verse. As for אֱמֶת truth, that ordinarily signifies sincerity, uprightness and integrity: and so truth in the reins is æquivalent to an hearty sincere obedience, not only of the actions, but of the very thoughts and affections to God; and so, in things of this nature, wherein this Psalm is principally concerned, denotes the purity of the heart, the not admitting any unclean desire or thought, the very first degree of indulgence to any lust. And this God is said to will or desire, or delight in, (so חָפֵץ voluit, frequently signifies) and so to command, and require of us. Then though תוּרִיעֵנִי be in the future tense, yet in reason that is to be rendred in the past or the present, thou makest, or hast made me know wisdom secretly; by wisdom meaning the knowledge of his duty, and by making known, instructing in it, and by secretly, the inward work of Gods grace (added to the outward of his law) upon the heart, by which he 1. assureth him of this being his will, 2. incites him to the practice of it, and 3. instructs him in the advantages of this obedience, of this purity of the heart, rejecting the first motions of lust, the entertaining of which had brought this sad ruine on Davids soul, ingaged him in so many sins.

The

The Fifty Second PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The fifty ſecond Pſalm was compoſed by David on occaſion of the wicked fact of Doeg, firſt in accuſing, then in ſlaying Ahimelech the High Prieſt with all his family, deſtroying the whole City of the Prieſts, called Nob, for no other crime but for a reſpect and charity performed by Ahimelech to David (ſee 1 Sam. 22.) It was ſet to the tune called Maſchil, and committed to the Præfect of his Muſick.

TO the chief Muſitian, Maſchil, A Pſalm of David, when Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul, and ſaid unto him, David is come to the houſe of Ahimelech.

a. 1. It is a ſtrange matter of pleaſure and joy and boaſting to a perſon in power, to be able to miſchief thoſe that deſerve it leaſt: There is not any ſort of pride more irrational, than that of a Doeg, to have killed thoſe whom no body elſe would kill, 1 Sam. 22. 17. This is moſt diametrally oppoſite to (that which alone is juſt matter of joy or boaſting to any) being like unto God; for he is moſt eminently good and bountiful, and ſo continues even to thoſe that provoke him and ſin againſt him.

1. Why boaſteſt thou thy ſelf in miſchief, O mighty man? the [a] goodneſs of God endureth continually.

2. That relation of his to Saul of Ahimelech's civility to me was moſt malitiouſly deſigned, and the effect of it as bloody, as if the tongue that ſpake it had been a raſor ſharpened on purpoſe to cut the throats of a multitude of moſt innocent perſons.

2. Thy tongue deviſeth miſchief like a ſharp raſor, working deceitfully.

3. Had it not been as eaſie for thee to have ſaid ſomewhat that might have aſſwaged the Kings diſpleaſure againſt his own ſon, and me his ſon in law? But ſome men are never pleaſed with thoſe things which alone yield true and durable pleaſure, (ſuch are all acts of juſtice, and charity, and obliging thoſe who deſerve it,) but on the contrary are tranſported with any opportunity of calumniating or ſupplanting any, be they never ſo innocent.

3. Thou loveſt evil more than good, and lying rather than to ſpeak righteouſneſs. Selah.

b. 4. And ſuch is Doeg: No ſuch pleaſure to him, as to be able by one ſpeech, as by a poiſonous vapor, to blaſt a whole multitude, and bring ruine to the whole family and city of the pious high Prieſt of God.

4. Thou loveſt all devouring words, O thou [b] deceitful tongue.

c. 5. As thou haſt dealt with the Prieſts of God, ſo ſhall God, their juſt avenger, deal with thee. Thou haſt calumniated Ahimelech, then fetcht him and his from their place of abode, then deſtroyed them from ſerving in the Tabernacle, ſwept away the Prieſts whole family, (none but Abiathar eſcaping thy bloody hands, and that much againſt thy will alſo) and let none of them return to their houſe; and not only ſo, but haſt fallen upon the whole city of Nob, without any pretence of fault of theirs, and put them all to the ſword. And God ſhall undoubtedly plead the cauſe of his innocent Prieſts, exclude thee from the priviledge of ſerving God in the Tabernacle, of receiving benefit by the Prieſtly Office, firſt excommunicate thee, then bring the ſame bloody deſolation upon thee and all thy family and people, which thou haſt executed upon thoſe.

5. God ſhall likewiſe deſtroy thee for ever; he ſhall take thee away, and || pluck thee out of [c] thy dwelling-place, and root thee out of the land of the living. Selah.

|| or remove thee from the Tabernacle.

6. And all that truly fear God ſhall take notice of this, as a judgment moſt juſt, for what he hath now done to the Prieſts: and as they ſhall make uſe of it to impreſs a due reverence of God, and all goodneſs on themſelves and others, and a dread of offending; ſo ſhall they make him a name of reproach to all poſterity, (by that alſo deterring all from the like practiſes) ſaying,

6. The righteous alſo ſhall ſee and fear, and ſhall laugh at him.

7. Behold the juſt vengeance of God upon a man that never thought of ſecuring his greatneſs by Gods protections, never applied himſelf to duties of piety or juſtice, never imagined that they would be uſeful to his preſent ſecurity, to which only he had an eye, but reſolved by wealth and by wicked enterpriſes to eſtabliſh and perpetuate his greatneſs. And now God hath refuted all his vain and falſe hopes, and brought utter deſtruction upon him.

7. Loe this is the man that made not God his ſtrength, but truſted in the abundance of his riches, and ſtrengthened himſelf in his wickedneſs.

8. Whereas I, to whom his miſchief was originally deſigned, 1 Sam. 22. 9. have been preſerved from ſuffering any hurt by his malice: from that time to this I have proſpered, and increaſed in ſtrength, and have not fallen into Sauls hands, when he is caſt out, v. 5. and ſhall, I doubt not, enjoy very happily the preſence of my God in the Sanctuary (which prediction was eminently fulfilled when the Ark was brought into the City of David, the place of his abode.) My condition hath been like that of the Olive-tree, which is full of green leaves all the year long; and ſo have I continued in a flouriſhing ſtate: whilſt he is withered and cut down and eradicated out of the land of the living, I am faſt ſetled and flouriſh by the good providence of God over me; and ſo through the ſame mercy I truſt I ſhall do to my lives end.

8. But I am like a † green Olive-tree in the houſe of God: I truſt in the mercy of God for ever and ever.

† flouriſhing רענן

9. This juſt vengeance of God I am obliged to remember and celebrate as long as I live, and what ever my diſtreſſes or dangers ſhall prove, repoſe my full truſt and confidence in God, wait and depend on him for deliverance in his good time. And indeed thus to live by faith, and not by ſenſe, to keep cloſe to this one guard, and ſecure our tenure in Gods protections, by never attempting or admitting ought which may betray and forfeit that hold, but for ever conſtantly to depend on God in his own way, is that which all pious men have experimented to be the wiſeſt and ſafeſt courſe, and that which will ſtand in more ſtead, than all the power aſſiſted alſo by all the wickedneſs of men.

9. I will praiſe thee for ever, becauſe thou haſt done it; and I will wait on thy name, for it is good before thy Saints.

Annotations

Annotations on Pſal. LII.

a. V. 1. Goodneſs] The firſt verſe is very diſtantly rendred by the LXXII. Inſtead of גִּבּוֹר חֶסֶד אֵל O mighty man, the benignity of God, as the Chaldee rightly render it, they read, ὁ πλοῦτος ἀνομίαν, mighty for wickedneſs; and the Syriack and Latine, &c. follow them in it. To this they ſeem to have been lead by a ſecond notion of חֶסֶד (quite contrary to mercy by way of ἀντίφρασιν) for impiety, mercileſsneſs, and alſo reproach, Lev. 20. 17. it is a wicked or abominable thing. By analogy with which, חֶסֶד אֵל might be thought to ſignifie that which is to the reproach of God, as indeed the killing of the Prieſts was, and ſo not amiſs expreſt by ἀνομία. But the ordinary acception of חֶסֶד is very fit for this place, where the great mercy and benignity of God, and the continuation or conſtancy thereof in deſpight of our greateſt provocations, Gods bounty even to enemies, is very fitly oppoſed to Doegs unprovoked cruelty and impiety.

b. V. 4. Deceitful tongue] The reading of the LXXII. here γλῶσσα δολία, is reſiſted by the context; and 'tis not improbable to have been the error of ſome ſcribe, the change being ſo eaſie from γλῶσσα δολία, in the vocative caſe, to which it may be fitly ſaid in the firſt word, ἠγάπησας, thou haſt loved——And thus ſurely the Latine read it, who have lingua dolo-ſa, in that caſe: but the Syriack took it in that other, and ſo read ל in conjunction with the antecedents, and deceitful tongues; and ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick alſo.

V. 5. Dwelling place] מאהל is literally from the Tabernacle, not from thy dwelling place; and ſo the LXXII. render it, ἀπὸ σκηνώματος, from the Tabernacle: and though the Latine and Syriack and Arabick have added [tuo, thy] yet neither will the Hebrew bear, nor do the Chaldee acknowledge it, who read by way of paraphraſe, he ſhall cauſe thee to depart מֵעַל אֲתָר בֵּית שְׁכִינְתָא from inhabiting in the place of the Schechina, or Tabernacle, the place of Gods preſence. And thus Aben-Ezra expounds the Tabernacle of the place where the Ark was. And then the removing from that (ſo יִסָּחֲךָ ſignifies from נָסַח tranſtulit) will be beſt underſtood of the cenſure of Excommunication, which in the laſt and higheſt degree was Schammatha, delivering up the offender to the hand of heaven, to be cut off, himſelf and his poſterity; according to that of the Jewiſh Doctors, who aſſign this difference between מִיתָה death, and כָּרֵת excision, that he that is guilty of death, only himſelf ſuffers, not his ſeed, but excision reacheth both the ſinner himſelf and his poſterity, as here it doth.

The Fifty Third Pſalm.

‖ the hollow inſtrument.

TO the chief Muſitian upon [a] ‖ Mahalath, Maſchil, A Pſalm of David.

Paraphraſe.

a. The fifty third Pſalm is very little varied from the Fourteen firſt compoſed by David, on occaſion of the general revolt in Abſoloms rebellion, but now new ſet to the tune called Maſchil, (which probably was the cauſe of the variations) and accommodated to ſome other occaſion, perhaps the firſt captivity, mentioned v. 6. and committed to the Præfect of his Muſick, to be ſung to a Flute, or ſome other ſuch hollow inſtrument.

1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart, There is no God. Corrupt are they, and have done abominable iniquity; there is none that doth good.

1. See Pſal. 14. 1.

2. God looked down from Heaven upon the children of men, to ſee if there were any that did underſtand, that did ſeek God.

The Fifty Fourth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

The fifty fourth Psalm was compoſed by David at a time of his great diſtreſs, and ſeaſonable deliverance afforded him by God, when hiding himſelf in the wilderneſs of Ziph, 1 Sam. 23. 15. and of Maon, v. 24. the Ziphites made diſcovery to Saul, v. 19. and he went with forces to ſeek him, v. 25. and compaſſed him round about, v. 26. but was diverted, and called home, and gave over the purſuit, by reaſon of the Philiſtims invading his land, v. 27. It was ſet to the tune of Maſchil, and committed to the Præfect of the ſtringed inſtruments.

Annotations on Pſal. LIV.

a. אֹנֵי בְּסֹמְכִי

V. 4. With them that uphold the Lord among the ſuſteiners] This phraſe אֲדֹנָי בְּסֹמְכֵי deſerves here to be taken notice of, as a form not unuſual among the Hebrews, yet ſignifying no more than that God is my upholder; and not he as one of many, but my only upholder. So Jud. 11. 35. when Jephtha tells his daughter, thou art among the troublers of me, or one of them that trouble me, the meaning is no more, than that ſhe very much grieved and troubled him. So Iſa. 41. 4. when God ſaith of himſelf, I am with the laſt, the meaning is evident, I am the laſt ſimply, as before I am the firſt. So Hoſ. 11. 4. I was to them as they that take off the yoke, i. e. I eaſed them. So Pſal. 55. 18. there were many with me, i. e. God is with me, and that is as good as the greateſt multitude. So Pſ. 69. 26. they whom thou haſt wounded, ſignifies no more than the ſingular number precedent, he whom thou haſt ſmitten. This idiome we ſee continued in the New Teſtament, Joh. 11. 19. many of the Jews came πρὸς τὰς περὶ Μάρθαν καὶ Μαρίαν, to thoſe about Martha and Mary, i. e. as we render it, to Martha and Mary. So in Greek ſtyle, οἱ περὶ τὸν Πλάτωνα, is no more than Plato; and εἶναι τῶν πλουσίων, to be of the rich, is no more than to be rich. All this is obſerved by the learned Seb. Caſtellio, and given as the account of his rendring the words, Dominus eſt qui mihi vitam ſuſtentat, The Lord is he that ſuſtains my life: wherein alſo he agrees with the LXXII. κύριος ἀντιλήπτωρ τῆς ψυχῆς μου, the Lord is the defender of my ſoul, and ſo the Latine, ſuſceptor animæ meæ, and the Syriack ܡܣܥܕ ܢܦܫܝ the ſupporter of my ſoul, or life; and ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick.

b. נִדְבָה

V. 6. Freely ſacrifice] נִדְבָה is the known ſtyle for a free-will offering, the ἑκούσιον, or voluntary oblation ſo much ſpoken of, and ſo, being here joyned with אֶזְבְּחָה I will ſacrifice, it muſt queſtionleſs ſignifie: and the prepoſition ב may either be a pleonaſm, I will offer a free-will offering, or be thus taken notice of in the rendring, I will ſacrifice to thee by way of free-will oblation. And thus the Chaldee reads בְּנִכְסָתָא אֲרֵבַּח, which their interpreter renders ſacrificium ſacrificabo, I will ſacrifice a ſacrifice. In the end of the verſe כִּי טוֹב for it is good] is capable of a double rendring; either thy name is good, or it is good to praiſe thy name, ſee Pſal. 92. 1. and Pſal. 118. 8, 9. But the Jewiſh Arab confines it to the former ſenſe, paraphraſing it thus, I will praiſe thy name, and ſay, The Lord is good.

כִּי טוֹב

c. רְאָתָה

V. 7. Mine eye] רְאָתָה from רָאָה aſpexit, will beſt be rendred beheld or looke, and being joyned with בְּאֹיְבָי on mine enemy, ſignifies no more but beheld, or looke upon mine enemy. This the Chaldee is willing to ſupply (as ſuppoſing an ellipſis in it) by addition of נְקָמְתָא revenge, mine eye hath ſeen revenge upon mine enemy, and our Engliſh imitating them, reads, his deſire. But the ſimple reading is followed by the LXXII. ἐν τοῖς ἐχθροῖς μου ἐπείδεν ὁ ὀφθαλμός μου, my eye hath looked upon my enemies; and ſo the Syriack and Latine, &c. follow them: and that ſeems to be the beſt rendring of the place, for Davids enemies at this time were not deſtroyed, but only drawn back from purſuing him, by the coming of the news of the Philiſtims being in the land. The more probable notation of the phraſe is, that David was ſo nigh as to behold them marching away; which he might well do, having been incompaſt with them ſo cloſe, as the ſtory of it expreſſes, v. 26. and but on the other ſide of the hill Maon, from the top of which he might well behold them in their retreat: and being ſo neer deſtruction by them, and yet ſo ſafe by this act of Gods providence, recalling them, he might well recount it as an eminent mercy, that his eye thus beheld his enemies, when he was delivered from their purſuit.

The

The Fifty Fifth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

To the chief Musitian on Neginoth, Maschil, A Psalm of David.

The fifty fifth is a mournful Psalm of Davids, recounting his own distresses in the time of Absaloms rebellion, and the perfidiousness of those his own principal servants and Counsellers, (such was Achitophel, 2 Sam. 16. 23.) which were the chief authors of it, yet confidently resorting to God for his aid, and chearfully depending on it. He set it to the tune of Maschil, and committed it to the Præfect of his Musick, to be sung to the harp, &c.

1. Give ear to my prayer, O God, and hide not thy self from my supplication.

1. O thou which art my only refuge in all distresses, be thou now pleased to hearken favourably to my requests.

2. Attend unto me, and hear me: I ‖ mourn in my prayer, and make a noise.

2. My condition makes me very † querulous and importunate: O be thou pleased to consider my distress:

† אֶרְוַד עִם

† I am unquiet and clamorous, Chald.

3. Because of the voice of the enemy, because of the oppression of the wicked; for they cast iniquity upon me, and in wrath they † hate me.

3. My son Absalom hath depraved my Government, and those that are associated with him have driven me from my throne: the one accuseth me as guilty of great misgovernments, the other pursue me with all the malice and rancour imaginable.

† set themselves against me

4. My heart * is [a] sore pained within me; and the terrors of death are fallen upon me.

* trembleth

4. And the danger is so great and pressing, that I may be allowed to tremble and quake at the appearance of it. a.

5. Fearfulness and trembling are come upon me, and horror hath overwhelmed me.

6. And I said, ‖ O that I had wings like a dove, for then would [b] I flee away and be at rest.

7. † Lo then would I wander far off, and remain in the wilderness. Selah.

8. * I would hasten my escape from the ‖ windy storm and tempest.

5, 6, 7, 8. And accordingly I am now forced, as in a state of horrour and confusion, to forsake my place, to flee from Jerusalem with all possible speed, to escape out of his hands, and to this end to wander upon the mountains, to go whither I may, 2 Sam. 15. 20. to avoid this calamity, so suddenly raised by mine own rebellious son and subjects. b.

‖ who will give me the wing as a dove? I will fly and dwell or rest.
† Lo I will
* I will

9. † Destroy, O Lord, and divide their tongues; for I have seen violence and strife in the city.

9. Lord, be thou pleased to confound and dissipate their ‖ counsels, (see 2 Sam. 15. 31.) by causing some disagreement and division among them; for all that they design and consult about is rebellion and rapine. ‖ so the Chald.

† Overwhelm them

בַּלַּע

10. Day and night [c] they go about it upon the walls thereof: mischief also and ‖ sorrow are in the midst of it.

10. These two are the continual guard of their city, the arts to which they are content to owe their safety: And that which is within, and is to be preserved by these means, is it self of the same making, violation of my just rights established on me by God. All that they have to do is, to defend one wickedness and violence with the addition of many more. c

11. Wickedness is in the midst thereof; deceit and guile depart not from their streets.

11. And so their whole conspiracy what is it but a continued complication and conjunction of all kind of iniquity and injustice?

12. For it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have born it: neither was it he that hated me, that did magnifie himself against me; then I would have hid my self from him.

12. One thing that extreamly heightens my trouble, is, that the most pernicious counsel that hath been given in all this business was not the counsel of any known enemy, whom I might have foreseen, and prevented;

† one whom I esteemed as my self.
* joyned our selves to the assembly.

13. But it was thou, † a man, mine [d] equal, my guide, and my acquaintance.

But of ‖ Achitophel, one whom I loved as my own soul or life, one whose advice I took above all other mens, 2 Sam. 16. 23. one that I had a particular friendship with, and communicated my secrets to him; and above all, one whom I had reason to look on as a pious man, he was so ready always to accompany me to the service of God. d. ‖ see the Chald. e.

15. ‖ Let death [f] seise upon them, and let them go down quick into hell: for wickedness is in their dwellings and among them.

15. But God will not suffer this perfidiousness of his to go unpunished, he shall not live to perfect his design, a death as unnatural, unexpected, and remarkable as that which fell on Corah, Dathan and Abiram (those rebels against Moses and Aaron) shal certainly befall him: for it is a most horrible wickedness that he is guilty of. (This is also a visible prediction of what should befal Judas, who was parallel to Achitophel, both in sin and punishment, Act. 1.) f.

‖ Death shall deceive or forget them, they shall go—

16. As for me, I will call upon God; and the Lord shall save me.
17. Evening and morning and at noon will I pray and cry aloud, and he shall hear my voice.

16, 17. But as for my self, I have nothing to do but to pray constantly and and importunely to God, thrice a day ſolemnly to reinforce my impreſſion on him; and no doubt he will be gratiouſly pleaſed to deliver me out of this diſtreſs, (as formerly he hath done out of all others) and

18. Reſtore me to peace and ſafety from the imminent danger of this rebellion, which be it never ſo ſtrongly and invincibly contrived and managed againſt me, cannot outvie the ſtrength of heaven, which is certainly on my ſide. eternal, omnipotent, and unchangeable, and ſhall therefore, according to his promiſe made to me, protect and ſecure me, and withal ſharply puniſh theſe obdurate perſons, which for fear of men were corrupted from their obedience by Abſalom, and being now out in rebellion, and going on proſperouſly and undiſturbedly in it, cannot by a far juſter fear, the fear of God, be reduced.

19. God ſhall hear and afflict them, even he that abideth of old, Selah. † Becauſe they have * no changes, therefore they fear not God.

21. Their tongues and hearts were at a great diſtance; their ſmootheſt and falreſt and moſt flattering ſpeeches, were but deſigned to conceal and diſguiſe under them their bloody and rebellious contrivances, which under theſe pretences were moſt ſecurely carried on, till at laſt it was ſeaſonable for them to break out into open war.

21. ‖ The [h] words of his mouth were ſmoother than butter, but war was in his heart: his words were ſofter than oyl, yet were they drawn ſwords.

‖ They are divided, their mouth butter, their heart war—

22. But let their practiſes and deſigns be what they will, I am reſolved to make no other applications, but thoſe in my prayers to God. All my wants and deſires, I will make known to him, (who is the Author of all good things, even of my very being it ſelf) and in him repoſe my truſt for the ſupplying of them. He will, I doubt not, come ſeaſonably to my relief; and although he have now for a while permitted me to be driven from my place, he will in his good time return me to it, and not ſuffer this rebellion to proſper, or me his anointed Vicegerent to be caſt down for ever.

22. † Caſt [i] thy burthen upon the Lord, and he ſhall ſuſtain thee: he ſhall * never ſuffer the righteous to be moved.

† or caſt thy affairs on the Lord, who gave thee.
* not ſuffer the righteous to be for ever moved.

23. But on the contrary, God ſhall aſſuredly bring theſe down to an untimely ruine or exciſion. And the fame is the portion which all other like them are to expect; Rebels and perjured and bloody men ſhall generally meet with diſappointments in this life, gain little but the ſhortning of their own days, ſeldom live half ſo long as other men that are more dutiful and peaceably diſpoſed. And in this contemplation of Gods juſt vengeance on them, and care and watchful providence over me, I chearfully reſt, wholly referring the event to him, and confidently aſſuring my ſelf, that it will be ſuch as I may comfortably depend on, and expect to find all joy in the iſſue of it.

23. But thou, O God, ſhalt bring them down into the pit of deſtruction. Bloody and deceitful men ſhall not live out [k] half their days: but I will truſt in thee.

Annotations on Pſalm LV.

a. חוּל

V. 4. Sore pained] חוּל to grieve or be pained, is frequently by the Targum rendred trembling. And thus it muſt ſignifie Pſal. 96. 9. חִילוּ the Targum רְחָחוּ contremiſcite, we render it fear before him; 'twere better, tremble before him, for ſo it would better connect with the earth, which is there ſpoken to. So Pſal. 144. 7. חוּלִי, we render it tremble thou earth—— So 1 Chron. 10. 3. ſpeaking of the archers which preſſed upon Saul, וַיָּחֶל מְאֹד and he was greatly afraid. So the Chaldee read it, 1 Sam. 31. 3. וְדָחִיל he feared: and ſo here, לִבִּי יָחִיל my heart trembleth within me; יְרַחַת contremiſcit, ſaith the Chaldee; and the Syriack more clearly נפלא ܢܦܠ

חִילוּ

ܘܢܚܠ trembling, (from רחל to fear) fell upon me; and the Arabick in like manner, my heart within me was afraid; and the Jewiſh Arab Interpreter, ירתעד trembleth. And thus the learned Caſtellio, Cor meum in pectore trepidat, my heart in my breſt trembleth: and ſo it beſt accords to אֵימוֹת מָוֶת the terrors of death (from אֵים terror) that follows in this verſe, and the fearfulneſs, and trembling and horror in the next.

b. אָעוֹפָה וְאֶשְׁכֹּנָה

V. 6. Flee away) The phraſe אָעוֹפָה וְאֶשְׁכֹּנָה, which literally ſounds I will fly and dwell, ſeems to be an ὑσταδιολογία, two words to expreſs one thing, viz. fly to a place of repoſe and ſafety: where that place was, could not be ſpecified, for as he ſaith, 2 Sam. 15. 20. I go whither I may; as if he had ſaid, I know not whither; and v. 17. The King went forth and all the people after him, and tarried in a place that was far off, as here v. 7. I will wander afar off. And indeed this is the ſum of theſe three verſes, 6, 7, 8. I ſaid, מִי יִתֶּן who will give me the wings בְּיוֹנָה as a dove? i. e. I reſolved to fly immediately. So 'tis affirmed in the Hiſtory, 2 Sam. 15. 14. And David ſaid unto all his ſervants that were with him, at Jeruſalem, Ariſe, and let us flee, for we ſhall not elſe eſcape from Abſalom, make ſpeed to depart, leſt he overtake us ſuddenly: which is but the plain proſe of what is here put in the metrical ſtyle, as the deſcription of his ſudden and confuſed flight, he knew not whither; I will flee, and reſt, I will wander afar, I will haſten my eſcape מִרוּחַ סָעָה from the ſtormy wind, or wind which is raiſed, מִסַּעַר from the whirlwind, (ſuch as carried Elias to heaven, 2 King. 2. 2.) In ſtead of מִרוּחַ סָעָה אָחִישָׁה מִפַּלְטִי לִי I will haſten my eſcape from the wind that is raiſed, or ſtormy wind, the LXXII. read in ſomewhat a diſtant manner, Περιεδεξάμην τὸν Ζώζοντά με ἀπὸ ὀλιγοψυχίας, I expected him that would ſave me from puſillanimity; perhaps underſtanding רוּחַ wind in the notion of ſpirit, and then the concitation of that might paſs for ὀλιγοψυχία, puſillanimity. The Latine follow them, and read puſillanimitate ſpiritus; but the Syriack forſake them, and read ܣܥܪܐ ܕܚܠܐ a tempeſtuous wind, or a wind that is raiſed (ſo the עִלְעָלָא and עִלּוּל which the the Chaldee uſeth in this place, is deduced from עָלָה aſcendit.) As for the former part, it cannot well be deemed a verſion of the words, but may poſſibly be a paraphraſe; for ſo he that flyes from an imminent danger, though (as David here) he knows not whither, doth expect ſome means of deliverance, for which he thus reſerves himſelf by flight.

c. V. 10. Go about] That which removes all difficulty in this verſe is, the obſerving who they are that are here ſaid to incompaſs, or go about the city, viz. violence and ſtrife, or rebellion, which are in the words immediately foregoing (v. 9.) ſaid to be eſpyed by him in the city. For theſe then to go about יסובבוה the city (יְשׁוֹטְטוּהָ) and that עַל חוֹמֹתֶיהָ upon the walls of it, is to do as Souldiers that guard a city do, and ſignifies theſe to be their only means of preſerving themſelves; and then for אָוֶן and עָמָל miſchief and injury to be בְּקִרְבָּהּ in the inmoſt part of that city, what is it, but to denote theſe vices to be the poſſeſſions that that other guard is ſet to defend? and ſo, in ſhort, their ſecuring one wickedneſs with another, is the clear meaning of this verſe.

d. V. 13. Æqual] From עָרַךְ collatus, æſtimatus eſt, is כְּעֶרְכִּי the phraſe כְּעֶרְכִּי according to the eſteeming of my ſelf, or according to my proportion, i. e. one whom I eſteemed in the ſame proportion and degree that I did my ſelf. The Targum read דִּדְמֵילִי who art like me, but the LXXII. moſt exactly, σὺ δὲ ἀνθρωπε ἰσόψυχε, but thou a man whom I love and eſteem as I do my own ſoul; for ſo that word ἰσόψυχος ſignifies ἴσος ἐμοὶ ψυχὴν, equal to my ſoul or life, as in Homer, ἴσος ἐμοὶ κεφαλὴν, equal to my head, i. e. my life; and ſo the word is uſed by Saint Paul Phil. 2. 20. ſee note on that place.

e. V. 14. Took ſweet counſel] From מָתַק to be ſweet, and the ordinary notion of סוֹד for ſecret, the phraſe נַמְתִּיק סוֹד will literally be read, we made our ſecret ſweet. And ſo it may be an elegance, to ſignifie the pleaſure of his friendſhip, or of communicating ſecrets to him. But the Jewiſh Arab renders it נלאום עצבו we cleaved, or joyned our ſelves to the company or aſſembly, interpreting מתק to that ſenſe of cleaving or joyning to; Job 21. 33. the clods of the valley ſhall cleave (not as we read, ſhall be ſweet) unto him, to expreſs the certainty of death (as v. 32. he ſhall be brought to the grave, and remain in the tombs) and not סוד the pleaſantneſs of it: and then taking סוד to ſignifie company, as Abu Walid alſo doth, and puts גמאעה company or cœtus aſſembly, for a different ſignification of it from ſecret. And ſo it certainly ſignifies a congregation, and is by the LXXII. rendered συναγωγὴ, aſſembly, Jer. 6. 11. συναγωγὴ νεανίσκων, we render it, the aſſembly of young men; and ſo Jer. 15. 17. the aſſembly of the mockers, where the LXXII. hath συνέδριον, the councel, as that ſignifies the place where they meet to conſult. And then the plain meaning of the יַחְדָּו נַמְתִּיק סוֹד phraſe will be this, we joyned our ſelves together to the aſſembly; and that well agrees with what here follows, we walked to the houſe of God in company. The LXXII. for סוֹד ſeem to have read שׁוּרָה which we find 1 Sam. 9. 12. and which the Targum uſes frequently for a feaſt; for as they here read ἐδέσματα, meats, ſo the Syriack have ܡܐܟܠܬܐ the ſame word. And even thus the ſenſe is but little varied; for eating or ſweetning a ſacrifical meal together, is no more then going together to the feaſts, i. e. to the publick aſſemblies at the feſtival times. In the end of the verſe בְּרֶגֶשׁ may be rendred with a noiſe,] and ſo the Chaldee ſeems to have taken it which reads בְּרַהֲבִיָּא with haſte; and to that agree the Jewiſh Doctors, who tell us men are to go in haſte and with ſpeed to the Synagogue, but return thence very leiſurely. But the word ſignifies alſo in company, from רָגַשׁ to aſſemble, and in Hiphil to conſent, and ſo it beſt accords with יַחְדָּו together] in the former part of the verſe, and accordingly is rendred by the LXXII. ἐν ὁμονοίᾳ in conſent, or one mind, and the Syriack ܒܚܕ̈ ܠܒ̈ in concord.

f. V. 15. Seiſe] From יָשָׁא deceptus eſt, is יָשֵׁי here in the future of Hiphil, and being applyed to מָוֶת death (Death ſhall deceive them) it may poſſibly ſignifie, that they ſhall not live to do what they deſign, but death ſhall come and fruſtrate and evacuate all their contrivances, and ſo deceive and cheat them. And thus it were but a Poetical phraſe to denote what David is ſaid to have whether wiſht, or foretold againſt Achitophel, 2 Sam. 15. 31. O Lord, I pray thee turn the counſell of Achitophel into fooliſhneſs; for ſo to deceive him, is to turn his wiſe counſel into folly: and this God did by ſending that horrid melancholy and anguiſh of conſcience, which was the death of him. But the Jewiſh Aarb ſuggeſts another ſenſe of the phraſe, rendring it Let death forget them, viz. natural death, that ſo it may ſignifie, let them not die a natural death, but, as he explains it, as Corah and his company did, and as it here follows, Let them go quick into Hades. And thus for death to deceive them] is to come to their end before they think, and by means which they can neither foreſee nor prevent. And that will be the moſt probable meaning of the phraſe.

g. V. 19. No changes] The phraſe here אֲשֶׁר אֵין חֲלִיפוֹת לָמוֹ is thus literally rendred, to whom no changes to them, i. e. (according to the vulgar ſtyle among the Hebrews) they are not changed; אֲשֶׁר לָא being no more than quibus, to whom, and to whom no changes no more than they are in no wiſe changed: and ſo with this coheres what follows וְלֹא —— and they fear not, or have not feared God. (In both parts viſibly the character of thoſe, whom in the beginning of the verſe he ſaith God will afflict) either they are uninterrupted in their courſe, and ſo fear not; or they continue unchanged in their rebellion, and ſo fear not God: therefore God will certainly bring them down, and afflict them ſore. The Chaldee here read it in the latter ſenſe, רַשִׁיעַי דְּלָא מְהַשְׁנִין —— wicked men, which change not their very evil courſe, and fear not the ſight of God, ſhall periſh. The rendring of the LXXII. will bear either, ἃ γὰρ ὅταν ἀντῆς ἀντάλλαγμα, for there is no change to them, (taking ἀντάλλαγμα for no more than ἄλλαγμα, a change ſimply:) but the Hebrew חֲלִיפוֹת are ſuch alterations as tend to corruption; So Job 10. 17. where changes are joyned with war, and both ſaid to be againſt him; and ſo moſt probably it is here taken.

h. V. 21. Words] The Hebrew חָלַק diviſit] ſignifies alſo to ſmooth, and from thence to flatter, ſee Pſal. 5. 9. Prov. 2. 16. Pſal. 36. 3. The LXXII. here read it in the primitive notion, διεμερίσθησαν they were divided, and for מַחְמָאוֹת butter (reading מַחֲמָה by anger, or perhaps in the plural מַחֲמוֹת to the ſame ſenſe) they have ἀπὸ ὀργῆς, from anger. To our vulgar reading of ſmoother than butter] the Chaldee exactly accords, שְׁעִיעִין —— ſofter than the fat of cheeſe are the words of his mouth, and his heart like weapons of war. (So they render קְרָב war, which the LXXII. again from קָרַב to draw near, render ἤγγισεν ἡ καρδία αὐτῶν, his heart drew near, but therein (though the Latine and Arabick agree) the Syriack depart from them.) But the noun פִּיו his mouth is in the ſingular, and חָלְקוּ in the plural, and there is no mention of words in the Hebrew, and מַחֲמָאת is a noun, for the prefix מ requires another punctation. And to avoid all difficulties, the readieſt expedient is, to receive the LXXII. their rendring of חָלְקוּ, διεμερίσθησαν, they were, or are devided. viz. the members of the wicked man there ſpoken of, they are at great diſtance one from the other; מַחֲמָאת פִּיו butter their mouth, or their mouth is butter, וְקֶרֶב לִבּוֹ and war their heart, or their heart is war—— And this ſeems to be the faireſt rendring of it.

i. יְהָבְךָ

V. 22. Thy burthen] יְהָבְךָ from יָהַב dedit, if it be a noun, literally ſignifies thy gift, by that meaning the thing which thou deſireſt to have given thee; and therefore the Chaldee render it סְבָרָךְ thy hope, or that which thou hopeſt to receive. The LXXII. have μέριμνάν σου, thy ſollicitude, and the Apoſtle St. Peter follows their reading, 1 Pet. 5. 5. and this very agreeably to the original. For the Hebrews generally render it by טָעְנָךְ thy burthen; and David Kimchi in his roots gives this account of it, that the Jewiſh Doctors learnt the expoſition of this word from an Arabian, or, as other Copies of Kimchi read, אִישׁ a Syrian Merchant, who bidding his Chapman weigh out his parcel, uſed this phraſe, שְׁקוֹל יְהָבְךָ weigh out your burthen, or lading. Here 'tis evident by the whether Syriack, or Arabick uſe of it, that the Hebrew word antiently ſignified a burthen, and not only a gift: And then the burthen here ſpoken of, that which was to be caſt on God, being the burthen of the mind only, that is moſt fitly rendred μέριμνα, care or ſollicitude. But ſome of the Jews incline to take יְהָבְךָ here for a verb, and then it muſt be הַשְׁלֵךְ caſt or commit thy ſelf, or thy affairs, עַל יְהוָה upon the Lord, וְהָבָךְ who hath given to thee: and והב in the Jewiſh Arab Interpreter is capable of this ſenſe, being the ſame with the Hebrew, only ו changed into י.

k. לֹא יֶחֱצוּ יָמֵיהֶם

V. 23. Half their days] In the Jewiſh account threeſcore years was the age of a man, and death at any time before that was lookt upon as untimely, and deemed and ſtyled כָּרֵת exciſion, of which they made 36 degrees. So that not to live out half ones days, (לֹא יֶחֱצוּ יָמֵיהֶם) is in their ſtyle to die before thirty years old.

The Fifty Sixth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

a. The fifty ſixth Pſalm was compoſed by David (as Pſalm 34. was) at Adullam, or ſome place of his flights, in remembrance of his great deliverances out of the hands of Saul, and in reflexion on the time when he was with the Philiſtims, 1 Sam. 21. in which he reſembleth himſelf to a Dove a great way from home, ſitting ſadly and ſolitarily by it ſelf. It is called his jewel (ſee note on Pſal. 16. a.) in reſpect of the memorableneſs of the eſcapes, which were the matter of it, and he committed it to the Præfect of his Muſick, to be ſolemnly and publickly ſung.

Annotations on Pſalm LVI.

a. בְּאֹחוֹ

Tit. Took him] אָחַז ſignifies in a latitude not only to apprehend, or take or hold as a priſoner, but ſimply to have, to poſſeſs, to contain, to have in ones power. Accordingly, as it is here rendred by the LXXII. ἐκράτησαν, they had him in their power, ſo if we conſider the ſtory to which it refers, 1 Sam. 21. we ſhall find no cauſe to look upon David as a priſoner at the time which is here ſpoken of. David indeed at Gath was afraid when they told Achiſh, that this was the man of whom the triumphal ſongs were made, v. 11, 12. But it appears not, that that ſpeech was by the ſpeakers intended to his diſadvantage, but only to repreſent him a conſiderable revolter or transfuga fled from Saul. And that nothing but kindneſs was finally meant him, may be gathered from v. 15. where Achiſh his words are, Have I need of mad men, that ye have brought this fellow to play the mad man in my preſence? ſhall this fellow come into my houſe? It ſeems he might have been thought fit for the Kings houſe and preſence, had he not been taken for a mad man. Which is very far from a priſon being deſigned him. And 'tis yet farther manifeſt 1 Sam. 27. 1. that David ſoon after this returned to this place to Achiſh King of Gath again; which is a ſufficient argument, that he apprehended not any real danger, when he was there at the firſt. From all which 'tis conſequent, that as the word בְּאֹחוֹ muſt not be rendred in the notion of captivity, or impriſoment, ſo the deliverances here recounted by the Pſalmiſt are not to be applyed to his eſcape out of the hands of Achiſh, but belong to the many reſcues by God afforded him from Sauls ſervants, and Court-Sycophants; and ſo though the title of the Pſalm looks only on the Philiſtim in Gath, yet it takes in the paſſages following; as Pſalm 34, though by the inſcription it appear to have been endited, when David changed his behaviour before Achiſh, takes in alſo the following ſtory of his diſmiſſion (ſo יְגָרְשֵׁהוּ ſignifies, and is by the LXXII. rendred ἀπέλυσεν αὐτὸν, diſmiſt him, by the Chaldee paraphraſed, וּפְטָרֵיהּ and he left him) and his departure, and the conſequents thereof, being penn'd, as is moſt probable, at Adullam, or ſome other place of his after-flight, while he was perſecuted by, and fled before Saul.

b. שָׁאֲפַנִי

V. 1. Swallow] From שָׁאַף to draw breath, is the metaphorical uſe of the word for gaping after, deſiring earneſtly, and ſo שָׁאַף is here uſed, for enemies that earneſtly deſire to get him into their hands. The antient Interpreters generally render it, as if it were from שׁוּף or סוּף conculcare, עַפְּיִי ſay the Chaldee, he hath trod me under foot, and ſo the LXXII. κατεπάτησαν. The ſame word is again repeated in the ſame ſenſe v. 2. שָׁאֲפוּ שׁוֹרְרָי my obſervers (or thoſe that watch as ſpies upon me) gape.

c. אֲהַלֵּל

V. 4. In God] That הָלַל in Piel ſignifies to praiſe, there is no doubt; and if it do ſo here, it will be neceſſary to ſoften the phraſe, which otherwiſe ſounds ſome-what rough, and in ſtead of בֵּאלֹהִים אֲהַלֵּל דְּבָרִי which we render literally, In the Lord I will praiſe his word] to read, The Lord his word will I praiſe,] which is eaſily done, if only ב (as oft it is) be reckoned as a pleonaſm. But the word ſignifies alſo to glory, or boaſt, as Pſal. 10. 3. the wicked הַלַּל boaſts, the Targum reads, אִשְׁתַּבַּח rejoyceth, or glories in his own hearts deſire; and this notion ſeems better to belong to it here, where it is joyned with putting truſt in God, for ſo to glory and boaſt in God, is to profeſs dependance on him, and none elſe, and ſo the Syriack hath diſtinctly rendred it ܒܐܠܗܐ ܢܫܒܚ in God will I glory. The LXXII. ſeems to have read דְּבָרַי my words; for they render it ἐν τῷ Θεῷ ἐπαινέσω τοὺς λόγους μου, In the Lord I will praiſe my words, and ſo the Latine, and Arabick, and Æthiopick follow them, In Deo laudabo ſermones meos, it will not be eaſie to divine with what ſenſe. What is here ſaid [in God, and again in God] is with ſome change repeated v. 10. בֵּאלֹהִים in God and בַּיהוָה in the Lord. Of theſe two words the Rabbins obſerve, that אֱלֹהִים God

בֵּאלֹהִים בַּיהוָה

God is מִדַּת הַדִּין the attribute of justice, but יהוה Lord, מִדַּת הָרַחֲמִים the attribute of compassion. And accordingly the Chaldee here reads, בְּמִדַּת דִּינָא &c. in the attribute of the justice of God I will praise, or rejoyce in his word, בְּמִדַּת רַחֲמַיָּא in the attribute of his pity, &c. i. e. whether he punish, or he pities, I will praise him, or boast or glory in him.

d. עָצַב

V. 5. Wrest] עָצַב signifying first to grieve, or be in pain, is used by metonymie for any laborious framing, or forming any thing. Here being applied to anothers words, or speeches, it seems to note the depraving them, labouring, and using great art and diligence, to put them into such a form as may be most for the disadvantage of the speaker, turning and winding them to his hurt, putting some odious gloss upon them, and so according to sense, may most fitly be rendred depraving. This perhaps the LXXII. meant when they rendred it διαστρεφουσιν, not as that signifies detesting abhorring, but making them detestable, putting an odious, abhorred sense upon them. The Syriack here read ܒܥܠ ܡܕ ܥܒ ܠܝ, they took counsel against me, reading יִעֲצֹב by taking counsel, labouring and industriously contriving and consulting, דִּבְרַי my words, by [me] and then supposing the preposition ל against, to be wanting, they thought fit to supply it, and thus to paraphrase this obscure phrase, and make it agree with that which follows, all their thoughts, or contrivances, are against me for evil.

e. גּוּר

V. 6. Gather] גּוּר that signifies to dwell or to sojourn, signifies also (in the notion of אָגַר) to assemble, to meet together, and so the Chaldee interpret it here, יִתְכַּנְשׁוּן they shall assemble together; but the LXXII. reteining the former notion, render it παροικησουσι, they shall inhabit.

f. פָּלַט

V. 7. Escape] Of פָּלַט it is observed by Lexicographers, that as in Kal it signifies to escape or go out, so in Piel, it is used for casting out or throwing away, so saith Kimchi in his rootes, (adding that the noun from thence signifies an abject vile person, Judg. 12. 4, 5. and Isa. 45. 20.) so Jon. 2. 10. where the Hebrew hath הַדָּגָה the fish vomited out Jonah, &c. the Chaldee render it וּפְלַט where it evidently signifies to cast or vomit out; so Levit. 18. 25. and 28. the Chaldee useth it of the lands vomiting out its inhabitants, and so the Rabbins use פְּלִיטָא for vomit. And then the place will be thus literally interpretable, עַל אֵין for, or according to their iniquity, פֶּלֶט לָהֶם abjection, casting, or vomiting out shall be to them, i. e. they shall, as vile persons, be rejected and cast out by God. And thus the Chaldee appear to have understood it, who render it רוּקָן יְהֵוֹן they shall be empty or vile; and to this best connects that which follows in the verse, In thine anger cast down the people.

The

The Fifty Seventh PSALM.

Paraphrase.

TO the chief Musitian, [a] Altaschith, Michtam of David, when he fled from Saul in the Cave.

The fifty seventh Psalm was composed by David, on occasion of what happened in Sauls pursuing him, 1 Sam. 24. when David finding Saul in the Cave, might have killed him if he would, but spared him, and thereby gave him assurance of his friendship (and not, as he had been calumniated, enmity) to him. It was set to the tune of a former Psalm, which began with the words, Destroy me not, and it is (as the former) stiled his jewel, (see note on Psal. 16. a.) in respect of the greatness of the mercy recounted in it. It was committed to the Presect of his Musick. a.

1. Be merciful unto me, O Lord, be merciful unto me, for my soul trusteth in thee: yea in the shaddow of thy wings will I make my refuge, untill these calamities be overpast.

1. To thee, O Lord, I make my most affectionate and humble address, relying on thee, reposing my whole trust in thee, neither seeking nor projecting any means of safety to my self, save that which consists in thine only aid and protection. Be thou mercifully pleased to afford me this at this time, and continue it, till this persecution be over.

‖ performeth for me גֹּמֵר עָלַי

2. I will cry unto God most high, unto God that ‖ performeth all things for me.

2. The Lord that hath espoused my cause, is a God of might. All that I ever received, hath been from him, my deliverances his immediate vouchsafements; to him therefore now do I with all chearful confidence address my supplications.

‖ he hath put to shame.

3. He shall send from heaven and save me ‖ from [b] the reproach of him that would swallow me up. Selah. God shall send forth his mercy and his truth.

3. When malicious-minded men are most bitterly set against me, even to devour b.

and destroy me utterly, God shall send me relief from his throne, by some means which he shall think fittest to chuse for me, by his † Angels, or by his gracious over-ruling providence, disappointing those that had these bloody designs against me. He hath bound himself by promise, and so both his mercy and fidelity are concerned in it, and he will make good both unto me.

† so the Chald.

† I lie, or, my soul, I lie among lions, the sons of men are set on fire, their teeth——

4. † [c] My Soul is among Lions, and I lie even among them that are set on fire, even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword.

4. My life is in the same danger as if I were incompast with Lions; virulent men, such as are continually c.

inflaming and inciting Saul to pursue and destroy me, never say any thing but with some bloody design of bringing mischief upon me.

5. Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens, let thy glory be above all the earth.

5. Lord, be thou pleased to rescue me out of this danger, and so to magnifie thy own glory over the pride and malice of the greatest men, by discomfiting and frustrating the designs of such.

6. They have prepared a net for my steps, my soul is bowed down: they have digged a pit before me, into the midst of which they are fallen themselves. Selah.

6. They have designed very treacherously against me, like fowlers that by digging holes; and laying gins or toils in them, insnare the simple unwary bird; and God hath disappointed them in all their designs, brought on them what they had projected against me.

[a] prepared (נָכוֹן) see 2 Chron. 30.19. Ezr. 7.10. Psal. 10.17.

7. My heart is * fixed, O God, my heart is fixed; I will sing, and give praise.

7. This is enough to raise and enliven, and inspirit any mans heart, to praise and magnifie the mercy of so signal a deliverance. And as there is nothing so fit, so nothing that I shall more readily perform.

‖ I will awake the morning.

8. Awake up my glory, awake Psaltery and Harp, ‖ I my self will [d] awake early.

8. My tongue (see Psal. 16. note i.) shall begin the d.

hymn, and the instruments of Musick shall follow in a chearful and melodious note, they shall no longer lie idle, when such eminent mercies exact their acknowledgments, and my heart, whose tribute is most due, and every member of my body, faculty of my soul, and action of my life shall be most diligent in an early payment of it.

9. I will praise thee, O God, among the people, I will sing unto thee among the nations.

9. My acknowledgment shall not be made to thee in private only, but in the midst of the congregation, with the greatest solemnity possible, calling all others to assist me in so weighty a work.

† Sky.

10. For thy mercy is great unto the heavens, and thy truth unto [e] the † clouds.

10. For thou hast in a most eminent manner, made e.

good thy great mercy most undeservedly and gratiously promised to me, and thereby thy fidelity also.

* or thy glory is

11. Be thou exalted, Lord, above the heavens, ‖ let thy glory be above all the earth.

11. Lord, be thou pleased to rescue me out of this present danger, and so to magnifie thy own glory over the pride and malice of the greatest men by disappointing and frustrating their designs against me, (see v. 5.)

Annotations

Annotations on Psalm LVII.

Tit. Altaschith] אַל תַּשְׁחֵת from שָׁחַת perdidit, is a form of deprecation [destroy not.] It is four times used in the titles of the Psalms, in this, and the two next succeeding 58. and 59. and 75. This makes the Chaldees glois improbable, viz. that it was composed at a time, when he said Destroy me not, for that will not fitly be applicable to any, much less to all of these. 'Tis much more probable that as many other titles of the Psalms, so this was designed to denote the melody or tune to which it was set, the same that had formerly belonged to some Psalm or hymn, beginning with those words, הַל תַּשְׁחֵת destroy not.

a. אַל תַּשְׁחֵת

V. 3. The reproach] All the Antient Interpreters make חֵרֵף a verb (and so sure it is of the preterperfect tense in Piel) and apply it to God, that he shall deliver David, having shamed or reproached his enemies. So the Chaldee חֲסַד he hath reproached, the Syriack ܚܣܕ and he shamed or reproached. So before them the LXXII. ὠνείδισεν εἰς ὄνειδος, the Vulgar dedit in opprobrium, he gave to reproach, and accordingly the Arabick and Æthiopick. And in all reason so we are to render it, rather then imagine the præfix מ to be wanting. But another rendring the words are also capable of, חֵרֵף שֹׁאֲפִי he that would swallow me up hath reproach't or rail'd against me.

b. חֵרֵף

V. 4. My soul] The rendring of this fourth verse will depend upon the notion of נַפְשִׁי my soul. This, according to the most usual notion of נֶפֶשׁ signifies no more then I my self, and then it may not improbably connect with אֶשְׁכְּבָה in the first person my soul, i. e. I lie among Lions: If not so, yet reteining the literal rendring [my soul] that may be taken in the vocative case, as part of a soliloquy, O my soul, I lie—In either of these rendrings the following words will flow readily, לַהֲטִים בְּנֵי אָדָם the sons of men are set on fire, שִׁנֵּיהֶם &c. their teeth are spears——

c. נַפְשִׁי

לַהֲטִים

V. 8. Awake] אָעִירָה from עוּר is most fitly to be taken in the transitive sense for exciting or stirring up, and so awakening. So 'tis generally taken, and then שַׁחַר being a noun, that signifies the dawning first light of the morning, the phrase אָעִירָה שָׁחַר will be best rendred, I will awake the morning, a Poetick strain, imitated by Ovid, and frequent among Poets, Non vigilat ales ibi cristati cantibus oris Evocat auroram, The cock by his crowing calls up the morning there.

d. אָעִירָה שָׁחַר

V. 10. The clouds] From שָׁחַק comminuit, is the noun שְׁחָק the heaven, from the thinness of the Substance thereof. And it seems to be taken not for the aereal part (which contains the Clouds) but the ethereal, which comprehends the Sun, Moon, and Stars. So Psalm. 89. 37. where the Moon is called the faithfull witness בַּשְּׁחָק in heaven. So v. 6. who in the heavens בַּשְּׁחָק shall be compared unto the Lord? meaning the highest heavens, not the clouds. So Isai. 45. 8. שְׁחָקִים in the plural, Let the heavens distill righteousness, to signifie not the clouds that distill the dew (as the Chaldee there understands, and renders it, וְעַנְנַיָּא and the clouds) but God the Lord, that doth all these things, v. 7. so Jer. 51. 9. is lifted up to שְׁחָקִים where the Chaldee renders שְׁמֵי שְׁמַיָּא the heavens of heavens, or highest heavens. I suppose there in the notion of the highest heavens, though that phrase do not always signifie so (see note on Psal. 148. 4.) And so in this place שְׁחָקִים in the former part of the verse regularly signifies the regions of the air, frequently called οὐρανοὶ, heavens; and then in all reason שְׁחָק shall signifie not the same again, but the ethereal regions, and so will best be rendred, Skie, the seat of the Stars: the Chaldee reteineth the same word, only changed into the plural, שְׁחָקִים, heavens, the Syriack also, departing from the LXXII. (which read νεφῶν, clouds) render it ܠܥܠ̈ܡ ܫܡ̈ܝܐ, to the heavens of heavens. The Jewish Arab renders it שואהק from a root differing from the Hebrew only by the change of ח into ה, שׁהק, which though not usually found applied to the heavens, yet may well signifie the highest of them, properly signifying heights, as joyned with the name of mountain, the heights or highest tops of the mountains, and that is the peculiar style for the ethereal bodies, ὕψος, heights, and ὕψιστος, the highest, which makes it reasonable for us to render it Skie, and not Clouds.

The Fifty Eighth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

The fifty eighth Psalm is a contemplation of the injustice and incorrigible wickedness of men, especially of his enemies that exasperated Saul against him, together with Gods unexpected speedy vengeance on them. 'Twas set to the tune which began with the words, Destroy not, (see note on Psal. 57. a.) and (as several others) styled Davids jewel, because of the signal acts of Gods just judgment mentioned in it, (see note on Psal. 16. a.) and was composed by David, and committed to the Præfect of his Musick.

To the chief Musitian, Altaschith, Michtam of David.

1. 'Tis lamentable to consider how little truth and justice is left in the world, even among those, whose quality most exact it from them.

1. Do ye indeed speak righteousness, O ‖ congregations? do ye judge uprightly, O ye sons of men?

‖ congregation אִלְּמִים

a. 2. All their thoughts and designs are continually imployed in mischief, all the business of their lives to fit it, and frame it, perfect and compass it to the best advantage.

2. Yea in heart ye work wickedness, † you ª weigh the violence of your hands in the earth.

† on the earth; Your hands, or you with your hands frame violence.

b. 3. Vice begins and takes possession of them very early, from their very birth, as it

3. The wicked are estranged ᵇ from the womb; they go astray * as soon as they be born, speaking lyes.

* from the belly

מִבֶּטֶן

it were; in their very first and tenderest childhood, they transgress the rules of justice, tell lyes as soon as they are able to speak; the corruption of their nature soon shews it self in inclinations to ill, and they make not use of divine grace, or humane discipline, to restrain it, but set out, and begin their age with sinning, and so proceed without reformation.

4. Their poison is like the poison of a serpent: they are like [c] the deaf adder that stoppeth her ear.

4, 5. They are full of nothing but wickedness, therein to be resembled to serpents, the most poisonous noxious creatures: and one c.

‖ the wisard that useth incantations

5. Which will not hearken to the voice of the [d] charmers, ‖ charming never so wisely. d.

resemblance more they have to one famous sort of serpents, those of whom the naturalists say, that being deaf of one ear by nature, they have a way of making themselves perfectly deaf, on purpose to preserve themselves from the force of the wisards charms, designed to lull them asleep and take them. And thus do these obstinate incorrigible men resolve never to admit or hearken to any means, which may have force to perswade them to leave their wicked ways, are to all methods of working their reformation impregnable, and impersuasible.

‖ Thou wilt break

6. ‖ Break their [e] teeth, O God, in their mouth; break out the † great teeth of the young Lions, O Lord.

6. But God will disappoint their poisonous and mischievous designs; he will e.

† grinders מְלְתָּעוֹת weaken and disable them, deprive them of the weapons, or opportunities of their malice; as snakes or serpents that have their teeth pulled out: and for the more violent open oppressors, that Lion-like invade the innocent, he will disarm them of those instruments whereby they rend and enjoy their prey, and though their ravenous wicked inclinations and appetites remain, yet shall God restrain them from breaking out, to the destroying of his servants.

* They shall melt as waters go from themselves; he shall direct his arrows (see note on Psa. 64. a.) as if they were cut asunder.

7. * Let them melt away as waters that [f] run continually: when he bendeth his bow to shoot his arrows, let them be cut in pieces.

7. Their preparations and forces shall be routed, all their designs disappointed f.

and frustrated, never attaining the end which their malice had projected to the hurt of others.

‖ he shall passaway as the deciduous falo, or dead embryon of a woman, they shall not---

8. As a [g] snail that melteth, ‖ let every one of them pass away, like the untimely fruit of a woman, that they may not see the Sun.

8. As a snail melts, and exhausts, and utterly consumes it self, when it goes g.

out of the shell, every motion tends to the dissolving and melting of it; or as an Embryon in the womb, when the ligatures of life are dissolved, presently pines away, and comes to nought; so shall they and all their malitious designs be blasted and frustrated and destroyed, and never arrive or attain to their desired success.

† or thorns know the brier.

9. Before your [h] † pots can feel the thorns, he shall * take them away as with a whirlewind, both living and in his wrath.

9. And the unexpected suddenness of this is oft very h.

observable: You cannot imagine a cauldron, with a flame of brambles or thorns under it, to be sooner heated, and that which is in it scalded by the fire, or a thorn and a brier entangled one in another, than this vexation, or destruction and discomfiture is wrought on wicked men: As a tempest, or whirlewind, or as a man in a rage hurries away any thing, so shall the wicked be hurried away, seised on, and carried alive, as it were, in a trice, before they can think of any means to prevent it.

* swrythem away as it were alive, as it were in fury; or so shall rawness, so shall anguish know them, or affright them.

10. The righteous shall rejoyce when he seeth the vengeance; he shall [i] wash his footsteps in the blood of the wicked.

10. All good men shall see, and observe this dealing i.

of God with these, and bless his Name for their own deliverance out of their hands, and receive benefit and confirmation by sight of this vengeance that falls on them.

‖ And † fruit פְּרִי

11. ‖ So that a man shall say, Verily there is † a reward for the righteous; verily he is a God that judgeth the earth.

11. And all that behold it shall be forced to acknowledge, that piety and vertue are matters of advantage and benefit in this world, (abstracted from all reward in another life;) disappointments, and suddain blasts, and destructions being the ordinary guerdon of impiety, and peace and prosperity of conscientious and pious dealing, of justice, and of charity. And this on both sides an infallible evidence of conviction, that this world is not governed by chance, but administred and managed by an all-mighty, all-wise, and most just providence.

Annotations on Psalm LVIII.

a. בָּאָרֶץ

V. 2. Weigh] All the Antient Interpreters consent to annex בָּאָרֶץ on the earth] to the former part of the verse: ἀνομίας ἐργάζεσθε ἐν τῇ γῇ, ye work wickedness on the earth, say the LXXII. and so the Chaldee, and Syriack, &c. by that meaning all the space that they live upon the earth in this world. Then for יְדֵיכֶם your hands,] they generally render it so, as to go before, and govern the verb תְּפַלְּסוּן: so the LXXII. ἀδικίαν αἱ χεῖρες ὑμῶν συμπλέκουσιν; and the vulgar, injustitias manus vestræ concinnant, your hands weave, or frame wickedness; the Chaldee יְתַקְּנוּן חֲטוֹף אִידֵיכוֹן your hands prepare evil; and the rest after the same manner, (only the Jewish Arab goes the other way, reading, In the regions you weigh the injustice of your hands.) And in case the verb (as it will bear) should be in the second person, there will yet be no reason to joyn יְדֵיכֶם to חֲמָס the iniquity of your hands: The more probable rendring will be by understanding the prepositon ב (prefixt to לֵב heart in the former part of the verse, and so fit to be ἀπὸ κοινοῦ, repeated here) in, or with the heart ye work wickedness on the earth, with your hands you frame or prepare violence. The word פָּלַס signifies to weigh in a balance, and to frame any thing by rule and line: and in this latter sense the Chaldee understand it, rendring it by יְתַקְּנוּן from תָּקַן to prepare, or fit, or frame, any thing; and herein the Latine choose to follow them (rather than the LXXII.) concinnant, they frame, which the LXXII. more loosely and paraphrastically render, συμπλέκουσι, they complicate, as that signifies weaving, or texture, and so by a metaphore, framing also.

b. מֵרֶחֶם מִבֶּטֶן זרו

3. From the womb] מֵרֶחֶם and מִבֶּטֶן, from the womb, and from the belly, are not strictly to be taken for the hour or minute after birth, as if they did actually sin, or tell lyes, as soon as ever they were born; but in that latitude that aversion (so זרו signifies) and straying and speaking lyes are capable of, i. e. as soon as they are by age, and understanding, and use of their faculties qualified for sinning, which is not many moneths after their birth, they do actually fall into sin, and accordingly grow up with it, without reformation.

c. פֶּתֶן חֵרֵשׁ

V. 4. Deaf adder] פֶּתֶן חֵרֵשׁ the deaf viper, or adder, is said to be so called, because (saith Schindler in the word פֶּתֶן) being deaf of one ear, he useth to stop the other with dust, or with his tail, to avoid the force of charms or incantations wherewith he is wont to be caught. Of this art of catching Dragons in India, Philostratus gives an account in the * life of Apollonius; On the mountain, saith he, δρυόντων δηλα σφεωτέρων φασι; they are wont to hunt the dragons; and there are three parts of the prize, when they are caught (κράτος τοῖς ἁλοῦσι) δράκαινοι, δορὰ, ὀδόντες, the eyes, the skin, and the teeth, but especially the first, the apples of their eyes being λίθος δράκοντος, a stone bright as fire, ἀνθηρὸς, ἢ πάντα ἀπαγγέλων χρώματα, πάσης ἰσχὺν ἀπόῤῥητον, florid and ſparkling out all manner of colours, and of ſecret and unſpeakable efficacy, ſuch as Gyges his ring is ſaid to be. The hope of this gain ſtirs up the inhabitants to uſe all arts to circumvent and take them. And this is the Indian manner of

P. 114. C. it, Κοκκοβαφῆ πέπλον —— they take a ſcarlet coat imbroydered with golden letters, and ſpread it before the ſerpents hole, and theſe golden letters have a faſcinating power over him, and therewith his eyes, though as hard as ſtones, are yet overcome and laid to ſleep. And beſides, πολλὰ τῆς ἀπῤῥήτου σοφίας ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἀφιᾶσιν, οἷς ἄγκιστά τε καὶ ἀγχίνοια ὑπεκλαπεῖσα τὰ χείρω, ὄπισθεν ἐπιδοῦσα τῆς γραμμοῦς, They have Charms of hidden wiſdom (or ſorcery) which they uſe to him, and thereby he is brought to put his neck out of the hole, and ſleep upon the golden letters, and then the Indian taking that advantage cutteth off his head with an axe, and ſeiſeth upon his prey, the ſtones which he findes in the head. Here is a ſignal teſtimony of the received cuſtome of charming or inchanting of ſerpents, very agreeable to the expreſſion of the Chaldee here, which ſtiles it the voice of inchanting words, which binde the Serpents, i. e. lay them faſt aſleep. For the avoiding of which danger, the deaf addir, ſo called, becauſe he hears but of one ear, is ſuppoſed to ſtop his other ear, and ſo to ſecure himſelf. Whether there be exact truth in this, is not material to the Pſalmiſts uſe of it, or to the explicating the meaning of this alluſion, which as from a thing vulgarly believed, ſets forth the matter in hand, the imperſuaſibleneſs of wicked men, who will not be wrought upon by any the wiſeſt and divineſt arts of perſwaſion, to forſake his courſe, or be won and gained and caught to virtue, but fortifies himſelf impregnable againſt all ſuch artifices, that he can foreſee likely to have efficacy upon him.

d. מְלַחֲשִׁים V. 5. Charmers] מְלַחֲשִׁים from לָחַשׁ to murmur or whiſper, ſignifies thoſe that uſe charms. As for מְחֻכָּם the other part of the verſe, it will beſt be underſtood by joyning the laſt word מְחֻכָּם the wiſe, or wiſard, by way of appoſition to the charmers precedent; and then with that will connect חוֹבֵר חֲבָרִים that inchants inchantments, i. e. uſeth all the inchantments he is חוֹבֵר furniſht with, חוֹבֵר (from חָבַר to aſſociate) denoting a conjurer, or inchanter, that either brings many creatures into one place by his charms, or elſe ſtills them, that they ſhall not hurt, by that means. And then the phraſe [inchanting inchantments] is but ordinary Hebrew ſtile, very frequent in all words where any ἀύξησις, aggravation is to be expreſt.

e. שִׁנֵּימוֹ V. 6. Teeth] The mention of [teeth] in this firſt place, with the relative [their,] looks moſt probably on the adders or ſerpents immediately foregoing, whoſe poyſon and noxious power is in their teeth, and the way to diſarm a ſnake is to deprive him of his teeth. This they that keep them tame uſually do, by putting to them a piece of red cloth in which they love to fix their teeth, and ſo draw them out. And breaking them is equivalent to drawing them. This mention of teeth fairly introduces that which follows concerning the Lion, whoſe doing miſchief with that part is more violent and formidable, and ſo ſignifies the open riotous invader, the violent and lawleſs perſon, as the ſerpents teeth the more ſecret undiſcernible wounds of the whiſperer, or backbiter, which yet are as dangerous and deſtructive as the former, by the ſmalleſt prick killing him on whom they faſten.

f. יִתְהַלְכוּ V. 7. Run] יִתְהַלְכוּ (from הָלַךְ going or going away) will be here beſt joyned with כְּמוֹ מַיִם as waters, and לָמוֹ rendred thus, They ſhall melt as waters depart or go לָמוֹ from themſelves (ſo the Chaldee יְזָלוּן לְהוֹן they ſhall fall away from themſelves) this being the nature of water, when it is not coopt up in ſome veſſel, or incloſed within banks, to run about, to depart from its own ſpherical nature, and every part to leave the other (ſo the Jewiſh Arab reads, let them be diſſolved as waters, that go their way) or when it is in a current, continually to flow, and not remain: and ſo the reſemblance is moſt fit to deſcribe the deſtruction which is here aboded to the wicked, by way of melting or falling aſunder, which is nothing elſe but the departing of one part from the other, ſo as not to return again to their ſtate. To this well accords the other part of this verſe, He ſhall direct or ſend יִתְמַלֵּלוּ out his arrows, כְּמוֹ יִתְמַלֵּלוּ as if they were cut in ſunder, (from מוֹל to cut in pieces:) i. e. when he prepares his arrows, ſends out the inſtruments of his malice, they ſhall not come to their deſigned mark; but, as when arrows are cut in ſunder, before they go out of the bow the pieces fly not out, but fall preſently to the ground, ſo ſhall it be with his intended miſchiefs, they ſhall be fruſtrated, diſappointed utterly, unable to hurt any man. Abu Walid obſerves of the word יִתְמַלֵּלוּ, that it implies as much as if 'twere ſaid, let them be cut in two like ſtraws. And the Jewiſh Arab, though he interpret the former part by change of the perſon, [when thou ſetteſt thine arrows to the ſtring againſt them] yet in this part he agrees, [ſo let them be cut off as an ear of corn.] The noun מְלוּלוֹת we have Deut. 23. 26. for ſtalks, or ears of corn; and if the verb may draw any ſignification from thence, then this will be the meaning, that their arrows, when ſhot, ſhould fall aſunder, like the ear from the ſtraw, to which Job ſeems to refer ch. 41. 27, 29. He eſteemeth iron as ſtraw, and braſs as rotten wood, Darts are counted as ſtubble, &c.
יִמָּאֲסוּ In the beginning of the verſe, for יִמָּאֲסוּ ſhall melt, from מָסַס liquefacit, the LXXII. reads ἐξουδενωθήσονται, which is thought to ſignifie being deſpiſed or contemned, and ſo to be the rendring of מָאַס ſprevit: but ἐξουδενῶν may rather be underſtood there for bringing to nothing, and ſo the vulgar Latine underſtood the LXXII. who read ad nihilum devenient, they ſhall come to nothing; and ſo it is a clear periphraſis of the melting which the Hebrew deſigned, and fitly agrees to the reſemblance of water falling on a plain, where it runs abroad, and comes to nothing.

שַׁבְלוּל V. 8. Snail] What שַׁבְלוּל here ſignifies cannot be certainly defined, being but this once in the whole Bible. The LXXII. render it ὡσεὶ κηρὸς, as wax, and the Syriack and Latine &c. follow them. And if it יָהֵלֶךְ be thus rendred, then the verb יָהֵלֶךְ which is joyned to it, muſt be taken in the Arabick notion of it (not unuſual in the Bible) for periſhing and being deſtroyed, or in the notion wherein 'tis uſed here v. 7. of waters which go from themſelves, and is there a reſemblance of melting. But the Chaldee may alſo deſerve to be heard, who read הֵיךְ וְחֵיל תִּבְלָלָא as a reptile, or crawling, &c. which interpreting the word of ſome creeping thing, which is an eminent example of melting, ſeems to apply it to a ſnail, (which notion Abu Walid prefers before any) when he goes out of his ſhell, (to which alſo the [הֵלֶךְ walking or going out] fitly agrees) which melts and leaves the marks thereof behind, whereſoever he goes, מָאַס אוֹרְחוֹהִי wets or moiſtens his way, ſaith the Chaldee, till at length by degrees he conſumes and deſtroys himſelf. And נֹפֶל אִשָּׁה with this agrees the latter part of the verſe, that other reſemblance of נֹפֶל אִשָּׁה the abortive, or as the word from נָפַל ſignifies, the falling fruit of a woman, meaning the child in the womb, when by the diſſolving of the ligatures, by which it is knit to the womb, and by which it receives all its nouriſhment, it falls down, and if it continue in the womb, from that time it preſently melts and conſumes away, away, as the ſnail did by going out of his ſhell. For this the LXXII. read ἔπεσε πῦρ, the fire fell (and ſo the Latine and Syriack, &c.) reading it ſeems נָפַל אֵשׁ and applying it to the laſt precedent. As on the other ſide, the Chaldee, looking forward to the concluſion of the verſe, of not ſeeing the Sun, for אִשָּׁה the woman, read אֲשׁוּרָה the mole, and ſo joyn that with the abortive child, as an abortive and blind mole (ſo falſe conceptions, or liveleſs embryons are wont to be called) which ſee not the Sun. But the Hebrew will beſt be rendred ſo, as the ſnail and the child dead in the womb may be the two reſemblances to expreſs the blaſting of the wicked mans deſignes; and then the not ſeeing the Sun] be applied only to the wicked, not either to the ſnail, or that fruit in the womb (though in the latter of them it certainly holds alſo) that he ſhall not ſee the Sun, i. e. ſhall not bring his deſigned or projected malice to light, ſhall be diſappointed and blaſted, and conſumed, before he bring it forth.

h. סִיר V. 9. Pots] סִיר ſignifies two things, a thorne, and a pot or veſſel to be ſet over the fire. In the latter ſenſe the LXXII. (though they here, and Eccl. 7. 7. render it in the former ἀκάνθας, and Hoſ. 2. 6. (κόλας) do oft take it and render it λέβητα, cauldron, 22. times, and χαλκεῖον, braſs-pot twice, and κρέαγρα, which we render pot, 2 Chron. 4. 11. and ταφάν, a pan, Exod. 27. 3. and 38. 3. and Jer. 52. 18. and ἀσπονδύλην, a cauldron, Jerem. 52. 19. And if we ſhall here take it in that ſenſe, then for the pot to underſtand (ſo יָבִינוּ from בּוּן ſignifies) or rather to feel the thorns, i. e. the fire that is made of thorns (a quick and ſcorching fire) will be no more than to be heated by a fire of thorns: That is very inſtantly done, the fire is inſtantly kindled into a great flame, and ſo the Cauldrons that are over it are ſoon heated, and what is in them, ſcalded by it. This reſemblance therefore is fitly ſet to expreſs the ſwiftneſs of wicked mens deſtruction, and hath the ſame importance, that the Greek adage, Ἄσυα ἐς πῦρ, or the Latine, citius quam aſparagi coquuntur, ſooner than aſparagus is boiled. (which yet is ſo very little while a doing.) But the LXXII. as was ſaid, render סִיר here in the other notion by ἀκάνθας, thorns; and ſo it may alſo ſignifie. For thorns and briers, סִיר and אָטָד, being both noxious ſhrubs, of the ſame kind, full of hooks and prickles, upon the firſt touch are united and claſpt faſt together, entangled in one another, and grow one upon the ſaddain, have an intimate acquaintance as it were (the importance of יָבִינוּ) upon the firſt meeting. And in this ſenſe there is ground alſo for the Proverb, eſpecially when there is ſpeech of divers naughty perſons (as here there is) agreeing one with the other in their irregular intangling figures, i. e. in the like miſchievous diſpoſitions. And to this purpoſe is that adage in Ariſtotle, Moral. l. 7. ἔγνω ὁ φὼξ τὸν φῶξ καὶ λύκος λύκον, One thief, and one wolf or rapacious perſon knoweth another. And then it will be thus rendred, Ere your thorns underſtand or know the brier, ere they are combined together, where they can grow acquainted (which they uſually do at their very firſt encounter, and can hardly be got aſunder again) בְּטֶרֶם סִירֵיכֶם חָרִיל יִשְׁעָרֵנּוּ ſo, &c. Theſe latter words (as the former, and in proportion with them) are alſo capable of a double interpretation. For if חַי be taken, as moſt frequently it is, for viuum, living, then moſt probably יִשְׁעָרֵנּוּ muſt be rendred in the notion of שָׂעַר horruit, or horripilavit, horror or ſtaring of the hair, cauſed by fright, or of סָעַר (changing שׁ into ס) carrying away with a whirlwind or tempeſt; and then the latter part will be thus rendred, ſo ſhall he affright and perplex them, or ſo ſhall he hurry them away with a whirlwind, as it were alive (as when the earth ſwallowed up Coreh) and (again) as in anger or fury. For when a man is in rage, then he hurries them away with whom he is thus diſpleaſed, and ſtays not firſt to kill, and then carry away, which requires time, but as it were alive hurries them tempeſtuouſly no man knows whither, by both theſe noting the ſwiftneſs and terribleneſs of it. And though God be not capable of ſuch incitation, yet כְּמוֹ, as if he were thus in a rage or incitation, he will thus hurry them away, as it were alive. And ſo this may be the meaning of the phraſe, if only we ſuppoſe an elipſis of ב in before חֲרוֹן, and read as it were in anger, or fury; but it is poſſible חַי may be ſubſtantively taken, and be of ſome affinity with חֲרוֹן and then both theſe joyn together in the nominative caſe. To which purpoſe it may be conſidered, that Levit. 13. 16. in the examination of the leper, חַי ſignifies raw fleſh, and ſo our old tranſlation here took it, rendring it a thing that is raw. And then rawneſs and anger (in that dialect, wherein we call a ſore angry, which is painful or inflamed) will ſignifie joyntly that anguiſh which proceeds from an inflamed wound, and thus be rendred, ſo ſhall rawneſs, ſo ſhall anger, or inflammation (חֲרוֹן from חָרָה inflammatus eſt) affright, or perplex them. Beſides this, the Arabick notion of שָׂעַר is conſiderable, for knowing or underſtanding; and then there will be a farther elegancy, in alluſion to the knowing of the briers and thorns forementioned; and the rendring thus, Ere the thorns know the briers, ſo ſhall rawneſs, ſo ſhall inflammation or anguiſh know them. And if חַי will bear this ſenſe propoſed, this will be a fair and ready meaning of the paſſage.

i. פַּעַם V. 10. Waſh his footſteps] פַּעַם ſignifies primarily (from פָּעַם impulit) an hammer, then the ſoles of the feet by which the earth is troden on, or beaten: ſo the LXXII. (though here they read χεῖρες, hands) render it Pſal. 17. 5. διαβήματά μου, my footſteps, where the Chaldee hath רַגְלַי my feet. As for the phraſe, waſhing their feet in the blood of the ungodly, it literally ſignifies the plentifull effuſion of the blood of wicked men, which the godly live to ſee; but figuratively to refreſh (as waſhing of feet was deſigned to weary travailers) to recreate, and withal to benefit and profit them (as bathing was a principal part of the antient medicine;) and ſo, beſides the thankful acknowledgment of Gods mercy to them, in thus deſtroying their enemies, (which is ſome refreſhment to thoſe that are under their perſecution) they receive profitable document alſo to cleave faſt to God, and the practice of all virtue, which hath this aſſurance to be ſecured and remunerated in this life.

The Fifty Ninth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The fifty ninth Pſalm was compoſed on a ſpecial occaſion, ſet down 1 Sam. 19. 11. when, after Sauls caſting his javelin at David, he fled to his own houſe, and Saul ſent meſſengers to watch the houſe in the night, that they might ſlay him in the morning, but David being by Michals help let down by a window, eſcaped, v. 20. This Pſalm, as the former, was called his jewel, and was ſet to the tune forementioned (Pſal. 57. a.) and committed to the Præfect of his Muſick.

TO the chief Muſitian, Altaſchith, Michtam of David, when Saul ſent, and they watcht the houſe to kill him.

1, 2. O thou my moſt gratious God, mine only Protector and Defender, be thou pleaſed to interpoſe thine hand, to reſcue me out of the power of my wicked and blood-thirſty enemies.

1. Deliver me from mine enemies, O my God: defend me from them that riſe up againſt me.
2. Deliver me from the workers of iniquity, and ſave me from the bloody man.

3, 4. Now is a ſeaſon for this thy ſpecial interpoſition, for the aid and relief of thy all-ſeeing Providence; for now Saul and his ſervants have deſigned my death: and though I never in the leaſt provoked him, but, on the other ſide, have deſerved very well of him, yet are they reſolved to intrap and catch me, and then to take away my life.

3. For lo, they lie in wait for my ſoul: the mighty are gathered againſt me, not for my tranſgreſſion, not for my ſin, O Lord.
4. They run and prepare without my fault: awake to help me, and behold.

5. Now therefore, O thou moſt powerful God, which canſt with the leaſt beck of thine diſcomfit the ſtrongeſt forces, and haſt promiſed to watch over thy faithful ſervants, be thou pleaſed to ſhew forth thy juſt judgments among men, to vindicate the innocent, and to diſſipate all obſtinate wilful ſinners, (ſee v. 8. and Pſalm 10. 16.) This thou wilt certainly do, who art the upright judge of all the word: and though thou wilt pardon, and accept upon their repentance and amendment, the lapſes of thy ſervants; yet 'tis certain, that even in thy covenant of mercy there is no relief for the wilful and impenitent: And this abodes moſt ſadly to Saul at this time.

5. Thou therefore, O Lord God of hoſts, the God of Iſrael, awake to viſit all ‖ the heathen, be not merciful to any wicked tranſgreſſor. Selah.

‖ or nations. גּוֹיִם

6. As hungry dogs that come home at evening, and are very unquiet, and go about the walls of the City for Carrion, dead carcaſſes caſt out thither, or any thing elſe that may ſatisfie their hunger; ſo do the ſervants of Saul purſue and ſeek after my life, with the greateſt impatience and greedineſs that is poſſible.

6. They return at evening; they make a noiſe like a dog, and go round about the City.

a. 7. All their conſultations and diſcourſe is to contrive how they may take away my life; and herein they go on unanimouſly, no man among them makes conſcience of duty, (as if there were never a God in heaven to obſerve and puniſh ſuch injuſtice and violence.)

7. Behold, they [a] † belch out with their mouth, ſwords are in their lips; for, * Who, ſay they, doth hear?

† ſpeak with * or who doth hear, or obey שֹׁמֵעַ

8. But thou, O Lord, art a beholder of all their actions as of all things elſe that are done in the world: whoſoever hath any deſign contrary to thee, (ſee v. 5.) though thou permit him a while, yet in thy ſeaſon thou ſhalt diſappoint and puniſh him. This is the method of thy Providence over all the people of the world; and thus ſhalt thou now do in this caſe, diſappoint and fruſtrate all them that watch to take away my life.

8. But thou, O Lord, ſhalt laugh at them; thou ſhalt have all ‖ the heathen in deriſion.

‖ or nations גּוֹיִם

b. 9. The God of heaven is the only ſafeguard and ſecurity, the only means of protection I have, or can pretend to; therefore on him only will I depend for relief, or reſcue from this danger.

9. [b] ‖ Becauſe of his ſtrength will I wait upon thee; for God is my defence.

‖ His ſtrength will I repoſe on thee, or, his ſtrength will I ward or keep my ſelf from, at thee, † or, his. See note b

10. All the good that can ever befal me comes from the meer grace and mercy of God; on that therefore I wait with confidence, and implore with humility, that he will now timely afford it me, and diſappoint and diſcomfit mine enemies.

10. The God of † my mercy ſhall prevent me: God ſhall let me ſee my deſire upon mine enemies.

c. 11. As for the manner of it, that muſt alſo be referred to the wiſdom of thy choice, to do it in ſuch a way as may have the deepeſt and moſt laſting impreſſion on the beholders: and that it will not ſo probably do, if thou involve them in one ſpeedy univerſal ſlaughter, which, though it may affect the beholders at the time, will be ſoon forgotten again; but by ſome more lingring way, ſcattering them firſt, and then rendring them the objects of contempt, caſting them ſeverally into a very low condition in their diſperſions; for that will continue to mind men of this work of thy vengeance, to which all theſe evils are naturally conſequent. And this is the method that thou wilt now uſe in diſcomfiting them, and defending me.

11. [c] Slay them not, leſt my people forget: ſcatter them by thy power, and bring them down, O Lord our ſhield.

d. 12. This have they juſtly brought upon themſelves by their perjurious falſeneſs and boldneſs, their maligning and threatening thoſe which never deſerved ill of them, and their continual going on, and obſtinate impersuaſibleneſs therein.

12. * For [d] the ſin of their mouth, and the words of their lips, let them even be taken in their pride, and for ‖ curſing and lying which they ſpeak.

* The ſin of their mouth is the word of their lips, and they ſhall be taken ‖ perjury אָלָה

13. And thus ſhall God certainly deal with them, ſending puniſhment upon puniſhment

13. Conſume them in thy wrath, conſume them that they may not be; † and let them know that God ruleth in Jacob, unto the ends of the earth. Selah.

† and they ſhall know, וְיֵדְעוּ niſhment till they be quite deſtroyed; and this in ſo ſignal a manner, that all that behold it ſhall diſcern Gods judgment in it, and his particular Providence in the government of the world.

* they ſhall return, יָשׁוּבוּ

14. And at evening * let them return, and let them make a noiſe like a dog, and go round about the city.

14. Under this judgment of Gods, they ſhall indeed be what their own voluntary ſins had made them before, v. 6. the hunger of the dog ſhall be their plague, as the ravenouſneſs hath before been their ſin.

‖ They ſhall wander, יְנִיעוּן † if they be not ſatisfied and continue all night.

15. ‖ Let them wander up and down for meat, † and [e] grudge if they be not ſatisfied.

15. A beggarly and indigent, and ſo an unſatisfied and wearisome condition, ſhall be their lot, the greateſt worldly plague that can fall on any, large appetites, and no poſſeſſions or acqueſts to ſatisfie them. e.

16. But I will ſing of thy power; yea I will ſing aloud of thy mercy in the morning: for thou haſt been my defenſe and refuge in the day of my trouble.

16. Mean while I am eternally obliged to proclaim thy power and might, and withal to make my ſolemneſt acknowledgments of thy favour and goodneſs to me, and to make this the matter of my daily morning lauds, that in my greateſt diſtreſs thou haſt thus delivered and ſecured me.

* God is my mercy. אֱלֹהֵי חַסְדִּי

17. Unto thee, O my ſtrength, will I ſing: for God is my defenſe, * and the God of my mercy.

17. To thee therefore I thus come, with all the rejoycing of an humble heart, as to one that never fails to relieve, when I want relief, and ſo eminently to make good his promiſed bounty toward me.

Annotations on Pſalm LIX.

a. נָבַע

V. 7. Belch] From נָבַע ſcaturivit, is the ſame word uſed in a metaphorical ſenſe, for pouring out words, as a ſpring doth water, and ſimply for ſpeaking, as Pſal. 78. 2. אַבִּיעָה I will utter dark ſayings, and Pſal. 19. 3. night unto night יַבִּיעַ ſhall utter a word, and Prov. 1. 23. אַבִּיעָה I will declare to you. And ſo in all reaſon here יַבִּיעוּן they ſpeak with their mouths, and ſwords are in their lips, i. e. whenſoever they ſpeak or ſay any thing, 'tis ſome bloody matter or other: and accordingly as the Chaldee retain the Hebrew word, ſo the LXXII. read ἀποφθέγξονται, and the Latine loquentur, they will ſpeak; and the Syriack more expreſly ܡܠܗܝ ܘܚܪܒ̈ܐ ܒܣܦ̈ܝܗܘܢ the word of their mouth a ſword in their lips.

b. עֻזּוֹ

V. 9. Becauſe of his ſtrength] What עֻזּוֹ here ſignifies, is ſomewhat hard to determine. 'Tis literally to be rendred his ſtrength; yet all the antient interpreters, as now we have them, render it, as if it were עֻזִּי my ſtrength; עֻזִּי my ſtrength, ſaith the Chaldee, and κράτος μου, my ſtrength, the LXXII. and the Latine, fortitudinem meam. And ſo the context may be deemed to require, which joyns it with אֵלֶיךָ to thee, as if it were thus to be rendred, my ſtrength אֶשְׁמְרָה will I keep or repoſe with, or on thee, (taking אֶשְׁמְרָה from שָׁמַר in the notion of repoſuit, as it ſometimes ſignifies) for God is my defence. This interpretation of the phraſe is generally pitcht on by the interpreters, ſave that the Syriack takes a greater liberty of paraphraſe, and reads, ܐܠܗܐ ܚܝ ܐܫܒܚ O God, I will glorifie thee, (upon the ſame account, I ſuppoſe, that Pſal. 8. 2. for ſtrength the LXXII. read αἶνον, praiſe) by that yet meaning to expreſs the true power of the phraſe; the reposing ones ſtrength on God, being indeed the glorifying and bleſſing him for all the ſtrength one hath. And ſhould this be reſolved on to be the ſenſe, the words might yet remain unchanged, as our Hebrew now reads them, עֻזּוֹ his, i. e. Gods ſtrength; thereby meaning that ſtrength which I have from God: in which reſpect Gods ſtrength and mine are all one: what is mine, as of the receiver, is his, as the donor; and when it is given me, yet it is not ſo mine, as to ceaſe to be his, but ſtill remains much more properly his than mine, as being free to him to withdraw it when he will; his, principally and originally, and in fulneſs, and mine only derivatively, imperfectly, and dependently from him; I am a tenant at will, to be put out of poſſeſſion when he pleaſeth. And for the ſeeming incongruity between [his] and [to the] it is not new; but frequent in the Hebrew, which oft paſs from one tenſe, and from one number, and from one perſon, to another. The very next words are an example of it, for after God, mentioned in the ſecond perſon, אֱלֹהַי to thee, אֵלֶיךָ follows immediately in the third, for God is my defence. And indeed עֻזּוֹ his ſtrength agreeing ſo well with God, in the end of the verſe, and the ſenſe lying thus, God is my defence, therefore his ſtrength will I repoſe on thee, i. e. on God, the appearance of incongruity will not be in עֻזּוֹ his ſtrength, but rather in אֵלֶיךָ to thee. But neither is that new or ſtrange, the tranſition from one perſon to another being ſo very ordinary. In the next verſes we have חַסְדּוֹ his mercy, with the points of חַסְדִּי my mercy, the chere being for the one, and the chetib for the other. And accordingly, of the Interpreters, ſome read the one, ſome the other, both certainly meaning the ſame thing; the Chaldee אֱלָהָא טוּבִי the God of my grace or goodneſs or mercy, but the LXXII. ὁ Θεὸς μοῦ τὸ ἔλεός μου, my God his mercy, and ſo the Latine; but the Syriack in the middle between both, ܡܪܝ ܠܚܣܕܝ O Lord, thy grace—— Thus much hath been ſaid in compliance with the rendrings of the antient Interpreters, as we now read them. But there is another notion of the phraſe, of which it is capable; as עֻזּוֹ his ſtrength] may be underſtood of the ſtrength or forces of Saul ſent againſt David to watch the houſe, in the title of the Pſalm, and as אֶשְׁמְרָה may be rendred I will guard, or look to, or beware of, or keep my ſelf from, ſo as to avoid the danger of this ſtrength of his, and this אֵלֶיךָ at, or with, or by flying to thee, i. e. to God, as he is מִשְׂגַּבִּי my, i. e. Davids refuge, in the end of the verſe. And thus the words moſt probably ſignifie, his ſtrength I will ward, or avoid, or beware, or take heed of at thee. And if the compoſure ſeem harſh or ſtrange, it muſt be imputed to the poetry, which conſiſts principally in affinity of words or ſounds, and light variations, and correſpondencies obſerved betwixt ſeveral parts of the compoſure. Saul ſent, וַיִּשְׁמְרוּ and they guarded in the ſenſe of beſieging) the houſe, in the title of the Pſalm, and אֶשְׁמְרָה

I will

I will ward (in the ſenſe of taking heed of, or avoiding) his ſtrength, in the end of this firſt part of this Pſalm: And then in correſpondence with it, is the concluſion of the latter part of the Pſalm, very lightly varied, v. 17. Here the firſt part of the concluding verſe runs עֻזּוֹ אֵלֶיךָ אֶשְׁמֹרָה, there 'tis עֻזִּי אֵלֶיךָ אֲזַמֵּרָה. And the latter parts are of the ſame affinity alſo, כִּי אֱלֹהִים מִשְׂגַּבִּי, for God is my defence, the ſame in both; and only חַסְדּוֹ his mercy, changed into חַסְדִּי my mercy, as עֻזּוֹ his ſtrength, into עֻזִּי my ſtrength. Thus much being ſaid for the confirming this interpretation, 'twill now be eaſie to conform the antient interpretations to it, if only we ſhall ſuppoſe the true original copies of them to have been in the third, not firſt perſon, and to have been changed by ſcribes, on purpoſe to conform this ninth to the laſt verſe. There indeed 'tis עֻזִּי and חַסְדִּי my ſtrength, and my mercy, as in the interpreters, ſo in the Hebrew it ſelf: But here in the tenth verſe, all copies of the Hebrew have עֻזּוֹ his ſtrength; therefore 'tis reaſonable to reſolve, that ſo it was when the Interpreters rendred it, and according to that reading their interpretations (being probably by ſcribes corrupted) ought in reaſon to be reſtored, the Chaldee, not עוּזִּי my, but עֻזָּנוּ his ſtrength— and ſo the LXXII. τὸ κράτος (not μοῦ but) αὐτοῦ σὲ φυλάξω, his ſtrength will I watch, or ward (the Hebrew שָׁמַר, and Greek φυλάττω, frequently ſignifies cavere ſibi, ſo to obſerve, as to avoid and keep out of the danger) at, or with, or by betaking my ſelf to thee. And ſo in the Latine, and other tranſlations, which are more reaſonably to be accorded to the Hebrew, than the Hebrew to them.

c. V. 11. Slay them not] In this place the antients rendrings are very different. The LXXII. apply the forgetting] to the enemies, ſlay them not, μὴ ποτὲ ἐπιλάθωνται, leſt they forget; and ſo the Latine and Syriack, ne quando obliviſcantur, leſt they forget. And ſo the Hebrew may bear; פֶּן יִשְׁכְּחוּ עַמִּי עַמִּי] may be rendred, leſt they forget my people, as well as, leſt my people forget. The LXXII. indeed now read, μὴ ποτὲ ἐπιλάθωνται τῶν νόμων σου, leſt they forget thy Law; and ſo the Arabick follow them: but that is likely to be an error of ſome antient ſcribe, for both the Syriack and Latine, that are wont to follow the LXXII. read לְעַמִּי populi mei, my people. But the ſenſe inclines the Hebrew the other way, פֶּן עַמִּי leſt my people יִשְׁכְּחוּ forget: the Chaldee adds, in the former part, a word, which renders an account of the latter, ſlay them not ſuddenly leſt my people forget it. One act of univerſal ſlaughter, ſuddenly at an end, is not apt to have ſuch a durable impreſſion on the beholders, as another more lingering puniſhment, under which men lie long, pine away and conſume, as the ſcattering here following includes. And ſo this is to be reſolved the due rendring of it.

V. 12. For the ſin of their mouth] The cleareſt rendring of this 12th. verſe will be by acknowledging no ellipſis in it, thus, חַטַּאת פִּימוֹ the ſin of their mouth, דְּבַר שִׂפְתֵימוֹ the word of their lips, or is the word of their lips, i. e. (according to Hebrew idiom) every word of their lips, is the ſin of their mouth, ſo many words, ſo many ſins; (and then follows regularly, וְיִלָּכְדוּ and they ſhall be taken in their pride; this their puniſhment is the conſequent of that their confident habitual going on in ſin.) The Syriack have thus paraphraſed it, ܚܛܝܬܗܘܢ ܕܦܘܡܗܘܢ ܡܠܠܟ ܫܦܝܬܗܘܢ the ſin of their mouth, their lips have ſpoken, i. e. whatſoever their lips have ſpoken hath been ſin; but the LXXII. more literally, ἁμαρτίαν στόματος αὐτῶν, λόγον χειλέων αὐτῶν· more probably it ſhould be read, in the nominative caſe, ἁμαρτία and λόγος, and ſo in the other interpreters which follow them; the Chaldee taking the greater liberty, uſual to them, of paraphraſing, in ſtead of rendring the words, קְטֹל, &c. becauſe of the ſin of their mouth, &c. which as a paraphraſe may be born, but is neither the full, nor proper rendring of it. d. חַטַּאת פִּימוֹ

V. 15. Grudge] The verb לוּן is equivocal, and ſignifies both pernoctare and querulari, to continue all night, and to growl or murmur: and in both theſe ſenſes the alluſion will here be proper to the returning in the evening, and making a noiſe like a dog, v. 14. But the conſtruction lying thus [they ſhall wander for meat אִם לֹא, &c. if they be not ſatisfied, וְיָלִינוּ and they ſhall—] it will be moſt reſonable to render it in the notion of continuing all night, thus, they ſhall wander, &c. and continue all night; and ſo the Chaldee and Syriack by וְיִבְיתוּן, from בּוּת pernoctare, appear to have underſtood it, though the LXXII. read καὶ γογγύσουσι, and ſhall murmur. e. וְיָלִינוּ

The Sixtieth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

TO the chief Muſitian upon || [a] Shuſhan-Eduth, Michtham of David, to teach, when he ſtrove with † Aram Naharaim, and with * Aram Zobah, when Joab [b] returned and ſmote || of Edom in the valley of ſalt twelve thouſand.

The ſixtieth Pſalm was compoſed on occaſion, and for the commemorating of Davids victories in Meſopotamia, (that part of Syria which is incompaſt with Tigris and Euphrates) and particularly in Sobah, a Kingdom of Syria, 2 Sam. 8. 3, 5. as alſo in Idumæa, where (after his return from ſmiting the Syrians, 1 Chron. 18. 5, 6, 7.) Abiſhai ſlew eighteen thouſand in the valley of ſalt, 1 Chr. 18. 12. and upon their rebelling again, Joab came upon them and ſlew twelve thouſand more in the ſame place, and put gariſons in Edom, throughout all Edom, and ſubdued the generality of the Idumæans, 1 Chron. 19. 13. This Pſalm therefore from the matter of it, the recounting of ſuch victories, is ſtyled (as others formerly) his jewel, and was committed to the Præfect of his Muſick, to be ſet to the inſtrument of ſix ſtrings, that waited on the Ark of the Teſtimony, or was uſed in Euchariſtical commemorations.

1. O God, thou haſt caſt us off, thou haſt ſcattered us, thou haſt alſo been diſpleaſed: || O turn thy ſelf to us again.

1. O gratious Lord, though for ſome time thou haſt not favoured or proſpered our attempts, but in thy diſpleaſure puniſhed us with defeats and diſcomfitures; yet now thou haſt been pleaſed to return to thy wonted mercy, and proſper us exceedingly.

|| thou ſhalt turn, or haſt turned תָּשׁוּב

2. Thou haſt made the earth to tremble, thou haſt broken it: heal the breaches thereof, for it ſhaketh.

2. We have for a while been under thy diſpleaſure, and felt a kind of earthquake, wherein is firſt a trembling commotion, then a fiſſure or opening of the earth. And ſo have we been terribly ſhaken and wounded, agitated and broken aſunder; but now thou art gratiouſly pleaſed to repair our breaches, to heal us, and reſtore us to a proſperous ſtate again.

3. Thou haſt ſhewed thy people hard things, thou haſt made us to drink the wine of aſtoniſhment.

3. Thou haſt for a while exerciſed us with afflictions, ſhewed us a diſpiriting doleful proſpect, given us a myrrhate draught, ſuch as did caſt us into great ſadneſs.

5. That thy beloved may be delivered, ſave with thy right hand, and hear me.

5. Thou haſt ſhewed forth thy favour to thy ſervant David, (whoſe name ſignifies beloved) reſcued him from his enemies hands; and the ſame mercy thou wilt gratiouſly continue to me.

6. God hath ſpoken in his holineſs, I will rejoyce, I will [d] divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth.

7. Gilead is mine, and Manaſſeh is mine; Ephraim alſo is the ſtrength of my head, Judah is my Law-giver.

6, 7. God hath made me a ſure promiſe, which is now moſt fully performed, and ſo is matter of all triumph, rejoycing, and thankſgiving to me. I am not only fully and quietly poſſeſt of all the Kingdom, both of Iſrael and Judah, and now delivered from the aſſaults which were made againſt me by my malicious neighbours, ſee Pſal. 108. 7, &c.

To thee therefore alone is our reſort and addreſs, whether for relief in the greateſt diſtreſs, or for ſtrength and victory over our enemies; all other aſſiſtances, beſide that of heaven, being perfectly unſufficient and vain, and abſolutely ſuperfluous and needleſs, if the Lord of hoſts engage in our behalf.

12. Through God we ſhall do valiantly: for he it is that ſhall tread down our enemies.

12. If he interpoſe his power for us, there is no enemy ſhall be able to ſtand before us: It is he, and not any puiſſance of ours, that hath and ſhall work all our victories for us.

Annotations on Pſalm LX.

a. שׁוּשַׁן

Tit. Shuſhan-Eduth] That שׁוּשַׁן, from שֵׁשׁ ſix, ſignifies hexachordum, an inſtrument of ſix ſtrings, ſee Pſal. 45. a. It ſignifies alſo a flower, whether roſe or lilie. But here in the title of this Pſalm (as alſo Pſalm 80.) in all probability 'tis uſed in the ſame ſenſe in the ſingular, as שׁוֹשַׁנִּים was in the title of Pſal 45. and to that עַל inclines it, the Pſalm being committed to the Præfect of the Muſick, with directions to ſet it to that inſtrument. As for עֵדוּת that follows, from עָדָה teſtatus eſt, it may ſignifie the Oracle, or the Ark of the Teſtimony, as oft it doth, and ſo the Hexachord of the Oracle may probably be reſolved to be an inſtrument that ſolemnly waited on that. Or elſe, taking it in the primary ſenſe for teſtificationes, or commemorations, i. e. ſolemn thankſgivings for mercies received from God, which were wont to be performed with Muſick, the שׁוּשַׁן עֵדוּת hexachord of the teſtimonies] may fitly be ſet to ſignifie ſuch a Muſical inſtrument, uſed in thankſgivings. Add to this, that עֲנָיָה or בְּנָיָה in Syriack, ſignifies a feaſt, that particularly of the Paſſeover; and if that may here be of any intimation, (and be not only a corruption brought in by latter times from the Hebrew מוֹעֵד, as ſome queſtion not very probably) 'twill be no more than the feſtival Hexachord, or inſtrument ſolemnly uſed at feaſts.

עֵדוּת

b. יָשַׁב

Tit. Return'd] It is evident in the ſtory 2 Sam. 8. and 1 Chron. 17. that Davids victory over the Idumæans was diverſe from that over the Syrians. The Syrians came to help Hadadezer marching towards Meſopotamia, far from the borders of Edom and Arabia. And after this victory over the Syrians, 1 Chron. 18. 5, 6. David returns to Jeruſalem, v. 7. And then 'tis added v. 12. Moreover Abiſhai ſlew in the valley of ſalt eighteen thouſand of the Edomites. Theſe things therefore muſt be thus divided in the title of this Pſalm, and the victory over the Idumæans lookt on as diſtinct from that over the Syrians, and יָשַׁב rendred literally, and Joab returned, not when ——— But then whereas in that place of the ſtory 1 Chron. 18. 12. 'tis ſaid that Abſhai ſlew in that valley of ſalt eighteen thouſand Edomites, and here that Joab ſmote Edom in the ſame valley twelve thouſand, and 2 Sam. 8. 13. that David gat him a name when he returned from ſmiting the Syrians in the valley of ſalt being eighteen thouſand men, (all which may be thought to ſet down the ſame paſſage, but yet differ in ſeveral circumſtances one from the other) this ἐναντιοφανεία, or difficulty may be beſt ſalved, by interpreting theſe three places of three ſeveral paſſages in the ſtory. For firſt the words 2 Sam. 8. 13. may thus be underſtood; David when he returned from ſmiting the Syrians gat him a name, i. e. by ſmiting encreaſed his glory, in the valley of ſalt eighteen thouſand men: which reading hath this to aſſiſt it, that there is a diſtinctive accent in אֲרָם ſeparating that of his ſmiting the Syrians, from the other paſſage of the eighteen thouſand in the valley of ſalt. And indeed that the whole verſe belongs not to the Syrians, but principally to the Idumæans, appears by the next verſe, And he put garriſons in Edom, &c. which muſt be founded in a victory over the Idumæans (and not only of the Syrians) foregoing. Some would have אֲרָם Syria to be there a miſtake for אוֹם Edom; and accordingly the LXXII. read Ἰδυμαίαν, Idumæa. But there is no need of that conjecture. The words duly rendred and pointed are, And David gat him a name, when he returned from ſmiting of the Syrians in the valley of ſalt, eighteen thouſand men, i. e. (as the Latine ſupply the Ellipſis, cæſis decem & octo millibus) killing eighteen thouſand men. This being premiſed of 2 Sam. 8. the place in the Chronicles agrees with it exactly, viz. that Abiſhai, Davids general, ſlew in the valley of ſalt eighteen thouſand men. And then this in the title of the Pſalm being ſtill ſo different, not Abiſhai, but Joab, and not eighteen, but twelve thouſand men, there is no reconciling them, but by diſtinguiſhing the times, viz. that Abiſhai killed at firſt eighteen thouſand, and afterward they rebelling, Joab came upon them, and ſlew twelve thouſand, which being the Edumæans laſt defeat, is here mentioned in this Pſalm moſt particularly. And thus Jarchi and R. Obadiah reconcile the difficulty.

V. 4. Truth] For קֶשֶׁט, which the Chaldee paraphraſes by קִשְׁטָה דְּאַבְרָהָם the truth of Abraham, the LXXII. read τόξῳ, a bow, reading, it ſeems, קֶשֶׁת a bow: And then to fit the verſe for that ſenſe, they render לְהִתְנוֹסֵס (which from נָסַס, ſignifies the lifting up or diſplaying the נֵס inſigne precedent) by τῦ φυγῖν, to fly from, in a ſenſe wherein that word is not found; and yet in all this the Latine and Syriack, &c. and ſome latter learned Interpreters have choſen to follow them, as if קֶשֶׁת were the truer reading. The word קֶשֶׁט doth here ſurely relate to קָשָׁה of the preceding verſe, to which קֶשֶׁט hath ſo near a literal affinity, as in like manner הָרְאִיתָ anſwers to לִירִאֶיךָ, and נֵס alludes to לְהִתְנוֹסֵס: the poeſie conſiſting in ſuch analogies and alluſions, as every where is obſervable, and particularly in the next verſe, where יְדִידֶיךָ thy beloved] ſecretly alludes to Davids name, from דּוֹד dilectus.

c. קֶשֶׁט

V. 6. Divide Sechem] Of Sechem and the valley of Succoth, or booths, ſo called from Jacobs making booths and feeding his cattel there, ſee Gen. 33. 17, 18. By theſe are meant Samaria; and Davids dividing or meting them out, is a phraſe to expreſs his dominion over them, it being part of the regal power to diſtribute his Province into cities and regions, and place Judges and Magiſtrates over them. To theſe the addition of Gilead (which conteins the whole region of Baſhan, &c. on the other ſide of Jordan) and then the mention of Manaſſeh and Ephraim, are deſigned, as by ſo many parts, to denote the Kingdom of Iſrael, or ten tribes; and their being his, and the ſtrength of his head, notes him to be the Lord over them, and to make uſe of their ſtrength in his wars, for the defending, or inlarging his dominions. And then [Judah מְחֹקְקִי is my law-giver] as it refers to Jacobs prophecy of the ſceptre and law-giver not departing from Judah, denoting that to be the royal tribe; ſo by it is ſignified the Kingdom of Judah, (under which Benjamin is comprehended) that David is poſſeſt of that alſo. After which follows [Moab is my waſh-pot,] the Moabites are ſubjected to me. The waſh-pot, we know, is a mean part of houſehold-ſtuff, for the uſe of the feet, (ſo the Syriack read רַגְלַי of my feet) the loweſt part of the body: and ſo is a fit title for the Moabites, 2 Sam. 8. 2. where 'tis ſaid, he ſmote Moab, and meaſured them with a line, caſting them down to the ground; even with two lines meaſured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive: i. e. he divided them into three parts, two of which he deſtroyed, and the third he kept alive to be his ſubjects and and tribute-mice, as the text follows: the Hagarites became Davids servants, and brought him gifts. Then [Over Edom will I cast my shoe] the LXXII. read ἐκτενῶ, extend my shoe, and so the Latine extendam, as when the Master of the banquet hands his shoe to his meanest servant, to be untyed, and taken off by him; from whence the Syriack ܐܫܪܐ I will loose or untye: unless perhaps their truer reading were ܐܫܕ injiciam, אַשְׁלִיךְ I will cast; for so sure the Hebrew אשלך is to be rendred, I will cast my shoe, as that is an emblem of subjugating, or bringing down under the feet. So of the Edumeans we find, 2 Sam. 8. 14. He put garisons in Edom, throughout all Edom put he garrisons, and all they of Edom became Davids servants. Abu Walid would have נעל here to signifie a fetter, I will cast my fetter, or chain on him; and so Kimchi in his roots, though in his Comment there he interpret it in the notion of a shoe. Lastly, עָלַי פְּלֶשֶׁת הִתְרוֹעָעִי Over Philistia give a shout; for so from רוּעַ to sound a trumpet, or give a shout, is הִתְרוֹעָעִי in Hithpael in the Imperative mood; and being in the feminine gender must refer either to his soul, shout O my soul, or, as the Chaldee paraphrase it, to the congregation of Israel, and so it is but a form of invitation, or celebrating a victory, such as he had over them 2 Sam. 8. 1. for עָלַי is not to be rendred over me, but simply over, and so joyned with פְּלֶשֶׁת over Philistia: so the Chaldee, עֲלוֹי פְּלִשְׁתָּאֵי over the Philistims; and the LXXII. paraphrase it to this sense, ἐμοὶ ἀλλόφυλοι ὑποτάγησαν, the Philistims are subjected to me; the Syriack more literally, ܥܠ ܦܠܫܬ ܐܬܪ Over Palestine will I shout. And so Psal. 108. 9. where the latter part of this Psalm is again met with, 'tis עָלַי and אֶתְרוֹעָע, I will shout over Philistia.

V. 9. Who will bring] This Psalm is made up of two parts. The former part of it, for the three first verses, is the recounting of their own weakness, when for their sins they were by God left to themselves. And the latter, in the five next verses, is the commemorating of their great successes and victories by means of Gods favour and aids. And these two next verses are, as it were, the recapitulating of both, and so contain their own absolute impotence to go on to any farther victory, unless God, who once forsook, be now pleased in a special manner to aid them. And 'tis poetically contriv'd by way of question, מִי יוֹבִלֵנִי who shall lead me ——— i.e. it is not possible for me by my own strength, or with any humane aids whatsoever, to enter any one place of strength, (the Chaldee names Tyre) to conquer Idumea, unless God interpose in my behalf, assist and prosper my attempts. It follows therefore, v. 10. הֲלֹא אַתָּה shalt not thou, O Lord? (i. e. None can except thou dost.) Thou וַנִּזְנַחְתָּנוּ which hast, or hadst forsaken us: ὁ ἀπωσάμενος ἡμᾶς, say the LXXII. qui repulisti nos, say the vulgar, thou which formerly hadst cast us off for some time; not complaining that he now doth so (that is quite contrary to the drift of the whole Psalm) but affirming and concluding from their improsperousness, when formerly he did forsake, that none can now aid successfully but he. And then concluding with confidence of his favour וְלֹא תֵצֵא and wilt thou not, (i. e. certainly, O Lord, thou wilt) go out with our hosts? καὶ οὐκ ἐξελεύσῃ; and wilt thou not go forth? say the LXXII. And so this well accords with the contexture and design of the Psalm, to magnifie Gods aids, and the consequent thereof, all manner of good success and prosperity.

The Sixty First PSALM.

TO the chief Musitian upon Neginoth, A Psalm of David.

Paraphrase.

The sixty First Psalm is made up of Thanksgiving and humble dependance on God for all his mercies. It was composed by David, and committed to the Prefect of his Musick, to be sung to the Harp or Psaltery, or other such stringed instrument, Psal. 4. 1.

1. Hear my cry, O God, attend unto my prayer.

1. O Gratious God, to thee is my only resort in all my distresses; be thou pleased to receive and answer my prayers.

2. From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee, when my heart is overwhelmed, lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

2. Though I am driven as far as from Absalom I was fain to fly, 2 Sam. 17. 22. to the utmost parts of the land beyond Jordan, v. 23. how great soever my trouble and streights are, yet to thee have I a sure retreat: when my condition is at the lowest, thou hast a fortress of impregnable safety to which thou wilt be sure to conduct me.

3. For thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong Tower from the enemy.

3. For thus have I alwayes experimented thy goodness to me; when men have assaulted, thou hast rescued and secured me.

4. I will abide in thy Tabernacle for ever; I will trust in the covert of thy wings. Selah.

4. And that teacheth me the wisdom of this resolution, of keeping me constantly under this safeguard, and that I may do so, of continuing my daily dependance on thee, and addresses to thee, in that place where thou hast promised to be alwayes present.

5. For thou, O God, hast heard my vows; thou hast given || me the heritage of those that fear thy name.

|| or, an heritage to—

5. To this none had greater incouragement than I; my offerings have alwayes been accepted, and my prayers heard by thee. This is the priviledge of all thy faithful servants, and this thou hast been pleased to afford me.

6. Thou ſhalt bleſs me with a long and proſperous life, and therein make me a type of the *Meſſias, whoſe Kingdom, when it commences, ſhall have no end.

6. Thou wilt ‖ prolong the Kings life, and his years † as many generations.

‖ adde days to the days of the King, † generation and generation.

מָלְכָּא * מְשִׁיחָא &c. Chald. Thou ſhalt add days to the days of the King Meſſias, his years ſhall be as the generation of this world and of the world to come.

7. Thou ſhalt never caſt me from thy favour, as long as I continue my fidelity to thee: thy free, but promiſed mercy, will not fail to perpetuate my proſperity.

7. He ſhall abide before God for ever. O prepare mercy and truth which may preſerve him.

8. And this ſhall oblige me to bleſs and magnifie thy gracious and glorious Majeſty as long as I live, to preſent my daily oblations to thee, and yield thee all the obedience of a thankful heart for ever.

8. So will I ſing praiſe to thy name for ever, that I may daily perform my vows.

The Sixty Second PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The Sixty Second Pſalm is an Euchariſtical hymne compoſed by David, and committed to the Præfect of his Muſick, to be ſung and play'd to by inſtruments, after the manner that Heman and Jeduthun were appointed to do, 1 Chron. 16. 42.

TO the chief Muſitian, ‖ to Jeduthun, A Pſalm of David.

‖ for עַל

1. All my defence and relief is from God alone; on him will I patiently and chearfully attend for a ſupply to all my wants.

1. † Truly my ſoul waiteth upon God: from him cometh my ſalvation.

† even to God is my ſoul ſilent. אַךְ אֶל־ דּוֹמִיָּה

2. The ſtrength which I have from him gives me ſecurity that I ſhall not be in any great meaſure depreſt by my enemies.

2. * He is my rock and my ſalvation, he is my defenſe, I ſhall not be greatly moved.

* even he. אַךְ הוּא

a. 3. How vain then are all the attempts of my ſlanderous violent rebellious ſubjects, which are always raiſing of ſtirs and tumults, as if all of them combined as one man to take away my life?

3. How long will [a] ye ‖ imagine miſchief againſt a man? † ye ſhall be ſlain all the ſort of you, as a bowing wall, and as a tottering * fenſe.

‖ uſe violence or raiſes tumults, or calumnies, lye. † will ye kill, or be murtherers all of you? * partition.

4. All their contrivances and conſultations are to pull me from the Throne, to wreſt the regal power out of my hand; and this traiterous deſign they gloſs and varniſh over with fair flattering language.

4. They only conſult to caſt him down from his excellency; they delight in lyes: they bleſs with their mouth, but they curſe inwardly. Selah.

5. But I will remit my whole cauſe to God, and attend how he ſhall pleaſe to diſpoſe of me.

5. My ſoul, ‖ wait thou only upon God, for my expectation is from him.

‖ be thou even ſilent ſo— אַךְ דּוֹמִי

6. Being confident of a certain relief and ſupport from him, which will not permit me to be caſt down by theſe men.

6. † He only is my rock and my ſalvation, he is my defenſe, I ſhall not be moved.

† even he. אַךְ הוּא

7. On him only I rely for deliverance, for exaltation, for aid to defend me, and for ſanctuary when any diſtreſs ſurrounds me.

7. In God is my ſalvation and my glory; the rock of my ſtrength, and my refuge is from God.

8. And this will be matter of imitation to all that profeſs to be his ſervants, to

8. Truſt in him at all times, ye people, pour out your heart before him: God is a refuge for us. Selah.

שְׁדוּ * caſt away before him all the elations of your hearts Chald.

repoſe all their truſt in him, to * empty themſelves of all ſecular confidences, and apply themſelves in prayer to him, devoutly to beg, and confidently to depend on his relief.

9. For as for any humane aid, 'tis abſolutely vain, ſure to fail thoſe that rely on it. The ſtrength of all the men in the world, if not back'd and bleſs'd by God, is worſe and leſs than nothing, it ſtandeth in no ſtead, and ſo diſappoints thoſe that depend on it; and that is worſe than never to have expected good from it, the fruſtrated hope being an unhappier condition than that of perfect deſtitution.

9. Surely ‖ men of low degree are vanity, and † men of high degree are a lye; to be laid in the ballance they are altogether lighter than vanity.

‖ the ſons of Adam. בְּנֵי אָדָם † the ſons of mortal man בְּנֵי אִישׁ

10. He that thinks to gain any advantage or ſupport to himſelf by riches unlawfully gain'd, will be ſure to be diſappointed, to find his folly, when he expects the fruit of his contrivances. Riches are ſo far from being valuable when they are ill gotten, that even when they are innocently gained, they muſt not be relied on (for any other advantages than thoſe which may be hoped for by our liberal diſpenſing of them.)

10. Truſt not in oppreſſion, * become not vain in robbery; if riches increaſe, ſet not your hearts upon them.

* and rapine, become not vain תִּרְבָּלוּ אַל־ תִּדְבְּקוּ

11. God

11. God hath spoken once, twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God.

11. 'Twas the first great maxim delivered by God in Mount Sinai, that he only is the great God and ruler of all; and nothing is more vulgarly acknowledged than this: and what can be more contrary to that, than the reposing of trust in any creature? for that is, by interpretation, the deifying it, the communicating to a vain helpless creature that incommunicable attribute of God.

12. Also unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy; for thou rendrest to every man according to his works.

12. And because to found our trust, there is more wanting than bare power and ability to relieve (for that, without an assurance of his readiness to do what he is able, will not secure any) this also we are assured of by that other his great attribute, his infinite unexhausted mercy, which is a special property of our God, by which he hath assured us that he will graciously accept and reward, support and crown every sincere faithful servant of his, and never fail to relieve and defend those who do not first forsake and renounce him. See Rom. 11. 6.

Annotations on Psalm LXII.

V. 3. Imagine mischief] תְּהוֹתְתוּ is but this once used in the Scripture, and so will not easily be interpreted, but either by the notion which we find put upon it by the antient Interpreters, or else by the Arabick use of it. The Chaldee render it מִתְרַגְּשׁוּן from רָגַשׁ to tumultuate. To this also the Syriack agrees, ܬܬܪܓܫܘܢ from ܪܓܓ to stir up, instigate, incite, or provoke. The LXXII. likewise read ἐπιπέσεσθε, which the Latine well render irruitis, rush in upon; and so all consent to render it, How long will ye raise tumults, use violence, &c. The Arabick word is by Golius rendred validè conculcavit, injustus fuit, violentum imperium exercuit, any kind of violence or injustice. Then for עַל אִישׁ against a man, that sure is but a Poetical expression for against me, i. e. David the speaker, against whom the neighbouring nations raised war, and his own subjects Rebellions. Thus doth Christ oft speak of himself, under the title of the Son of Man, in the third person, and St. Paul, 2 Cor. 12. 2. Οἶδα ἄνθρωπον, I knew a man, i. e. undoubtedly himself. Then תְּרֻצָּחוּ from רָצַח to kill, though by the Interlineary it be rendred interficiemini, in the passive Pual, yet it may more regularly be read, as in Piel actively, only changing the point, for ֻ. And for that we have sufficient ground, the Eastern Jews reading it with Pathach, as in Piel. And then it will agree with the foregoing תְּהוֹתְתוּ raising tumult or war against him, which sure was designed to that end of killing him; and to that best agrees the following resemblance, כְּקִיר נָטוּי, as a bending wall, for that is ready to fall upon and kill any that comes under it, but cannot so well be a resemblance of being kill'd: and so again גָּדֵר a partition, or sept of wood, or stone, חֲדִיחָוֹה, from דָּחָה driven out, or ready to fall, that may well be lookt on as very dangerous to all that come neer it, and therefore generally is avoided (men go far from the reach of it) and so is a fit resemblance to signifie him that is ready to kill another. And thus the Chaldee understand it הֲתַחְבְּרוּן קְטוֹלִין will ye become homicides? so the LXXII. φονεύετε, and the Latine interficietis? will ye kill, or murther? and so the Syriack, ܕܬܩܛܠܘܢ that ye may kill, as a bending wall—making that the designed end of their tumultuating. This whole passage is thus rendred by Abu Walid. First, תְּהוֹתְתוּ he compares with the Arabick תהתהתו with t, not with th, which signifies to multiply words, and so he would have it, according to the use of it in that tongue, to signify speaking much against, backbiting, diffaming, spreading evil reports of, lashing out with your tongues against, for hurt. And the meaning of the whole passage he gives, either according to the reading of Ben Naphtali taking תְּרַצְּחוּ actively, how long will ye prate, or speak evil against men? ye would kill them, all of you, like a bending wall, or tottering fence, viz. inclining [or bending, putting your selves forward] with wrong and injustice toward them, and hard words, and false accusations, as a wall ready to fall, incline, to do hurt; or, according to Ben Asher, taking it passively, How long will ye speak evil of men, to do mischief? (be ye all of you slain, in a parenthesis, by way of imprecation) as a bending wall, and fence ready to fall, and do mischief. What he thus observes of תְּהוֹתְתוּ with t, not th, may have place also with the word as we have it; for the root with ת th, also in Arabick signifies mentiri, to lye, and confusion, injustice, violence, which as well agree to his sense, as that of the root with t.

The Sixty Third PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The ſixty third Pſalm was compoſed by David in a condition of great ſadneſs, when not daring to adventure himſelf in Keilah, which he had reſcued from the Philiſtims, 1 Sam. 23. 5. 12. he got into ſtrong holds in the wilderneſs, v. 14 viz. the wilderneſs (not of Idumæa, as the LXXII, &c. read, but) of Judæa, 1 Sam. 22. 5. in the foreſt of Hareth.

A Pſalm of David when he was in the Wilderneſs of Judah.

a. 1. O Gracious Father, I have no other ſanctuary but thee; I will make all ſpeed to implore thy mercy; my condition is moſt ſad and deplored; the wide and ſqualid deſert, in which now I am, is the livelieſt emblem of it: O that thou wilt pleaſe to ſuccour and relieve me.

1. O God, thou art my God, early will I ſeek thee. My ſoul thirſteth for thee, my fleſh a ‖ longeth for thee, in a dry and thirſty land, where no water is;

‖ faints; grows diſpirited, is in anguiſh.

b. 2. To reſtore me to that dignity and comfort of ſerving thee in the Sanctuary, where the Cherubims ſpreading abroad their wings for a covering, are a ſignal emblem of thy preſence.

2. † To ſee thy power and thy glory, ſo as I have ſeen thee in the b Sanctuary.

† So as I have ſeen thee in the Sanctuary, to ſee thy ſtrength and glory.

3. That mercy of thine which gives a value to life it ſelf, and without which that which is moſt pretious and deſirable is nothing worth. For this, I that have ſo often taſted, and ſo know the value of it, ſhall be for ever obliged to magnify thy bleſſed name.

3. Becauſe thy loving kindneſs is better than life, my lips ſhall praiſe thee.

4. And this will I do conſtantly and continually to the end of my life, and in the experience of thy paſt mercies, make my humbleſt addreſſes to thee for all that I can want for the future.

4. Thus will I bleſs thee while I live; I will lift up my hands in thy name.

5. And thus, by thy great mercy, ſhall my life be divided betwixt imploring thy aids, and receiving abundant ſatisfaction to all my wants, and paying my chearfulleſt acknowledgments to ſo liberal a donor.

5. My ſoul ſhall be ſatisfied as with marrow and fatneſs; and my mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyful lips.

6. And for this, beſide the offerings of the day, frequently repeated, the ſeveral diviſions, or watches, or hours of the very night ſhall afford me fit ſeaſons, when after a little repoſe and ſleep, I frequently rouſe my ſelf, and divert to that more divine and chearful imployment, the meditation of thy manifold mercies toward me.

6. When I remember thee in my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches.

7. And thus conclude, to my own unſpeakable comfort, and thy honour, that that God which hath thus conſtantly relieved and ſupported me, will for ever continue his watchful providence over me, from which as I receive all ſecurity, ſo I am in all reaſon to return him continual praiſe.

7. Becauſe thou haſt been my help, therefore in the ſhadow of thy wings will I rejoyce.

8. As I have cordially adhered to my obedience, and faithful performance of all duty to thee, ſo haſt thou with thine eſpecial care and providence ſupported me in all my diſtreſſes.

8. My ſoul * followeth hard after thee: thy right hand upholdeth me.

* hath adhered, kept cloſe דָּבְקָה

9. As for my enemies that purſue me with mortal hatred, and deſire to take away my life, they themſelves ſhall fall into the deſtruction they deſigned to me.

9. But thoſe that ſeek my ſoul to deſtroy it, ſhall go into the lower parts of the earth.

c. 10. They purſue me to death, as hunters do their game, and they ſhall fall by the ſword, and be devoured by thoſe wild beaſts that others hunt and purſue; or they ſhall be driven to deſolate places, as the moſt noxious beaſts, the foxes (and wolves) are, when they are hunted and purſued.

10. They c ſhall ‖ fall by the ſword; † they ſhall be a portion for Foxes.

‖ pour them out. † the foxes portion ſhall they be.

d. 11. Mean while I ſhall have all cauſe to bleſs and magnifie the name of God, and not I only, but every truly pious man, who, as he ſwears by the name of God, ſo is moſt ſtrictly careful to perform his oaths: whereas on the other ſide, all falſe perjurious men ſhall be deſtroyed.

11. But the King ſhall rejoyce in God; every one that d ſweareth by him, ſhall glory: but the mouth of them that ſpeak lies ſhall be ſtopped.

Annotations on Pſal. LXIII.

a. בְּמַה

V. 1. Longeth] בְּמַה is not elſewhere uſed in the Bible: 'tis here by the Chaldee paraphraſtically rendred רְגַג deſireth, by the Syriack ܟܡܗ from ܡ̈ intuitus eſt, expectavit, expecteth. The LXXII. read ποσωλῶς, as if it were בַּמָּה quantum. The fulleſt rendring of it may be had from the Arabick uſe of it, among whom, ſaith Golius, 'tis uſed not only for the dimneſs of the eyes, (which the Arabick Grammarians Grammarians especially interpret of one born blind) but also for faintness: so when Kamus explains it by changing of colour, mutabit colorem, and abiit, vel defecit intellectus, his understanding was gone, or failed; both which change of colour, and failing of understanding, are tokens of faintness, and being in ill condition for want of due nourishment. And so it will here most fitly be rendred (with analogy to the thirsting of the soul foregoing) my flesh fainteth in a dry and thirsty land, &c. But from that other signification of blindness or dimness, it may also here be taken according to that translatious use mentioned by Alzamach-shari, of being in a maze, erring, so as not to know whither to go, or what to do. The Jewish Arab here renders it נסר, which agrees with נסה in the notion of changing colour, growing wan, as also of great anguish, being sick at heart.

b. קֹדֶשׁ

V. 2. Sanctuary] קֹדֶשׁ holiness] is evidently used for the Ark or Sanctuary, 1 King. 8.8. compared with 2 Chron. v. 9. And therefore the thing so vehemently here desired by David, is to see (and serve God) in the Sanctuary: And the same is the importance of seeing עֻזֶּךָ וְכְבוֹדֶךָ thy strength and glory, for so both those words are used for the Ark, Psal. 78. 61. he delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemies hand.

b. יַגִּירֻהוּ

V. 10. Fall] יַגִּירֻהוּ from נָגַר fluxit, effusus est, signifies in Hiphil, they shall cause to be poured out, or shall poure out.) The word is ordinarily applied to water, 2 Sam. 14.14. Lam. 3.49. But here, by the immediate mention of the sword, it is restrained to the effusion of blood, and being in the third person plural, in the active sense, it is after the Hebrew idiome, to be interpreted in the passive sense, they shall poure out by the hand of the sword,] i.e. they shall be poured out by the sword, the hand of the sword being no more than the edge of the sword. As for that which follows, סִנַּת שֻׁעָלִים יִהְיוּ, it may possibly be rendred the portion of foxes they shall be, i.e. they shall be that which so frequently befalls foxes, viz. hated and pursued, and destroyed; that which befalls that subtle and noxious creature, shall befall them, to perish by their wickedness; or they shall be in the same condition with them, driven forth into desolate places, such as foxes use to walk in: so Lam. v. 18. the mountain of Zion is laid desolate, the foxes walk on it; so Jarchi here interprets it; and so the phrase is used, Mat. 24. 51. μέρος αὐτοῦ θήσει μετὰ τῶν—he shall set him his portion with hypocrites, assign him the same condition that such have. But the portion of foxes] may more probably signifie the prey of those wild creatures, there being a sort of larger foxes in those countreys, called usually Jackales, which feed on dead men, and will dig them out of their graves to eat them; and so to be left unburied, or buried at large in the field, will be to be made a portion for such beasts. The Syriack that reads מטרפתהון דחקלא meat to, or for the foxes, understood it thus, and the LXXII, and vulgar, μερὶς ἀλωπέκων ἔσονται, partes vulpium erunt, the foxes portions shall they be, i.e. cast out for these wild beasts to feed on. The Jewish Arab hath another understanding of these two verses; those that seek after my soul to destroy it shall go down into the lower parts of the earth, i.e. seek into holes and caves after my soul, descend in their search after it under the mountains of the earth, intending to draw it out to the edge of the sword, and make it a portion for foxes.

סִנַּת שֻׁעָלִים

d. וְנִשְׁבַּע בּוֹ

V. 11. Sweareth] 'Twas an ordinary token of respect to Kings, for their subjects in swearing to mention their names: so 1 Sam. 1.26. and 20. 3. and 2 Sam. 15. 21. and in several other places. And 'tis Solomon Jarchie's gloss, that this is meant here.

The Sixty Fourth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

The Sixty fourth Psalm is a prayer for deliverance, with a just complaint of his enemies, and a prediction of Gods signal destructions upon them.

TO the chief Musitian, A Psalm of David.

1. Hear my voice, O God, in my prayer; preserve my life from fear of the enemy.

1. Blessed Lord, let my humble supplication, I beseech thee, find audience with thee; deliver me from the dangers I am in through the malice of men.

2. Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked, from the insurrection of the workers of Iniquity.

2. They are secretly contriving my ruine, and openly break out in tumults against me, in a most unjust and wicked manner: O be thou my refuge and sanctuary, to which I may with confidence resort for safety.

a. ‖ shoot their arrows.

3. Who whet their tongue like a sword, [a] and ‖ bend their bowes to shoot their arrows, even bitter words.

3,4. The first instruments of their malice are their slanders and calumnies, and

b.

4. That they may shoot in secret at the perfect: suddenly do they shoot at him, [b] and fear not.

those are prepared and sharpened, and shot, like poysoned darts or arrows against me; but being without all ground of truth, they are secretly and clancularly disseminated, falling upon me, when I least foresaw or expected them.

5. They incourage themselves in an evil matter; they commune of laying snares privily: they say, who shall see them?

6. And when they meet, they ingage and fortify one another in their mischievous designs, consult how to contrive them so secretly, that they shall not possibly be foreseen, or escaped.

6. They search out iniquity, they accomplish a diligent search: both the inward thoughts of every one of them and the heart is deep.

6. And indeed their industry is great; there is nothing that can contribute to their ends, but they find it out, through the depth of their malice and policy.

‖ be their broaks. וַיָּרֹּו

7. But God shall shoot at them with an arrow, suddenly shall ‖ they be wounded.

7. But in the midst of all this subtil contrivance, that no man can see, God shall discover, disappoint, and unexpectedly destroy them.

8. †So

8. Their tongues by which they thought to hurt others, shall in the event bring mischief upon themselves. By the death of Saul and his sons, he shall strike the whole Army with a sudden consternation; they shall fly, and then all that behold it shall forsake their dwellings and fly also.

8. † So they shall ‖ make their own tongue to fall upon themselves; all that see them shall flee away.

‖ And their own tongue shall cause it to fall upon them, and all that look on——

9. And dread the righteous judgments of God, acknowledging it to be his peculiar work of vengeance that befalls them.

9. And all men shall fear, and shall declare the work of God; for they shall * wisely consider of his doing.

* understand

10. And on the other side, all pious men shall have matter of rejoycing and of affiance in God; and none that thus adhere to him shall be disappointed, or frustrated by him.

10. The righteous shall be glad in the Lord, and shall trust in him; and all the upright in heart shall glory.

Annotations on Psalm LXIV.

a. דָּרַךְ

V. 3. Bend] From דָּרַךְ to go, is the same word used for extending, sending out, directing, making to go; and so is applied sometimes to grapes or olives in a press, and then signifies to squeeze out the juice, by beating, or treading them, Isa. 63. 2. רוּרְךְ בְּגַת, that treads or presses in the wine-press, and in many other places; sometimes of corne in the floore, and then 'tis to thrash, Jer. 51. 33; sometimes to a way (whence the known דֶּרֶךְ a way) Psal. 107. 7. וַיַּדְרִיכֵם and led or directed them. But most especially 'tis used of a bow, or arrows: if of קֶשֶׁת a bow, then 'tis to bend it; if of חִצִּים arrows, then 'tis not so properly to shoot, as to prepare or direct them. So Psal. 58. 7. יְדֹרֵךְ חִצָּיו he directeth, or prepareth his arrows; so here, דָּרְכוּ חִצָּם they direct, or aime, or make ready their arrows, דָּבָר מַר a bitter word, i. e. a calumniating speech, to be sent, as it were a dart, or arrow, out of the mouth. Parallel to which is that of Jer. 9. 3. where being applied to the tongue, as to a bow, that shoots out lying words, as arrows, it must be rendred bend; but here applied to words, as arrows, direct, and not bend. To this accord Abu Walid, and R. Tanchum, who from the use of the word, render it, who set their arrows on the string, not shooting as yet, but setting them ready to shoot. And thus it best agrees with what follows, v. 4. that they may shoot in secret, &c. The LXXII. for חִצִּים arrows, read τόξοι, as if it were קֶשֶׁת a bow, and generally joyn it with ἐντεταμένον, bent, (and the Chaldee, according to the nature of a Paraphrast, joyn bending the bow, and anointing the arrows. But the Syriack herein follow them not, but read, they whet their tongue as a sword, and their speech as ܚܪܒܐ an arrow; for so sure גִּיר signifies, where that which is proportionable to whetting the sword, is preparing or setting upon the string the arrows by way of preparation for shooting.

חִצִּים

דְּבַר מַר

b. וְלֹא יִירָאוּ

V. 4. Fear not] It is not easie to resolve what is the Importance of וְלֹא יִירָאוּ and they shall not fear. For though the joyning it with יֹרֵהוּ precedent, seems regular, they shall shoot, and not fear; yet the context seems not to agree to that. The design of the place is to express calumniators and whisperers, who shoot poysonous words, like darts, v. 3. and shoot them in secret, and suddenly, in the beginning of the verse: and to that best agrees the interpreting it of those that are thus secretly and suddenly shot at by them, that they do not fear. But then this agrees not with the Syntaxis, for those were in the former part of the verse mentioned in the singular number תָּם the perfect man, whereas יִירָאוּ is the plural. This makes it necessary to recurre either to the Hebrew practice, which often passes from one number to another, or else to their idiome, frequently taken notice of, of putting the third person active, to denote the passive, without consideration of the persons that are the agents; as when δέξονται, they shall receive you, imports no more than you shall be received. So here, suddenly do they shoot, and they fear not,] will signify, suddenly do they shoot, and no man fears, or as ו oft signifies, when, or while none fear. And if we consider the Genius of the antient Poetry, consisting much in Paronomasia's and verbal allusions, which is here so visible betwixt יֹרֵהוּ and יִירָאוּ shooting and fearing, it will appear to be an elegance, and not any harsh expression. Thus the LXXII. render it in sense, καὶ φοβηθήσονται, they shoot, and shall not be feared; and the Syriack not far distant, ܘܠܐ ܢܬܚܙܘ and they shall not be seen, i. e. shall come upon them unawares, when being not seen they are not feared or expected. To this rendring the learned Castellio adheres, reading, ut eos improviso figant nihil tale metuentes, that they may unexpectedly wound them not fearing any such thing; to that purpose, changing the singular תָּם precedent, into the plural, homines integros——

c. יַכְשִׁילֻהוּ

V. 8. Make their own tongue to fall] From כָּשַׁל impegit, to stumble, is the word יַכְשִׁילֻהוּ, which being applied to the tongue, לָשׁוֹן, and that their own tongue (as appears by עָלֵימוֹ themselves) may signifie (in proportion with the stumbling of the feet) stammering, or sticking in speech: linguis hæsitent, saith Castellio, stick, or stammer with their tongues. The Syriack render it ܢܬܚܫܠܘܢ ܠܗܘܢ ܠܫܢܗܘܢ their tongues shall be weak, from כָּרָא decurtatus est, infirmatus est. This is ordinary for men that are in a sudden affrightment, upon any unexpected accident, and so here very appliable to Sauls Army at their defeat. But in this rendring there is no account given of the suffix in יַכְשִׁילֻהוּ, nor of עָלֵימוֹ that follows. The Jewish Arab therefore renders לְשׁוֹנָם as in the nominative case, (which being joyned with the verb plural must relate to more tongues, of more speakers) and reads thus, It is their own tongue that hath made them stumble. To which the Chaldee best accords, וְיִתְקְלוֹן לְהוֹן לְשָׁנְהוֹן they shall make themselves stumble with their tongue; for that is all one with [their tongue shall make them stumble.] But, perhaps the rendring will yet be more literal, יַכְשִׁילֻהוּ עָלֵימוֹ לְשׁוֹנָם their tongue shall cause it to fall upon them, by it] meaning the mischief or punishment, which certainly is spoken of, and may best answer the suffix. 'Tis also possible that it may be thus divided, וַיַּכְשִׁילֻהוּ they shall make him stumble or fall, i. e. מַכּוֹתָם, the strokes, or wounds, immediately foregoing, v. 7. and then, עָלֵימוֹ לְשׁוֹנָם their tongue is upon, or against themselves. In either rendring the sense is the same, that their tongues, by which they designed to hurt others, shall bring mischief upon themselves. The LXXII. which read ἐξουδένωσαν αὐτὸν αἱ γλῶσσαι αὐτῶν, their tongues have brought them to nought,] are punctual in observing the suffix, and read לְשׁוֹנָם in the plural, their tongues, not tongue, to agree with the verb plural; but then they take no notice of the [עָלֵימוֹ upon themselves.] This the Latine express by [contra eos,] but but in their [infirmata sunt linguæ eorum] observe not the suffix. To this is added יְנֻדְּדוּ from נוּד to fly from, all that see them shall fly from them; and so 'tis expreſt in the hiſtory, 1 Sam. 31. 7. and 1 Chron. 10. 7, And when the men of Iſrael, &c. ſaw that the men of Iſrael fled, and that Saul and his ſons were dead, they forſook the Cities and fled. The Syriack expreſs it by ... and they ſhall feast (from רוח) the LXXII. by ἐπλήσθησαν, were troubled. To the ſame ſenſe the Chaldee (טלטלו from טול motus eſt were moved, though the tranſlator render it, movebunt capita ſua, they ſhall ſhake their heads, an expreſſion of diſlike and averſion to them.

The Sixty Fifth PSALM.

TO the chief Muſitian, A Pſalm and ſong of David.

Paraphraſe.
The ſixty fifth Pſalm is a thankful commemoration of Gods mercies and deliverances; probably of his reſtoring plenty, v. 9, 10, 11, 12. after the three years famine, 2 Sam. 21. 1. compoſed by David to be ſung by the quire, and to that end committed to the Præfect of his Muſick.

‖ Praiſe becommeth thee.

1. ‖ Praiſe [a] waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion; and unto thee ſhall the vow be performed.

1. To thee, O Lord, our ſolemneſt praiſes are moſt due, and the richeſt of our vowed oblations, or free-will offerings. a.

2. O thou that heareſt prayer, unto thee ſhall all fleſh come.

2. Thy property it is, to give a favourable audience to all petitions that are duly and faithfully preſented unto thee by any obedient ſervant of thine. This thou haſt now moſt graciouſly done to me, (ſee 2 Sam 21. 1. where David enquired, and the Lord anſwered, &c.) And this is an encouragement, and obligation to all ſuch to make their conſtant addreſſes to thee, and to all others to haſten to qualifie themſelves for a capacity of that unvaluable priviledge, to betake themſelves to Gods ſervice, that ſo they may have this freedom and dignity of acceſs unto him.

3. Iniquities prevail againſt me; as for our tranſgreſſions, thou ſhalt purge them away.

3. Our ſins have juſtly deſerved thy diſpleaſure, and been of force to make a ſeparation between thee and us; but thou art gratiouſly pleaſed to afford us thy free pardon of them, to deal with us, and accept our prayers, as if we had not thus provoked thee.

4. Bleſſed is the man whom thou chooſeſt, and cauſeſt to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts: we ſhall be ſatisfied with the goodneſs of thy houſe, even of thy holy Temple.

4. This is a moſt bleſſed condition, to be in the number of thoſe to whom thou art pleaſed to afford that confidence of preſenting their prayers unto thee, and to permit them to come to that place where thou art gratiouſly pleaſed to exhibit thy preſence, and there to be partakers of all the joyes which are conſequent hereto, the offering up prayers, receiving moſt gratious anſwers from God, and returning him praiſes for them. This indeed is a bleſſed and heavenly portion, ſufficient to ſatisfie any man.

†wonderful things. *or, of the ſea of them that are afar off.

5. By †[b] terrible things in righteouſneſs wilt thou anſwer us, O God of our ſalvation, who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and *of them that are afar off upon the [c] ſea,

5. And thus art thou pleaſed to deal with us, to afford us infinite mercy, marvellous exceeding great dignations; and thereby to demonſtrate thy ſelf to be our only Saviour and Redeemer; and not of us only, but of all the men of the world, of thoſe that inhabit the remoteſt Iſlands: there is none to be relyed on for any relief, but only thou. b. c.

6. Which by his ſtrength ſetteth faſt the mountains, being girded with power;

6. Thy ſtrength it is, O thou mighty God, by which only the ſtableſt and firmeſt parts of the world have their whole ſtability.

7. Which ſtilleſt the noiſe of the ſeas, the noiſe of their waves, and the tumult of the people.

7. 'Tis thou only that canſt reſtrain the roaring waves and ſurges of the ſea, from being very hurtful and miſchievous: and ſo in like manner a mad, tumultuous, and rebellious people none can reſtrain, or return to their obedience, but only thou. And thus thou haſt now been pleaſed to do.

8. They alſo that dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the earth are afraid of thy tokens: thou makeſt [d] the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoyce.

8. The illuſtrious acts of thy providence are ſuch, in diſſipating the machinations of wicked men, and protecting, ſupporting, and delivering thoſe that adhere and keep cloſe to thee, that they extort dread, and joy, awe, and thankſgiving, acknowledgment of thy juſtice and mercy from all, even the moſt barbarous men in the world. d.

‖ or, makeſt it thirſty. †the river of God is. *for ſo thou haſt founded it.

9. [e] Thou viſiteſt the earth and ‖ watereſt it; thou greatly inricheſt it † with the rivers of God, which is full of water: thou prepareſt them corn, *[f] when thou haſt ſo provided for it.

9. Thy gracious providence is diſcernible, as in the dearths and famines, ſo in reſtoring fruitfulneſs to the land; a work of Gods ſpecial care and favour, in opening the clouds of heaven, to water and refreſh and inrich the parched earth, and give it all that plenty, thoſe clouds being as it were Gods ſtore-houſe, and that very richly repleniſhed, and the earth ſo placed by Gods wiſdom in the creation, that they ſhould be ready to anſwer and ſatisfie all the wants thereof, whenſoever God ſhould ſee fit to diſtil and rain them down upon it. e. f.

‖ moiſtneſt the ridges thereof, thou depreſſeſt her furrows, with ſhowers thou diſſolveſt it, thou bleſſeſt that which ſprings out of it.

10. [g] Thou ‖ watereſt the ridges thereof abundantly, thou ſettleſt the furrows thereof, thou makeſt it ſoft with ſhowers, thou bleſſeſt the ſpringing thereof.

10. And indeed by the ſeaſonable diſpenſing of this it is, that the ground is prepared to ſend forth increaſe, when the corn is ſowed in it; and by the ſame again, whereby it proſpers and thrives after it is come up. g.

11. Thou crowneſt the year with thy goodneſs, and thy [h] paths drop fatneſs.

11. Thy bounty it is, by which all the fruits of the ſeaſons of the year are afforded us ſo plenteouſly: The clouds, from the rain whereof all this plenty proceeds, are by thy ſpecial direction and providence appointed ſo to do. h.

‖ ſhall gird themſelves with gladneſs.

12. They drop on the paſtures of the wilderneſs and the little hills ‖ [i] rejoyce on every ſide.

12. They diſtill and fall on the dry and deſert places; and by that ſupply, the leſſer hills, which are at the foot of the greater, become extremely fruitful. i.

13. The

k. 13. And ſo all fertility, both of the flocks and grain, comes down as a gift of thine a bountiful largeſs from thy treaſury, for which thou art for ever to be magnified.

13. The [k] paſtures are clothed with flocks, the valleys alſo are covered over with corn: they ſhout for joy, they all ſing.

Annotations on Pſal. LXV.

a. דֻמִיָּה

V. 1. Waiteth] From דּוּם ſiluit, is דֻמִיָּה ſilence, which being applied to man toward God, generally ſignifies a quiet relyance and dependance on him. And thus the Interlinear rendreth here, tibi ſilentium laus, ſilence to thee is praiſe; and the Chaldee accords, קֳדָמָךְ &c. Before thee praiſe is reputed as ſilence: It would rather be, ſilence as praiſe. And that thus it ſhould ſignifie here, the context enclines, being a ſolemn acknowledgment of his readineſs to relieve all that come to, and wait, and depend on him. And if that be it, then the only queſtion is, whether being joyn'd to תְּהִלָּה praiſe, it be to be rendred without, or with a copulative. There is no copulative in the Hebrew, and therefore literally it will thus be rendred, לְךָ דֻמִיָּה תְּהִלָּה Silence to thee (i.e. A quiet waiting or depending on thee) is praiſe. But it is ſo ordinary in the Pſalms to omit, and yet underſtand, the copulative ו and, that there will be no reaſon to doubt but that ſo it may be here alſo, To thee ſilence and praiſe, O God —— i.e. To thee belongeth, or is due each of theſe. But the Jewiſh Arab renders it, praiſe becometh thee, O God; and Abu Walid, To thee is praiſe befitting, becomming, due, convenient for thee, referring דֻמִיָּה to the theme דמה to be like, or agreeable: and in this rendring all the antients (ſave only the Chaldee) agree, Σοὶ πρέπει ὑμνος, ſay the LXXII. praiſe becometh thee; לך נאה it is decent for thee, the Syriack; agrees to thee, the Arabick; and ſo the reſt.

b. נוֹרָאוֹת

V. 5. Terrible things] נוֹרָאוֹת from יָרֵא timuit, reveritus eſt, ſignifies ſometimes terrible, ſometimes wonderful things, any thing that exceeds either in greatneſs or quality. In the latter we have it, Deut. 10.21. ſpeaking of God, he is thy praiſe, and he is thy God, that hath done for thee theſe great and terrible things; הַנּוֹרָאוֹת, i. e. חסינתא ſtrong things, ſaith the Targum, great, exceeding, wonderful things, and thoſe acts of mercy, and not of juſtice or puniſhment; and ſo here it appears to ſignifie, being joyned with תַּעֲנֵנוּ anſwering us, or granting us, in anſwer to our prayers, (ſo עָנָה ſignifies to anſwer a requeſt, to hear a prayer) and with בְּצֶדֶק in righteouſneſs, which frequently imports mercy. The LXXII. accordingly read it Θαυμαστὸς, wonderful.

תַּעֲנֵנוּ

בְּצֶדֶק

c. יָם

V. 5. See] יָם the ſea is frequently ſet to denote the Iſlands that are incompaſt with the ſea on every ſide, and being here oppoſed to קְצוֵי אֶרֶץ the ends, or extreme parts of the earth, i.e. the continent, it is ſet to ſignifie all the fartheſt diſtant angles or Iſlands of the world, and ſo is joyned with רְחֹקִים, thoſe that are far removed, and ſo will beſt be rendred to the letter, the ſea of them that are fartheſt off, and explained by the Chaldee, who read יַמָּא וְנַוָּיָת and of the Iſlands of the ſea, וְרִחִיקַיָּא מִן יַבֵּשׁ which are remote from the continent. The Syriack render the ſenſe moſt fully, ובמרחקי ים the remote nations.

רְחֹקִים

d. מוֹצָא

V. 8. Outgoings] From יָצָא prodiit, proceſſit, is מוֹצָא egreſſio, and is ordinarily applyed to the Sun, and then beſt rendred riſing. So Pſal. 19.6. מוֹצָאוֹ his going forth, i. e. his riſing is from the end of the heavens, i.e. extreme part of the horiſon. So Pſal. 75.6. For promotion cometh neither מִמּוֹצָא from the going out (i.e. from the riſing of the ſun, the Eaſt) nor מִמַּעֲרָב from the evening, or ſun-ſet, or weſt. In proportion with which place (where מוֹצָא out-going, and עֶרֶב evening, or ſun-ſet, or weſt, are ſet oppoſite) it will be moſt fit to interpret the phraſe here, that the out-going of the morning ſhall be literally the riſing of the ſun, or morning ſtar, the forerunner of the ſun, and by metonymy, the Eaſt, or one extreme part of the world, and again that uſed for the men that inhabit it; and the evening, on the other ſide, not the outgoing of the evening, or riſing of the moon or ſtars, but literally the place of the ſuns ſetting, the weſt, and ſo the inhabitants of that other extreme part. And ſo both together be equivalent with [thoſe that dwel in the uttermoſt parts of the earth] in the beginning of the verſe.

e. פָּקַדְתָּ יְחִשְּׁקֶנָּה

V. 9. Viſiteſt] That פָּקַד ſignifies viſiting, in the notion either of mercy or puniſhing, and here belongs to the former in mercy, there is no queſtion. The difficulty is in the following word יְחִשְּׁקֶנָּה, which from יָשַׁק diſcurrit cum fremitu, running about with a noiſe, as an hungry or thirſty Lion, may ſignify to make thirſty. This word שקק the Arabs uſe frequently of parcht or dry ground, which opens the mouth as it were, to beg for ſhours. Thus a dry ground is called אֶרֶץ עֲיֵפָה Pſal. 143.6. a thirſty land. And thus the longing ſoul, (in the word here uſed) נֶפֶשׁ שׁוֹקֶקֶת, is joyned with the hungry ſoul, and by that conjunction ſeems to ſignify the thirſty ſoul, Pſal. 107.9. The Chaldee there renders it סְרִיקָא empty. And thus is תְּשׁוּקָה uſed for appetite or deſire, Gen. 3.16 and Gen. 4.7. and ſo the verb is frequently uſed by the Rabbines. And then as Aben Ezra and Kimchi prefer this notion, ſo the rendring, they think, will moſt probably be, פָּקַדְתָּ הָאָרֶץ Thou haſt viſited in mercy, i.e. bleſſed the earth, or land, וַתְּשִׁקְקֶהָ after thou haſt made it dry, or thirſty, רַבַּת תַּעְשִׁרֶנָּה thou haſt or doſt enrich it greatly; i. e. Thou, the ſame God, which haſt puniſhed and made thirſty, doſt again return in mercy, and enrich it alſo, reſtoreſt plenty to it. Thus it was in the ſtory after the three years famine. 1 Sam. 21. 1. and is moſt probably the meaning of this paſſage; as all that follows of the plenty. But others interpret it in the notion of watering: פאסקיתהא ſaith the Jewiſh Arab, thou haſt watered; and to that Abu Walid inclines, and ſo the Chaldee, and Syriack, and LXXII. whoſe authority may prevail for that.

V. 9. When] The only difficulty of this v. 9. will be removed by rendring כִּי for, or quandoquidem; for thus it lyes: Thou with thy divine bleſſing and providence פָּקַדְתָּ הָאָרֶץ viſiteſt, i.e. takeſt care for the earth הָאָרֶץ, all that is here below, particularly the field that bears fruits or corn, וְתִשְּׁקֶהָ and watereſt it (from שׁוּק, in Piel שִׁקֵּק rigavit) רַבַּת תַּעְשִׁרֶנָּה thou inricheſt it exceedingly. Then follows פֶּלֶג —the river of God is full of water, i.e. the clouds, which God hath prepared to be receptacles of waters, from thence, when he pleaſeth, to pour down upon the earth; they are always kept full for any uſes. And hereby thou prepareſt their corn, by the former and the latter rain thou makeſt fruitful ſeaſons, כִּי כֵן תְּכִינֶנָּה for ſo thou haſt founded it, i.e. the earth; i.e. God hath ſo placed the earth in the midſt of waters, waters in the bowels of it, and waters in the clouds hanging over it (the keys whereof are peculiarly kept in his hand, ſay the Jews, as the keys of life and reſurrection, ſee note on Act. 14.a.) that as he can, if he pleaſe overthrow and deſtroy it preſently, as in the deluge he did, for the ſins of the old world (ſee 2 Pet. 3.5.) ſo, if our provocations do not withhold his hand, he will repleniſh, and inrich it conſtantly by theſe means. To tis ſenſe the antient Interpreters agree: the LXXII. read ὅτι ὕτως ἡ ἑτοιμασία, for ſo is the preparation, the earth was after this manner prepared; and the Syriack, כד אתכנתה when thou foundeſt or eſtabliſhedſt it; and the Chaldee, אֲרוּם הֵיכְנָא תְּשַׁכְלְלִנַּהּ ſeeing thou haſt ſo founded it.

V. 10. Watereſt]

g. V. 10. Watereſt] In this v. 10. is ſet down the way by which the rain enricheth the Earth, that is prepared for corn, and makes it fruitful. Firſt, after ploughing it comes down and moiſtens the earth, waters the ridges, or ground caſt up; ſo תְּלָמֶיהָ רַוֵּה signifies, רַוֵּה from רָוָה to be watered or moiſtned and תְּלָמֶיהָ from תֶּלֶם. Of this ſaith Abu Walid, that in Arabick with th it ſignifies a cleft, and with t, that which the plough cleaves in the earth, a furrow. But R. Tanchum ſaith that with th it is indeed a cleft, by reaſon of ſomething wanting to fill the place, but with t, it ſignifies the lines or ridges of earth betwixt two furrows. And whereas the Arabick Lexicographers (by name Al Kamus) render it a furrow, he ſaith it may be ſo called from the efficient cauſe of it, becauſe the making the furrows and turning the earth out of them, occaſioneth the raiſing of the other. The interlinear renders it lira, the Lexicographers porca, the upper and drier ground betwixt the drains or furrows. And this, as it is laid dry, and ſo fitted for the receiving, and giving root to the corn, ſo it wants the benefit of ſhowres from heaven to refreſh it, and ſo God beſtows them upon it. Then follows נַחֵת גְּדוּדֶיהָ. That the Jewiſh Arab renders, the rain deſcends on the furrows of it. Abu Walid thinks that נָחַת hath here the ſignification of abounding, encreaſe, flouriſhing; the Arabick nazeta, which anſwers it in the ſenſe of deſcending, ſignifying that. Then for גְּדוּדִים he thinks it all one with חֲרִיצִים precedent, and ſo to ſignifie, as he conceived of that, a furrow; but ſtill this in R. Tanchums notion of that, the mould which, by making the furrow, is caſt up, which therefore Caſtellio reads glebas the clods, of which it is here ſaid, that God depreſſeth them, ſo נַחֵת literally ſignifies, makeſt them to deſcend; the earth that is caſt up in ridges ſinks down and fills up the vacuities, and ſo is in a fitter poſture for the growing of the corn, and is done by God, as here follows, בִּרְבִיבִים by the ſhours of rain coming down, and ſoftening and waſhing it down. And therefore 'tis added תְּמוֹגְגֶנָּה thou diſſolveſt it (from מוּג to be melted or diſſolved:) All this for the preparing the ſoil to the due receiving, and ſending forth the corn: and then when it is above ground, 'tis called צֶמַח germen, that which is ſprouted out from the earth; and then comes the latter rain, and makes that grow very proſperouſly: and that is the meaning of the laſt part of the verſe, צֶמְחוֹ תְּבָרֵךְ thou bleſſeſt that which ſprouts out.

צֶמְחוֹ תְּבָרֵךְ

h. V. 11. Paths] The clouds are here ſtyled סַעֲנָלֶיךָ thy paths (from עָגַל round, circular, ſmooth, becauſe paths are made by cart-wheels turning round upon them) as the places whereon God is Poetically deſcribed to walk, or to be carried as in a Chariot, Pſal. 18. 9, 10, 11. For to theſe it is that the dropping of fatneſs on the earth peculiarly belongs. The antient Interpreters, all but the Chaldee, render this by way of paraphraſe, τὰ πεδία σου πλησθήσεται πίονος, ſay the LXXII. thy fields ſhall be filled with fatneſs, (by the bounty of the clouds upon them;) and the Latine and Arabick and Æthiopick follow them: but the Syriack, ... and thy calves or young cattel ſhall be filled with graſs, (as an effect of the bounty of the clouds.)

סַעֲנָלֶיךָ

i. V. 12. Rejoyce] The phraſe here applied to the hills, of גִּיל תַּחְגֹּרְנָה they ſhall gird themſelves (from חָגַר cinxit) with gladneſs, is to be judged of by Pſal. 30. 2. where 'tis uſed and applied to men. It there ſignifies being clothed with a feſtival garment, (the girdle being that which binds the garment on us, and the girdle or garment of gladneſs, the feſtival garment) and is figuratively uſed to denote Gods bleſſings abundantly beſtowed upon him. And ſo here, by the like figure, the hills being girded with gladneſs, denotes being plentifully inricht by God, or made very fruitful; ſo as v. 13. their ſhouting for joy and ſinging imports. The LXXII. therefore render it very literally, and very fitly, ἀγαλλίαμα οἱ βουνοὶ περιζώσονται, the hills ſhall be girt about with exultation; and the reſt of the antients accord.

גִּיל תַּחְגֹּרְנָה

k. V. 13. Paſtures] The Hebrew כָּר, which ſignifies a paſture, Iſai. 30. 23. ſignifies alſo a ram, Iſai. 16. 1. And ſo the LXXII. here render it κριοὶ, rams, and ſo the Chaldee alſo. But the elegancy is beſt preſerved by the former notion. The flocks of ſheep being fitly ſtiled the clothing of the paſture, which they keep warm, and much inrich by being folded on it. And with that ſo interpreted the analogy holds in that which follows, the valleys or ploughed lands are covered with corn, as the fields with ſheep.

The Sixty Sixth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

TO the chief Muſitian, A Song or Pſalm.

The ſixty ſixth Pſalm is made up wholly of acknowledgments of Gods mercies and deliverances, that of old from Ægypt, v. 6. &c. as an image of ſome other remarkable one now received, at the writing of this Pſalm. (By the * Title given it in the Greek copies, it appears to have been uſed in the Greek Church on Eaſter day.)

* Ὠιδὴ ἀναστάσεως.

1. Make a joyful noiſe unto God, all ye lands.
2. Sing forth the honour of his Name, ‖ [a] make his praiſe glorious.

1, 2. It is the obliged duty of all the men in the world to celebrate with all joy, a. and thanksgiving, and praiſe, the great and gracious God of heaven and earth.

‖ or, give him glory by his praiſe, or by praiſing him.

3. Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works? through the greatneſs of thy power ſhall thine enemies † ſubmit themſelves unto thee.

3. To proclaim the wonderful and dreadful works of his vengeance on his enemies, by which even thoſe which are moſt wicked are yet conſtreined to acknowledge, and hypocritically to ſubject themſelves to him.

† feign obedience to thee: See note on Pſa. 18. 44.

4. All the earth ſhall worſhip thee, and ſhall ſing unto thee, they ſhall ſing to thy name. Selah.
5. Come and ſee the works of God, he is terrible in his doing toward the Children of men.

4, 5. Very marvelous things hath he done towards us, the acts of his providence among men are very remarkable: O let us all adore and magnifie his Name for them.

6. When the children of Israel were, according to his promise to the fathers, brought out of bondage in Egypt, 'twas done in a miraculous manner; the sea on a suddain, at their approach, departing before them, and giving them a free passage through it, but returning with violence upon the Egyptians, who pursued them, and were drowned with that which did them no hurt. And afterward when they were to enter into the promis'd land, by passing † over Jordan, at the Priests entring on the brink of the river with the Ark on their shoulders, the waters stood, and arose up on a heap, Josh. 3. 16. and by other the like restraints interposed by Gods special power, all the Israelites passed over on dry ground, v. 17. And this certainly in both parts of it was matter of great joy to our ancestors, and just occasion of magnifying his power (and vengeance) and mercy to us.

6. He turned the sea into dry land, they went through the flood on foot; there did we rejoyce in him.

† בַּיִּרְדֵּן יוֹרְדֵנָא by the River Jordan, Chald.

b. 7. And as over the Egyptians and seven nations, so hath he absolute dominion over all other nations of the world: And that may be a good admonition to all obstinate impious oppressors, timely to return and repent, that they fall not irreversibly under his vengeance.

7. He ruleth by his [b] power † for ever, his eyes behold the nations: let not the rebellious exalt themselves. Selah.

† over the world.

8, 9. 'Tis he that surrounds our lives in time of danger, and preserves them from all miscarriage, and accordingly is to be blest and magnified by all that have received this mercy from him, to be preserved so long, when if he had not supported, they had each minute been cast down.

8. O bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard,
9. Which holdeth our soul in life, and suffereth not our feet to slip.

10. He hath sometimes brought trouble and affliction upon us, upon the same designs that metallists are wont to throw gold or silver into the fire, to discern whether it be pure or no, and if it be not, to melt and separate all the dross and false metal from it. Thus he dealt with the Israelites of old in the iron furnace of Egypt; and proportionably thus he hath now dealt with us: And this hath been his one gratious purpose in all his inflictions, to approve our sincerity of adherence to him, and to reform and purge out all that is vitious in us.

10. For thou, O God, hast proved us; thou hast tried us as silver is tried.

11. One while he hath permitted us to be insnared and subdued by our enemies, as in Egypt our Fathers were.

11. Thou broughtest us into the net, thou laidst * affliction upon our loyns.

* restraint מוֹעָקָה

12. Another while he hath permitted them to oppress and tyrannize over us: But then as after the example of those, he hath by his providence chosen to permit very sharp afflictions to befal us, so hath he gratiously brought us through, and out of them again. As he brought our fathers to Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey, after the fire of the brick-kilns, and the water of the sea, and the floods of the River Jordan; so hath he oft delivered us out of the most pressing distresses, brought us out of drowing, to blessing waters, to a well-watered irrigated Country, and returned us to all kind of prosperity.

12. Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads: we went through fire and through water, but thou broughtest us out into a ‖ wealthy place.

‖ watered- לְרְוָיָה

13, 14. When we were in any distress, we made our addresses to thee, besought thee to avert them, and upon thy hearing our prayers, promised reformation of life, and voluntary oblations, for the acknowledgment of that deity from whence we expected and begged our relief. And now being heard and answered by thee, we are under the strictest obligation of justice and gratitude, and performance of promise, to return our most chearful acknowledgments to thee.

13. I will go into thy house with burnt-offerings; I will pay thee my vows.
14. Which my lips have uttered, and my mouth hath spoken, when I was in trouble.

15. And this I will now do in the liberallest and most magnificent manner that can be.

15. I will offer unto thee burnt-sacrifices of fatlings, with the incense of rams: I will offer bullocks with goats. Selah.

16. And proclaim to all pious men, for their incouragement, how gratiously God hath dealt with me all my life long.

16. Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul.

17. How, as soon as I made my prayers unto him, he granted them presently, and gave me cause to convert them into praises.

17. I cryed unto him with my mouth, and he was extolled with my tongue.

18, 19. Which is, beside the blessing granted, a farther matter of joy and comfort to me, that that God, which cannot patronize any sin, hath been pleased to hearken to my request, and so to sign unto me his approbation of my sincerity.

18. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me.
19. But verily God hath heard me, he hath attended to the voice of my prayer.

20 His Name be for ever magnified, for this honour of hearing my prayers, and the deliverance consequent thereto.

20. Blessed be God, which hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me.

Annotations on Psal. LXVI.

a. שִׂימוּ כְּבוֹד תְּהִלָּתוֹ

V. 2. Make his praise glorious] שִׂימוּ here the Jewish Arab renders in the notion of giving, give him glory, (and so regularly שָׂם posuit, put] is used for dedit, gave, and is here v. 9. joyned with נָתַן to give, as a synonymon, and so to put to him honour] is to give it him; but he, as well as others, avoids making כְּבוֹד to be in regimine, so as to govern the noun that follows, the glory of his praise:] for then (as in the beginning of this verse, כְּבוֹד שְׁמוֹ the honour of his Name) the vowel should be changed from ˙ to ˙ It is then possible that the nouns should be put by apposition; and then שִׂימוּ may be in the ordinary notion of put, or make,] make glory glory his praiſe, i. e. either your glory] as Aben Ezra would have it, make your glory his praiſe, let it be your glory to praiſe him) or his glory,] make his glory his praiſe. But 'tis yet more probable, that the difficulty may be beſt removed by underſtanding a prepoſition in יְהוֹדוּךָ: the Jewiſh Arab ſupplies it by מן from, or of his praiſe; it may be as fitly [by his praiſe] i. e. by your praiſing of him. To this ſenſe the Chaldee may be interpreted, שַׁוּוֹ אֵימַר רוּשְׁבַּחְתֵּיהּ give him glory by his praiſe, and the LXXII. δότε δόξαν αἴνου αὐτοῦ, give glory by his praiſe, or by praiſing him: and that ſeems to be the moſt ready rendring of it. There are ſeveral ways of giving glory to God; one by confeſſing of ſins, Joſh. 7. 19. my Son give glory to God, and make confeſſion to him, and tell me what thou haſt done; and ſo 1 Sam. 6. 5. ye ſhall give glory to God, peradventure he will lighten his hand, and Jer. 13. 16. and elſewhere. And another by praiſing him, Iſa. 42. 12. Let them give glory to the Lord, and declare his praiſe; ſo Rev. 2. 9. when thoſe beaſts give glory and honour and thanks; And ſo here, give him glory, by what means? יְהוֹדוּךָ by his praiſe, or by praiſing him.

V. 7. Power for ever] That עוֹלָם, aion, as the Engliſh age, ſignifies not only time and duration, but alſo the men that live in any time, there is no queſtion. And then מוֹשֵׁל עוֹלָם muſt here moſt properly be rendred, ruling the world, or over the world; and ſo the Chaldee certainly underſtood, who read יַשְׁלִיט עַל עָלְמָא which exerciſeth dominion over the world: and ſo I ſuppoſe the LXXII. their Κατέχοντι τῶν αἰώνων, having dominion over the world,] doth import, though the Latine hath rendred it amiſs, (and againſt their meaning) in æternum. The Syriack, by following the Hebrew, and rendring it לעלמא in ſeculum, is capable of the right ſenſe, he that hath dominion over the world; the very paraphraſe of παντοκράτωρ, by which God is known in the Creed, the ruler of all things. b. מוֹשֵׁל עוֹלָם

a. תַּנְחֵם

V. 4. Govern] תַּנְחֵם from נָחָה duxit, ſeems here to ſignifie, in a comprehenſive latitude, all acts of conduct; as of a paſtor toward his ſheep, leading them into their paſtures, guiding and directing men into thoſe courſes which are moſt eminently profitable for them; of a General toward his Souldiers, marſhalling marſha'ling them, and going before them; and ſo proſpering them in their fight againſt all kinds of enemies; and laſtly of a King, ruling and ordering his ſubjects, and ſo doth God thoſe, that will ſincerely ſubmit to him. All which the word [lead or conduct] may contain under it; and ſo that will be the fitter, becauſe the more literal, and withall more comprehenſive rendring, and to be preferred before that of governing.

b. נָתְנָה V. 6. Shall yeeld] The Hebrew יְתֵנָה being in the preter tenſe, is ſo interpreted by the Antients, The LXXII. τὴν γῆν τὸν καρπὸν αὐτῆς, the earth hath given or yeelded her fruit; the Chaldee, אַרְעָא יְהַבַת, the earth hath given, and the Syriack in the ſame words, and ſo the Latine, Terra dedit, and the Arabick, and Æthiopick. And therefore although it be frequent, when the ſenſe requires it, to interpret the Hebrew preter tenſe in the future; yet the ſenſe not requiring it here, and the Interpreters according in the contrary, there will be no reaſon here to admit of it, but to ſet it, as the Hebrew lies, as an argument to infer the univerſal confeſſing, and acknowledging, and ſerving of God, v. 5. as it is ſet by S. Paul to the heathens, Act. 14. 17. And then that which follows, יְבָרְכֵנוּ אֱלֹהִים, will be beſt rendered, in form of benediction, God bleſs us, even our God: and ſo the LXXII. read εὐλογήσαι ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς, (and the Latins, Benedicat) both here, and in the beginning of the next verſe. יְבָרְכֵנוּ

The Sixty Eighth Pſalm.

Paraphraſe.

The ſixty eighth Pſalm, beginning in the ſame manner as Moſes's ſong at the ſetting forward of the Ark did, Num. 10. 35. was compoſed by David afterward (as appears by the mention of the Temple, i.e. the Ark and Sanctuary at Jeruſalem, v 29.) in commemoration of the great deliverances afforded to the Iſraelites, and judgments inflicted on their enemies, (eſpecially in that of their coming up out of Egypt) and myſtically conteining and predicting the reſurrection of Chriſt, and the exaltation of the Chriſtian Church conſequent thereto. It ſeems to have been formed by David on the like occaſion as Moſes's was, at the bringing up of the Ark, 2 Sam. 6. 12. and was committed to the Præfect of his Muſick, to be ſung with all Muſical inſtruments of joy, 2 Sam. 6. 15.

TO the chief Muſitian, A Pſalm or Song of David.

1. The Ark is a token of the ſpecial preſence of Almighty God, who when he is pleaſed to interpoſe, ſubdues all before him, no enemy of his or of his people can ſtand or proſper. And ſo when Chriſt, myſtically typified by the Ark of God, comes into the world, it is the great God of heaven and earth that exhibites himſelf in our mortal fleſh, and being crucified by the Jews, he ſhall by his own almighty power be raiſed again, and aſcend to heaven, and then ſubdue or deſtroy, convert by the preaching of the Goſpel, or utterly exterminate, the people and whole nation of the Jews his crucifiers.

1. || Let God ariſe, let his enemies be ſcattered; let them alſo that hate him flee before him. || or, God ſhall— יָקוּם

2. As ſoon as God appears, they vaniſh and are routed immediately: ſmoak doth not turn into air, wax doth not melt at the heat of the fire more ſpeedily. And as certainly and ſuddainly ſhall the either melting or vaniſhing, converſion or deſtruction of the Jews follow the reſurrection and aſcenſion of Chriſt. As ſoon as he is aſcended, the apoſtles ſhall ſet on preaching, and begin firſt at Jeruſalem and Judæa; and by that time they have gone through all the cities of Judæa, and converted all that are perſwaſible, Chriſt ſhall come in judgment on the obdurate, Mat. 10. 23. the Roman Eagles or armies, Mat. 24. 28. (with the Enſign of the Eagle) in that very generation, v. 34. wherein Chriſt aſcended, ſhall beſiege and take Jeruſalem, deſtroy the Temple, and take away both their place and nation. And though this were ſome years (about forty) before it was finiſhed, yet with God, with whom a thouſand years are but as one day, 2 Pet 3. 8. theſe forty years are but proportionable to a moment, and ſo to that ſpace which is required to the vaniſhing of ſmoak, or melting of wax before the fire: (and ſo the Lord is not ſlack concerning his promiſe, v. 9. this prædiction of the greateſt ſwiftneſs of deſtroying his enemies, hath its due completion.)

2. As ſmoak is driven away, ſo † drive them away: as wax melteth before the fire, ſo * let the wicked periſh at the preſence of God. † ſhalt thou * ſhall

3. And this ſhall be matter of the higheſt ſuperlative joy to all pious men, who have anſwers to their prayers from the preſence of God in the Ark; but moſt eminently to all faithful obedient ſervants of Chriſt, who ſhall in a notable manner be delivered out of that common calamity, wherein the unbelieving Jews ſhall be involved, and (by the power of Chriſts Spirit in their hearts, chearfully received and made uſe of) be aſcertain'd of their portion in eternal heaven.

3. But || let the righteous be glad, let them rejoyce before God; yea let them exceedingly rejoyce. || the righteous ſhall

2. 4. He that thus preſentiates himſelf in the Ark, as alſo the Meſſias, that ſhall be born, and riſe again in our fleſh, is no other than the ſupreme omnipotent God of heaven and earth, creator, firſt mover, and ruler of the uppermoſt heaven and all under it: let all the world worſhip, and acknowledge and magnifie him as ſuch, and take pleaſure in performing obedience to him.

4. Sing unto God, ſing praiſes to his name; extoll him that † rideth upon the † heavens * by his name Jah, and rejoyce before him. † higheſt heaven * or, his Name is Jehovah.

5. Though he inhabites the higheſt heaven, yet is he pleaſed here below to exhibite himſelf in the Ark firſt, and after in our humane fleſh, to relieve and patronize all that are in diſtreſs, to heal the broken in heart, thoſe that are oppreſt with the burthen of their ſins, and ſo ſupply all other (even ſecular) wants to all that by humble devout prayer and reliance on him are qualified for it.

5. A Father of the fartherleſs and a Judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation.

6. God

‖ maketh the destitute dwell at home.

6. God ‖ ſetteth the [b] ſolitary in families, he bringeth out thoſe which are bound with chains: but the rebellious dwell in a dry land.

that ſerve and wait on him; * brought the Iſraelites out of Egypt, their ſtate of hard ſlavery, and puniſhed their oppreſſors very heavily, and ſo conſtantly ſupplies all his ſervants wants. And this in an eminent manner ſhall be the work of the Meſſias, by his miracles, going about, doing good, and healing diſeaſes; but eſpecially by his death, working ſpiritual redemption (the moſt ſoveraign mercy) for our ſouls, whilſt the impenitent infidels, that reſiſt and fruſtrate all his methods of grace and mercy, are finally forſaken by him. * ſo the Chald.

7. O God, when thou wenteſt forth before thy people, when thou didſt march through the wilderneſs. Selah.

8. The earth ſhook, the heavens alſo dropt at the preſence of God, † even [c] Sinai it ſelf was moved at the preſence of God, the God of Iſrael.

7, 8. God at his bringing his people, with an high hand, out of Egypt into Canaan, conducted them through the wilderneſs in a pillar of cloud and fire, to de- c.

† this is Sinai before the preſence—— note his ſpecial providence over them, and bringing them to Mount Sinai, delivered them his Law in a moſt ſolemn dreadful manner, the earth trembling, Exod. 19. 18. and the air ſending out thunder and lightning, and a thick cloud of tempeſtuous rain, v. 16. as a token of his preſence there, and an eſſay of the terrible account that ſhould be exacted on thoſe that obeyed not this Law. And in the like dreadful manner ſhall Chriſt, after his aſcending to heaven, come to viſit his crucifiers, and avenge all impenitent unbelievers.

9. Thou, O God, didſt ſend a plentifull rain, whereby thou didſt confirm thine inheritance when it was weary.

9. When they were in great diſtreſs in the wilderneſs for want of food, God made abundant proviſion for their refreſhment and ſuſtenance, by ſending them, together with the thunder, plentiful refreſhing ſhowres, by raining down quails and Manna from heaven; and above all, the divine irrigation of the Law was thence diſtill'd. And ſo ſhall the Meſſias make his ſpiritual ſupplies in great abundance to the comfort of all humble penitent hearts, that are ſenſible of their wants, and that ardently deſire and pray to him for the ſupply of them.

And parallel to theſe, Chriſt, at his departure from the world, ſhall leave his Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, called Angels of the Churches, Rev. 2. and 3. to provide for the ſpiritual wants of all his faithful diſciples, all docible Chriſtians.

abundant matter of praiſe and triumph, which the train of ſinging women, muſtering themſelves up in another army (according to their wont) ſet forth in their triumphant hymns. (A type of the victories over death and hell by the reſurrection of the Meſſias, which the women in like manner, Mary Magdalen, &c. ſhould firſt publiſh to the Diſciples, and they preach to the whole world.)

12. Kings of armies [f] did fly apace, and ſhe that tarried at home divided the ſpoil.

forces, that oppoſed or ſtood out againſt them, were utterly routed and put to flight, Joſh. 10. and the weakeſt Iſraelites, they that could not enter the battel were yet partakers of the ſpoils of their wealth. (And ſo in like manner that by the reſurrection of Chriſt the powers of hell ſhould be diſcomfited, and the humble meek peaceable Chriſtian reap the fruit of it.)

deſpiſed condition, were now at length advanced to all proſperity, ſplendor and glory: (as was remarkable at their coming out from the kilns of Egypt, with the Jewels and wealth of the Egyptians, and afterward more illuſtriouſly at their injoying of Canaan.) And ſo under Chriſts kingdom the heatheniſh Idolaters, that were brought to the baſeſt and moſt deſpicable condition of any creatures, worſhipping wood and ſtone, &c. and given up to the vileſt luſts, and a reprobate mind, Rom. 1. ſhould from that deteſtable condition be advanced to the ſervice of Chriſt, and practice of all Chriſtian virtues, charity, meekneſs, &c. the greateſt inward beauties in the world.

14, 15. When God deſtroyed and diſſipated the Kings of the ſeven nations before them, (for though it h.

was by their arms, yet was their ſtrength ſo ſmall in proportion to the giantly inhabitants, that the victory was wholly to be attributed to God) his providence was illuſtriouſly viſible in it; and the people were by this means ſoon poſſeſſed of the land, on this and on the other ſide of Jordan, a moſt fruitful and profitable poſſeſſion (cauſed by the melting of the ſnow that lay on the tops of the hills, and exceedingly inrich'd all the plains that lay below them) and there dwelt, remarkable and illuſtrious in the eyes of all their neighbours. And ſo upon Chriſts riſing from the dead, and thereby conquering death and hell, and ſoon after, upon his victorious conqueſt over his enemies, the Jews his crucifiers, which would not ſuffer him to reign over them, the Church of Chriſt typified by the people of Iſrael, ſhould be poſſeſt of a proſperous and flouriſhing condition in Judæa, and even in the heathen world; though for a while it ſhould ſometimes meet with perſecution from the heathen Emperors, yet at length Chriſtianity ſhould be victorious, and ſubdue the greateſt oppoſers to the faith.

them for the place of his habitation; but hath now brought the Ark of the Covenant, and placed it on Mount Sion, not the higheſt hill in thoſe parts, but one of an humble and moderate ſize, preferring this before all other for the place of his ſpecial reſidence; and this ſo, as never to remove from thence (as formerly he hath done) to any other ſtation, as long as the Jewiſh ſtate laſted. (And ſo proportionably ſhall Chriſt erect his Church in the hearts of the meek and lowly, Mat. 5. 3. whereas the proud and lofty, as they will oppoſe and ſtand out againſt him, ſo ſhall they be utterly rejected by him.)

(But much more illuſtriouſly ſhall Chriſt be preſent in his Church by the miniſtry of many thouſands of Angels, after his reſurrection, being that very God that once appeared by his Angels in Mount Sinai, and hath all the hoſts of them continually miniſtring to him.)

(And thus Chriſt having by his reſurrection overcome death, hell and ſin (and alſo, ſoon after, ſignally deſtroyed his crucifiers) ſhall ſend his Apoſtles and Evangeliſts to preach his Goſpel to the whole heathen world, induing them with gifts of tongues and miracles, &c. to qualifie them for their office, and by them bring many Diſciples to the faith, particularly a remnant of the unbelieving Jews, who ſeeing the Idolatrous Gentiles come in, were ſtirred up with emulation, and ſo timely prevented their ruine, and lived members of the Church of Chriſt, to which he promiſed his preſence; ſee Eph. 4. 8.

Annotations on Pſal. LXVIII.

a. בַּעֲרָבוֹת

V. 4. Rideth upon the heavens] From עָרַב is עֲרָב, ordinarily uſed for the evening, and from that notion of it, בַּעֲרָבוֹת is here by the LXXII. rendred ὁπὶ δυσμῶν, and by the Latine ſuper occaſum, upon the going down of the Sun; and accordingly סֹלּוּ, which the Chaldee duly render קְקֻמוּן praiſe ye, from סָלַל exaltavit, they render ὁδοποιῆτε, make way, from another notion of סָלַל for caſting up a cauſeway. But the fœminine עֲרָבָה is frequently taken for a plain, and ſo for the deſert, and accordingly the Jewiſh Arab rendreth it here, that dwelleth in abſent or remote or ſecret places. But עֲרָבוֹת, in the plural, is acknowledged by the Hebrews to ſignifie the heavens, and ſo in Arabick عربا heaven, and peculiarly the ſeventh heaven. This Abu Walid ſaith belongs to the heavens by reaſon of their height or ſupereminency, which ſignification he affirms עָרַב to have: And then there is no need of thoſe other deſcants, which from the notion of a deſert apply it to the uppermoſt heavens, either as being plain and void of ſtars, and ſo a kind of ſuperior deſert, without any thing in it, or (as the learned Grotius pioully conjectures, from 1 Tim. 6. 16.) becauſe as a deſert it is ἀπρόσιτον, not approach't or approachable by any. The Chaldee here explains it, עַל כּוּרְסֵיהּ יְקָרֵיהּ בַּעֲרָבוֹת upon the ſeat of his glory in Araboth, which the Latine there render cœlo nono, the ninth heaven. His riding on this, as in a chariot, or horſe (ſo רָכַב ſignifies, and from thence רֶכֶב a chariot) may ſignifie either to ſet it a moving, or elſe in a ſecond notion of רָכַב for dominari, gubernare, to rule or govern it. In both ſenſes it properly belongs to God, to move the primum mobile, and ſo to be the author of all motion under it, and to rule and manage it alſo, and ſo all the world with it. What here follows, בְּיָהּ שְׁמוֹ, may promptly and literally be rendred by Jah, i. e. Jehovah, his name, joyning it with סֹלּוּ precedent, thus, exalt by his name Jehovah him that rideth—— But all the Antient Interpreters render it by it ſelf, Jah is his name, taking ב (as oft it is) for an expletive, unſignificant. יָהּ שְׁמוֹ Jah is his name, ſay the Chaldee; κύριος ὄνομα αὐτῷ, the Lord is his name, the LXXII. and ſo the Syriack and Latine, &c.

בְּיָהּ שְׁמוֹ

b. יָחִיד

V. 6. Solitary] יָחִיד unicus, and ſolitarius, ſignifies alſo deſertus deſtitute, in the ſame ſenſe as μεμονωμένη, 1 Tim. 5. 5. ſhe that is quite alone, is the periphraſis of the ὄντως χήρα, a widow indeed, one that hath neither husband nor children to ſupply her, (and ſo, as it is there, muſt be maintained by the Church.) Now one that is thus deſtitute of all means of ſubſiſting, is forced to ſeek abroad for relief, unleſs ſome merciful-minded perſon take ſome care of him; and he that doth ſo, is fitly ſtyled מוֹשִׁיב בַּיְתָה one that makes him dwell at home, relieves him that he need not ſeek abroad: and this therefore is a fit title of Gods in this place, joyned with father of the fatherleſs, preceding, and bringing out the priſoners, or thoſe that are bound in chains; and therefore this ſure is the meaning of the phraſe.

יָחִיד

מוֹשִׁיב בַּיְתָה

c. וְה סִינַי

V. 8. Sinai] What וְה סִינַי belongs to, or how 'tis to be rendred, is matter of ſome queſtion. The Chaldee read it דֵּין סִינַי juſt anſwerably to the Hebrew, and ſo define nothing in it; but the LXXII. (as after them the Latine) joyn it with אֱלֹהִים God, foregoing, ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ Σινᾶ, from the preſence of the God of Sinai, ſuppoſing God from his ſpecial exhibition of himſelf, in giving the Law on Mount Sinai, to be ſtiled the God of Sinai, as from his ſpecial preſence and favour to the people of the Jews, he is ſtiled the God of Iſrael. But it may alſo be ſet by it ſelf, וְה סִינַי this is Sinai, to denote deictically, where that ſhaking of the earth and tempeſtuous rain was heard, viz. in Sinai. And this the Chaldee and the Syriack will bear. Or laſtly, by underſtanding the prepoſition ב in, or the like, it may be rendred, at the preſence of God in that Sinai. Each of theſe is very obvious, but ſpecially the ſecond, and fit to be preferred before the Engliſh, which make a far greater ellipſis.

d. חַיָּתוֹ

V. 10. Thy Congregation] From the word חָיָה vixit, is חַיָּה vivus, and ſo חַיָּתוֹ Pſal. 50. 10. the living creature of the wood, and ſo Pſal. 104. 11. Pſal. 79. 2. And thus it may ſignifie here, חַיָּתְךָ thy living creatures; ſo the LXXII. τὰ ζῶά σου, thy living creatures, and the Latine, Animalia tua, and ſo the Syriack, ܚܝܘܬܟ and thy living creatures. That deſolate place, where only wild beaſts before could live, was now by thoſe ſhowers of Manna, v. 9. enabled to ſuſtain a multitude of other tamer living creatures, even of men and all their flocks and herds. By this ſtyle in prophetick writings the Angels are ſignified; ſee Rev. 4. 6. where the τέσσαρα ζῶα, four living creatures full of eyes are certainly four Angels, and ſo the Chaldee here, having firſt ſet down from the Hebrew חַיָּתְךָ אַתְקִינְתָּא בָהּ thou haſt placed thy living creatures there, they add אַתְקִינְתָּא מַשְׁרְיָתָא מַלְאָכַיָּא thou haſt prepared thine hoſts of Angels. And ſo poſſibly it may ſignifie here, thine Angels have reſided therein, i. e. among the people, as an exhibition of Gods ſpecial preſence among them, who is ſaid to be preſent where his Angels appear, as oft they did among that people, at the giving the Law, in conducting them as by a cloud, and in the ſupplying of their wants on ſpecial occaſions.

e. מְבַשְּׂרוֹת

V. 11. Thoſe that publiſhed it] הַמְבַשְּׂרוֹת from בָּשַׂר to bring good news, is certainly in the fœminine gender, and ſo muſt belong to the women who were wont to celebrate victories, or any kind of good news, with ſinging and Muſick. Thus, after the coming of Iſrael out of Egypt, Exod. 15. 20, 21. Miriam the Propheteſs the ſiſter of Aaron took a timbrel in her hand, and all the women went out after her with timbrels and with dances; and Miriam anſwered them, ſing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed glorioufly, the horſe and his rider hath he thrown into the ſea. This therefore in all reaſon muſt be the literal notation of the verſe, and accordingly Gods giving the word is his affording thoſe victories, that matter of triumph and ὀπνίκια to the Iſraelites (and not, as the Chaldee ſurmiſes, the publiſhing the Law by Moſes and Aaron) but hath a farther completion in the reſurrection of Chriſt. All the difficulty is, whether הַמְבַשְּׂרוֹת be in the notion of the dative or the genitive caſe. If in the genitive caſe, then צָבָא muſt be rendred company, great was the company of the women that thus ſang; as indeed all the women, all the female quire or congregation ſolemnly came out, and joyned in theſe ſongs of victory, and צָבָא an hoſt is oft taken for the congregation or aſſembly in the ſervice of God. But it may alſo be in the dative, and then the whole verſe runs thus, God gave the word to the female nuntios of the great army, the men of Iſrael being the great army, and the women the fingers of their victories: and thus the learned Caſtellio underſtands it, Suppeditabit Dominus argumentum nuntiis magni exercitus fœminis, The Lord ſhall afford matter (of triumphant ſong) to the women the nuntios nuntios of the great army. And thus the LXXII. may be underſtood, ὁ Θεὸς κύριος δώσει ῥῆμα τοῖς εὐαγγελιζομένοις (I ſuppoſe it ſhould be τοῖς εὐαγγελιζομέναις) δυνάμει πολλῇ, the Lord God ſhall give the word or matter to the women that Evangelize to or for the great army, i. e. which ſupply the office of præcones thereto, in proclaiming their victories; though 'tis certain the Latine, that render it virtute multa, by much virtue, did not thus underſtand it.

f. V. 12. Fly apace] This v. 12. is moſt unhappily transformed both by the LXXII. and vulgar Latine, ſo that 'tis not poſſible to make any tolerable ſenſe of it. Ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν δυνάμεων τῦ ἀγαπητῦ τῦ ἀγαπητῦ, καὶ ὡραιότητι τῦ οἴκυ διελεῖσθαι σκῦλα. Rex virtutum dilecti dilecti, & ſpeciei domus dividere ſpolia. The occaſi-

יִדּוֹדוּן ons of their miſrendring are diſcernible. For יִדּוֹדוּן ſhall fly, from נָדַד fugit, they deriving the word

נָוֶה from דוד rendred it ἀγαπητῦ. And ſo for נָוֶה habitation, or woman inhabitant, from נָוָה habitavit, they read it as from נָאָה, and render it ὡραιότητι, pulchritude: which latter, if it had been rendred in the nominative caſe, the beauty of the houſe divideth the ſpoil, it might have had ſome ſenſe (meaning by the beauty of the houſe the woman in it) as the Syriack ſeems to have taken it. But the Chaldee for the inhabitreſs of the houſe renders נְנַשְׁתָּא דְיִשְׂרָאֵל the congregation of Iſrael.

g. V. 13. Pots] What שְׁפָתַיִם here ſignifies is ve-שְׁפָתַיִם ry uncertain. The Jewiſh Arab, as Solomon Jarchi alſo, read it in that notion of limites, bounds, or ways or paths, wherein we have הַמִּשְׁפְּתַיִם Jud. 5. 16. which we there render ſheepfolds, but the Chaldee renders תְּחוּמִין בְּפָרְשַׁת אוֹרְחָא bounds in the diviſions of the way, the Syriack and Arabick, paths and ways, (and to this notion it is imputable that the LXXII. render it κλήρων, inheritances, portions, becauſe mens portions of land or poſſeſſions were thus ſevered from other mens, by ſuch boundaries.) The ſame word we have again Gen. 49. 14. where though we read couching between two burthens, yet the Chaldee and Syriack accord in the former notion for ways and bounds; and in that is there a fit character of Iſſachar, as a merchant and trafficker in the world, that he is, as a ſtrong aſs, lying down between the two ways, as being weary with hard travail, and able to go no farther. And if thus it be rendred here, it will be ſignificant enough, to expreſs a woful forlorn condition, to lye down betwixt the bounds, i. e. in the high ways. But it is here by moſt thought to ſignifie ſomewhat belonging to pots, and may be very probably the ſame that the Arabs call אוֹתָפִי Athaphi, ſtones ſet in a chimny for the pot to reſt on, the pots being without legs. Of theſe the Arabians had three, and the third being commonly (to them in the deſert) ſome faſt piece of a rock, or the like behind the pot, as in a chimney the back of the chimney it ſelf, and that not looked on as diſtinct from the chimney, the other two at the ſides which were looſe, might fitly be here expreſt in the dual number, שְׁפָתַיִם: And then the lying between theſe will betoken a very low ſqualid condition, as in the aſhes or amidſt the ſoot and filth of the chimney. And this I ſuppoſe the meaning of thoſe that render it tripodes, or chytropodes, or uncini, or crematbræ; all belonging to this one end of ſetting pots over the fire, which having no legs, were thus upheld by this ſupply of ſtones or broken bricks on each ſide. Theſe two rendrings may ſeem ſomewhat diſtant, and yet conſidering that the Termini or bounds in diviſions of ways were but heaps of ſtones, or broken bricks, or rubbiſh, the word שְׁפָתַיִם, which ſignifies theſe, may well ſignifie theſe ſupporters of the pots alſo, in reſpect of the matter of them, being ſuch ſtones or broken bricks; and accordingly the Syriack ܦܬ̈ܝ which is here uſed to render it, is by Sionita rendred ſcobes, brickbats; and that is all one with the Arabick אִרְתָא, with the uſual change of ר into ש, and both may well be as I conceive, from the Hebrew שָׁפָה (in Chaldee שְׁפָא) in the notion of contundere and confringere, to break in pieces. To this alſo the Chaldee here agree, which render it קַלְקַלְתָּא from קָלַל concuſſit, or projecit, broken bricks, or rubbiſh, that are thrown away. From this notion of שָׁפָה 'tis not very remote, that אַשְׁפָּה is uſed for a dunghill, Pſal. 113. 7. where the poor are ſaid to lie, meaning the meaneſt and vileſt place, whither all the traſh and rubbiſh are caſt out. And it may be remembred, that when Job was brought by Satan to his loweſt pitch of affliction, we found him ſat down among the aſhes, and ſcraping himſelf with a potſheard, Job 11. 8. which aſſures us that the aſhes and potſheards, and all ſuch kind of rubbiſh, lay together, and that lying or ſitting down among theſe, was an effect of the greateſt debaſing and ſadneſs. And then this is moſt proper for the turn here, that lying בֵּין שְׁפָתָיִם among the brickbats or rubbiſh, ſhould be the thing meant, as an expoſition of the moſt mean, dejected and ſqualid condition. As for the form of ſpeech אִם תִּשְׁכְּבוּן, which is rendred אִם though ye have lien, it may be interrogative, have, or ſhall you lie, thus? הֲנַפְּי יוֹנָה &c. Te wings of the dove which are covered with ſilver, and her feathers בִּירַקְרַק חָרוּץ with the yellowneſs of pure gold, אִם תִּשְׁכְּבוּן ſhall ye lie among the pots, or potſheards? This ſeems to relate to the wings of the Cherubins in the Ark, whereby Gods preſence was exhibited to this people; and by that it was that the Iſraelites were reſcued out of Egypt the place of their bondage, and low deſpiſed condition. And therefore it was no more imaginable that God ſhould permit this people of his thus to continue among the potſherds, than that the Ark of his preſence ſhould perpetually be kept in a captive or mean deſpiſed condition.

h. V. 14. When the Almighty] The conſtruction of בְּפָרֵשׂ theſe two verſes lies thus, בְּפָרֵשׂ שַׁדַּי מְלָכִים בָּהּ O God, by ſcattering Kings there, or, when thou, O God Almighty, didſt ſcatter Kings (ſuch were Sehon King of the Amorites and Og King of Baſan, and the Kingdomes of Canaan, Pſal. 135. 11.) in or on it, בָּהּ ſay the LXXII. i. e. on Salmon (and Baſan following) תַּשְׁלֶג, thou wert white as Snow, or elſe thou didſt ſnow (from שָׁלַג ſnow) בְּצַלְמוֹן on Salmon; that is, thou didſt there appear in the moſt ſhining, bright, the moſt white, propitious form; thy mercies made that place more beautiful, than the crown of ſnow doth the head of that mountain, when it melts in fertile moiſture on the neighbouring valleys. Salmon is the name of a very high hill, which conſequently uſed to have ſnow lying long upon it; and it is particularly ſpecified here in oppoſition to Baſhan following: for as Baſhan was beyond Jordan, a rich and fruitful mountain, called by the LXXII. τὸν ὄρος, a fat hill, and ὄρος πιοτεμόν, a hill that yeelded much butter and cheeſe; ſo this was on this ſide Jordan, the portion of the tribe of Ephraim, ſee Jud. 9. 40. And ſo by naming theſe two mountains, he poetically expreſſes firſt their victories, and then ſecondly the whole poſſeſſion of the people of Iſrael, on this, and on that ſide Jordan. And then the ſenſe lies clear, When the Kings, the Governors of thoſe nations, were killed or put to flight by the Iſraelites, ſetting upon them in their own lands, then did God illuſtriouſly exhibite himſelf to them there, or on it, ſhined as bright, was as remarkable, as the ſnow on that hill uſed to be; and then

הַר בָּשָׁן alſo הַר בָּשָׁן the hill Baſhan, which was a gibbous pro- tuberant hill, (so הַר גַּרְנֻנִים, an hill of gibbosites, signifies) and was formerly in the hands of the heathen King Og, הַר אֱלֹהִים did, as the former, Salmon, become the hill of God, i. e. was possest by the Israelites his people.

i. חִרְצָדוּן V. 16. Why leap ye] תִּרְצָדוּן from רָצַד occurs only here, and is by guess rendred to leap, or lift up, or exalt ones self; but may best be interpreted, not leap or hop (as an expression of joy) but lift up or exalt your selves, as an effect of pride. Thus certainly the Chaldee understood it, who paraphrase it thus, לְמָה אַ ון טָעְוְון, Why do ye lift your selves up ye high hills? 'Tis not, saith God, my pleasure to give the Law upon high and supercilious or proud hills; behold Mount Sinai is a low one, and the word of God is pleased to place his Majesty on that. But the place here seems not so properly to refer to Mount Sinai, whereon the Law was given before their taking possession of Canaan, here mentioned in the precedent verses, as to Mount Sion, where David placed the Ark, and where the Temple was built. However, this seems to be the meaning of תִּרְצָדוּן exalting themselves, God having not chosen any of the highest hills to build his Temple on, but this of Sion, of a very moderate size, lower than the hill of Hermon, and at the foot of it, Psal. 133. 3. Kimchi both in his rootes and Commentaries thinks the interpretation of R. Hai considerable, who would have it the same in sense with the Arabick רצר, which is to look after and observe. And thus the importance will be the same, What look you for, expect ye, ye high hills, to be done unto you? ye are not those which God hath chosen to beautifie with his glorious presence, but Mount Sion: and so the Jewish Arab, What expect you?

k. רֶכֶב V. 17. Chariots] רֶכֶב being in the singular, and the myriads in the dual, and the iterated thousands (so שְׁנָאָן, from שָׁנָה iteravit, is best rendred) in the plural, it follows that all those thousands and myriads of Angels (for though Angels are not mentioned, they are to be understood, as Jude 14. μυριάσι ἁγίαις, holy myriads) are but as it were one chariot of Gods, i. e. one instrument of transporting him, or conveighing him from heaven to earth, i. e. an evidence of his special presence in the Ark, (as after in the Temple, and at length in our humane flesh.) So that all that is signified by the whole verse, is this, That as God at the giving the Law on Mount Sinai did evidently exhibite himself by the ministry of his Angels, himself being invisible, and uncapable of circumscription or definition by any local dimensions; so he would exhibite himself in the Sanctuary, or place set apart for his worship, by the Angels dwelling there perpetually, (an emblem of which was the picture of Cherubims shadowing the propitiatory or covering of the Ark) and so carrying up the prayers which should be offered there, and bringing down returns to them. In which respect God is said to be בָּם among them, in this his holy place, i. e. among the Angels that are present there. And to that also belongs what follows, סִינַי בַּקֹּדֶשׁ Sinai is in the Sanctuary, i. e. all the Angels that ministred at the giving the Law in Sinai are constantly attendant on this place of Gods service.

l. לַמָּוֶת תּוֹצָאוֹת V. 20. Issues from death] לַמָּוֶת תּוֹצָאוֹת must literally be rendred goings forth to death, and must signifie the several plagues and judgments inflicted by God on impenitent enemies, the ways of punishing and destroying the Egyptians and Canaanites, drowning in the Sea, killing by the sword, infesting by hornets, &c. And these are properly to be attributed and imputed to God, as the deliverances of the Israelites his people in the former part of the verse. And to this sense the consequents incline v. 21. אַךְ, &c. Even God shall wound—— The Jewish Arab interprets it kinds of death, or several ways of death; R. Tanchum, causes. The LXXII. render it ἐξόδοις θανάτου, the passages of death, the ways by which death goes out upon men to destroy them; the Latine exitus mortis, goings out of death; the Chaldee more largely מִן קֳדָם יְיָ &c. from before the Lord death, and the going out of the soul to suffocation, do contend or fight against the wicked. The Syriack most expresly, ܡܪܝ ܡܘܬܐ ܗܘ ܡܪܝܐ ܕܝܠܗ the Lord God is the Lord of death; but then adds also ex abundanti, ܘܡܦܨܐ and of escaping.

m. רוֹזָם V. 27. Their rulers] רוֹזָם, from רָזָה dominatus est, is here by contraction from רוֹזְנֵיהֶם their ruler, and being applied to Benjamin, hath respect to Saul, who was of this tribe, the first King that was placed over that people. Which gives the first place to that tribe in this enumeration, so saith the Targum, Benjamin was little among the tribes, which first descended into the sea, therefore at first he received the Kingdom; as the second is given to Judah (who, saith the Chaldee, received the Kingdom next after them) in respect to David. As for Zebulon and Nephtali, why their names are here added, rather than any of the other tribes, the reason may perhaps best be taken from what we find prophesied of those two Gen. 49. and Deut. 33. and Jud. 5. by Jacob, and Moses, and Debora, that learning and knowledge should be most eminent in those two tribes. Of Nephtali 'tis said Gen. 49. 21. Nephtali is a hind let loose, he giveth goodly words; and of Zebulon Jud. 5. 14. they shall handle the pen of the writer. Whence it is thought to be, that Isa. 9. 1. the comparison is made between the knowledge which should be after Christs coming in the regions where he preached, and Zebulon and Nephtali on the other side, because those were the most learned tribes, and yet should now be obscured and far outgone by those to whom Christ was first preached.

n. רִגְמָם V. 27. Their counsel] The Hebrew רִגְמָם signifies a stone, but is here used in a metaphorical sense for a ruler or governour, as a foundation-stone, which supports the whole building, may fitly be applyed to a commonwealth, and then signifie the Prince thereof. Thus 'tis certain the LXXII. understood רִגְמָתָם, who render it ἡγεμόνες αὐτῶν, their governors; and the Syriack in like manner, ܣܘܠܛܢܐ ܕܝܠܗܘܢ their Sultans of rulers; Abu Walid, their assembly; the Jewish Arab, קְהָלָתָם their captains, or leaders. The Chaldee are willing to refer it to three stones, by which, say they, they of that tribe overthrew their enemies.

o. גְּעֹר V. 30. Rebuke] Of גָּעַר Kimchi and Aben-Ezra observe, that as when it is in construction with ב, it signifies to rebuke, so without it, as here, it is to destroy, the most real and sharp way of rebuking: so Psal. 9. 5. where 'tis interpreted by אָבַד destroying that follows. Then for חַיַּת that signifies a congregation, and so is here interpreted by עֲדַת an assembly that follows. Then for קָנֶה arundo a reed, the Latine canna, it is taken for an arrow or a lance, or perhaps a spear, and so the חַיַּת קָנֶה the company of the reed, will denote a military company of archers, or lancers, or spear-men. Then in the next words all difficulty will be removed, if by עֲדַת אַבִּירִים we understand not a company of bulls or beasts, but of men which behave themselves like bulls בְּעֶגְלֵי עַמִּים among the calves of the people, i. e. behave themselves toward other men as bulls in the fields do toward lesser or younger cattel. For then that will denote the most lofty Princes, which which fight and diſturb and tyrannize over all their neighbour-nations, and by force indeavour to propagate their Empire and Dominions, and will not be reſtrained within any bounds. And to this belongs that other part of the character, that they are מִתְרַפְּסִים (from רָפַס conculcavit) treading upon pieces of ſilver: the Syriack render it וְיַסְגְּדוּן, from כָּרַם operuit, obduxit, covered with gold, to denote thoſe that covet the wealth of the world, and get it, and yet never have enough of it, that diſturb all mens quiet to get themſelves poſſeſſors of it, and then are not ſatisfied with it, till they are covered over with it, tread on it, &c. (and ſo out of that inſatiate deſire, delight in war, as it follows.) Abu Walid interprets this parcel of the period, by giving ב the notion of ob or propter, becauſe of, [goes about, or treads it about, becauſe of pieces of ſilver; probably he means becauſe they abound with peices of ſilver, or perhaps that they may get pieces of ſilver.

The Sixty Ninth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The ſixty ninth Pſalm is a prayer and complaint to God againſt his enemies, and a prediction of the judgments that ſhould befal them. 'Twas compoſed by David in time of eminent diſtreſs, and committed to the Præfect of his Muſick to be ſung to the inſtruments of ſix ſtrings.

‖ the ſix-ſtringed inſtruments, ſee Pſal. 45. note a.

TO the chief Muſitian upon ‖ Shoſhannim, A Pſalm of David.

1. Save me, O God, for the waters are come in unto my ſoul.

1. Lord, be thou pleaſed to interpoſe thy hand of deliverance in this ſo ſeaſonable a time of exigency, when I am ſo near to be overwhelmed with dangers.

2. I ſink in deep mire where there is no ſtanding: I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me.

2. I am not able to ſecure or defend my ſelf, to find any way to ſupport me in this diſtreſs, or deliver me out of it; my enemies are many and mighty, and without thy help I am ſure to be overborn by them.

3. I am weary of my crying; my throat is dried, mine eyes fail, while I wait for my God.

3. I have long called and unceſſantly made my complaint to thee, and am ready to faint, and to be diſheartned, becauſe thou art not yet pleaſed to hearken to me.

‖ my enemies that oppreſs me wrongfully מְצָמְתַי אֹיְבַי שֶׁקֶר

4. They that hate me without a cauſe are more than the hairs of my head; ‖ they that [a] would deſtroy me being mine enemies wrongfully are mighty: then I reſtored that which I took not away.

4. And mine adverſaries daily increaſe beyond number, have nothing from me to provoke them, nothing but patience of their injuries, and readineſs (when I have not in the leaſt offended them) to ſatisfie their cauſeleſs quarrels by mine own diminutions; and yet they are ſo far from being melted or mollified with my ſoft returns, that they ſtill grow more obſtinate and obdurate: and as they are very willing, ſo are they very able to miſchief me. a.

5. O God, thou knoweſt my fooliſhneſs, and my ſins are not hid from thee.

5. To thee, O Lord, I make my appeal, who perfectly knoweſt what I have done amiſs, either through ignorance, or more criminouſly, and canſt certainly teſtifie for me, that I have not been guilty of any thing whereby to deſerve this uſage from them.

6. Let not them that wait on thee, O Lord God of hoſts, be aſhamed for my ſake; let not thoſe that ſeek thee be confounded for my ſake, O God of Iſrael.

6. If thou forſake, and do not vindicate my cauſe, if thou permit me to be thus overborn by injurious men, 'twill be a great diſcouragement and reproach to thoſe that faithfully ſerve and depend on thee. Thy glory therefore is concerned in it; O let this move thee to haſten to my relief.

7. Becauſe for thy ſake I have born reproach, ſhame hath covered my face.

7. For I have been oft ſcofft at, and upbraided by men, for relying on thee, and keeping faſt mine hold on thee, whilſt I receive no deliverance from thee.

8. I am become a ſtranger unto my brethren, and an alien to my mothers children.

8. Thoſe that are neareſt to me in blood, and ſuch like relations, avoid me, and diſclaim me, becauſe I am reſolved to adhere to thee, and expect with patience the iſſues of thy providence.

9. For the zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up, and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me.

9. I have ſhewed my ſelf very affectionately zealous for thy honour and worſhip, and this hath brought hatred and perſecutions upon me; all the ſcoffs that blaſphemous Atheiſts have caſt on thee are become my portion, becauſe I own depending on thee. (This had a more eminent completion in Chriſt, ſee Joh. 2. 17. Rom. 15. 3. when his zealous expreſſions of diſlike to the corruptions of the Jews brought his crucifixion upon him.)

† in the faſting of my ſoul

10. When I wept † and chaſtened [b] my ſoul with faſting, this was to my reproach.
11. I made ſackcloth alſo my garment, and I became a proverb unto them.

10, 11. If at any time, either by faſting or wearing of ſackcloth, I ſeemed to them to perform any ſpecial act of devotion to God, this was made matter of ſcorn and reproach and bitter ſarcaſm. b.

14. Deliver me out of the mire, and let me not † ſink: Let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters.

15. Let not the water-flood overflow me, neither let the deep ſwallow me up; and let not the pit ſhut her mouth upon me.

15. How low ſoever my condition, and how imminent ſoever my danger is, Lord, do thou ſupport, that I periſh not under it.

d. 17. Lord, thou art a God of infinite mercies, of the tendereſt and moſt compaſſionate affections to thoſe that are in any diſtreſs, O be thou pleaſed at this time thus to exhibite thy ſelf to me, to reſcue me out of this diſtreſs, and no longer to delay thy timely ſuccours.

16. Hear me, O Lord, for thy loving kindneſs is [d] ‖ good: turn unto me according to the multitude of thy tender mercies. ‖ gracious, o bountiful

17. And hide not thy face from thy ſervant; for I am in trouble, hear me ſpeedily.

18. Thou canſt not but take notice of the pride and malice of mine oppoſers: O do not thou permit them * to triumph over me, as they certainly will, when they think me forſaken by thee.

18. Draw nigh unto my ſoul and redeem it; deliver me becauſe of my enemies.

19. Thou haſt known my reproach and my ſhame and my diſhonour; mine adverſaries are all before thee.

20. And this it that ſo extreamly pricks and wounds me, that makes my ſorrow ſo comfortleſs and unſupportable, that when I have prayed for and expected relief from thee, I have yet been diſappointed, and ſo ſcoft at by my enemies for the vanity of my hopes, which being repoſed on thee, have not as yet been anſwered by thee.

20. Reproach hath broken mine heart, I am full of heavineſs: and I looked for ſome to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none.

21. In ſuch a diſtreſs, men of any tolerable good nature would have had ſome compaſſion upon me, and at leaſt afforded me ſome allays, if not relief; but theſe hard-hearted men have ſtudied to add to my weight, and farther to imbitter my ſufferings to me. (How this had a more eminent and more literal completion in the ſouldiers uſage to Chriſt upon the Croſs, ſee Mat. 27. 34. Mar. 15. 23. Joh. 19. 28, 29.)

21. They gave me alſo gall † for my meat, and in my thirſt they gave me vinegar to drink. † to— בְּרוֹתִי

e. 22. But Gods vengeance ſhall find theſe out, that have dealt thus barbarouſly with me: their oblations and prayers ſhall be ſo far from pacifying him, or being accepted by him, or bringing them any advantage, that (like the offerings to falſe Gods, ſtiled the preparing a table, &c. Iſai. 65. 11.) they ſhall provoke God, and turn to their miſchief. (How this was fulfilled of the Jews crucifiers of Chriſt, whoſe worſhip and temple was aboliſhed and deſtroyed for that fact, ſee Rom. 11. 9.)

22. * Let their table become a ſnare before them; and ‖ that [e] which ſhould have been for their welfare, let it become a trap. * Their table ſhall be for— † their peace-offerings for a trap.

23. And their end ſhall be occæcation and terrors, obduration and deſpair. (And ſo alſo of the impenitent Jews, after the crucifixion of Chriſt.

24. Pour out thine indignation upon them; and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them.

f. 25. And in fine, utter deſolation and eradication. (This had a moſt eminent completion in the final deſtruction of the Jews preſently after their crucifying of Chriſt.)

25. Let their habitation be deſolate, and no man to dwell in their tents.

26. For when God was pleaſed to withdraw his countenance, and fatherly to chaſtiſe his ſervants for their good, theſe cruel unmerciful men, in ſtead of coming in to their comfort or relief, indeavoured to heap afflictions and reproaches upon them.

26. For they perſecute him whom thou haſt ſmitten, and [f] they ‖ talk to the grief of thoſe whom thou haſt wounded. ‖ add.

g. 27. And accordingly God in his juſt diſpleaſure ſhall withdraw his grace from them, and permit them to accumulate one ſin upon another, ſo as never finally to return to amendment of life, and capacity of his mercy.

27. [g] † Add iniquity unto their iniquity, and let them not come into thy righteouſneſs. † Give, o Permit

h. 28. And then ſuddenly cut them off in the midſt of their ſins, and not ſuffer them to live any longer among pious men, who are ſo maliciouſly bent againſt them. (How ſignal a completion this had in Judas, after his betraying of Chriſt, ſee Act. 1. 20.)

28. [h] Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous.

29. Mean while, O Lord, be thou pleaſed to deliver me out of this ſad diſtreſt diſconſolate condition.

29. But I am poor and ſorrowful: let thy ſalvation, O God, ſet me up on high.

30. That I may be excited thereby, and engaged to make my moſt ſolemn and thankful acknowledgments to thee.

30. I will praiſe the name of God with a ſong, and magnifie it with thanksgiving.

31. That being the moſt acceptable ſacrifice that can be preſented to thee, and which alone ſhall be uſed by the Chriſtian Church in ſtead of all the Moſaical.

31. This alſo ſhall pleaſe the Lord better than an oxe or bullock that hath horns and hoofs.

32. This ſhall be a joyful ſpectacle to all that depend and relie on God. Thy ſeaſonable interpoſing for me that rely on thee, and ſtand in ſuch need of thy relief, and am reſolved never to give over my affiance on thee, will be the moſt ſoveraign cordial to all that have eſpouſed thy ſervice, the greateſt matter of joy and tranſportation to their very hearts.

32. The humble ſhall ſee this and be glad; and your heart ſhall live that ſeek God.

33. An inſtance to confirm their belief of that great truth, and divine axiome, That God never was or will be wanting to any faithful ſervant of his in time of diſtreſs, that continues his prayers to and affiance in him.

33. For the Lord heareth the poor, and deſpiſeth not his priſoners.

34. For this and all other thy glorious excellencies, and emanations of goodneſs toward us thy unworthy creatures, may all the Angels and Saints in Heaven, and all the inhabitants of this inferiour globe, pay their due tributes of lauds and thankſgiving to thee.

36. Which they and their poſterity ſhall ſucceſſively injoy, as long as they make good their piety and conſtant obedience to his commands.

Annotations on Pſal. LXIX.

a. מַצְמִיתַי

V. 4. Would deſtroy] From צָמַת ſuccidit, to cut ſhort, is מַצְמִיתַי here, thoſe that cut me ſhort, i. e. oppreſs or perſecute me: the LXXII. render it ſo, and joyn it with שֶׁקֶר falſely, οἱ ἐχθροί μου ἀδίκως, they that perſecute me unjuſtly.

b. נַפְשִׁי

V. 10. My ſoul] The word נֶפֶשׁ ſignifying the ſenſitive ſoul or animal faculty, which in faſting or abſtinence is afflicted, 'tis ordinary in ſcripture to deſcribe bodily faſting by afflicting the ſoul, which is more than ſimply faſting. So the Chaldee renders it, exactly according to the Hebrew, וּבְכִיתִי בְצוֹמָא וּבְנִיחוּת דְנַפְשִׁי, and I wept in the faſting of my ſoul. The LXXII. paraphraſe it by καὶ ἐταπείνωσα ἐν νηστείᾳ τὴν ψυχήν μου, and I bowed down my ſoul by faſting.

c. שַׁעַר

V. 12. Gate] שַׁעַר the gate, is frequently taken for the place of judicature, which was wont to be in the gate of the city. So Deut. 25. 7. Let his brothers wife go up to the gate to the Elders; the Chaldee read, to the gate בֵּית דִּינָא of the houſe of judgment. So Ruth 3. 11. all the שַׁעַר gate of my people] is by the Chaldee rendred, all that ſit in the gate of the Sanhedrim: and ſo Ruth 6. 1 Boaz went up to the gate, i. e. to the gate of the houſe of the judgment of Sanhedrim. So Heſt. 2. 19, and 21. Mordecai ſat in the Kings gate,] is by ſome learned men underſtood of his ſitting in the Sanhedrim, which the King inſtituted. And ſo in all reaſon it is to ſignifie here, and denotes the ſolemneſt and graveſt Senators; as after, the more unworthy, the drunkards, &c.

d. טוּב

V. 18. Good] The word טוּב in this, as in many other places, ſignifies abundance of goodneſs or mercifulneſs. So in St. Paul Rom. 5. 7. ἀγαθός, a good man, in oppoſition to δίκαιος, a righteous man,] is a merciful-minded man in a high degree, above the proportion of ἐλεημοσύνη, mercifulneſs, which is oft expreſt by δικαιοσύνη, righteouſneſs. Accordingly the LXXII. here render it χρηστὸν, bountiful or gratious, and ſo the Latine benigna. And to this is proportionable what follows, the multitude of thy tender mercies.

e. לְשַׁלְמִים

V. 22. That which ſhould have been for their welfare] What לְשַׁלְמִים ad paces, for proſperities, here ſignifies, may perhaps beſt be learned from the Chaldee Paraphraſt, who explains it by נִכְסָתְהוֹן (from נָכַס mactavit) their victims or ſacrifices, frequently called peace-offerings, and ſo here abbreviated into לְשַׁלְמִים for peace, as ſin-offerings are ſtiled περὶ ἁμαρτίας, of, or for ſin; and though the word, when it is uſed for peace-offerings, is without ו, and vowel'd with ', yet is שְׁלָמִים peace ſcarce ever found in the plural, as here, but in the notion of peace-offerings. And beſides, the preposition prefixt ל (wherein the poetry of the verſe ſeems to conſiſt, almoſt all the words beginning with ל being rendred of, or for, accords well, Offerings of, or for, peace. To this the context alſo agrees, joyning the table and theſe peace-offerings in the ſame ſenſe, to denote a ſacrifical feaſt, of which the μοῖραι, or portions were wont to be the furniſhing of a feaſt for the Sacrificers. Abu Walid reads, to thoſe that are in peace, i. e. as he ſaith, to themſelves, who have long been ſecure and ſafe from the turnings of the world, let their table be now a trap and ſnare to them. The LXXII. read εἰς ἀνταπόδοσιν, and for a retribution, in the ſame ſenſe as εἰς μισθὸν, and εἰς σκάνδαλον, for a ſnare, and a ſtumbling-block. The account of which is to be taken from the diſtant notions of שלם, (noted Pſal. 7. note c.) for returning evil, as well as good, (and accordingly the Jewiſh Arab, as there Pſal. 7. 4. ſo here interprets it by thoſe that are contrary to me, or oppoſe themſelves againſt me.) From the verſion of the LXXII. when St. Paul cites this verſe Rom. 11. 9. he only reads, let his table be made a ſnare, reteining the ſenſe completely in that variety of words; the true notion of לְשַׁלְמִים being conteined in the mention of the table, as the ſacrifice is oft comprehended under the mention of the Altar. That this and the following verſes are to be underſtood in the future ſenſe by way of prediction, and not as an imprecation, ſee Saint Auguſtine de Civ. l. 17. c. 19. Hæc non optando ſunt dicta, ſed optandi ſpecie, prophetando, Theſe things are not ſaid by way of wiſhing, but under the ſhew or ſcheme of wiſhing, by prophecy. And indeed the Hebrew יְהִי is in the future, and is moſt fitly rendred, ſhall be. And ſo doth the Jewiſh Arab Interpreter obſerve, that ſuch ſeeming imprecations, as here and elſewhere occur in this book of Pſalms, are not ſo much דְעָא by way of imprecation, as נְבוּה by way of Prophecy, or prediction of what in Gods juſt judgments would certainly befal theſe.

f. וְסָפְרוּ

V. 26. They talk] The Hebrew וְסִפְּרוּ in this place ſeems to be beſt rendred by the LXXII. προσέθηκαν, they added to. So the Syriack, Latine, Arabick, and Æthiopick read alſo: and this agreeably enough to the Theme, סָפַר, which ſignifies to number, and of that we know addition is one ſort. And accordingly the learned Caſtellio reads, ſauciorum tuorum numerum adaugentes, increaſing the number of thy wounded.

g. תֵּן

V. 27. Add iniquity] That נָתַן to give, ſignifies alſo to permit, appears by Eſth. 9. 13. יִנָּתֵן let it be given to the Jews, i. e. permitted them. So Exod. 12. 23. and ſhall not ſuffer (the Hebrew hath יִתֵּן give) the deſtroyer to come in; the Chaldee read יְשַׁבֵּק permit, and the LXXII. ἀφήσει, to the ſame ſenſe. So Pſal. 16. 10. Thou ſhalt not ſuffer (תִּתֵּן again, give) thy holy one to ſee corruption. And ſo תֵּן עָוֹן give wickedneſs, is no more than permit: for ſo 'tis ordinary with God, as a puniſhment of ſome former great ſin or ſins, though not to infuſe any malignity, yet by withdrawing his grace, and delivering them up to themſelves, to permit more ſins to follow, one on the heels of the other, and ſo to be ſo far from reforming and amending, as daily to grow worſe and worſe, to be more obdurate, and ſo finally never to enter into Gods righteouſneſs, i. e. into that way of obedience required by him, and which will be accepted by him, or (as צֶדֶק in the notion of mercy may ſignifie, being applied to God) into his mercy, ſo as to be made partakers of it.

צֶדֶק

h. סֵפֶר חַיִּים

V. 28. Book of the living] The phraſe סֵפֶר חַיִּים the book of the living, is to be interpreted, according to the cuſtome of thoſe times, of a regiſter of names of thoſe who live in any kingdom. Thus Luk. 2. 1.

we

we have the ἀπογραφὴ, the inrolling of all in the Emperors dominions: and accordingly סֵפֶר is ordinarily taken for a catalogue, and the catalogue of the living, is the number of thoſe that are alive at any time, who when they die, their names are blotted out, and ſo are no longer written in this book or catalogue of the living. See *Pſal.*139.16. where Gods book is this regiſter, or cenſual book, or roll, where all that are born are inrolled: ſo Exod. 32.32. blotting him out of Gods book, is no more than dying, in ſtead of the people.

The Seventieth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The ſeventieth is a mournful affectionate prayer to God for relief out of his preſent miſeries, a beſeeching God that he will at length remember him: ſee Pſal. 38. 1.

TO the chief Muſitian, A Pſalm of David to bring to remembrance.

1. See the ſame very little varied Pſ.40.13,14,15,16,17.

1. Make haſte, O Lord, to deliver me; make haſte to help me, O Lord.

‖ Or, They ſhall.

2. ‖ Let them be aſhamed and confounded that ſeek after my ſoul: let them be turned back and put to confuſion that deſire my hurt.

† Or, They ſhall.

3. † Let them be turned back for a reward of their ſhame that ſay, Aha; Aha.

4. Let all thoſe that ſeek thee rejoyce and be glad in thee; and let ſuch as love thy ſalvation ſay continually, Let God be magnified.

5. But I am poor and needy, make haſte unto me, O God: thou art my help and my deliverer, O God make no tarrying.

The Seventy Firſt Pſalm.

THe ſeventy firſt Pſalm is a prayer for deliverance in time of diſtreſs, probably of Abſolom's conſpiracy, which happened to him in the latter end of his life, referred to v. 9. & 18.

Paraphraſe.

1. In thee, O Lord, do I put my truſt; let me ‖ never be put to confuſion.

‖ not be put to ſhame for ever. אַל

1. Lord, all my repoſe and confidence is in thee, I have not forſaken this my hold to catch after any other ſecular aid; O let not my reliance on thee be ſtill diſappointed and fruſtrated.

2. Deliver me in thy righteouſneſs, and cauſe me to eſcape; encline thine ear unto me, and ſave me.

אַבּוֹשָׁה לְעוֹלָם

2. Thou art the patron of all that are in diſtreſs, and thou haſt promiſed thy certain relief to all that conſtantly wait on thee, and in thoſe thy promiſed mercies I have a peculiar portion: Thy juſtice therefore and fidelity, as well as thy mercy, are concerned in granting me a ſeaſonable deliverance at this time.

3. Be thou † my ſtrong habitation whereunto I may continually reſort: thou haſt given commandment to ſave me, for thou art my rock and my fortreſs.

† to me for a rock of repoſe, לִי לְצוּר מָעוֹן

3. O be thou my ſure place of retreat, whither I may conſtantly betake my ſelf in in time of diſtreſs or danger. This thou haſt promiſed, O Lord, and therefore on thee I confidently depend for the performance of it.

4. Deliver me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

4. Lord, ſuffer not injurious wicked men to ſucceed in their projected violences and cruelties againſt me.

5. For thou art my hope, O Lord God; thou art my truſt from my youth.

5. To obtain thy audience to this requeſt, I have this argument of all others moſt forcible with thee, viz. that I am one that have ever depended and relied on thee, as thy creature and peculiar client.

6. By thee have I been holden up from the womb, thou art he that took me out of my mothers bowels: my praiſe ſhall be continually of thee.

6. Who acknowledge it thy work of continued protection, by which I have been ſupported every hour of my life, as of thy primary gift that I ever had any being in the world, and ſo am obliged to bleſs and magnifie thy Name continually for both.

7. I am as a wonder unto many; but thou art my ſtrong * refuge.

* hope מַחְסִי

7. I am vilified, and ſcoffed, and reproached by many, that I can talk of relief from heaven, when in the eye of man I am ſo low, and in ſuch a deplored and loſt condition; but yet am I not diſheartned or amated by this, I know whom I have truſted, and that there is no ſecurity like that of relying and depending on thee.

8. ‖ Let my mouth be filled with thy praiſe and with thy honour all the day.

‖ my mouth ſhall יִמָּלֵא

8. O be thou now pleaſed to haſten to my relief, that I may be able to refute theſe ſcoffers, and divulge and proclaim to others the glorious advantages of thy ſervice, beyond any other courſe that can be received in competition with it.

9. Caſt me not off in the time of old age, forſake me not when my ſtrength faileth me.

9. When I am in the wane of mine age, and moſt feeble and deſtitute of ſtrength, I have none to fly unto but thee only; O be thou pleaſed not to reject or deſpiſe me.

10. For mine enemies ‖ ſpeak againſt me, and they that lay wait for my ſoul take counſel together, ‖ ſay to me אָמְרוּ לִי

11. Saying, God hath forſaken him; perſecute him and take him, for there is none to deliver him.

10, 11. But refute the obloquies of my enemies, who rejoyce and triumph over me, and reſolve and aſſure one another that I am forſaken by God, and may now be ſecurely aſſaulted and deſtroyed by them.

12. O God, be not far from me: O my God, make haſte for my help.

12. Let this their impiety excite and provoke thee ſpeedily to ariſe to my relief, who have no other to depend on but thee only.

13. Let

13. Let them be confounded and consumed that are adversaries to my soul; let them be covered with reproach and dishonour that seek my hurt.

13. And so shall my triumphant enemies be brought to shame, seeing themselves thus frustrated and disappointed in their malicious designs and attempts against my life.

† add unto, or over and above all thy praise. וְהוֹסַפְתִּי עַל כָּל תְּהִלָּתֶךָ

14. But I will hope continually, and will † yet praise thee more and more.

14. But whatever their triumphs and scoffs are, they shall not drive me from my fast and sure hold, nor yet from proclaiming to all men the exceeding goodness of that God on whom I wait; but the more they scoff, the more will I magnifie his greatness, and profess my dependance on him,

* recount ‖ though

15. My mouth shall * shew forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day; ‖ for I know not [a] the numbers thereof.

15. And continually declare, and deprædicate his mercy and fidelity, (that never fails to deliver those that relie on him) And when I have spent my whole life on this task, I shall justly think that I have come far short of giving him his due praises, whose abundant excellencies and goodness toward his servant are infinitely above my imperfect measures either of valuation or expression. a.

† go in in the strengths---

16. I [b] will † go in the strength of the Lord God: I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine onely.

16. Whatsoever I undertake, shall not be in any confidence of mine own, but in full reliance on Gods strength alone, and never talk of any security, but that which I hold by his free mercy and fidelity which obligeth him to perform his promise, and never to forsake those that depend on him. b.

17. O God, thou hast taught me from my youth, and hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works.

17. O blessed God, I have had experience of thy wonderful acts of power and goodness from the first part of mine age, and accordingly I have made declaration of them.

18. Now also when I am old and gray-headed, O God, forsake me not, until I have shewed thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to every one that is to come.

18. Do not thou now that my years increase, and therewith my wants of thy support, withdraw it from me, but afford me matter of continual acknowledgments, that I may yet proclaim thy attributes to many more than yet I have done, that I may live to be an instrument of bringing in many proselytes to thy service, who as yet are not born, or know nothing of thee.

19. Thy righteousness also, O God, is very high, who hast done great things: O God, who is like unto thee?

19. O how great is thy bounty, how infinitely great? how glorious are thy works of power and goodness? There is none that can in the least be compared with thee.

* return וְתָשׁוּב

20. Thou which hast shewed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and * shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth.

20. Though thou hast permitted me to fall into very sharp afflictions and distresses, yet I doubt not either of thy power or will to restore me again, and rescue me out of the lowest and most disconsolate state.

‖ return and comfort me.

21. Thou shalt increase my greatness, [c] and ‖ comfort me on every side.

21. And having done so, exalt me higher than I was before the turning of thy face from me. c.

22. I will also praise thee with the Psaltery, even thy truth, O my God: unto thee will I sing with the harp, O thou holy one of Israel.

22. And for this thy constant performance of promise to me, and all thy rich mercies, I will in the solemnest manner exalt and praise thy Name, O thou great and only God of heaven, who hast revealed thy self to thy people.

23. My lips shall greatly rejoyce, when I sing unto thee; and my soul, which thou hast redeemed.

23. And this shall be to me the joyfullest imployment in the world; joy to my tongue, that is above measure honoured by being the instrument of thy praises, and joy to my very life, which hath been rescued by thee from such present dangers.

24. My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long: for they are confounded, for they are brought unto shame that seek my hurt.

24. And therefore being the pleasantest, it shall also be the most constant imployment of my life, to deprædicate thy mercy, and performance of all thy gratious promises, who hast secured me, and disappointed and frustrated all mine enemies.

Annotations on Psalm LXXI.

a. מִסְפָּרוֹת

V. 15. The numbers] מִסְפָּרוֹת, from סִפֵּר numeravit, regularly signifies numbers, and so the Chaldee renders it מְנְיָנְהוֹן the numbers of them; and Symmachus accordingly, οὐκ οἶδα ἐξαριθμῆσαι, I know not how to number. The LXXII. now read οὐκ ἔγνων ἀγοραίας, I know not tradings, negotiationes saith the Roman Psaltery. But the Latine, reading literaturam, makes it more probable that the more antient reading of the LXXII. was not ἀγοραίας, but γραμματείας. The Syriack retein the Hebrew מִסְפָּרוֹת the numbers thereof, and is not so well rendred by the Latine, Scripturam. The elegancy is here observable, פִּי יְסַפֵּר my mouth shall number or recount thy righteousness, כִּי לֹא יָדַעְתִּי מִסְפָּרוֹת though I know not the number of them, they being so numerous that 'tis not possible to count them.

b. בּוֹא

V. 16. I will go] בּוֹא to go, or go in, signifies (among many other things) the administration of any publick office; See Numb. 27. 16, 17. where to go out and יָבֹא to go in before them, is to govern the people, and so oft elsewhere: and so also of more private actions, Deut. 28. 6. Thou shalt be blest בְּבֹאֶךָ in thy going out, i. e. in all thy undertakings. And thus (without the addition of going out) it is here used for any action of his life.

c. תָּשֹׁב

V. 21. Comfort] תָּשֹׁב, from שָׁבַב conversus fuit, doth regularly signifie shalt return; so all the antient Interpreters seem to understand it, (and not in the notion of circuivit:) ἐπιστρέψας ποιήσεις, thou hast returned and comforted, say the LXXII. and so the Latine reversus, the Chaldee, וְתָתוּב from תּוּב to return.

The

The Seventy Second PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The ſeventy ſecond Pſalm was compoſed in contemplation of Solomons ſucceeding David in the throne, and the happy days of his reign, and under that type looks forward to the days of the Meſſias, (as the Jews themſelves apply it; ſee note c.)

A Pſalm for Solomon. To Solomon לִשְׁלֹמֹה

1. O Lord, I beſeech thee to pour out upon Solomon my ſon, who is to ſucceed me in the throne, all the royal virtues, and skill in government, (according to the rule which thou haſt preſcribed to Kings) and all manner of juſtice and goodneſs in the admiration of ſo ſublime an office:

1. Give the King thy judgments, O God, and thy righteouſneſs unto the Kings ſon.

2. That ſo he may manage this power with all indifferency, and impartially relieve all that make their appeals to his tribunal;

2. He ſhall judge thy people with righteouſneſs, and thy poor with judgment.

a. 3. And both the higher and lower Judicatures move ſo regularly, that the whole Kingdom may be governed peaceably and juſtly.

3. The mountains ſhall bring peace unto the people, and the little hills ‖ by a righteouſneſs. ‖ righteouſneſs.

4. And all innocent perſons receive the benefit of his patronage and protection, and all injurious invaders of others rights be ſeverely puniſhed by him.

4. He ſhall judge the poor of the people; he ſhall ſave the children of the needy, and break in pieces the oppreſſor.

b. 5. Then ſhall his government be famed, and his wiſdom and happy adminiſtration be lookt on with continual reverence by all poſterities, and therein be a type of the Kingdom of the Meſſias, who ſhall deſcend from him, and ſet up his throne in mens hearts, when the Jewiſh Kingdom ſhall determine, and be adored and worſhipped at ſet hours conſtantly every day throughout all ages.

5. [b] † They ſhall fear thee as long as the Sun and Moon indure, throughout all generations. † or, with the Sun and before the Moon, generation of generation ſhall fear and adore thee.

6. Then ſhall he be an inſtrument under God of refreſhment, and incouragement, and growth to all virtue,

6. He ſhall come down like rain upon the mowed graſs, as ſhowers that water the earth.

(and ſo ſhall the Meſſias in a moſt eminent manner.)

7. And as long as he reigns, the nation ſhall be managed with all juſtice, and peaceableneſs and proſperity,

7. In his days ſhall the righteous flouriſh, and abundance of peace * ſo long as the Moon endureth. * till the Moon ceaſe, or, till there be no Moon and from him ſhall the Meſſiah ariſe in the time appointed by God, and ſettle and eſtabliſh a Church, which ſhall never utterly periſh till the end of the world. יָרֵחַ

8. The whole Jewiſh nation, the Kingdom of Iſrael and Judah, both ſhall remain

8. He ſhall have dominion alſo from ſea to ſea, and from the river unto the ends of the ‖ earth. ‖ land אֶרֶץ under his ſubjection as long as he lives, (ſee note on Pſal. 11. f.) and ſo ſhall the bordering nations alſo, the Philiſtims, and Moabites, and Idumæans, and Syrians, &c. (As for the Meſſias, of whom he is the moſt eminent type, he ſhall begin his ſpiritual Kingdom in Judæa, and propagate it over all the world.)

c. 9. And others more remote ſhall do him homage, and thoſe that oppoſe and make war againſt him, ſhall

9. [c] They that dwell in the wilderneſs ſhall bow before him, and his enemies ſhall lick the duſt.

be ſubdued and deſtroyed. (And ſo in the days of the Meſſias, the heathen nations ſhall ſubmit to the faith of Chriſt, and they that obſtinately oppoſe it ſhall be deſtroyed.)

10. And many Princes from the remoteſt parts of the world (ſee note on Pſal. 48. 6.)

10. The Kings of Tarſhiſh and of the Iſles ſhall bring preſents; the Kings of Sheba and Seba ſhall offer gifts.

ſhall ſend tokens of their reſpect and reverence to him, ſee note c. and 1 King. 10. 1. Matth. 12. 42. (And ſo in like manner the Gentile nations ſhall receive the faith of Chriſt, and as a præſignification thereof, the Magi, Mat. 2. ſhall bring him preſents, as ſoon as he is born.)

11. And in ſum, the generality of the Potentates of the world, and all the people

11. Yea, all Kings ſhall fall down before him, all nations ſhall ſerve him.

thereof ſhall acknowledge and magnifie his government. (And ſo ſhall the Gentile world univerſally ſubject themſelves to Chriſt.)

d. 12. As the government of a juſt and merciful Prince that is ready to relieve all

12. For he ſhall deliver the needy when he [d] cryeth, the poor alſo and him that hath no helper.

that are oppreſt and wronged. (And therein a type of Chriſts Kingdom, who never denies grace and pardon to the humble ſuppliant, that having no truſt to rely on in himſelf, flees in prayer to his free grace and mercy.)

13. A Prince of bowels and compaſſion to them that

13. He ſhall ſpare the poor and needy, and he ſhall ſave the ſouls of the needy.

are in any kind of diſtreſs, to defend and deliver them out of it. (And ſo ſhall Chriſt not only not puniſh the lowly penitent ſinner, but beſtow all that is pretious upon him, even grace here, and eternal ſalvation hereafter.)

14. He

14. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence; and pretious shall their blood be in his sight.

14. To rescue them out of the hand of the injurious and oppressor, and preserve their lives from the invader, as those that are much valued and esteemed by him. (And so shall Christ redeem, in the most eminent manner, those that rely on him, from all their spiritual enemies, Sin and Satan, from the power of the one, and tyranny of the other, and pay his own life a ransome for mankind.)

15. And he shall live, and to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba: prayer also shall be made for him continually, and daily shall he be praised.

15. As long as he lives shall strangers reverence, and subjects continually blest and pray for him, as the Author of a peaceable and happy life to them. (And so shall the faith of Christ have the reverence of strangers, be admired by all that hear of it, as being made up of the most excellent divine doctrines of charity, purity, subjection, &c. and for all those that set themselves to the practice of his precepts, they shall have cause to bless them and magnifie them as the greatest mercy that could ever have been vouchsafed them.)

16. There shall be [e] an handful of corn in the earth, upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon, and they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth.

16. In his time shall there be great abundance of all things, and Gods hand very remarkable, in blessing and prospering the smallest quantity of seed, sown in the barrenest soile, into a most plentiful harvest, and this city shall thrive proportionably, the number of the inhabitants shall increase as fast as the seed which is sown doth. (And so in the dayes of the Messiah shall Gods providence and his grace most signally evidence it self, in bringing forth a multitude of believers by a little contemptible preaching of the faith, among the most idolatrous, obdurate Gentiles.

17. His name shall endure for ever, his name shall ‖ be continued [f] as long as the Sun; and [g] † men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed.

‖ descend upon his children before the Sun. † they

17. And his memory and honour shall outlive his person, shall never be blotted out, but shall flourish, and descend upon his posterity, as a mark of renoun to all that shall come from him. And for all others, when they shall bless any Prince or royal person, they shall do it in this form, The Lord make thee like Solomon. And in sum, all the nations in the world shall look upon him as a most blessed person, a most wise and a most prosperous Prince. (And so shall Christ, pretypified by Solomon, be in a most eminent manner remembred, even adored and worshipped and magnified for ever. All they that receive his faith shall, as his sons, be called by his name, be known by the title of Christians, and be looked upon as a most happy and blessed sort of men, that they are vouchsafed that dignity of being his sons, to be taught and educated by him, and to transcribe his copies, to be like him in all goodness.)

18. Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doth wondrous things.

18. For these and all other his mercies so wonderfully wrought for his servants, and which none else is able to work, the eternal Lord of heaven and earth, who alone is worshipped by the Jews, and which hath chosen them to himself to be his people, be now and ever magnified.

19. And blessed be his glorious name for ever, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen, and Amen.

19. And O that all the men in the world would set themselves industriously and faithfully to his service, that they would bless and praise him continually, offer up their daily oblation of lauds and thanksgiving to him, and all hearts be throughly possest with his divine excellencies, and endeavour to express the power thereof in all the actions of their lives, in doing what he hath directed and exemplified to them. O that every man would say Amen to this prayer. O that God would once grant this petition.

20. The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended.

20. Here is the conclusion of the second Book of Psalms, which were, if not all composed, yet perhaps all collected and put into this order by David. The other Books that follow being a collection of Asaph and other men, in which some there are also of Davids composing, after the finishing of this collection, or shutting up of this Book.

Annotations on Psalm LXXII.

V. 3. Righteousness] בְּצֶדְקָה in this place is by the LXXII. rendred ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ, in righteousness, and so joyned in construction with κρινεῖ, shall judge, in the beginning of the next verse; and so it must be, if the ב have any signification. But it is not unusual for this and other prepositions to be used as expletives; and accordingly the Chaldee retains it here (בִּזְכוּתָא,) whilst yet both the Syriack and Latine leave it out, and read וְצִדְקָתְךָ, thy righteousness, and justitiam righteousness. And so the sense is most perspicuous.

V. 5. They shall fear thee] For יִירָאוּךָ they shall fear or reverence thee, The LXXII. seem to have read וְיַאֲרִיךְ and he shall prolong (his life) and so render it καὶ συμπαραμενεῖ τῷ ἡλίῳ, he shall endure as long as the Sun; and so the Latine, & permanebit cum sole, and he shall abide with the Sun. But the Chaldee adhere to our reading of the Hebrew, and render it both by יִדְחֲלִין מִנָּךְ they shall fear from, or be afraid of thee; and again, by וְיִצְלוּן קֳדָמָךְ they shall pray before thee, and so the Syriack, וְיִסְגְּדוּן (from דָּחַל to fear or adore) which the Interpreter renders, adorabunt te, shall adore thee. Then for עִם שֶׁמֶשׁ with the Sun, וְלִפְנֵי יָרֵחַ and before, or in the presence of the Moon,] the Chaldee seems to give the true notion of it, עִם מִפַּק שִׁמְשָׁא with the ascending of the Sun, and קֳדָם סְהָרָא before, or in the presence of the light of the Moon, i.e. by day and by night, continually, דּוֹר דּוֹרִים generation of generations, i. e. either in the nominative case, generation of generations shall fear thee, or supplying the want of the preposition) throughout all generations. And so the primary literal meaning is, that all posterity shall revere Solomon continually, esteem him as of the wisest and justest Prince. But the more sublime (and that as literal) sense belonging to Christ (of whom Solomons wisdom and prosperous government was a type) will be this. That both by day and night all generations shall adore Christ, pray to him, and perform solemn service to him, and through all ages never cease to do so, while (as the Jewish Arab renders it) the Sun endureth.

c. צִיִּים שְׁאָא סְאָא

V. 9. Dwell in the wilderneſs] From צִיָּה a dry or deſart place, is צִיִּים here, the inhabitants of the deſart: ſuch were the Æthiopians and others, and therefore the LXXII. have choſen to paraphraſe it, Αἰθίοπες, the Æthiopians, as v. 10. for שְׁבָא and סְבָא they read, Ἄραβοι ἡ Σαβᾶ, Arabians and Sabeans; by the former Scheba, with ש, noting the inhabitants of Arabia Felix, from whence comes Gold, v. 15. by the latter, with ס, all the whole Region of Arabia, Madiam, and Epha, (ſaith S. Hierome) which is called Saba, the Queen whereof came to Solomon, 1 King. 10. 1. and is called the Queen of the South, Mat. 12. 42. becauſe Arabia Felix reacheth to the South, and belongs to the Æthiopick Sea, and torrid Zone, and ſo is ſtiled the Queen of the South, from the ends of the earth.

d. מְשַׁוְּעַ

V. 12. Crieth] מְשַׁוְּעַ, from שָׁוַע clamavit, ſignifies him that cries: But the LXXII. from שׁוּעַ rich or powerful, read ἀπὸ δυνατῶν, from the powerful; but this perhaps by way of Paraphraſe, becauſe the oppreſſion of ſuch is it that cauſeth the poor to cry.

e. פְּסַת בַּר יִרְעַשׁ

V. 16. Handful] פְּסַת בַּר a ſmall quantity of corn (from פָּסַס minutus eſt) is in all the copies of the LXXII. rendred σίτου, and from thence by the vulgar Latine firmamentum, by the Arabick and Æthiopick in like manner, without any mention of corne or any thing to render בַּר. The Chaldee read סְעִיר לַחְמָא (from סָעַר, which ſignifies both fulcivit and comedit) the food or fulciment of bread, i. e. bread for food, or for refection and ſtrengthening; and the Syriack ܣܥܝܪ ܠܚܡܐ ܒܚܕܐ plenty of corn; all varied much from the literal importance of the Hebrew. The reaſon of this variation as to all thoſe that follow the LXXII. is evidently the ſame, either having an eye to the Chaldee סְעִיר in the notion of fulcimentum, as that agrees with the phraſe elſewhere uſed, the ſtaffe of bread; or more probably a miſtake in the copies of σίτου, firmamentum, for σπάσμα, a handful, for ſo פְּסַת regularly ſignifies, and ſo כַּף a hand, 1 King. 18. 44. is rendred by the Chaldee פְּסַת יְדָא the palme of the hand, and ſo in Syriack פַּסְיָא is the ſole of the foot, and among the Rabbines is applied both to hand and foot, פְּסַת הַיָּד the palme of the hand, פְּסַת הָרֶגֶל the ſole of the foot. This therefore is the moſt probable meaning of the place, יְהִי פְּסַת בַּר there ſhall be a handful of corn, and that ſown (ſo בָּאָרֶץ in the earth, noteth) בְּרֹאשׁ הָרִים on the head, i. e. top of the hills, the moſt ſtony, dry, and barren plat; and yet פִּרְיוֹ the fruit thereof, that which comes from this handful, in this barreneſt ſoil, יִרְעַשׁ ſhall ſhake like Libanus, i. e. like the trees of Libanus, whoſe tallneſs cauſeth a great noiſe, when they are ſhaken with the wind. And this reſemblance ſignifies the great growth of this corn, which makes it liable to the wind, and being ſhaken by it, it makes a noiſe like the talleſt trees on the top of an hill. An excellent poetical deſcription of the greateſt plentifulneſs, when a handful of corn ſown on the barrenneſt ſoile, ſhall yet bring forth ſo proſperouſly. And this the Chaldee and Syriack were, it ſeems, willing to expreſs by periphraſis, and not literally, and ſo only mention, the one, the bread that comes from it, for food, the other, the plenty of the corne, without mention of the ſmall proportion of the ſeed it ſprings from. This R. Obad. Gaon applies to the Meſſias (as Aben Ezra, Midras Tehilin and he, do the whole Pſalm) ſaying that he is the פְּסַת בַּר, beginning like an handful of wheat, but afterwards ſhall grow into a multitude, like the herb of the field: ſee Jo. 12. 24. Abu Walid in his rendring it may ſeem ſingular, unleſs the like myſtical uſe be made of it: He makes the words thus to ſound, He ſhall be a pure piece of juſtice upon the earth, or there ſhall be, or let there be from him, abſolute juſtice in the earth: Upon the top the mountains let his fruit encreaſe, (viz. his children or progeny) like Lebanon, i. e. as the trees of Lebanon, which proverbially ſignifie a great multitude. The Jewiſh Arab renders it to this purpoſe, God make him as fruitful corn in his countrey on the top of its mountains, and make him rich fruit, as Lebanon, &c. taking יְהִי (as Abu Walid doth) for [let him be] or [be ſhall be,] not [there ſhall be;] and rendring יעשר, let him be rich, as if it were יִרְעַשׁ by tranſpoſition of letters, but that Abu Walid rejects.

f. לְפָנֵי שֶׁמֶשׁ

V. 17. As long as the Sun] What לְפָנֵי שֶׁמֶשׁ before, or at the faces, or in the preſence of the Sun,] ſignifies, will be learnt from what was ſaid, note b. of לִפְנֵי יָרֵחַ before, or in the preſence of the Moon (i. e. in the night time,) and proportionably to continue לִפְנֵי שֶׁמֶשׁ before the Sun, muſt be to live, to ſurvive, to flouriſh in oppoſition to periſhing, which is expreſt by not ſeeing the ſun. And this is appliable to names, to memories, as well as to perſons: the names of good men יִנּוֹן (from נִין a ſon) ſhall deſcend upon their children, i. e. continue ſucceſſively before the Sun, i. e. live, and proſper; and the names of evil men die and periſh. The LXXII. literally enough, render it, ἔσῃ τὸ ὄνομα διαμένον, ſhall continue before the Sun; and ſo the Syriack, ܩܡ ܫܡܗ ܩܕܡ ܫܡܫܐ is before the Sun. But the Jewiſh Arab, in agreement with his notion of v. 5. till the heavens vaniſh. יִנּוֹן

g. יִתְבָּרְכוּ בוֹ

V. 17. Men ſhall be bleſſed] יִתְבָּרְכוּ בוֹ they ſhall be bleſſed in him,] is no more than, men ſhall bleſs themſelves in him, i.e. when they will bleſs any man, they ſhall uſe this forme, let him be bleſſed as Solomon was. Thus we ſee the phraſe explained, Gen. 48. 20. In thee ſhall Iſrael bleſs, ſaying, God make thee as Ephraim; where to bleſs in any man, or any name,] is to pray that he may be as that man, wiſe as Solomon, a peaceable and happy ruler as Solomon, &c. (ſee more of this phraſe note on Gal. 3. c.) The interpreters generally joyn it with the nominative caſe that follows, [all nations ſhall be bleſſed in him;] and ſo it may well be: but it may alſo be ſet abſolutely, they ſhall be bleſt, i. e. men ſhall bleſs themſelves in or by him, and then, כָּל גּוֹיִם יְאַשְּׁרוּהוּ all nations ſhall bleſs him, or proclaim him bleſſed. The Chaldee renders it יִתְבָּרְכוּן בְּזָכוּתֵיהּ כָּל עַמְמַיָּא all nations ſhall be bleſſed in his righteouſneſs, or purity; merito, ſaith the Latine interpreter of the Targum, which though it have a primary ſenſe in application to Solomon, thus; All nations ſhall bleſs themſelves in this or the like form, God make thee as pious, juſt, blameleſs, exeellent a perſon as Solomon was; yet it muſt be allowed a much more eminent notion, in reference to Chriſt, that all Chriſtians ſhall deſire to imitate his divine patterns, and bleſs and pray for one another, in that form, God indow thee with ſome degree of thoſe virtues, which were eminently obſervable in Chriſt.

THE

THE THIRD BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Seventy Third Psalm.

A Psalm [a] of Asaph.

Paraphrase.

The Seventy third Psalm, the first of the Third Book of this Collection, seems to have been composed by * Asaph (either the Recorder, the chief of the Levites that ministred before the Ark of the Lord, who is frequently mentioned in the story of David, see 1 Chron. 16. 5. or else some other of that name of latter times.) It contains a discourse of Gods providence, and the wise purposes thereof in permitting wicked men to prosper, though but for a time. It is much of the † same subject with Psalm 49. and seems to have been composed by him for the use, or as in the person, of David: see v. 24.

a. לְאָסָף מִזְמוֹר

by the hands of Asaph. Chald.

מַשְׂכִּיל

like for the argument Rabbi Ezra.

1. Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart.

1. It is a most certain infallible truth, that God is abundantly gracious and kind (and not faithful and just only) to every true hearted, sincere, upright servant of his.

2. But as for me, my feet were almost gone, my steps had well-nigh slipt.

2. Yet was I under no small temptation to doubt of the truth of this, and so to deny that which is so main an article of the belief of all that acknowledge a providence.

‖ had a Zeal against קִנְאָתִי

† I shall see the peace שְׁלוֹם אֶרְאֶה

3. For I ‖ was envious at the foolish, † when I saw the prosperity of the wicked.

3. For I had a zealous displeasure, or indignation against ungodly wicked men, to see them go on still in their sins so foolishly and irrationally; and being thus affected, I was surprised with a sudden incitation, to think that they were likely to prosper and enjoy a secular felicity, and all good successes in their impieties; and this was a matter of temptation to me.

* or fat, or robustious. ‖ in the sorrow, or pain of the weak. † scourged with man. * ties on their chain, or necklace, violence fastens the ornament upon them. ‖ surpast the imaginations of the heart עָבְרוּ מַשְׂכִּיּוֹת לֵבָב

b. 4. For there are no [b] bands in their death, but their strength is * firm.

4. For when I considered them, me thought they were strong and vital, likely to live and prosper a long time.

c. 5. They are not ‖ in trouble like other [c] men, neither are they † plagued like other men.

5. Whereas many other men meet with diseases and maladies of all sorts, and the generality of mankind with misadventures, and afflictions, and sundry sore scourges and chastisements, these seemed to have an immunity from all.

d. 6. Therefore pride [d] compasseth them as a * chain, violence covereth them as a garment.

6. And being thus heightned and puft up, they set themselves out most magnificently, and make use of all the unlawfullest means, oppression and rapine, to maintain it.

‖ deride and speak maliciously, from on high they speak oppression.

e. 7. Their eyes stand out with fatness, they have ‖ more than heart could wish.

7. They thrive and increase in wealth and grandeur exceedingly, and unexpectedly advance to a greater height than either themselves could at first project, or any man else divine or imagine possible.

8. [e] They ‖ are corrupt, and speak wickedly concerning oppression, they speak loftily.

8. And being thus elevated they deride all others, say any thing that may tend to the mischieving others, and out of the pride and haughtiness of their hearts profess to commit all injustice, to oppress, and scorn to be restrained by any laws divine or humane.

9. They profestly blaspheme the God of heaven, despise his threats, oppose and resist all his commands, and take liberty to say what they please of any the most innocent or * holiest man upon earth.

9. They set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue talketh through the earth.

* בקדש ארץ against the holy of the earth. Chald.

10. And this tempts pious men, when they see them thus riot it in violence, and blasphemy, and contempt of all sanctity, to pour out abundance of tears, in the contemplation.

10. Therefore his people † return hither, and f * waters of a full cup are wrung out to them.

† turne. * plentiful waters.

f.

11. And thus to dispute and argue within themselves, Doth God indeed see and discern and take notice of all this? If he doth, how comes it about that he permits them.

11. And they say, How doth God know? is there knowledge in the most high?

12. 'Tis most visible that they which are thus wicked, injoy the greatest tranquility and prosperity in this life, have all the wealth and greatness of the world heaped upon them.

12. Behold, these are the ungodly || who prosper in the world; they increase in riches.

|| and they are the prosperous of the age or world עולם

13. And there (as they are moved to argue) what reward is there for perfect purity of hearts and hands, of thoughts and actions, for all the strictest exercises of all virtues, if the quite contrary to all this be thus prospered by God.

13. Verily I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocency.

14. And they that have faithfully endeavoured to make good their innocence in both, are yet exercised with continual afflictions.

14. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened every morning.

g.

15. Such thoughts as these are apt to suggest themselves on this occasion; but then piety soon gives a check to them as prophane and blasphemous, the denying of the divine providence, and downright apostacy from all profession of piety.

15. If I say, I will speak thus, behold, I g should † offend against the generation of thy children.

† or prevaricate.

16. I resolved therefore more accurately to weigh this, that was matter of so much disquiet and trouble and tempation to me.

16. * When I thought to know this, || it was too painful for me.

* And || which was grievous in mine eyes עמל היא בעיני

17. And as soon as I made my resort to thy sanctuary, entring into a sober consideration of Gods counsels and providence, I discerned what was the ordinary conclusion of these mens felicities:

17. † Until I went into the Sanctuary of God: * then understood I their end.

† when I go. עד אבוא * I shall understand. אבינה

h.

18. The same that of those that are exalted to the top of an hill, and when they are there have no firm footing, but slip and fall, and then by the highness of the ground are more sorely bruised, even killed outright by this their fall.

18. Surely thou didst set them in slippery places, thou castedst them down into h destruction.

19. So doth it befall wicked men, when they are arrived to the height of their secular prosperity, they suddenly fall into a most terrible amazing destruction.

19. How are they brought into desolation? as in a moment they are utterly consumed with terrors.

i.

20. And so their prosperity is no more but like that of a dream; whilst it lasts, it is but imaginary, not real, the gaining of the honours, or pleasures, or riches of the world, which are themselves but splendid nothings, meer phasmes, and when they are unlawfully gotten or injoyed, are far from being any solid prosperity, and then within a very little while, they are lost or taken away from them: lost by some turn or change here in time of life, or else seised on by God, and taken from them by death; and so this very shadow of prosperity vanishes presently, is of a very inconsiderable duration.

20. As a dream when one awaketh, So, O Lord, when || thou awakest thou shalt † i despise their * image.

|| they awake † illude, mock, or make vanish. * or shadow.

21. It was therefore a stupid and bestial ignorance and folly in me, thus to be disquicted and troubled with the sight of the prosperous successes that wicked men meet with, and to have any temptation to repine and murmur at my own afflictions, as if those were a mark of my being neglected by thee.

21. Thus my heart was grieved, and I was pricked in my reins.

22. So foolish was I and ignorant; I was as a beast before thee.

23. When all this while I have been particularly considered and cared for, and in a special and eminent manner supported by thee.

23. || Nevertheless I am continually with thee: thou hast holden me by my right hand.

|| And I ואני

k.

24. And have assurance that thy providence shall conduct me safe through all my afflictions, and at length deliver me out of them, and bring me to an honourable condition here, and eternal rest with thee hereafter.

24. Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, k and † afterward receive me with glory.

† After glory receive me.

25. Lord, there is none in heaven or earth except thee only, no creature in the world to whom I have any inclination to address my self, to seek their aid, or to have any dependance on them: I have a full security in relying and waiting on thee.

25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee.

26. My

26. My fleſh and my heart faileth; but God is the ſtrength of my heart, and my portion for ever.

16 Though never ſo great afflictions befall me, what perplexities and deſtitutions ſoever, Hab. 3.17. yet thou, O God, art my ſure defence, thou ſhalt never fail me: and all the proſperities in the world are compriſed in this, and inſured on me, that thou art pleaſed to be my God, and continually to yield me all that which others in vain ſeek for from their worldly ſuccours.

27. For lo they that are far from thee ſhall periſh; thou haſt deſtroyed all them that go a whoring from thee.

27. For nothing is more viſible and frequently experimented, than that they that forſake God, and apply themſelves to any other hold, that are guilty of this adulterous falſeneſs unto him, uſing him as thoſe wives who prefer any other before their own husband, are fruſtrated and diſappointed in their Atheiſtical deſignes, and ſignally puniſhed, brought to nothing, and deſtroyed by God; as it is juſt for the injured husband to bring the adulterous wife to open puniſhment.

28. But it is good for me to draw neer to God; I have put my truſt in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy works.

28. On the contrary, there is no ſuch advantageous and politick courſe even in reſpect of the injoyments of this life, as that of a cloſe and conſtant adherence to God, without ever falling off from him to any unlawful worldly truſts or refuges. And this ſhall be my courſe, to him I will addreſs my ſelf for the ſupply of all my wants; and beſide the benefit of having them richly ſupplyed to me, I ſhall be ingaged alſo in that moſt honourable imployment of proclaiming Gods gratious acts of wiſdom and admirable providence, and exciting all men to adore and bleſs his holy name for them.

Annotations on Pſal. LXXIII.

a לְאָסָף

Tit. of Aſaph] How לְאָסָף ſhould be rendred here and in the following Pſalms, may be matter of ſome queſtion. For as the prepoſition ל is ſometimes a note of the genitive caſe, and ſo an intimation of the Author of the Pſalm, and accordingly Davids Pſalms are generally thus entitled, לְדָוִד, of David; ſo it is alſo a note of the dative caſe, and then refers to the Muſitian that was to ſing, or order the ſinging of it, as when the Pſalm is committed to the Præfect of the Muſick, the ſtyle is לַמְנַצֵּחַ to the Præfect —— But the former notion is to be imbraced, both becauſe לְאָסָף is ſo perfectly proportionable to לְדָוִד, that as David was known to be Author of the Pſalms which were ſo inſcribed, ſo Aſaph is in reaſon to be believed the Author of theſe other; and alſo becauſe in diverſe of them, Pſal. 75, 76, 77. as in Davids, there is expreſs addition of לַמְנַצֵּחַ to the præfect, which will not permit Aſaph to be the ſinger, but in all reaſon the Author of them. What Aſaph this was, whether he in Davids time, 1 Chron. 16. 5. or ſome other in after-times, muſt be uncertain, and conſequently whether thoſe Pſalms under his name which refer to latter times, as Pſalm 74, 76, 77. but eſpecially Pſalm 79. (which by the vaſtation of Jeruſalem ſeems to refer to the time of Nebuchadonoſor) be to be looked on as Hiſtorical, or Prophetical only. The Chaldee there ſay of the 79. Pſalm, that it was on the deſtruction of the houſe of the Sanctuary, and that אֲמַר בְּרוּחַ נְבוּאָה he ſpake by the ſpirit of Prophecy. Yet it may have been Hiſtorical, and ſo it is moſt probable by the ſtile, and then it muſt have been compoſed by ſome of that name of after-times; and if ſo, then there is no reaſon to doubt, but the reſt which bear Aſaphs name were ſo alſo.

b חַרְצֻבוֹת

V. 4. Bands] What חַרְצֻבוֹת here ſignifies will be hard to define, it being uncertain from what root it comes, and there being but one place more of Scripture wherein 'tis uſed, Iſa. 58.6. There 'tis by all the antient interpreters rendred knots, or bonds, and ſo 'tis generally expounded by Grammarians: 'tis, ſaith David de Pomis, כמו קשרים tantamount to the word which, from קשר to binde, ſignifies bonds; and to the ſame effect ſaith Kimchi in his Roots. But this doth not ſecure us of the importance of the word in this place, there being many poſſible rendrings of it, to each of which this of bands will be appliable. For 1. the word bands in Hebrew ſtile oft ſignifies child-bed pangs, ſo the word חֲבָלִים (which ſeems to be the ſame with חַרְצֻבוֹת) is indifferently uſed for bands or pangs, and ſo is rendred ὠδῖνες, pangs, Acts 2.22. (ſee note c. on that chapter) and this becauſe the child-bed pangs are cauſed by the breaking of thoſe ligatures which joyn the infant to the wombe, which conſiſting of a texture of nerves and membranes, parts of a moſt accurate ſenſe, cannot be ſevered without cauſing intolerable pains. Hence therefore the notion of bands may here fitly be ingredient in the expreſſion of pains or agonies, eſpecially when all pain, of what kind ſoever, is ſome degree of ſolutio continui, a rupture, at leaſt ſtraining of thoſe fibers of which the ſenſible parts of our bodies are compoſed: and accordingly pain is either more or leſs, in proportion to this breach of union; the torments of abortions greater than thoſe of regular births, and thoſe of an untimely violent death exceed the pains of a natural, where age is the only ſickneſs, where there are no bands to be forced aſunder, but the ripe fruit drops willingly from the tree, men come to their grave in a full age, like as a ſhock of corn comes in in his ſeaſon, in Jobs language, *ch.*v.26. whereby he concludes his deſcription of a proſperous life. Upon theſe grounds this ſeems to be the moſt probable ſignification of the phraſe אֵין חַרְצֻבוֹת לְמוֹתָם there are no pangs, becauſe no ligaments, in their death; their death is not cauſed by thoſe violent and painful aſſaults, as other mens frequently are; במנוחה ימותו they dye with eaſe, as Kimchi ſpeaks; and to the ſame purpoſe Abu Walid, who renders חַרְצֻבוֹת difficulties, hardſhips, moleſtations. To this notion the Syriack ſeem to have particular reſpect, rendring it ܫܚܠ, which the Latine interpreter tranſlates terminus, (as from ܫܚ omnino prorſus, from whence, ſaith Ferrarius, is ܫܚܠ finis, terminus:) but then likewiſe ܫܚܠ ſignifies chordæ, and fides, ſtrings, to which moſt probably that tranſlator had an eye; and withal it ſignifies apoſtemata, ſuppurationes, apoſtems, or boils, according to the Oriental way of expreſſing all pain and torment by bands and ligatures. Secondly therefore, and in good agreement with this firſt notion, by bands we may underſtand any kind of diſeaſe or pain, or preſſure or heavy burthen, which is wont to be bound on them on whom 'tis laid: ſo Mat. 23.4. Δεσμεύουσι φορτία βαρέα καὶ δυσβάστακτα, they bind heavy burthens and hard to be borne; where the heavy and moſt unſupportable burthens are laid on them by way of δεσμοί, bands; to which the Prophet refers, when he mentions the yoke of his burthen, Iſa. 9.4. a burthen tyed on, as a yoke is wont to

to be. And thus diſeaſes are expreſt in Scripture-ſtyle. — See the ſtory of the woman which had a ſpirit of infirmity, a ſore diſeaſe Inflicted on her by an evil ſpirit, eighteen years, Luk. 13. 11. to her Jeſus, ſaith, v. 12. ἀπολέλυσαι, thou art looſed from thine infirmity, (and looſing, we know is proper to bands;) and v. 15. he compares her cure to the λύειν τὸν βοῦν, looſing, or untying an oxe, and v. 16. in expreſs terms, this daughter of Abraham, ἣν ἔδησεν ὁ Σατανᾶς, whom Satan hath bound, loe theſe eighteen years, (where her ſpirit of infirmity, v. 11. is in other words expreſt by Satans binding her:) and again in the end of that verſe, οὐκ ἔδει λυθῆναι τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τούτῃ, ought ſhe not to be looſed from this band, i. e. cured from this ſickneſs? In that ſtory, this violent diſeaſe, with which ſhe was ſo affected, that ſhe was συγκύπτουσα, bowed together, is ſtyled, δεσμὸς, a band, and conſequently חֲרָצוֹת bands here may by analogy fitly ſignifie violent diſeaſes; which Aquila owns in his tranſlation, οὐκ εἰσὶ δυσπαθίαι, there are no diſeaſes, or hard ſufferings. To either of theſe acceptions of the word for child-bed-pangs, or whatſoever other pains or preſſures, the uſe of it, Iſa. 58. 6. will well accord, where to looſe the bands of wickedneſs ſignifies the reſcuing the oppreſſed from their injurious preſſures, that afflict them as ſore as pangs or pains do thoſe that are under them; but moſt commodiouſly it will be interpreted of burthens or weights which are unjuſtly bound upon them, and preſs them ſore. The Chaldee there have a paraphraſe, which will give us a third acception of the word, for a bond or obligation, in judicature, which binds one to undergo the award of it, a decree or ſentence as it were; for ſo they render חֲרָצוֹת רָשָׁע bands of wickedneſs, by קְשׁוֹרֵי דִינִין מְסַכְּיָן bonds of writings of falſe judgments. And thus among us, men are ſaid to be bound over to judgment, when they are before a Tribunal to anſwer any thing laid to their charge; and ſo again to be bound over to puniſhment, when judgement is paſt upon them. And in this ſenſe, there are no bands לְמוֹתָם to their deaths, will be, there are no writs ſigned for their execution. And to this well agrees the Paraphraſe of the Chaldee in this Pſalm, they are not frighted nor troubled, מִן יוֹם מִיתָתְהוֹן דְּמָרֵיהוֹן for, or becauſe of the day of their deaths, as they that are ſentenced or bound over to death (be it by form of law in judicatures, or be it by diſeaſe, or any thing elſe, as 2 Cor. 1. 9. τὸ ἀπόκριμα τοῦ θανάτου ἔσχηκαμεν, having the ſentence of death, ſignifies being in imminent danger of it) are ſuppoſed to be. And the phraſe being here poetically uſed, may reaſonably be extended to all other ways of death, diſeaſe, ſlaughter in the field, as well as that by judicature, and any kind of danger to the life be thus expreſt by bands or obligations to their death; as among us apprehending, or taking, or ſeizing on, being phraſes primarily uſed in judicature for the Officers apprehending of malefactors, are vulgarly uſed of diſeaſes and death it ſelf. A fourth interpretation of the word the LXXII. on that place of Iſaiah do ſuggeſt, rendring it πνεῦμα ἐν κακῷ. That word σύνθημα, we know, ſignifies a conſpiration, or conjunction of many, and with ἀδικία, iniquity, is uſed of Simon Magus, when he would have bought the gifts of the ſpirit of God, out of a Satanical deſign, the more advantageouſly to oppoſe and ſet up againſt Chriſt; ſee note on Acts 8. e. This is the frequent importance of קְשָׁרִים ligæ, colligationes, conſpirationes (to which David de Pomis told us the חֲרָצוֹת here is equivalent) and that the ſenſe may poſſibly bear alſo; there are no conſpiracies for their deaths, wicked men being of all others the ſafeſt in this reſpect, good men being hated and conſpired againſt by evil men, but good men conſpire not againſt evil. Of theſe four poſſible ſenſes, the firſt and ſecond together ſeems moſt probable, that the wicked men have no pangs, or aſſaults of pains and torments לְמוֹתָם bringing them to their deaths. Caſtellio renders it in Latine ſtile, non ſunt neceſſitates quæ eos enecent, there are no neceſſities to cut them off, (no fatal deſtinies to bring them to their end, ſuch were diſeaſes, and the reſt which the Poets feign'd to come out of Pandora's box.) Our vulgar hath not miſtaken the ſenſe, when they read, they are in no peril of death. To this accords what here follows, וּבְרִיא אוּלָם in our rendring of it, their ſtrength is firm, or fat, (as Eglon, Jude. 3. 17. is ſaid to be אִישׁ בָּרִיא a very fat man) noting an athletick health and habit of body, that is the firmeſt and moſt robuſtious, fartheſt removed from μαρασμοὶ, conſumptive, or emaciating ſickneſſes, and ſo from all danger of death. The LXXII. render the verſe οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνάπαυσις ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ αὐτῶν, καὶ στερέωμα ἐν τῇ πληγῇ αὐτῶν, there is no reſt (ſo the Arabick underſtands it, and ſo ſaith Heſychius, ἀνάπαυσις, ἀνάπαυσις, it ſignifies reſt; and ſo ἀναπεσών, in Lucian, is to ly upon the back and look up, the poſture of reſt) in their death, and firmament in their ſcourge: and the Latine, non eſt reſpectus morti eorum, & firmamentum in plagâ eorum, there is no reſpect to their death, and firmament in their plague. 'Tis not eaſie to divine what they meant by theſe expreſſions; unleſs perhaps reading ἀνάπαυσις, in the notion of renitence, refuſing, denying, (ἀναπύει ὁ συνίθετα πρὸς τι, ἀναπῦσαι, ἀρνήσασθαι, & ἀναπύων, παραιτούμενος, ſaith Heſychius, it ſignifies to deny, refuſe, not to conſent) the meaning may be, that they have no averſion to, or at their death, (they die in a good old age, without any violent diſeaſe to bring them to it;) nor is there any firmneſs in their ſcourge, the diſeaſes or afflictions that befall them are quickly over again, continue not long upon them. But the Latine will not be brought to this ſenſe. It may be non eſt reſpectus morti eorum may ſignifie, they do not think of dying, and then that will not be far from the ſenſe, though with the words it have no affinity. Our former Engliſh, which moſt frequently follows them, hath here happily departed from them, and rendred it fully to the ſenſe, they are in no peril of death, but are luſty and ſtrong. But ſtill it muſt be acknowledged there is great difficulty in אוּלָם, whether ם be radical or no. If it be not, and if אול in Hebrew may be thought to have the like notion to what it hath in Arabick, to ſignifie firſt, then very agreeably to what went before, it would thus be rendred, וּבְרִיא אוּלָם and the former part of their life is healthy, free from diſeaſes, or maladies, according to the uſual notion of ברי in Arabick. Or if it be radical, and have any affinity with the Arabick אלם pain or grief, then it would be (in conſort with the former ſtill) but it, i. e. their death, is free from pain. But theſe conjectures are without authority. Abu-Walid then makes ם radical, and takes it to ſignifie porticus, the porch, or, as ſome times it doth, the whole temple; and then underſtanding כ the note of compariſon, he renders it, they are firm and ſound as the porch, or temple, i. e. as ſuch a ſtrong building; as Pſal. 117. he prays, that their daughters may be as corner-ſtones poliſhed after the ſimilitude of a palace. This interpretation is mentioned as by Aben-Ezra, ſo by Kimchi in his Commentary, and alſo in his Roots, in the name of R. Jonah, i. e. Abu-Walid, without any cenſure: though he bring alſo the other interpretation, making ם an affix, and אול to ſignifie ſtrength; as alſo Aben-Ezra doth. The Jewiſh Arab interpreter making ם an affix, takes the

וּבְרִיא אוּלָם

the other for אולי perhaps, thus rendring the verſe, there are no bonds of or from their deſtruction, nor danger, but they ſay perhaps they ſhall recover, or be in health, as if it were literally healthful is their perhaps, or that which they perſwade themſelves of, not thinking themſelves in danger of death. Aben-Ezra alſo hath another rendring, taking אולם for a palace, and underſtanding ב, they, or every of them is in health in his palace. In this variety it may be beſt to adhere to that of our Engliſh, reading ם as an affix, and אול, as אֵיל, or איל, for ſtrength of body.

c. אנוש — בְּעַמָּל — אָדָם — יִנָּגְעוּ — עִם אָדָם

V. 5. Men] In this verſe the critical difference between אֱנוֹשׁ and אָדָם ſeems to be reſpected: The former from אָנַשׁ doluit, æger fuit, ſignifies a painful, ſickly, calamitous eſtate, and accordingly בְּעַמָּל in the labour (from עָמַל doluit, male habuit) denotes ſickneſs or pains, or other ſuch kinds of miſery, which bring anguiſh and faintings with them; which the LXXII. fitly expreſs by κόποι, laſſitudes, uſed alſo for diſeaſes, or ſickneſs. But אָדָם is a more general word for any ſort of man, any ſon of Adam, any mortal, which by bearing ſinful fleſh, is ſubject to afflictions of all ſorts, noted here by יִנָּגְעוּ from נָגַע to ſtrike, or ſcourge, which the LXXII. fitly expreſs by μαστιῶνται, and the Latine by flagellari. And ſo, as the former phraſe denotes the ſorrow or pain or ſickneſs of the diſeaſed, or weak, ſo this latter, to be ſtricken, or ſcourged, עִם אָדָם with man] ſignifies all other kind of afflictions, which befall men in this world, parallel to πειρασμὸς ἀνθρώπινος, 1 Cor. 10. humane temptation, or ſuch as frequently befalls men in this world.

d. עֲנָק — יַעְנְקֵמוֹ

V. 6 Compaſſeth] From עֲנָק a gold chain, or neck-lace, or chain of the neck, Cant. 4. 9. is the word יַעְנְקֵמוֹ here, and muſt ſignifie putting on this chain upon them by way of ornament. The Chaldee renders it by עַטַרְתְּהוֹן crowneth them, or incompaſſeth their neck, as a crown is wont to do the head. This גַּאֲוָה pride, or elation of mind is here ſaid to do (the conſequent of their uninterrupted proſperity, as Ariſtotle ſaith of wealth, ὑβριστὰς ποιεῖ, it makes men proud and inſolent) ſetting them out in the greateſt luſtre, and the moſt coſtly ornaments. And then it follows חָמָס violence, or unjuſt oppreſſion יָעְטֹף putteth, or ſhall put, or bind, or faſten on (from עָטַף to put on raiment) the ornament upon them. So the Chaldee underſtood it, and render it by way of paraphraſe בְּלִילָא — the crown which they put on their head is from their rapine: which alſo the LXXII. their rendring will bear, πεπεδημένοι ἀνομίαν καὶ ἀσέβειαν αὐτῶν, they were cloathed with their injuſtice and impiety.

e. יָמִיקוּ

V. 8. Corrupt] יָמִיקוּ from מוּק is not elſewhere to be met with in theſe books. יָמַקּוּ we have Lev. 26. 39. which is duly rendred by the LXXII. κάλαι-Σωρίσονται, ſhall be conſumed; but that is from מָקַק to diſſolve, or melt. The notion of מוּק, or מִיק may beſt be fetcht from the uſe of מֵיק in Chaldee and Syriack. So Luk. 16. 14. ἐξεμυκτήριζον muſt ſignifie deriding, being there ſet to expreſs So Pſal. 1 1. for לְצִים ſcorners, the Chaldee reads מְמַקְּנֵי, which the learned Schindler corrects into מְמַיְּקִין deriders. So Pſal. 119. 51. in the ſame manner the Hebrew hath הֵלִיצוּנִי, but the Targum מְמַקְּנִין or rather מְמַיְּקִין, have had me in deriſion; which being there ſpoken of the proud, may well give us the notion of it here, where it is ſet in the character of the proſperous wicked man, whoſe proſperity makes him proud, v. 6. and his pride ſcornful and contumelious. And thus hath St. Hierome rendred it, irriſerunt, they have derided or ſcoffed. Abu Walid thus renders the verſe, They prate fooliſhly in their ſpeech, and the violence of their inſultations, or inſolencies. And thus it hath affinity with the Arabick מוק, which hath the notion of fooliſh rudeneſs, ſuch as is oft in the words of inſolent rich men, which think they may ſpeak what they will. The Arabick Jewiſh interpreter reads, They may multiply words, and ſpeak oppreſſion wickedly, and as if they ſpake from aloft. To this agrees what follows, וידברו רע and they ſpeak maliciouſly: λαλήσουσιν ἐν πονηρίᾳ, ſay the LXXII. they ſpeak in miſchief, or miſchievouſly; the Latine, loquuti ſunt nequitiam, they ſpeak miſchief; and ſo the Syriack: but the Chaldee more fully, וימללון לאבאשא and they ſpeak that they may hurt. All of them leaving עשק, that follows, to be joyned with the end of the verſe, thus, עשק ממרים ידברו from on high they ſpeak oppreſſion, by from on high meaning, ſay the Chaldee, רום לבהון the height of their heart, and by ſpeaking oppreſſion, the open profeſsing of it, as the ſame phraſe is uſed, Iſa. 59. 13.

f. מִי

V. 10. Waters] For מי waters, as St. Jerome reads מי who? ſo the LXXII. appear to have read יְמֵי dayes; and for יִמָּצוּ ſhall be wrung out, from מָצָה expreſſit, וּמָצְאוּ ſhall be found, from מָצָא invenit. See Schindler Pentaglot. p. 1029. B. Accordingly they interpret it ἡμέραι πλήρεις, (ſo they render מָלֵא) ἀναπλήσονται, full days ſhall be found among them. This reading the Syriack (as well as the Latine, &c.) ſeem to follow, but convert it to a very diſtant ſenſe, ܘܢܫܟܚܘ ܒܗܘܢ ܟܠ ܙܒܢ, and they (i.e. the people of God, precedent) ſhall find to themſelves abundantly. The moſt probable way of interpreting the verſe will be (with Caſtellio) by ſetting it as a conſequent, inferred (as the לָכֵן therefore imports) from the former verſe. Before the wicked רְשָׁעִים v. 3. were ſpoken of, and ſo the ſubject of the ſpeech continued in the plural, and ſo it follows again, v. 11. but here עַמּוֹ his people, that muſt be the people of God, my people, ſay the LXXII. עַמָּא דְיָי Gods people, ſay the Chaldee, (as Pſ. 125. 3. the Lord is round about his people) ſo Abu Walid his, i.e. Gods people, contrary to the wicked. Of this people of God it is ſaid in the beginning of the verſe, that becauſe of the proſperity of wicked men, יָשׁוּב הֲלֹם they ſhall turn hither: ſo the LXXII. ἐπιστρέψει ὁ λαὸς μου ἐνταῦθα, my people ſhall turn hither; and ſo the Syriack and Latine, &c. What that means, muſt be taken from one of the many ſpecial acceptions of שׁוּב to turn, for conſidering, or thinking on any thing; ſo Kimchi, his people return to this conſideration again and again. So Iſa. 44. 19. לֹא יָשִׁיב אֶל לִבּוֹ, the LXXII. render it, οὐκ ἐλογίσατο τῇ διανοίᾳ, be conſidered not in his mind; and ſo here, to turn hither, is to turn the mind hither, and ſo conſider, or to turn the eyes, and ſo look, (ſo Malac. 3. 18. וְשַׁבְתֶּם and ye ſhall turn, and ſee, or diſcern.) And then follows, in reference peculiarly to the eyes, ומי מָלֵא יִמָּצוּ לָמוֹ, and full, or plentiful waters (or waters able to fill a veſſel) ſhall be wrung out from them, thus Abu Walid, and thus the Chaldee renders this part expreſly, וּדמעין סגיעין מָחָתִין לְהוֹן and many tears ſhall flow from them; though in the former part they vary much, חָבוּ עַל they are turned againſt the people of the Lord to ſtrike them, &c. and many tears ſhall flow from them. The Jewiſh Arab hath a rendring by himſelf. Therefore ſome of his people turn to their way, i.e. to their opinion, there is drank of by them of the water of boldneſs, or rebellion againſt him; i.e. Upon this divers of Gods people grow bold or inſolent

יָשׁוּב הֲלֹם

lent againſt him. And Abu Walid hath a peculiar way of rendering הֵלֹם, as if it were הָלַם the infinitive, with breaking of ſpirit, for broken in ſpirit, diſcomfited in ſoul, as concerning the wayes of godlineſs, wavering, and ſaying, how doth God know, &c. Behold, &c. and then there flow from them abundant waters (viz. of tears) connects very well with it. This interpretation Kimchi in his Roots recites without cenſure, though he ſeem to prefer this other, His people return hither, i. e. to this conſideration, why the wicked ſhould ſo proſper, &c. and why the waters of a full cup of proſperity ſhould be wrung out to them, i. e. they ſhould have their fill of all good things in this world.

g. בָּגַ֣דְנוּ

V. 15. Offend] The Hebrew בָּגַד ſignifies perfidiouſneſs, breaking of Covenant, of faith, and is accordingly here rendred by the LXXII. ἠσεβήσαμεν, in the ſame notion that ἀσεβεῖς, Rom. 1. 31. ſignifies Covenant-Breakers. And thus it will beſt accord here, being applied to דּוֹר בְּנֶיךָ the generation of Gods children. What that phraſe ſignifies, appears by the parallel phraſes, the generation of the righteous, Pſal. 14. 5. the generation of them that ſeek thee, Pſal. 24. 16. The word דּוֹר generation oft ſignifies a ſet, and ſort of men, ſee Prov. 30. 11, 12, 13, 14. Pſal. 78. 8. and ſo the generation of Gods children ſignifies all the whole ſet and ſort of pious men, thoſe who have undertaken the ſervice of God, entred into covenant with him, part of which covenant and profeſſion it is, to believe in Gods Providence, which therefore to deny, or queſtion, or doubt of, is to break the covenant, to prevaricate, to deal perfidiouſly, to apoſtatize and do quite contrary to their profeſſion. And this ſeems to be the fulleſt importance of the phraſe here, to fall off, apoſtatize from all profeſſors of piety, to be in the Talmudical dialect, אֶפִּיקוֹרוֹס Epicurus, or Epicurean, ſo they call all who deny, or blaſpheme Gods providence, (ſee Maimoni in his tract of Idolatry.) This is not charged upon him that only had thoſe apprehenſions ſuggeſted to him, was under the temptation, his feet were but almoſt gone, his treadings were but well nigh ſlipt, v. 2. But if I ſay, I will ſpeak thus, utter it with the mouth, it is reſolved by the Jews themſelves to be Apoſtacy, and it will not avail the ſpeaker to recall or renounce them, ſaith Maimoni in that tract of Idolatry.

h. לְמַשּׁוּאוֹת

V. 18. Deſtructions] For לְמַשּׁוּאוֹת into deſtructions, from שָׁאָה vaſtavit, or, as Abu Walid and Kimchi will have it, נשׂא, which ſignifies the ſame, the LXXII. read ἐν τῷ ὑπαρθῆναι, in being exalted, as from נָשָׂא with שׁ, to elevate, from the affinity of the words, as their manner oft is, expreſſing the Pſalmiſts meaning, the elevation being that which aſcertains their deſtruction, when they chance to fall from it.

i. צֶלֶם

V. 20. Image] צֶלֶם is an image, or a ſhadow, the image of a body, and ſo ſeems to be taken here, for that which hath a fantaſtical only, in oppoſition to a real ſubſtantial being. So Pſal. 39. 6. In an image man walketh, his life is but an image of life. And then thus lies the compariſon in this verſe, betwixt the proſperity that wicked men enjoy, and that which is fanſied (and by fanſie only injoyed) in a ſleep or dream. That which one dreams of, is not really enjoyed by him, and whenſoever he awakes, the very appearance, or fantaſtical being, which was all it had, periſheth; and juſt ſo the proſperity which wicked men for a time enjoy, is at that very time but an image or ſhadow of proſperity, and that ſuch as within a while ceaſeth to be ſo much as a ſhadow, it abſolutely vaniſheth and comes to nothing: God doth as it were awake them out of this their dream, remove them out of this imaginary proſperity; or they of themſelves awake, their proſperity leaves them, or elſe they leave their proſperity. And then בָּעִיר, in, or by this awaking (ſo it ſignifies, from עוּר evigilare, and not as the LXXII. read, ἐν τῇ πόλει σου, in thy city, as if it were from עִיר city) or, when they thus awake, thou, O God, ſhalt illude, or mock, or make to vaniſh, or bring to nothing (ſo תְּבֻוֶה ſignifies from בּוּז illuſit, the LXXII. aptly render it ἐξουθενώσεις, ſhalt bring to nothing) צַלְמָם their image or ſhadow (εἰκόνα, ſay the LXXII. and ſo the Chaldee and Syriack, &c.) that imaginary proſperity which for a time they had. The Chaldee in their paraphraſe refer it to the day of judgment, when wicked men ſhall riſe out of their graves, and God proceed in wrath againſt them, (בִּרְגַז דְּסוֹתְהוֹן תְּחַבַּר, in fury ſhalt thou ſcorn, or deſpiſe them) according to that expreſſion of Dan. 12. 2. Many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth ſhall awake; ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt. But it may alſo fitly be referred to their imaginary proſperity here, v. 18.

k. אַחַר כָּבוֹד תִּקָּחֵנִי

V. 24. With glory] The Hebrew וְאַחַר כָּבוֹד may beſt be rendred, and after glory. So the Chaldee underſtood it, וּבָתַר דְּשַׁלִּים אוֹקָרָא, &c. and after that the glory ſhall have been completed, which thou haſt ſaid thou wilt bring upon me; it then follows, תִּקָּחֵנִי receive, or thou ſhalt receive me, the LXXII. reads συνελάβου, I ſuppoſe it ſhould be συναντιλάβου, receive me to thy ſelf. Thus לָקַח to take or receive ſignifies, Gen. 5. 24. where of Enoch 'tis ſaid, God took him, which Eccl. 44. 16. and Heb. 11. 5. is expreſt to be his tranſlation. To this rendring the Jewiſh Arab accords. And after this honour thou ſhalt (meet me, ſo his word תתלקאני uſually ſignifies, but here more probably) receive me to thee, or perhaps raiſe me up; for the day of Reſurrection is in Arabick called יום אלתלאקי the day of meeting God.

THE

The Seventy Fourth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

The Seventy Fourth Psalm composed by Asaph (see note on Psalm 73. a) and set to MAschil of Asaph.

the tune known by the name of Maschil or intelligent (see note on Psal. 32. a.) is a prayer for deliverance and safeguard of Gods Church and people from their enemies, and seems to have been endited under the captivity, and describes the sacking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadonosor, and their state of sadness under the deportation.

|| shall thy- (עשן)

2. Remember thy congregation which thou hast purchased of old, [a] the †rod of thine inheritance which thou hast redeemed, this mount Sion wherein thou hast dwelt.

which he hath purchased with his price; we are a nation which thou once broughtest out of Egypt with a mighty hand, many signs and wonders being shewed for the rescuing us out of the Ægyptian slavery; and since that time all the successions of us have been thine: among us hath the Ark of the Covenant resided, and therein the continued exhibition of thy presence, in Mount Sion, the place consecrated to thy solemn service. O do not thou forget and renounce all these thy gratious relations towards us.

* or, because of the utter destructions, all evil hath the enemy done in, or on—used it reproachfully, being (for our sins, most justly) permitted by thee to work desolations among us, and even to invade and destroy thy holy place consecrated to thy peculiar presence and service. But those that are thus malicious, God will at length (interpose his power, and) utterly destroy. (Thus it fared as with the Philistims of old, so soon after this with the Chaldæans, and at length with heathen Rome.)

9. We see not our signs; there is no more any Prophet, neither is there among us any that knoweth how long.

9. And to increase our misery, the gift of Prophecy by which we were wont to have signs given, to make known Gods will to us, is now ceased and lost from among us, and we have now none to consult or enquire of, how long this desolation shall continue. (This was most fully completed in the destruction by Titus, when though there were many ominous and prodigious signs, yet there was no Prophet sent by God, of whom they might ask or be advised in any thing.)

10. O God, how long shall the adversary reproach? shall the enemy blaspheme thy name for ever?

10. Blessed Lord, let not our enemies any longer have this occasion to scoff at and deride our affiance in thee, and to reproach and blaspheme thee our God, as if thou wert unable to rescue us, or chastise them.

l. 19. O Lord, we are like turtles, in an afflicted, and ſo a mournful condition; and yet, as turtles, conſtant in our fidelity to thee, have not taken in any rival into thy ſervice, O let not an helpleſs multitude of ſuch, whoſe innocence delivers them up to the hatred of vultures, become for ever a prey to them: either repreſs them, I beſeech thee, or ſecure us, that wait only on thee, and depend on thy aid againſt our enemies.

19. O deliver not the ſoul of l thy turtle-dove unto the multitude of the wicked: forget not the congregation of thy poor for ever.

20. Thou haſt promiſed thy aids and protections to all that uprightly ſerve and adhere unto thee, and haſt ſtill an holy covenant, Dan. 11. 30. by force of which we ſtill, how low ſoever we are brought, are confident to receive deliverance from thee. And now there is ſpecial need of it, the multitude being ſo great of unjuſt and cruel oppreſſors, which ſecretly lay and manage their deſigns of darkneſs againſt us. O be thou now pleaſed ſeaſonably to make good thy promiſes to us.

20. Have reſpect unto the Covenant; for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty.

21. O let not our truſt and reliance on thee be diſappointed, ſuffer not our oppreſſors ſtill to triumph over us; but return our captivity, reſcue us out of our preſent low dejected eſtate, that we may have the comfort of receiving deliverances from the and thou the juſt honour of our acknowledments.

21. O let not the oppreſſed return aſhamed: let the poor and needy praiſe thy name.

22, 23. Lord, it is not againſt us only that their reproaches are meant, but they advance higher, even againſt thy ſacred Majeſty, whom they ſcoffe at and blaſpheme daily. This is a moſt horrible crying ſin, that cannot chuſe but provoke thine indignation: and yet of this are theſe Atheiſts continually guilty (their ſucceſſes againſt us and proſperous impieties puffe them up into this high degree of profaneneſs to ſcoffe at the God we worſhip, as one that is not able to protect his clients.) O let this excite and engage thee to interpoſe thy hand, to ſhew forth thy power, to undertake our defenſe and patronage, to repreſs and ſo confute their folly, that at length they may acknowledge their ſins, and adore thy Majeſty.

22. Ariſe, O God, plead thine own cauſe; remember † how the fooliſh man reproacheth thee daily.

Annotations on Pſalm LXXIV.

a. שֵׁבֶט

V. 2. The rod.] From the notion of שֵׁבֶט, a rod or ſcepter, is that other notion of it, for a Kingdom, or Empire; and being here joyned with נַחֲלָתֶךָ of thine inheritance, it ſignifies a nation, which through all ſucceſſions, God had a peculiar right and title to.

b. הָרִיסָה פְּעָמֶיךָ

V. 3. Lift up thy feet, &c.] What הָרִיסָה פְּעָמֶיךָ lifting up thy feet, here ſignifies, will be beſt learnt from Gen. 29. 1. There of Jacob 'tis ſaid, וַיִּשָּׂא רַגְלָיו he lift up his feet, and went into the Eaſt Country. For וַיִּשָּׂא there, the Syriack hath ܢܣܒ, the ſame word which here we have; and that פְּעָמִים are all one with רַגְלַיִם feet, is evident from the ſcripture-uſe of it, Pſal. 17. 5. and in many other places. And then as lifting up the feet, is there in Geneſis no more different from the going that follows, than opening the mouth from ſpeaking; ſo Gods coming, or preſence, being in ſcripture-dialect frequently uſed for his inflictions of puniſhment, this will conſequently be the meaning of the phraſe here, when to it is immediately joyned, לְמַשּׁאוֹת to deſolations. Abu Walid renders it, Tread hard upon thine enemies. The Jewiſh Arab, Shew forth thy puniſhment, adding in a note that the lifting up the feet implies puniſhment, the bringing under by force being uſually expreſt by treading under the feet. There is another notion of פְּעָמִים for a mall or hammer, Iſa. 41. 7 and Kimchi would have that the meaning here, הורם פעם lift up thy mall, in oppoſition to the axes and hammers, v. 6. and thus alſo Abu

Abu Walid, lift up thy dashing Instruments. And the LXXII. that read ἐπαρον τὰς χειρας, lift up thy hands, come neerer that: but the Chaldee puts it but of queſtion, אַרֹם אסחוניך, lift up thy goings or footſteps, i. e. come. For לְמַשּׁאוֹת to vaſtations, or deſtructions, from נָשָׁא with ש, the LXXII. as from נָשָׂא with ס to lift up) read ἐπι τας ὑπερηφανιας αὐτων, upon their prides, or elations (ſee note on Pſ. 73.[h].) yet differ not much in the ſenſe: Gods lifting up his feet, or coming, as to act revenge upon their prides, being in effect the deſtroying of them. Thus Abu Walid alſo, becauſe of the utter deſtructions which the enemy hath made, and becauſe of all the evil that he hath done in, or on the ſanctuary. And Aben Ezra, becauſe of the perpetual vaſtations, i. e. becauſe of thine inheritance which is waſt. But the Chaldee again is moſt expreſs, לְמַשְׁנָא אוּמַיָּא to lay waſt the nations, viz. thoſe that had dealt ſo cruelly with Jeruſalem, the Chaldæans, in revenge of whoſe deſolations and vaſtations, God ſhould now come to his deſolations on them. To deſolations here is added נֶצַח perpetuity, to ſignifie final, utter deſolations, confronted to the perpetuity of Gods abſence, v. 1. And then as the reaſon to excite God to this, follows, כָּל הָרַע, &c. all evil hath the enemy done in or on thy Sanctuary. God hath deſerted his Sanctuary, by the going up of the Schecina from between the Cherubims, Ezek. 10. 4. and in conſequence to that, the heathen people had invaded that holy place, and laid it waſt: he is now beſought to return, and come to them again in mercy and reconciliation to them, and in vengeance to thoſe that in waſting them had oppoſed him; and this is the full importance of this verſe.

c. V. 4. Signs] אוֹת ſignifies a ſign, and from thence a ſtandard, or enſign in Militia; and the ſetting up this in any place which hath been taken by armes, is a ſign of that victory; and ſo an enſign or ſtandard thus ſet up is in effect a trophee. And this gives the different rendrings to the ſame word in this place. In the firſt place אוֹתָם their enſignes; but then being ſet up, they become אוֹתוֹת trophees. There is another notion of אוֹת v. 9. for ſuch ſigns as diviners give, to foretell things to come; and of theſe Jarchi underſtands it, that having finiſht their conqueſt according to the auſpicia or ſigns of ſoothſayers, Ezek. 21. 21. The King of Babylon ſtood at the parting of the way to uſe divination, he made his arrows bright, he conſulted with Teraphim, he lookt in the liver) they reſolve their divinations were true, their ſigns אוֹתֵיהֶם אוֹתוֹת real ſigns. And this is no improbable interpretation of the words.

d. V. 5. Famous] יִוָּדַע in Niphal (from יָדַע knew) ſignifies to be known, or in the notion of Hithpael, reciprocally, to make himſelf known, to ſet himſelf out, to ſhew himſelf: and being in the ſingular number, Abu Walid ſeems to underſtand it of the ſtroke or puniſhment from God. Let it be known, as the ſtroak of him that lifteth up axes. But it more probably connects with the enemies in the former verſe, either as 'tis ordinary to change the numbers, or elſe as underſtanding each or every of them, that were before ſpoken of; and ſo this verſe well connects with the former, they, or every of them, ſhew themſelves כְּמֵבִיא —as one makes to aſcend לְמַעְלָה on high, i. e. lifts up קַרְדֻּמוֹת axes, inſtruments of hewing or cutting down, of excliſion, בְּסָבֻךְ עֵץ in the thicket (from סָבַךְ perplexus fuit) of wood, or as the LXXII. not amiſs, ἐν δρυμῳ ξυλων, in a cops, or wood of trees. Thus the Chaldee interprets this verſe: but the LXXII. for the former part of it, ſo as will hardly be intelligible, καὶ οὐκ ἔγνωσαν ὅτι, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα ὑπομένω, ὡς ἐν δρυμῳ ξυλων ἀξίνας, and they knew not as to an entrance on high, as in a wood of trees with axes; and yet the Latine follow them, & non cogniverunt (for וְיֻדַע was known) and they knew not, ſicut in exitu, as in the end (for כְּמֵבִיא as one that lifts) ſuper ſummum on the top (for לְמַעְלָה up, or on high) and then in the beginning of the next verſe quaſi in ſylva lignorum ſecuribus —— as in the wood of trees with axes. But in the former way of conſtruction the ſenſe is obvious, and ſuch as well connects with that which follows, וְעַתָּה and now, not as a notation of time, but as an expletive, or bare copulative, which the Chaldee expreſs by וכדין and ſo, as the ἀντίτυπον, or counterpart of the ſimilitude, as they cut down wood, ſo theſe break and cut down פִּתּוּחֶיהָ carved works from פָּתַח aperuit, in the notion of ſculpture, when applyed to ſuch materials, Zach. 3. 9. for which the LXXII. read τὰς θύρας αὐλῆς, their doors, as in the notion of פְּתָחִים from the ſame root, that ſo ſignifies.

V. 8. Deſtroy them] נִינָם is by all the antient interpreters, the Syriack only excepted, rendred as from נִין filius; בְּנֵיהֶם their children, ſaith the Chaldee, ἡ συγγενια αὐτῶν, their kindred, ſay the LXXII. and ſo the Latine, (and Arabick and Æthiopick) cognatio eorum: yet the Syriack נְשֵׁיצִנ let us deſtroy them, deducing it, as 'tis thought, from נָיָה vim intulit, oppreſſit. And thus Abu Walid deduceth it, and Aben Ezra, as likewiſe Kimchi approves it. But the former ſeems more regularly the rendring of it, and being here joyned with יָחַד together, (their poſterity at once, or together) it is a proverbial expreſſion, to ſignifie utter deſtruction, as we know it is when they and their children at once are involved in the ſame calamity. The Jewiſh Arab follows this notion of children, or poſterity, but renders it of the enemies. So that their poſterity have ſaid of us in their minds, all of them, when they have burnt up all the Synagogues of the Almighty in the land, that we do not ſee our ſigns, &c. i. e. as he gives his note, the ſecond order or progeny of our enemies have ſaid of us, that we have not ſeen our ſignes, &c.

e. נִינָם

f. V. 11. Pluck it] From כָּלָה conſumptus eſt, is כִּלָּה in Piel, conſume thou, ſo Pſal. 59. 14. 'tis twice uſed, כַּלֵּה בְחֵמָה כַּלֵּה Conſume in the wrath, conſume. And ſo in all reaſon 'tis here to be rendred; and being joyned with מִקֶּרֶב חֵיקְךָ from within thy boſome, it muſt ſignify drawing out the hand thence to deſtroy: and ſo 'tis paraphraſed by the Chaldee, draw it (i. e. thy right hand preceding) out of the midſt of thy boſome, and deſtroy. And thus it coheres with the former part of the verſe, לָמָּה תָשִׁיב יָדְךָ why returneſt thou thy hand, or recalleſt it into thy boſome? The Jewiſh Arab reads; Turn not from them thy hand, even thy right hand, but conſume them out of the midſt of thy houſe, giving a note that the houſe of God is called חֵיק. For כַּלֵּה the LXXII. read εἰς τέλος, and the Latine, in finem, from the notion כָּלָה finitus eſt.

g. V. 14. The people inhabiting the wilderneſs] What is here meant by עַם לְצִיִּים the people of the wilderneſs, may ſeem ſomewhat uncertain. By Leviathan, the Whale is literally meant, but Poetically, Pharaoh, the King of Ægypt, as by the Dragons, v. 13. his Army that purſued Iſrael. Now of theſe it is ſaid, Ex. 14. 30. that Iſrael ſaw the Ægyptians dead on the ſea ſhore, and then being thus made a prey to the wild-beaſts and birds, 'tis not improbable that theſe wild beaſts and birds ſhould here be expreſt by עָם, the people of the wilderneſs, as being the only proper inhabitants thereof. That עָם people, hath ſometimes that interpretation in Scripture, appears by Prov. 30. 25.

עַם לְצִיִּים

and 26. where the Ants are ſtyled עַם, a people, and ſo the Coneys alſo. And in analogy with this interpretation it is, that God in the Prophets expreſſes the defeat and ſlaughter of an army, by making a great feaſt, and inviting a multitude of gueſts to it, Iſa. 56. 9. meaning Beaſts and Birds of prey. But though to the bodies of the Ægyptians drown'd in the ſea, and here meant, this interpretation of people for beaſts be moſt agreeable, yet becauſe Ægyptians are here not named, but poetically expreſt by Leviathan and the Dragons, and thoſe are more proper food for men than for birds and beaſts, and becauſe the * inhabitants of that deſert lying by the red ſea, did feed wholly on fiſh, and were therefore called Ichthyophagi, fiſh-eaters, it will be moſt reaſonable to interpret this עַם לְצִיִּים people of the wilderneſs, of theſe Ichthyophagi, near whoſe ſhore Pharaoh and his hoſts were drowned. Of their feeding on the Leviathan, or Whale, when they meet with it, as well as on leſſer fiſhes, Agatharcides tells us, cap. 20. ἐκ δὲ ἐκπιπτόντων εἰς τὴν χέρσον κητῶν ἀπλήστως, they feed and live on the whales which are caſt on dry land: and ſo Diodorus Siculus, l. 3. διαζῶσιν ἀπὸ δὲ ἐκπιπτόντων, &c. they are fed or nouriſhed by Whales, and other ὑπερμεγέθεις, fiſhes of a vaſt ſize, διὰ τὸ μεγέθους δυσαλωτοῦσι, which becauſe of their greatneſs are hard to be taken; anſwerable to the תַּנִּינִים dragons, v. 13. Of theſe Aben Ezra interprets this place, בציה בנגב הים the inhabitants of the wilderneſs by the ſhore of the ſea, the ſame that are mentioned by the name צִיִּים Pſal. 72. 9. they that dwell in the wilderneſs ſhall bow before him; which were men ſure, and not beaſts, and particularly theſe Ichthyophagi by the red Sea, which was one of the Seas mentioned, v. 8. Of this ſea † Diodorus Siculus hath a remarkable paſſage pertinent to our preſent purpoſe, It is, ſaith he, a tradition among the Ichthyophagi that dwell near, which they have conſerved from their anceſtors, that at a certain great ἀμπώτις, ebbe or receſs of the Sea, ἐγίνετο τῆ κόλπῳ ξηρὰ πᾶς ὁ τόπος, every place of that ſinus was dried up, μεταπιπτούσης τῆς θαλάττης εἰς τἐναντία μέρη, the Sea departing to the other oppoſite parts, and then again, ἐπανελθοῦσαν ἐξαίφνης πλημμύραν, flowing back with a huge flote, it was reſtored to its former courſe. Which certainly refers to this part of hiſtory, and ſets it down moſt exactly according to the truth: not that the Sea ſo parted aſunder, that the Iſraelites might paſs from one ſide to the other on dry land, as over Jordan they did, (for that they did not thus paſs over, but came out at the ſame ſide of the Sea that they went in; ſee note i.) but that as in a great ebb, (ſuch as was never ſeen before, nor ſince) the Sea departed ſo far from the banks of Ægypt, that the Iſraelites firſt, and the Ægyptians after them, went in, and marcht in the midſt of the channel on dry ground, and then waters returned, Exod. 14. 28. i. e. flowed back again, and drowned the Ægyptians, and caſt up their bodies on the ſhore, as the Text ſaith, Ex. 14. 30. and thereby made the parallel more complete betwixt Pharaoh with his Ægyptian Armies, and Leviathan, and the Dragons, or great fiſhes, which are wont to be caſt upon the ſhore by the tides; and ſo the Ichthyophagi come out at ſet times to gather them, twice a day, ſaith Agatharcides, at the third and ninth hour, ὅταν ἐκ πλάγιας ἡ πλήμμυρα ἐπὶ τὴν χέρσον εἴσεισι, when the tide comes in from the ſea to the dry land. Which being conſider'd, it now appears how far theſe two interpretations are from being unreconcileable, they being both moſt true, one in the Hiſtorical, the other in the Poetical ſenſe. In the Hiſtorical ſenſe, Pharaoh and the Ægyptians were drowned in the Sea, then caſt upon the ſhore, and devoured by the Beaſts and Birds of the Wilderneſs, which muſt then be the עַם לְצִיִּים people in the wilderneſs; but this here poetically deſcrib'd by the Whale and other great fiſhes caſt upon the ſhore by the tide, and gathered up and uſed for food by the Ichthyophagi, which are properly, and not poetically ſtyled, עַם לְצִיִּים the people of the wilderneſs. And ſo this is the complete importance of this verſe.

* ἀνθρώπων τῶν νῦν Σύρων ἐπὶ δυὰ σταδίους ἑξήκοντα τῶν Ἐρυθρᾶς παροικοῦσιν οἱ Ἰχθυοφάγοι. Pauſan. in Attic.

V. 15. Cleave] בָּקַע as it ſignifies to cleave, ſo alſo to bring forth or fetch out; expreſſiſti, ſaith Seb. Caſtellio. It is uſed of Birds diſcloſing or hatching their young ones, Iſa. 34. 15. and 59. 5. becauſe that is done by the young ones cleaving, or breaking the ſhell with their bills. And accordingly 'tis here uſed of God's wonderful work, of cleaving, and ſo bringing or cauſing to break out (the LXXII. well expreſs it by διέῤῥηξας, the Latine by dirupiſti,) waters out of the rock, and that in ſuch plenty that it became a river, which ran along with them in their journeying (ſee note on 1 Cor. 10. 4.) in reſpect of its firſt coming out of the rock 'tis here called מַעְיָן a fountain; but in reſpect of the current, here is added נַחַל and a flood, or torrent.

h. בָּקַע

מַעְיָן נַחַל i. עֵבְרוֹת אֵיתָן

Ibid. Rivers] What the ſtrong rivers were which were here referred to, the Chaldee hath undertaken to ſpecifie, Arnon, and Jabbok, and Jordan. That the red ſea was not in this verſe referred to, is probable, becauſe that had been before mentioned, v. 13. and that under another ſtyle פַּוֹרְתָּ, from that notion of פָּרַר to go back, or recede, wherein the Arabs uſe; and ſo God by his ſtrength dealt with that, made it go back, and give place to the Iſraelites entring into the Channel, not ſo as to part aſunder, for them to go quite over from one ſide to the other: for 1. the way from Ægypt to Canaan led them not croſs the red ſea, 2. their journeyings ſet down Num. 33. 6. and 8. ſhew that as before their entring into the Sea, they were in Etham in the edge of the wilderneſs, ſo after they were come out of the Sea, they came into the ſame wilderneſs of Etham, and went three dayes journey in it, an evidence that the Iſraelites came out on the ſame ſide of the ſea as they went in. That this and no more is the meaning of διέβησαν, paſſing through the red ſea, Heb. 11. 29. their walking on dry land in the midſt of the ſea. Exod. 14. 29. ſee note on Heb. 11. b. But then Jordan, that was dried up, and gave them an eaſie paſſage over it, Joſ. 3. 16. But as for any miraculous drying up either of Arnon or Jabbok, there is no Hiſtory of it in Scripture, only one intimation there is, Num. 21. that may incline us to credit the Targums tradition. For there on the mention of their remove, and pitching on the other ſide of Arnon, v. 13. it follows, wherefore it is ſaid in the Book of the wars of the Lord, what he did in the red ſea, and in the Brooks of Arnon. VVhere the comparing and joyning Gods miraculous works in the red ſea, with thoſe he did in the brooks of Arnon, is an indication that ſome ſuch like thing was done for the Iſraelites at thoſe brooks, as was before done at the red ſea, viz. at the time of its receding before the Iſraelites. And from that book of the wars of the Lord the Chaldee by Tradition might have it.

פּוֹרְתָּ

V. 16. The light] From אור luxit, is מָאוֹר in general any luminary or receptacle of light, indifferently the Sun and the Moon, Gen. 1. 16 But being joyned with, and ſo oppoſed to the Sun, as here the night is to the day, it muſt needs ſignifie the luminary of the night, the Moon, as the Sun is of the day: and accordingly the Chaldee renders it סִיהֲרָא the Moon, and the LXXII. σελήνην, and ſo the Syriack, ܣܗܪܐ and the Jewiſh Arab, Thou haſt prepared the Moon with the Sun. Only the Latine reads auroram, the morning.

V. 19. Thy

l. תּוֹרְךָ

V. 19. Thy Turtle] From תור the original of our Latine turtur, which is but the doubling of it, is תּוֹרְךָ here thy turtle; which being by the Psalmist designed poetically to signifie the pious, faithful servants of God, who make good their fidelity to him, which in the spiritual sense is parallel to to the purity and chastity of the turtle, the Chaldee and LXXII. have chosen to paraphrase it, the former by מְאַלְפֵי אוֹרָיְתָךְ those that learn thy law, with respect to תּוֹרָה law, which hath such affinity with it; the other by ἐξομολογεῖσθαί σοι, confessing to thee, as if it were יוֹדֶה, the letters whereof differ so little from it.

The Seventy Fifth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

TO the chief Musitian, Altaschith, A Psalm or song of Asaph.

The seventy Fifth Psalm was composed by Asaph, to the tune known by the name Altaschith, (see note on Psal. 57. 2.) praising God for all his wondrous acts of mercy, and of justice upon the enemies of his people, and was committed to the Præfect of the Musick.

‖ and near is thy name to them that declare thy wondrous works.

1. Unto thee, O God, do we give thanks, unto thee do we give thanks; ‖ for that thy name is near thy wondrous works [a] declare.

1. We bless and magnifie thy mercies, O Lord, and again we bless and magnifie a.

them, and have all manner of inducement and obligation thus to do, not only because we have received so many signal ingagements from thee, but especially because the performance of this duty of praise is so richly accepted and rewarded by thee, and thy power and providence ascertain'd to the present defense of all those that performe it faithfully, that wait on thee for thy aids, and fail not in acknowledging the receit of them.

‖ take a fit time.

2. When I shall ‖ receive [b] the congregation, I shall judge uprightly.

2. For God is a most upright judge, and if he doth a b.

while delay the punishing of wicked men, and relieving the godly, that certainly is but an act of his wise disposal, to choose the fittest season for it, a time which in all respects is most agreeable; and then he will certainly interpose in mercy to the one, and just vengeance to the other.

† were melted. נְמוֹגִים

3. The earth and all the inhabitants thereof † are dissolved, I bear up the pillars of it. Selah.

3. When the whole land was in a civil combustion, one part as it were melted and dissolved from another, 'twas God alone that kept it from utter destruction, by preserving alive the pious men, who by their Prayers and Intercessions are wont to contend and prevail for averting of ruine, (see note b.) or supported it still upon the proper basis, and re-establisht David in his Throne.

4. I said unto the fools, Deal not so foolishly, and to the wicked, Lift not up the horn.

5. Lift not up your horn on high, speak not with a stiff neck.

4, 5. Repress and brought down the wicked Rebells, that scoft at God and his Anointed, and were obstinately bent to exalt themselves in his ruine. These did God in his good time bring down and put to shame.

* neither from the East, nor West, nor desert of Mountains ‖ Governor.

6. For [c] * promotion cometh neither from the East, nor from the West, nor from the South.

7. But God is [d] the ‖ Judge, he putteth down one, and setteth up another.

6, 7. For indeed it is he only that can exalt or suppress, and no power on c. earth can properly be said d. to do it, this is the privilege and prerogative of the one supreme supereminent ruler of all the world; and in great justice he thus disposeth of this, as of all things here belong, as he sees fittest (never suffering wicked men continually to prosper.)

8. For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red, it is full of mixture, and he poureth out of the same; but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them.

8. All that befalls either good or evil men comes certainly from God, who hath in his power judgments of the most direful aloy, most fitly compared to a cup of the strongest wine, with the addition of the most stupifying mixtures, myrrhe, &c. (see note on Rev. 14. 10. c.) and in the dispensing and pouring out of this, some drops may fall to the portion of godly men in this world, some afflictions for a time; but then for the wicked they must expect the bottom of the cup, the bitterest and most intolerable part of sufferings, every drop of those dregs of Gods wrath to be drunk up by them, in this life probably, but undoubtedly in another.

9. But I will declare for ever, I will sing praises to the God of Jacob.

9. As therefore it is my part not to fail to proclaim and bless the name of this God for ever, which hath so favourably owned the cause of his servants;

10. All the hornes of the wicked also will I cut off, but the hornes of the righteous shall be exalted.

10. So I shall securely remit to him the taking his own time to execute his judgments, to bring down the power of all his enemies, which he will certainly perform, cherishing, and at last promoting, those that adhere faithfully to his service.

V. 1. Declare] The whole difficulty of this, v. 1. ſeems to be beſt removed by rendring סִפְּרוּ as a participle plural in the ſenſe of the dative caſe, for then that will expreſs to whom Gods name, i. e. his power is here ſaid to be nigh, viz. סִפְּרוּ to them that declare (the Chaldee renders it אַשְׁתָּעוּ) thy wondrous works. Thus hath the learned Caſtellio rendred it, Cujus præſens adeſt nomen tua narrantibus miracula. To thee will we give thanks whoſe name is preſent at hand (ſo קָרוֹב ſignifies) to them that ſhew forth thy miracles.

b. מוֹעֵד

V. 2. Congregation] מוֹעֵד from יָעַד condixit, ſignifies an appointed time or ſeaſon, as well as place; and in that former ſenſe 'tis moſt commonly uſed either for time in general, or in ſpecial for the four ſeaſons of the year, the months, the ſolemn feaſts, &c. and to this ſenſe of time, not place or congregation, the learned interpreters render it: יְמָנָא time, ſaith the Chaldee; ܙܒܢܐ time, ſaith the Syriack; καιρὸν, the LXXII. and tempus the Latine; and ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick, and the Interlinear ſtatutum tempus; and Caſtellio, certum tempus: and then with אֶקַּח from לָקַח cepit, it may fitly ſignifie the taking a fit ſeaſon. And then follows the אֲנִי מֵישָׁרִים אֶשְׁפֹּט I will judge rectitudes, underſtanding it of the Lord. That the ſpeech belongeth to God, appears by the next verſe, his eſtabliſhing, or ſupporting the pillars of the earth, preſerving religious perſons, who in the Hebrew dialect are frequently ſtiled pillars: ſo Maimonides de Idol: of Abraham that he was עַמּוּד הָעוֹלָם the pillar of the world: ſo Gal. 11. 9. thoſe eminent Apoſtles, are called στῦλοι, pillars, and oft elſewhere: Which eſtabliſhing and preſerving of them (ἐστηρίωσα, ſay the LXXII. I have ſet them firm and ſolid) can belong to none but God; and ſo in the following verſes, till at length, v. 7. 'tis expreſly ſaid, God is the judge, he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another. This is again obſervable, v. 10. For as here, v. 1. and 2. there is an alternation between the Pſalmiſt and God, deſigned to be ſung ſeverally by ſeveral perſons or chori, and ſo both in the firſt perſon, unto thee do we give thanks, ſaith one, and when I——I ſhall judge according to right, ſaith the other, (דִּבְרֵי הָאֵל the words of God, ſaith Kimchi;) ſo again in the concluſion, I will declare, I will ſing praiſes, ſaith one, and All the horns of the wicked will I cut off, ſaith the other; to ſignifie to us the certain anſwers we may expect from God: If we adhere to him and bleſs him, bear thankfully and patiently what he layes upon us, he will certainly eſpouſe our cauſe, defend and ſecure us, judge rectitudes in one place, and cut off the horns of the wicked in the other, which is but the paraphraſe of his judging rectitudes (i. e. the moſt perfect right judgments) here, which yet he oft defers to do, till he find a fit time, either the time of wicked mens having filled up the meaſure of their ſins, or a choiſe ſeaſon when their oppreſſions grow high, and the godly are ready to ſink under them, and then upon their flying to God in their trouble, he delivereth them out of their diſtreſs. Another rendring the former part of the verſe is capable of, taking כִּי in the front in the notion of although, of which there are many inſtances. So Gen. 47. 14. כִּי not for, but although Manaſſes was the firſt born, he laid his right hand on Ephraim. So Exod. 34. 9. Let the Lord come among us כִּי not for, but although it be a ſtiffnecked people. See Joſ. 17. 18. Dan. 9. 9. Exod. 13. 17. Pſ. 41. 5. Iſ. 12. 1. Pſ. 71. 15. And then כִּי אֶקַּח מוֹעֵד will be, though I take time, i. e. delay, or make ſome ſtay, I will judge rectitudes; according to that of our Saviour, Luk. 18. 7. that God will avenge his electi, though he bear or ſtay long; and Habak. 2. 3. The viſion is for an appointed time, the מוֹעֵד here, though it tarry, wait for it, becauſe it will ſurely come, it will not tarry. To which ſenſe it may farther be obſerved, that לָקַח hath alſo the notion of buying, and then buying times, is a ſolemn phraſe, Dan. 11. 9. for making delays, from whence St. Paul hath ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, redeeming the time, Eph. 5. 16.

c. הָרִים

V. 6. Promotion] That הָרִים here ſignifies mountains in the genitive plural, and ſo is governed of מִמִּדְבַּר from the deſert preceding, is agreed by all the antients, and then it is to be rendred from the deſert of the mountains, or the mountainous deſert: ſo the LXXII. οὔτε ἀπὸ ἐρήμων ὀρέων; the Latine, neque à deſertis montibus, nor from the deſert mountains, the Chaldee with ſome change, neither from the North of the deſerts, nor from the South of the Mountains; but the Syriack expreſly, ܘܠܐ ܡܢ ܡܕܒܪܐ ܕܛܘܪܐ nor from the deſert of the mountains, and ſo the Interlinear alſo. And then the ſpeech muſt be elliptical, and the ſupply of it fetcht either from the precedent verſe, or elſe rather from the ſubſequent, and not be promotion only, by which ſome interpreters render הָרִים, as if it were the infinitive (from רוּם, exaltavit) exaltare, or exaltatio; but more fully pulling down, and ſetting up, thus, For neither from the Eaſt (ſo מִמּוֹצָא literally, from the going out, ſignifies) nor from the Weſt, nor from the deſert of Mountains, כִּי &c. For God judgeth---Thus the Jewiſh Arab, neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the deſerts and mountains cometh that unto you. The word הָרִים here alludes to the יָרִים ver. 7. and חֲרִימוּ ver. 5. On this verſe the Rabbins have their changes. Kimchi's Father would have מוֹצָא to be cuſtom or impoſt (from 1 King. 10. 28.) מַעֲרָב to be traffick (Ezek. 27. 14.) מִדְבָּר to be eloquence (Cant. 4. 3.) the ſeveral ways of preferment in the World. R. Obad. Gaon interprets מוֹצָא the riſing of the ſtars, מַעֲרָב their ſetting, מִדְבָּר the primum mobile (for ſo 'tis called) and ſo to refer to Aſtrological predictions, pretended from the horoſcope. But David Kimchi himſelf having mentioned his Fathers deſcant, tranſlates it literally, neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, &c. i. e. it is not acquired by mans diligence in going hither and thither, &c. and although he prefer the notion of exaltation, or promotion, yet he gives a note from R. Aba an antient Rabbin, that הָרִים in every other place of Scripture but this, ſignifies mountains, And then why not in this alſo?

d. שֹׁפֵט

V. 7. Judge] The word שָׁפַט ſignifies ſomewhat more than an ordinary juſticiary among us, for to ſuch it ſcarcely belongs to beſtow honours, and preferments at pleaſure. It is the ſtyle whereby the Captains and managers of the wars of the people of Iſrael were ſtyled, Gideon, and Sampſon, &c. which, as the Roman Dictators, acted in an unlimited power. Theſe were raiſed up by God, when the people were oppreſt, or captivated, to vindicate them to their antient liberties; and from hence the Latine Suffes and Suffetes is derived, qui ſummus Pœnis magiſtratus eſt, ſaith Livy, which was the ſupreme Magiſtrate among the Carthagiuians, and to theſe the managery of their wars belonged, quod velut conſulare imperium apud Carthaginenſes erat, ſaith Livy, again, becauſe the government of the Carthaginians, was as it were conſular. And in this notion it is here attributed to God, as to judge rectitudes, puniſh and avenge them of their enemies, v. 2. (the שָׁפַט here referring to the אֶשְׁפֹּט there) ſo to ſubdue their oppreſſors here (as a Captain in war) and reſtore to their Countrey again.

The Seventy Sixth Psalm.

‖ Master of the stringed instruments. (see Pf. 4. note 2.)

TO the ‖ chief Musitian upon Neginoth, a Psalm or Song of Asaph.

Paraphrase.

The Seventy sixth Psalm, is a commemoration of the power and Majesty, and merciful presence of God unto his people, in hearing and answering them, and executing judgments on their enemies, overthrowing their † heathen invaders; It was composed by Asaph, and committed to the Præfect of the stringed instruments.

† שיר של סנחריב
'Aσυ'εων, An ode on the Assyrian, Ixxii. &c. of Senacherib and his company. Jarchi.

1. In Judah is God known, his name is great in Israel.

1. Though God have done abundantly sufficient to reveal his power and glorious attributes to all the men in the world, yet in a most signal manner hath he exhibited himself to the people of the Jews:

2. In Salem also is his Tabernacle, and his dwelling in Sion.

2. And that especially in the holy place of publick assembly, where when pious men meet devoutly to offer up their sacrifices and requests to him, they receive certain answers of mercy from him, most evident demonstrations of his peculiar presence and audience there.

† or lightnings, or fires.

3. There brake he [a] the † arrows of the bow, the shield, and the sword, and the battel. Selah.

3. * Whilst we kept close to his service there, we never failed to receive portentous aids from him, to obtain the most illustrious victories over our enemies, to secure our selves, and destroy them in their most furious and formidable assaults; and whatsoever we have at any time atchieved in this kind, it hath been no strength of ours, but his peculiar interposition.

a. * So the Chald.

4. Thou art more glorious and excellent then the mountains of prey.

4. Thy presence, O God, in this hill of Sion hath a far greater and more glorious vertue for the guarding of us, and overcoming our opposers, than the mountains of most strength and advantage, where our malicious enemies in their siege and designs of taking our City, make their randezvous, are for the fortifying themselves, or annoying of us.

‖ have despoiled, or disarmed themselves, they slept.

5. The stoutest-hearted ‖ are spoiled, they have slept their sleep, and none of the men of might [b] have found their hands.

5. The stoutest and most able men in the world, the most warlike and victorious

b.

Assyrians, have by this means without any considerable strength of ours, been utterly discomfited, when they had betaken themselves to their rest, 2 Chron. 32. 21. in the midst of their security the Lord sent an Angel, and cut off all their mighty men of valour, they slept but never waked again; and so their whole Army (see Isa. 37. 36. like men asleep, have been able to do nothing, not so much as to move an hand to hurt us.

6. At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep.

6. 'Twas the secret interposition of thy power, O Lord, that wrought this signal destruction upon so potent and numerous an Army.

‖ from the minute of thy anger מֵאָז אַפֶּךָ

7. Thou, even thou art to be feared, and who may stand in thy sight ‖ when once thou art angry?

7. Thou art most terrible and irresistible in thy judgments, and consumest all before thee in the first minute that thou art pleased to execute them.

8. Thou didst cause judgment to be heard from heaven; the earth [c] feared, and was still,

9. When God arose to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth. Selah.

8, 9. When thou, though in heaven, didst please to interpose for thy oppressed people, in imminent pressing danger, to deliver them from the violences of men,

c.

and to punish those that injured them, then thy Angels came forth on thy messages, with thunder and lightning and earthquakes; by these the proudest sinners were stricken with horror, dreaded these thy thunderbolts, and had no means imaginable to secure them from them, were all destroyed and put to flight, and so left thy people to their rest and quiet, whom they came to besiege and conquer.

† or confess. * or gird on.

10. Surely the wrath of man shall † praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt [d] thou * restrain.

10. And thus art thou praised and acknowledged, and in some degree honoured by the miscarriage and frustration of unjust and wicked men, and occasionally by their very sin, their cruelty and blasphemies, when they came to be restrained and quelled, and remarkably punished by thee; or, Against their rage thou preparest rage; they begin in fury against pious blameless men, afflicting and oppressing them, and thou in thy time dealest with them in wrath, repayest them, as they have deserved.

d.

‖ all † the terrible. לְמוֹרָא

11. Vow and pay unto the Lord your God: ‖ let all that be round about him bring presents to † him that ought to be feared.

11. Our God is a gracious and dreadful God, gracious to us in defending us against the most savage oppressors, dreadful to them that continue thus to provoke and blaspheme him. O let us all, that profess his service, consecrate (and performe) to him the fruits of our lips, all possible praises and thanksgivings, all works of piety and charity. And let those that have provoked, make speed to atone him by reformation, and the meet fruits thereof.

* bring down.

12. [e] He shall * cut off the spirit of Princes, he is terrible to the Kings of the earth.

12. Else be they never so great and prosperous, never so proud and stout, God will in a most terrible manner deal with them, and at length be sure to bring them low enough, as he hath done the proud Senacherib, and Rabshakeh, and the whole Assyrian Army.

Annotations

Annotations on Psal. LXXVI.

a. רֶשֶׁף

V. 3. Arrows] The Hebrew רֶשֶׁף ſignifies fire, Job, v. 7. where ſparkes that fly upward are poetically expreſt by בְּנֵי רֶשֶׁף the ſons of the fire. So Pſal. 78. 48. it is uſed not for thunderbolts or lightnings, as our margin reads, but ſimply for fire, ſhot out of the clouds, and running along upon the ground, Exod. 9. 23. And from thence by metaphor it is applied to an arrow or dart, ſhot out of a bow, and by the ſwiftneſs of the motion ſuppoſed to be inflamed, ſee Cant. 8. 6. where of love it is ſaid, that רִשְׁפֶּיהָ רִשְׁפֵּי אֵשׁ (not the Coals, but) the arrows thereof are arrows of fire, it ſhoots, and wounds, and burns a mans heart, inflames it vehemently by wounding it. Here we have the word twice, and if the former of them do not ſignifie arrows ſimply, it will not be found in that ſenſe in the Bible: nor do the LXXII. render it in the notion of an arrow, but in this place expreſs it by a general word, τὰ κράτη τῆς τόξου, the ſtrengths of the bowes, referring to that which is ſuppoſed to be the cauſe of inflaming the arrows, the ſtrength of the bow from which they are ſhot out. The Syriack in ſome degree of complyance with them render it זְרָעָא the armes of the bow, that which the bow reacheth out as a man doth his arme, and by which, as by an arme, it reacheth to, and forcibly ſeiſeth on that which is diſtant from it. The poetical expreſſion will beſt be conſerved by reteining ſome notice of the primary ſenſe in the rendring of it, fires or lightnings of the bow, i. e. thoſe hoſtile weapons which are moſt furious and formidable, as fire ſhot out from a bow.

b. מָצְאוּ

V. 5. Found their hands] לֹא מָצְאוּ יְדֵיהֶם may be rendred, have not found their hands, i. e. have not been able to uſe them for reſiſtance, for the offending others, or even for their own defenſe; the Hebrew מָצָא (as the Syriack שְׁכַח by which they here render it) ſignifying as to find, or get, ſo to have in readineſs, in their power, to be able to uſe. To this the Chaldee look in their paraphraſe, לָא סַפִּיקוּ לְמֵיהַד וְנֵיהוֹן בִּידֵיהוֹן they could not take their weapons in their hands, i. e. they could not uſe their hands to manage their weapons. The LXXII. have but little varied the phraſe, οὐκ ηὗρον οὐδὲν ταῖς χερσὶν αὐτῶν, they found nothing with their hands, i. e. they were able to do nothing with them, (their vaſt army atchieved nothing, but returned with ſhame of face to their own land, 2 Chron. 32. 21.) Which the Latine ſeems to have a little miſtaken, when they add the prepoſition in] to what they found in the LXXII. nihil invenerunt in manibus, they found nothing in their hands; but that ſtill interpretable to the former ſenſe, they found nothing, i. e. they had neither weapons nor ſtrength in their hands, their whole Army was utterly routed and diſcomfited, without ſtriking a ſtroak; for which the Syriack read, לָא אַשְׁכַּחוּ יְדֵיהוֹן, their hands were not able, or impotent. And this well agrees to the beginning of the verſe; אִשְׁתּוֹלְלוּ they have been cut off, or periſhed, they are gone, ſaith Abu Walid, or have deſpoiled themſelves, (the reciprocal from שָׁלַל prædatus eſt,) they have caſt away their weapons, ſaith the Chaldee; ἐταράχθησαν, they were troubled, ſay the LXXII. as when in a Panick terror men are amazed, diſcomfited, throw away their weapons, and fly, and by that aſtoniſhment are like men in a ſleep, their ſtrength and ſenſe tyed up; but it more punctually refers to the time wherein the Angel ſmote the Aſſyrian Army, in the deep of the night, when they had put off their garments and weapons both, were faſt aſleep in their tents, and at once 85000. of them ſlain, Iſa. 37. 36. This is poetically deſcribed by ſleeping their ſleep; and as is added, v. 6. נִרְדָּם men in a dead ſleep, dura quies, ferreus ſomnus, an hard and thorny ſleep. Were they never ſo ſtrong or valiant, had they never ſuch ſtrength of body, skill in armes, courage of mind, and all that was neceſſary for a conqueſt, in the midſt of their ſecurity, they were ſmitten, and ſo utterly vanquiſht, and returned re infectâ, without doing of any thing.

c. אֶרֶץ יָרְאָה

V. 8. Feared] What is meant by the earths fearing here, muſt be judged by proportion with the judgments being heard from heaven in the former part of the verſe. In the hiſtory, 2 Chron. 32. 21. the Angel of the Lord wrought that great execution on the Aſſyrians Army. Now the deſcent of an Angel, when he came commiſsioned for any act of power, was generally furniſhed by God with ſome ſenſible atteſtation from nature, thunders and earthquakes, neither of which would probably be wanting in ſo eminent a work as the ſlaughter of eighty five thouſand. Of the thunder there can be no doubt, the judgments being heard from heaven, refers to קוֹל, which indifferently ſignifies voice, and thunder, which is a vocal, and ſo audible judgment, coming out of the aire, which in ſcripture is ſtiled heaven. And then for the earthquake, that that is ſignified by the אֶרֶץ יָרְאָה the earths fearing, may be gueſſed from 1 Sam. 14. 15. There was trembling in the hoſt, in the field, and among all the people, the garriſon and the ſpoilers they alſo trembled, and the earth quaked, ſo it was a very great trembling, or a trembling of God. Here a trembling of God, or ſuch as is cauſed by the appearance of Angels ſent by God, is made up not only of the trembling of men, but of the earth it ſelf. And ſo Matth. 28. 2. at the appearance of Angels there was a very great earthquake. And this to very good purpoſe, that they that oppoſed Gods people might evidently perceive that it was not chance, or ordinary ſickneſs, or ſudden infection, that cut them off, but the diſpleaſure of an omnipotent Deity. Now becauſe among us trembling is an effect of fear, and where trembling is viſible outwardly, fear is ſuppoſed to be within, therefore it is here an eaſie poetick figure, to expreſs an earthquake by the fearing of the earth. And then that which follows, וְשָׁקְטָה and was ſtill, as it is elegantly oppoſed to the trembling, or fear forementioned, ſo it imports the effect of this earthquake to the children of Iſrael, this ſhort commotion gave reſt and quiet to the land: as Jud. 3. 30. וַתִּשְׁקֹט הָאָרֶץ (juſt the ſame phraſe as here) the land had reſt eighty years, and ſo eb. 5. 31. and 8. 28. and in ſeveral other places, the land had reſt, or the countrey was in quiet. And ſo in St. Paul, ἡσυχασμὸς, reſt] is quiet from the perſecutors of the Chriſtians. (ſee note on Heb. 3. c.) Abu Walid, from its conjunction with יָרְאָה fearing here, would make it one of thoſe which have contrary ſignifications, and ſo to ſignifie here ſtirred or moved. But the Jewiſh Arab renders it, ſome of the people of the earth feared, and ſome were ſtill, i. e. ſaith he, the oppreſſors feared, and the oppreſſed had reſt.

d. חָתַר

V. 10. Reſtrain] What חָתַר ſignifies here, is not agreed among the Interpreters, the word ſignifying 1. to gird, and 2. to reſtrain. In the notion of reſtraining it will have a very commodious ſenſe, applyed to Senacherib to whom this Pſalm belongs. For as by the ſlaughter of the eighty five thouſand in his army, he was forced to depart, and dwell at Niniveh, 2 King. 19. 36. ſo after his return thither, there be ſome remainders of his wrath on the Jews that dwelt there. We may ſee it, Tob. 1. 18. If the King Senacherib had ſlain any, when he was come and fled from Judæa, I buried them privily, (for in his wrath he killed many) &c. This was the racemation, as it were, or gleanings of his wrath, and this was reſtrained by God; for he ſoon falls by the hands of his ſons Adramelech and Sharezer, as he was worſhipping in the houſe of Niſroch his God, 2 King. 19. 37. And to this ſenſe Kimchi interprets it, thou ſhalt ſo repreſs the malice of our enemies, that the other nations ſhall not dare to fight againſt us: ſo likewiſe Aben-Ezra. And thus it muſt be, if the remainder of wrath, be mans wrath, as the former part of the verſe inclines it, Surely the wrath of man, &c. But חָגַר in the primary notion ſignifies girding, or putting on, araying ones ſelf; cinxit, accinxit, præcinxit. Girding, we know, ſignifies putting on, and is applied to garments, ornaments, arms; חגור Gird thy ſword upon thy thigh, Pſal. 45. 3. and frequently elſewhere: and ſo girding with gladneſs, is putting on feſtival ornaments. And agreeable here in a poetical phraſe, thou ſhalt gird on the remainder of wrath, parallel to putting on the garments of vengeance for clothing, Iſa. 59. 17. will ſignifie Gods adorning and ſetting out himſelf by the exerciſe of his vengeance, vulgarly expreſt by his wrath, and the word חֵמֹת wrath, moſt fitly uſed with reflexion on חֵמַת the wrath of man in the beginning of the verſe. Mans wrath is the violence and rage and blaſphemy of the oppreſſor, upon the meek or poor man foregoing. This begins, goes foremoſt, in provoking God; and then שְׁאֵרִית the remnant or ſecond part of wrath is ſtill behind for God, and with that he girds himſelf, i. e. ſets himſelf out illuſtriouſly and dreadfully, as with an ornament, and as with an hoſtile preparation, in the eyes of men. And ſo in this ſenſe alſo it is agreeable to the context. The wrath of man, Rabſhake's railings and blaſphemies, תּוֹדְךָ ſhall confeſs or praiſe thee, as being brought down by God, and ſignally refuted by him, (for then after ſo eminent a vindication of Gods honour, his oppoſition and reproaches did but illuſtrate that glory which he endeavoured to eccliſs, and become a kind of confeſſion to him.) One of the Targums read יְתוּבוּן וְיוֹדוּן they ſhall convert, and confeſs to thy name, and praiſe thee, in reference to other men that look on, and admire, and give honour to God, who thus ſeaſonably interpoſes, and girds on the remainder of wrath, comes in opportunely to reſcue the oppreſſed, and execute judgment on the oppreſſor. And ſo in either ſenſe the parts of this verſe are perfectly anſwerable the one to the other. To this latter rendring of תַּחְגֹּר the Chaldee inclines us, paraphraſing it by תִּתְרַעֵי לְחַבָּלָא עַמְמַיָּא thou haſt girded on, or prepared, or made ready the remainder of fury (meaning Gods fury) for the deſtroying of the nations. And ſo the Interlinear, reſiduum irarum accinges, thou ſhalt gird on thee the reſidue of wraths; and Caſtellio, exuberantibus furoribus decoraris, thou art adorned with exuberant furies, in the notion of an ornament or feſtival garment; to which alſo if the LXXII. refer by their ἐγκαταλείμμα ἑορτάσει σοι, the remnant of wrath ſhall celebrate to thee a feaſt, it will be hard to gueſs what they meant by it. This the Latine render from them, reliquiæ cogitationis diem feſtum agent tibi, the relicks of thought (ſo interpreting ἐνθυμίου) ſhall keep an holy-day to thee.

to

V. 12. Cut off] רוּחַ ſpirit, ſeems here to denote the proud, and cruel and faſtuous ſpirit of oppreſſing Nimrods (ſuch Senacherib was) lifted up with the ſucceſſes of their impiety; ſo the Chaldee יַעֲרַע נְשׁוּת רוּחֲהוֹן דְּרַבְרְבָנַיָּא he ſhall repreſs the groſſneſs, or elation, or pride of the ſpirit of the great ones (ſo נְשׂוּת רוּחַ ſignifies, the ſame phraſe by which they paraphraſe the pride of the countenance, Pſal. 10. 4.) And Gods cutting it off, bringing it low, (ſo יִבְצֹר from בָּצַר minuit, ſignifies) is his not only repreſſing, and not permitting it to proceed farther, but his inflicting ſevere puniſhments upon it, cutting off the tyrant in his bloody purſuits, as it fared with Senacherib (ſee note d.) The LXXII. as we now read it, having ἀφαιρούμενον πνεύματα ἀρχόντων, taking away the ſpirits of Princes, may be thought by ſpirits to ſignifie no more than their lives: but the Latine reading ſpiritum in the ſingular, and ſo the Syriack ܪܘܚܐ ſpirit, ſhew that πνεύμα not πνεύμα is the right reading; and then nothing hinders, but that they might take it in this ſenſe for pride and elation of ſpirit, which as it may be taken away by other means of humbling, beſide that of death, ſo it is then ſurely ſubdued and brought low, when it brings deſtruction on him in whom it is. Abu Walid here renders יִבְצֹר ſhall exalt, and hinder the enemies from them; and ſo Kimchi in his Roots ſhall exalt them, and ſtrengthen them. But withall he ſaith, it may be interpreted, ſhall cut off, or bring low, the radical ſignification being, as he reſolves, the notion of hindering, keeping in, or reſtraining.

The Seventy Seventh Pſalm.

Paraphraſe.

The ſeventy ſeventh Pſalm is a pious reſolution of affiance in, and prayer to God, in all the miſeries that befall us in this life, by way of dialogue between diffidence and a well-grounded hope and faith. † My voice was unto God, and I cried, my voice unto God,

1. † I cried unto God with my voice, even unto God with my voice, and he gave ear unto me.

1. My diſtreſſes were great, and I had none but God to fly to: to him therefore I addreſt my requeſt importunately, and he was pleaſed to relieve me out of them.

* hand was ſtretcht out —and remitted not.

2. In the day of my trouble I ſought the Lord; [a] my * ſore ran in the night and ceaſed not; my ſoul refuſed to be comforted.

2. When any affliction came, this was my conſtant practice, never to give over praying, never to take any repoſe by diverting from that imployment.

b. 3. But betaking me to God, and with all importunity making my requeſts to ſound in his ears, I prayed with all the ardency and devotion and affection of my ſpirit.

3. I remembred God, [b] and ‖ was troubled: I complained, and my ſpirit was* overwhelmed. Selah.

c. 4. When I am in the night on my bed, thou, O Lord, ſeeſt how I am imployed every minute of it; when any matter of trouble ſeiſeth on me, I betake my ſelf to this kind of ſilent meditation.

4. [c] Thou holdeſt mine eyes waking; I am ſo troubled that I cannot ſpeak.

† didſt hold, or keep the watches of mine eyes; I was troubled, and ſpake not.

5. I recount all the eminent paſſages of thy providence toward this nation of ours, beginning from the firſt foundation of it.

5. I ‖ have conſidered the days of old, the years of † antient times.

‖ conſider, or recount. † ages, ſee note d.

6. And thus I think over my own compoſures in the ſolitudes of the night, converſing ſilently with my ſelf, in this form of dialogue betwixt me and my own ſpirit: And firſt my ſpirit or mind asks the queſtion, in this or the like form, reflecting on the diſtreſſes that are now upon us,

6. I call to remembrance my ſong in the night; I commune with mine own heart, and my ſpirit * made diligent ſearch,

* demandeth, asketh. שִׂיחִי

7. God is diſpleaſed and chaſtiſeth us ſeverely, as if he would never be attoned,

7. Will the Lord caſt off for ever? and will he be favourable no more?

8, 9. His mercies and his promiſes gave us ground of hope, and will he never remember theſe? Is he finally reſolved never again to turn to us in mercy?

8. Is his mercy clean gone for ever? ‖ Doth his promiſe fail for evermore?

d. 10. The continuance and repetition of his judgments for ſo many years, or in ſo many forms frequently varied, but ſtill lying heavy upon us, makes this a ſeaſonable fear.

10. And I ſaid, [d] this * is my infirmity: but I will remember the years of the right hand of the moſt High.

* my deſertion is a change of the right—— or the years of—— † from the antient times of thy wonders, ſee note d.

11, 12. But I ſoon anſwered and ſilenced theſe my melancholy infidel reaſonings, and oppoſed unto them the acts, the many illuſtrious miraculous acts of God, in bringing us out of Egypt, poſſeſſing us of Canaan, ſubduing all our neighbouring enemies, &c. infallible evidences both of his power, and fidelity to all that depend on him; and reſolved more reaſonably to ſtay and ſupport my ſelf with the meditation and ſolemn reflection on theſe, by his former dealings inviting the continuance of them, and raiſing to my ſelf confident preſages of his future mercies.

11. I will remember the works of the Lord; ſurely I will remember † thy wondrous works.
12. I will meditate alſo of thy works, and talk of thy doings.

13. And upon an intire ſurvey of all I am forced to acknowledge, that all Gods dealings are moſt juſt and holy, he never fails the leaſt in the performance of his promiſes; but, on the contrary, hath magnified his power (as well as juſtice and fidelity) in a moſt illuſtrious manner, in all his dealings with his people.

13. Thy way, O God, is in ‖ the ſanctuary: who is ſo great a God as our God?

‖ holineſs, בַּקֹּדֶשׁ

14, 15. When thou reſcuedſt thy people of Iſrael out of the bondage of Egypt, the poſterity of Joſeph all begotten there, and all the reſt of the ſeed of Jacob which came to Egypt to Joſeph, (and were at firſt kindly treated by the King, but after a while oppreſt and tryannically inſlaved) thou didſt it in a moſt mighty miraculous dreadful manner, ſo as convinced the very obdurate heathens of thy power and vengeance upon them.

14. Thou art the God that doeſt wonders; thou haſt declared thy ſtrength among the people.
15. Thou haſt with thine arm redeemed thy people, the ſons of Jacob and Joſeph. Selah.

16. And when the Iſraelites by thy conduct came to the ſea ſide, the very ſea, that untamed body, was reſtrained by thee, and as in a frightful dread of thy majeſty fled from before them, gave them leave to paſs as on dry ground through the chanel of it.

16. The waters ſaw thee, O God, the waters ſaw thee; they were afraid, the depths alſo were troubled.

17, 18. And on the other ſide the Lord ſent out his judgments upon the Egyptians, lookt unto their hoſt through the pillar of fire and cloud, and troubled them, Exod. 14. 24. by which was intimated the tempeſtuous rain and thunder reſounding in the air, and ſending out ſhafts or ſharp ſtones, and again thunders in the clouds, and lightning flaſhing in their eyes, to the diſturbing them extreamly.

17. The clouds poured out water, the sky ſent out a ſound; * thine arrows alſo went abroad.
18. The voice of thy thunder was in the heavens, the lightnings lightned the world, the earth trembled and ſhook.

* thy ſharp ſtones חִצֶּיךָ

19. And thus whilſt thy people were conducted and carried ſafe by thee through the midſt of the red ſea, the Egyptians were in no wiſe able to follow them, (but were all firſt diſordered and reſtrained in the ſpeed of their march, God took off their chariot wheels that they drave them heavily, Exod. 14. 25. and ſoon after by Moſes's ſtretching out his hand, ſwallowed up and deſtroyed by the ſea returning upon them, v. 26.) and ſo thy works of providence in preſerving ſome, whilſt by the ſame means thou deſtroyeſt others, moſt undiſcernible and inſcrutable.

19. Thy way is in the ſea, and thy paths in the great waters, and thy footſteps are not known.

20. And in ſum, thy care over thy people, and thy conduct by the hand of Moſes and Aaron, hath been experimented to be like that of the moſt watchful and skilful ſhepherd over a flock, ſecuring them from all aſſaults or violence of their enemies. And thy dealings with them there, are a full ſecurity to us now, if we continue our faithful dependence on thee, that thou art both able and ready to relieve and reſcue us out of the greateſt captivities, and moſt preſent dangers.

20. Thou leddeſt thy people like a flock by the hand of Moſes and Aaron.

Annotations

Annotations on Psalm LXXVII.

a. נִגְּרָה V. 2. My sore ran] נִגְּרָה from נגר protraxit, extendit se, being here applied to יָדִי my hand, will most probably be rendred, was stretched out, or stretched it self; and to that best agrees וְלֹא חָפוּג and remitted not, gave not over, fell not down from פוג remissum esse. 'Tis true when it is joyned with any fluid thing, it signifies to flow, or run about, as of water, tears, wine, or blood, but here with the hand (if that be the meaning of יָדִי) the stretching out is the most proper notion of it: and though the LXXII. for נִגְּרָה seem to have read נִגְּדָה over against him, yet they have sufficiently expreſt the sense, and restrained it to the notion of יָדִי for my hand, τῶν χειρῶν μου νυκτὸς ἐναντίον αὐτοῦ, I sought him with my hands by night toward him. The Chaldee having taken יָדִי by it self, and given it a paraphrase remote enough שְׁרֵת עֲלַי נְבוּאַת prophecy rested upon me (from one use of the word יָד spoken of God, for the Spirit of God, 2 King. 3. 15.) do also paraphrase נִגְּרָה by the eye dropping of tears; but the Syriack reading וְיָדוֹ as if it had been יָדוֹ his hand, convert it to another matter. 'Tis true יָד signifies many things besides an hand, particularly a stroke, or hurt, or wound that befalls any, but this sure respecting him that strikes or inflicts it, whose hand or stroke it is said to be, not his who is striken by it. So Deut. 32. 36. where their hand is thus interpreted by the Chaldee, 'tis סַחֲרַת סָנְאֵיהוֹן the stroke of the hater, and Exod. 24. 11. where the not laying the hand, is by the Chaldee rendred not hurting, and so יָד interpreted by נֶזֶק hurt; yet the יָדוֹ his hand or hurt, is not there applied to the patients, but to the agent, God. And Abu Walid, who renders it here a wound or stroke in respect to the sufferer, mentions it as a distinct signification from what it hath in other places. And so still it is most reasonable to understand it in the ordinary sense, יָדִי my hand, and then נִגְּרָה must be the extending, holding out, or up, the hand, by which prayer is fitly expreſt, whereof that is the solemn gesture.

b. וָאֶהֱמְיָה V. 3. And was troubled] וָאֶהֱמְיָה from הָמָה sonuit, fremuit, cannot better be rendred than by, I made a noise, which following the remembring of God, and the other phrases v. 1. and 2. of crying, and stretching out the hand, must needs be understood of the voice of his prayers very importunate in Gods ears, (and either very loud or very moanful) or, as 'tis used Psal. 39. 6. very unquiet, and clamorous in Gods ears: and then follows to the same matter, אָשִׂיחָה I will or did meditate, either answerable to the remembring God in the beginning of the verse, or else in the notion of praying, as Psal. 55. 17. it was rendred by the Chaldee אֲצַלֵּי I will pray: and here אֲדַבֵּר I will speak before the Lord: and lastly, הִתְעַטֵּף my spirit was involved, anxious, troubled; the Syriack render it וְאִתְחַטַּף was rapt, caught into an extasie, as it were, exagitated, or disturbed. And so every part of this verse is an expression of the Psalmists devotion, in the day of his trouble, v. 2. but not of his affliction it self.

c. שְׁמֻרוֹת V. 4. Eyes waking] שְׁמֻרוֹת (from שָׁמַר custodivit) signifies watches, or vigils, whether the spaces into which the night was divided, the first, second, or third watch, or the office of watching for such a space. Here it seems to be taken in the latter sense, for the office of guarding, watching over; and then אֲחֹזְתָּ joyned with it, holding the watches (parallel to φυλάττειν φυλακὰς, keeping the watches, Luk. 2. 8. is the executing of that office.) 'This is here poetically spoken of God, that he holds the watches of the Psalmists eyes, i. e. sees and knows how they are imployed every minute of the night. And this is here used but as a preface to introduce what follows in the rest of the Psalm, which is made up of the meditations which he had on his bed, and in which he spent the night, supposing God to be present to them. נִפְעַמְתִּי saith he, I was in perturbation, agitated, disquieted, וְלֹא אֲדַבֵּר and spake not vocally, but as in a deep meditation: חִשַּׁבְתִּי I recounted or thought on the years that were past ——

d. V. 10. My infirmity] This v. 10. may perhaps be best rendred, if it be taken as the conclusion of the sad hopeless thoughts, set down v. 7, 8, 9. There by way of question his spirit had seemed to say, that there would never be any end of the present afflictions, that Gods mercies were forgotten, and his promises cassate, as if the decree were gone forth, Gods oath in his wrath, a final irreversible sentence, of which he would not repent, saith Rasi: And in the same tenor 'tis here added, I said חַלּוֹתִי הִיא this my disease (so the Syriack render it, ܗܕܐ ܡܟܝܢܬܝ, from חָלָה aegrotavit, and so both חֳלִי in Hebrew, and חול, and חָלָל, primarily signifie) this my wound, or this my dejection, saith Abu Walid, or perhaps this my desertion. (for חלה is used by the Arabs also for desertus fuit, being put away, as in divorce, Mat. 19. 7.) שְׁנוֹת יְמִין עֶלְיוֹן. Here the word שְׁנוֹת is capable of several interpretations, either for changes, or years. In the first sense it will be שְׁנוֹת יְמִין עֶלְיוֹן a change, or changes (from שָׁנָה mutavit) of the right hand of the highest, not a mutability in Gods counsels, or providence, but a varied punishment sent by him, ܡܫܢܝܢ ܡܫܢܝ a repeated blow or plague, saith the Syriack; and so sure the Chaldee understood it, who render it thus, וְאֲמָרִית and I said, סַרְעוּתִי הִיא this disease אֶשְׁתְּנִיו a mutation, or, is a mutation דִּגְבוּרַת יְמִין עִלָּאָה of the strong right hand of the most High, a varying of his inflictions, not any inconstancy in his providence and counsels. If it be that, it must be by way of interrogation, And I said this is my infirmity, What? shall the right hand of the most high change? But it may be taken also in the second notion for years, as 'tis evidently used v. 5. and from that verse the sense reacheth down to this place, after this manner, I have considered the days of old, שְׁנוֹת עוֹלָמִים the years of ages, viz. of the several ages, wherein our nation hath been retrenched, and by degrees prepared for this final deportation under Zedekiah, as 1. the captivity of the tribes beyond Jordan, and Galilee, 2 King. 15. then of the remainder belonging to the Kingdom of Samaria, 2 King. 17. and lastly of Judah, both to Pharaoh Necho, the Ægyptian King, and then to Nebuchadnezzer in his first and second war, 2 King. 23. and 24. In relation hereto the Psalmist asks v. 7. הַלְעוֹלָמִים יִזְנַח will the Lord cast off for ages, i. e. for several ages, will he be favourable no more? and so on in divers phrases v. 8. and 9. and then v. 10. And I said this my disease or desertion, שְׁנוֹת יְמִין עֶלְיוֹן is the years of the right hand of the most high, i. e. my captivity is lasting, my sufferings many, the measure of their duration, as the years of eternity. This latter sense seems somewhat more consonant to the genius of these writings, wherein it is customary for the verses to refer by several characters, and allude to each other, and so in likelihood this is the importance of שְׁנוֹת. But the former also will well enough be born, and in either of them this verse very fitly concludes the first part of this dialogue, which all inclined to the sad part of the reflexion. And then v. 11. follows the second part of it, of a quite contrary resolution, to the end of the Psalm, I will remember the works of the Lord, surely I will remember, זִכְרֹם פֶּלֶא from the antient of thy wonders, i. e. I will take up another Epoch, that of all the miraculous deliverances of our nation, when first brought out of Ægypt; I will put the Lord in mind of all his former mercies, and by that recognition endeavour to perswade him to a repetition of them; which belongs clearly to that new matter. The LXXII. for חִלּוֹתִי read ἠρξάμην, now I began, as from one notion of חָלַל in Hiphil cæpit; and herein the Latine follow them; but the Syriack, as was said, forsake them, and adhere to our rendring of that word, my infirmity. Abu Walid, who renders חַלּוֹתִי this my disease, or my dejection, being cast down or wounded (as coming, saith he, either from חלל or חלה) and שָׁנוֹת years, will have the whole passage run thus, And if I say this my prostration or distress or suffering shall be for the remainder of time perpetual, I call to mind thy former benefits to us, and my hope is strengthened, and despair ceaseth, making this sadder part an introduction to the more chearful. And so the Jewish Arab, And when I say this is my dejection, prostration, and the space [or duration] of the plague [or punishment] of the most High, I remember, &c.

The Seventy Eighth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

The seventy eighth Psalm is a reflexion on Gods various dealing, his mixtures of mercies and punishments on the people of Israel, from the time of their being in Egypt, to Davids exaltation to the Kingdom. It seems to have been composed by Asaph, and set to the tune called Maschil. See note on Psal. 32. a.

MAschil of Asaph.

1, 2. Let all the people of God give diligent attention to what I shall now deliver, as to that which is designed for their special instruction, and gathered out of the records of Gods providence toward his own people, the Jews, (see note on Psal. 49. 6.) that all that profess Godliness may be admonished thereby.

1. Give ear, O my people to my law; incline your ears to the words of my mouth.

2. I will open my mouth in a parable; I will utter dark sayings of old,

3, 4. And the truth of the things being so undoubtedly certain, (as well as of weighty consideration, either particularly known to us that now live, or thought fit to be by tradition conveighed down to us by our ancestors, I have all reason to communicate and propagate them to others, to whom also our Fathers designed them, as well as to us of this age; that they might joyn with us in blessing, and praising, and magnifying the glorious attributes of God, and the powerful and gracious acts that he hath wrought for us.

3. Which we have heard and known, and our Fathers have told us.

4. We will not hide them from their children, shewing to the generations to come the praises of the Lord, and his strength and his wonderful works that he hath done.

5. For thus indeed did God himself appoint, when he first revealed his will and laws unto the Jews by Moses, laying it as an obligation on the parents to be strictly careful to instruct their children to all posterity in the knowledge of them, (see Deut. 4. 9. and 6. 7.)

5. For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, that they should make them known to their children:

6. That not themselves only, but even all their posterity, those that were not then born, should first learn them themselves, and then diffuse and instil them into all others.

6. That the generation to come might know them, even the children that should be born, who should arise and declare them to their children.

7. And that in order to the preserving and cherishing all parts of piety in them, a chearful relyance and dependance on him that had thus demonstrated his readiness to succour them, thanksgiving and praising of him for his works of power and mercy, and a careful performance of all holy uniform obedience to his commands, as to him that had wrought redemption for them, and so purchased them to be his servants.

7. That they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments.

a. 8. And to restrain them from transcribing their fathers copies, who when they were thus strangely obliged by God, were yet guilty of most vile provoking obstinacies, unbeliefs, and rebellions, murmurings, and downright Apostasies from his law by Idolatry, &c. would either never set themselves heartily to the ways of God, or if they did, presently relapst into foul transgressions;

8. And might not be as their fathers, [a] a ‖ stubborn and rebellious generation, a generation that † set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not stedfast with God.

‖ perverse, Apostatizing. † directed not their heart.

b. 9. Delaying in their performances with God, as they did sometimes in their warlike engagements, when they were just ready to fight, and wanted nothing toward the doing it successfully, they fainted in the very point of the assault, and fled out of the field. Thus the Ephramites appear to have done, and consequently were defeated and assaulted by the Philistims, 1 Chron. 7. 21. And just thus did many other of these, when any service was really to be performed to God, any danger to be combated with, and virtue of patience or faith, or courage to be exercised, then were they sure to falter, and fall off shamefully.

9. The children of Ephraim being armed and [b] * carrying bows, turned back in the day of battel.

* shooting with.

10, 11. And seldom or never made they good any constancy of obedience to

10. They kept not the Covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law,

11. And forgat his works and wonders which he had shewed them.

him, were ſtill apt to murmur and diſtruſt his promiſed aſſiſtance, though aſcertained to their faith by never ſo many wonderful experiments of his power and providence toward them, would not go on in the way that God directed them, but through fear and diſtruſt fell into mutinies and quarrels with Moſes, and refuſed to be ruled or conducted by him.

12. Marvelous things did he in the ſight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of [c] Zoan.

12. And this was a moſt hainous aggravated infidelity, much heightned by the many works of wonder, that God had afforded their fathers ſo lately, in bringing them out of Egypt by a mighty hand, and fearful prodigious judgments upon Pharaoh and his people. c.

13. He divided the ſea, and cauſed them to paſs through; and he made the waters to ſtand as an heap.

13. The concluſion of which was, that he made the very ſea recede, and depart before them, and ſtand ſtill like a wall, Exod. 14. 22. or like a heap, Exod. 15. 8. (ſee note on Pſal. 33. b.) to ſecure them from all danger of approach, and ſo carried them through the chanel as on dry ground, and conducted them ſafe out of Egypt.

14. In the day time alſo he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire.

14. To this end he ſet a lightſome cloud over their heads, at once to overſhadow and inviron them, (ſee note on 1 Cor. 10. a.) and this cloud ſo diſpoſed, that in the night-time it afforded light to the Iſraelites, though not to the Egyptians that followed them, but made a clear ſeparation between them, Exod. 14. 20. and in the day-time, when they needed not its light, it was yet viſible over them and about them, by this means miraculouſly directing and conducting them in their journeys.

15. He clave the rocks in the wilderneſs, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.

15. And in their journeying in the wilderneſs, when they wanted water, he commanded Moſes to ſtrike a rock with his rod, and by ſo doing there came out from thence ſo great abundance of water, as if the Abyſs had ſupplied the rock with that ſtore.

16. He brought ſtreams alſo out of the rocks, and cauſeth waters to run down like rivers.

16. And from this new kind of ſpring proceeded a full current, which followed them as far as Cades, (ſee note on 1 Cor. 10. b.) and afforded them plentiful ſupplies of water in that place of drought.

17. And they ſinned yet more againſt him, by provoking the moſt High in the wilderneſs.

17. Yet did not this miracle of mercy prevail upon them, to give them a truſt and affiance in God, who had wrought ſuch wonders for them; but they fell back after this into a new diſtruſt of his power, and thereby provoked his wrath exceedingly.

18. And they tempted God in their heart by asking meat [d] for their luſt.
19. Yea, they ſpake againſt God, they ſaid, Can God furniſh a table in the wilderneſs?
20. Behold he ſmote the rock, and the waters guſhed out, and the ſtreams overflowed; can he give bread alſo, can he provide fleſh for his people?

18, 19, 20. For when he had taken ſuch care to convince their infidelity, and ſupply their wants by ſending them quails in the evening, and in the morning manna, Exod. 16. both theſe rained down on them miraculouſly from heaven, and when on their murmuring for water at Rephidim, he had given plenty of water out of the hard rock in Horeb, Exod. 17. yet again after both theſe, Numb. 11. 5. they fell a murmuring, and complaining, and diſtruſting of God, preferring their condition in Egypt before this which God had now brought them to, and in a manner blaſpheming and ſpeaking ill of him, and requiring, as a proof of his power and preſence among them, a table furniſht with fleſh, as well as bread, a ſatisfaction to their appetites, which they pretended to be cloyed with manna, as well as a proviſion for their wants. d.

21. Therefore the Lord heard this and was wroth: ſo a fire was kindled againſt Jacob, and anger alſo came up againſt Iſrael;

21. And this very highly diſpleaſed and provoked God, and brought down very ſharp puniſhments upon them.

22. Becauſe they believed not in God, and truſted not in his ſalvation.
23. Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven,
24. And had rained down Manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

22, 23, 24, 25. And that moſt juſtly for their ſtrange obſtinate diſtruſt and infidelity, even after all thoſe ſignal miracles ſhewed for the ſupplying their wants, that eſpecially of his giving them Manna, a ſolid, nutritive, and all this wrought for them e.

26. He cauſed an Eaſt-wind to blow in heaven, and by his power he brought in the South-wind.
27. He rained fleſh alſo upon them as duſt, and feathered fouls like as the ſand of the ſea.
28. And he let it fall in the midſt of their camp, round about their habitations, 26, 27, 28. Thus then God was pleaſed to deal with theſe unbelieving murmurers, at once to convince and puniſh them: He ſent out a vehement wind, and by it brought from the ſea an innumerable company of quails, and let them light in the place where they incamped, near a days journey on this ſide, and as far on the other ſide of their dwellings, where they lay ſtrawed as thick as the ſand is wont to be on the ſea ſhore, two cubits high upon the face of the earth, Numb. 11. 31.

29. So they did eat and were well filled, for he gave them their own deſire.
30. They were not eſtranged from their luſt, ‖ but while their meat was yet in their mouths,
31. † The wrath of God came upon them, and ſlew the fatteſt of them, and ſmote down the choſen men that were in Iſrael.

29, 30, 31. Thus did he anſwer their demands to the full, reſtrained not their appetites, gave them what they longed for in great abundance, dance, and permitted them to gather it, Numb. 11. 31. to dreſs it, and to take it into their mouths. And then before they had chewed it, while it was yet between their teeth, v. 33. the inſtruments of Gods diſpleaſure and vengeance ſeiſed on them, a very terrible plague, v. 33. and deſtroyed the healthieſt and principal men among them in very great numbers.

32. Theſe judgments thus added to his works of mercy, might, a man would think, have wrought upon them, and deterred them from farther provoking God, convinced them of his power, and ingaged them to a full reſignation, and affiance, and dependance on it. But they were not thus ſucceſsful, they had not this effect, but after this again, they were as rebellious, and mutinous, and unbelieving as ever.

33. And God accordingly continued his puniſhments among them, kept them in a wearisome condition in the wilderneſs, there to be haraſs'd and worn out, and at length to die, (all of them that came out of Egypt, but Caleb and Joſhua) and never to enter into the promiſed land.

33. Therefore their days did he conſume in vanity, and their years in trouble.

f. 34, 35, 36, 37. Some exemplary ſeverity God oft exerciſed among them, and that had ſome weak effect upon them, reduced them in ſome degree, brought them for a while into ſome temper of piety, and belief, and dependance on God, together with an acknowledgment of his mercies. (See note k.) Thus dealt he with that people (which ſprang from Cham by Miſraim) when they oppoſed his power, and oppreſſed his choſen people.

52. But made his own people to go forth like sheep, and guided them in the wilderness like a flock.

52. Whereat his mercy, and care, and finally favourable providence attended the children of Israel, both in their passage from Egypt, and journeying through the wilderness, went before them in a remarkable manner, in a pillar of cloud and fire, conducting them day and night, as a shepherd going before his flock leads them into their pastures; and continually waited over them, and provided supplies for all their wants.

53. And he led them on safely, so that they feared not: but the sea overwhelmed their enemies.

53. And the same sea that gave them a safe and fearless passage, as soon as they were gone, returned violently, and drowned all their enemies that pursued them.

54. And he brought them to [n] the † border of his sanctuary, *even to the mountain which his right hand had purchased.

54. And the same conduct of his special providence hath he afforded them from time n.

to time, till at the last he hath brought them to the possession of mount Sion, where now his worship is set up; a place of special strength taken from the Jebusites by David, through that victorious over-ruling hand of Gods, which obtained this conquest for him.

55. He cast out the heathen also before them, and divided them ‖ [o] an inheritance by line, and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents.

‖ by line for an inheritance.

55. Thus when they entred Canaan, the whole work o.

was Gods, first in dispossessing the heathen inhabitants, then in appointing their lands to be by Joshua divided among the tribes of Israel, and then giving them a quiet and safe possession of them.

56. Yet they tempted and provoked the most high God, and kept not his testimonies;

56. But all Gods wonderful mercies had no effect on them; whilst he thus obliged them, they still distrusted him, and thereby, and by their obstinate unrulinesse and disobedience, extreamly provoked his displeasure.

57. But turned back and dealt unfaithfully, like their fathers, they were turned aside like a deceitfull bow.

57. As they which were brought out from Egypt did frequently apostatize from God, and wisht themselves back in Egypt again, and never were sincere in their affections to, and their service of God; so did they continue to do, when they were setled in Canaan, they fell off from God, Deut. 32. 15, 18. and at every turn diverted to Idol-worship, and cannot be more fitly compared than to a crooked bow; which never sends the arrows to the mark to which they are directed; professing the service of God, and stiling themselves his people, all their actions were quite contrary to what he required and expected from them.

58. For they provoked him to anger with their high places, and moved him to jealousie with their graven images.

58. They foulely fell into the highest and grossest sins of idolatry and superstition, worshipping false Gods, i.e. devils or evil spirits, and images of the heathen in high places, where altars were erected, and sacrifices offered to them, Deut. 32. 16, 17.

59. When God heard this he was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel.

59. This could not chuse but provoke Gods displeasure in a very high degree. And so indeed it did: And the effect of it was,

60. So that he forsook the tabernacle in Shilo, the tent which is placed among men;

60. That God assisted not their armies, but permitted the Philistims to rout them, and carry away the Ark, 1 Sam. 4. 10, 11. that Tabernacle which God had pitched among that people for himself to dwell in, and so to conduct them and protect them.

61. And delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemies hand.

61. And thus by Gods chastising hand, did the greatest and most profest enemies of God, the Idolatrous Philistims, take possession of that Ark, wherein God was wont most powerfully and gloriously to exhibite himself to his people.

62. He gave his people also unto the sword, and was wroth with his inheritance.

62. In that rout thirty thousand of the people were slaughtered, (an evidence of his great wrath against them,)

63. The fire consumed their young men, and their maidens [p] were not † given in marriage.

† celebrated.

63. And among them the choicest floure of their youth, p.

by whom their families were to have been supported, and the people multiplied.

64. Their priests fell by the sword, and their widows made no lamentation.

64. And withal Hophni and Phinehas were slain,

1 Sam. 4. 11. and the wife of Phinehas fell in travel for grief, and did not long survive him, v. 20.

65. Then the Lord awaked as one out of sleep, and like a mighty man [q] that *shouteth by reason of wine:

*rouseth himself from wine.

65. This sad calamity was as an evident token that God q.

had been sore displeased, and withdrawn his protections from his people, that he did no more espouse their cause, or go out with their armies, or conduct and assist them, than a General doth when he is asleep, or the most puissant Warrier when his senses are fast bound with wine. Yet at length, as he that was asleep awakes, and he that was overcome with wine returns to his senses again, so did God again return in mercy to his people, and in the exercise of his soveraign power, which he was now pleased to shew forth for them against their enemies;

66. And he smote his enemies in the hinder parts, he put them to a perpetual reproach.

66. Pursuing the Philistims with his plagues, who had taken the Ark, (not only destroying of Dagon, but farther) smiting them with Emrods, a reproachful disease, and that which assured them that Gods wrath was against them whosoever detained the Ark, 1 Sam. 5. 7, 8, 9. and the memorials of this plague, the five golden Emrods and five golden mice, continued as testimonies of this, c. 6. 4. and 11. and a stone was set up for the remembrance of it, c. 6. 18. to the great reproach of the Philistims, and the magnifying of Gods power.

67. More-

67, 68. And the Ark being thus returned to Kiriath-jearim, 1 Sam. 7. 1. and there continued all the time of Samuel and Saul. David fetcht it from thence, 2 Sam. 6. 2. and leaving it a while at the house of Obed-Edom, at length by the appointment of God, he brought it up to Jerusalem the Metropolis of Judæa, and there placed it in Mount Sion, the place which God preferred both before Shiloh, a city in the tribe of Ephraim, one of Josephs sons, where before it was, and before all other places.

67. Moreover he refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim.

68. But chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Sion which he loved.

r. 69. And there a structure was built on the top of the hill, where the Ark was put as in a most conspicuous place; and though it were built so high, yet was it so firmly pitcht, that it should not fear that the most violent storms should be able to beat it down. (An eminent type of the Church of Christ, conspicuous and durable, by force of that promise, that the gates of Hades should not prevail against it.)

69. And he built his Sanctuary r like high palaces, like the earth which he established for ever.

70, 71. And as Sion in the Metropolis of Judah was the chosen place for his Ark, so was David also of that tribe, taken from the mean trade of a shepherd, to be the King of all the tribes of Israel and Judah.

70. He chose David also his servant, and took him from the sheepfolds;

71. From ‖ following the † ewes great with young, he brought him to feed Jacob his people and Israel his inheritance.

‖ behind מֵאַחַר

† or, milch ewes מְנִלּוֹת

72. And this faithful servant of his governed his people with great uprightness and skill, being a very just and wise manager of all affairs that were intrusted to him.

72. So he fed them according to the integrity of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands.

Annotations on Psal. LXXVIII.

a. כּוֹרֵר

V. 8. Stubborn and rebellious] The difference and distinct importance of these two words, סוֹרֵר and מֹרֶה, may be here observed, the former fitly rendred by the LXXII. Σκολιὰ, crooked, or perverse, those that the New Testament dialect styles ἀπειθεῖς, disobedient, those against whom Gods oath was, that they should not enter into his rest, Heb. 3. 19. the murmuring Israelites, who were all excluded Canaan. Then for מֹרֶה, that is the actual Apostate, the LXXII. render it Παραπικραίνων, provoking, from whence the Apostle hath his Τίνες γὰρ ἀκούσαντες παρεπίκρανον, Heb. 3. 16. Some when they had heard provoked, i. e. apostatized in heart, and desired to cast off all obedience to Gods Law, referred to v. 12. ἐν τῇ ἀποστασίᾳ, in apostatizing from the living God to their Ægyptian Idols. Thus is Apostasie stiled Χολὴ πικρίας, the gall of bitterness, Act. 8. 23. ῥίζα πικρίας, a root of bitterness, Heb. 12. 15. And accordingly מְמָרִים, so frequently discours'd of by the Talmudists, are Ἀποστάται, Apostates. In the end of this verse, where the Hebrew hath וְלֹא נֶאֱמְנָה אֶת אֵל רוּחוֹ and we, with the Chaldee and LXXII. render, whose spirit was not stedfast with God, the Syriack read ולא מהימן עם אלהא ולא רוחיה and confided not in the God of its spirit, rendring נֶאֱמְנָה by a masculine verb: and thus indeed the sense will very well bear, and the change of genders is not unusual, and God is frequently known by that title, the God of the spirits of all flesh, see Num. 16. 22.

מֹרֶה

נֶאֱמְנָה

b. רוֹמֵי

V. 9. Carrying bows] Of the Ephraimites 'tis here said that being armed, רוֹמֵי קֶשֶׁת shooting with bows, from רָמָה to cast, or dart, or shoot, they turned back in the day of battel. Of their being archers we have an intimation Gen. 49. 24. where in Jacobs blessing of Joseph, the father of Ephraim, it is said, his bow abode in strength, &c. But of their cowardly flight, the Scholion of Kimchi may deserve to be considered, זה היה במדבר, this was done, saith he, in the wilderness, in the desert it was that they were put to flight, ואז &c. and although the story be not mentioned in the law, or books of Moses, yet it is written in the books of the Chronicles, viz. 1 Chron. 7. 21. where on occasion of Zabad the Ephraimite, and Shutelah, and Ezer, and Elead, it is added, whom the men of Gath that were born in that land slew, because, &c. and Ephraim their father mourned many days, and his brethren came to comfort him. The manner of this relation shews, that it was a very sad and considerable slaughter, and the greatness of it Kimchi collects probably, by comparing the sum of the Ephraimites, Num. 2. 19. when they came out of Egypt; with that of them in the plains of Moab, Num. 26. 37. In the former, the host of the Ephraimites was 40500, in the latter but 32500, eight thousand short, whereas in that space the other tribes were considerably encreased. And to this flight, and defeat, and slaughter, an effect of their cowardise and unbelief, and want of dependance on God, the Psalmist here refers most probably.

V. 12. Zoan] צֹעַן, the name of a city in Egypt, Numb. 13. 22. though it be not set down in the story in Exodus, is twice specified by the writer of this Psalm, here, and v. 43. as the scene wherein the wondrous works were wrought on Pharaoh by Moses; either because really the first and principal of the miracles were shewed Pharaoh there, this city being the seat of the King, and a most antient city, as appears by the expression used of Hebron, Num. 13. 22. where to set out the antiquity of that city, where Abraham the tenth from Noah dwelt, 'tis said, that it was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt; or perhaps only in poetical style, as the field or country of Zoan, is all one with the land of Egypt, foregoing. Thus in other prophetick writings, when judgments are threatned, in stead of Egypt sometimes we find Zoan alone, Isa. 19. 11. where the Princes of Zoan are all one with the wise Counsellors of Pharaoh: sometimes the Princes of Zoan, with the addition of some other city, as v. 13. the Princes of Zoan, the Princes of Noph, i. e. again, the Counsellors of that Kingdom, which, as it there follows, have seduced Egypt, brought the whole nation to ruine. So Isai. 30. 4. where they send to Egypt for releif, 'tis said their Princes were at Zoan, their Embassadors at Hanes. But elsewhere, Ezek. 30. 13. &c. we have a larger enumeration of many cities of Egypt, Noph, Pathros, Zoan, No, Sin, Aven, Phibeseth, Tehaphnehes, all to express the same thing, the land of Egypt, (after the manner of the Hebrews) by some one or two, or more cities of it. For Zoan the Chaldee and LXXII. and Latine read טָאנִיס Tanis, which certainly is but a light change from צֹעַן, the צ, as 'tis ordinary, being turned into ט, and the ע left out. Of this saith Stephanus Byzant. Τάνις πόλις μεγάλη Αἰγύπτου, it is the name of a great city of Egypt.

צֹעַן

V. 18. Lust]

d. נֶפֶשׁ

V. 18. Luſt] נֶפֶשׁ the ſoul is generally ſet to ſignifie the ſenſitive or animal faculty, as that is diſtinguiſhed from the ſpirit, the upper or rational faculty. And ſo here, when their wants were abundantly ſupplied, and yet they remained unſatisfied and querulous, it is fitly ſaid, that they demanded meat לְנַפְשָׁם for their ſouls; i. e. not for their real wants, which they might rationally deſire to have ſupplied, but for their phanſies, their ſenſitive and carnal appetites, not reſtrained by reaſon. Thus the Jewiſh Arab took it, rendring it מִן גֹּור הָאוָּה without need. And this in the ſtory Num. 11. 4. is called הִתְאַוּוּ תַּאֲוָה luſted a luſt, and ſo here v. 29, 30. and accordingly in ſenſe it is not unfitly here rendred by our Engliſh, meat for their luſt.

e. אַבִּיר

V. 25. Angels] The word אַבִּיר ſtrong or robuſt nouns, is applyable to any creature that is ſuch, oxen, horſes, ſouldiers, and may here not improbably refer to the Iſraelites groundleſs complaint againſt the Manna, as thin light food, aſſuring us that it was meat for the healthieſt appetite, noble food, ſaith the Jewiſh Arab; and accordingly they were fed with it (as athletæ) to ſaturity, as it follows in this verſe; and v. 31. the wrath of God fell on the fatteſt of them, their murmurings being moſt unexcuſable. But beſides this the word being uſed firſt of God, may be here ſecundarily applyed either to heaven, or therein to the Angels, and ſo it is taken by all the antient Interpreters; ἄρτον ἀγγέλων, the bread of Angels, ſay the LXXII. and all the reſt accord; the bread of heaven, ſaith Abu Walid, and Kimchi. As for the meaning of the phraſe לֶחֶם אַבִּירִים bread of Angels, (who we know neither eat nor drink) the Chaldee gives a full account of it, מָזוֹן דְּנָחֵת מִמְּדוֹר מַלְאֲכַיָּא the food that deſcends from the dwelling of Angels, and ſo it ſignifies no more than דְּגַן שְׁמַיִם wheat or corn of heaven, v. 24. only דָּגָן corn relates only to the matter of it, whereas לֶחֶם adds the dreſſing of it, which without queſtion is the importance of the Hebrew מָנָה from מָנָה præparavit, and accordingly is rendred by the author of the book of Wiſdom, ἄρτῳ ἑτοίμῳ ἄνωθεν ὑπουργηθέντι, c. 16. 20. bread prepared from heaven, as an explication of ἄρτος τερφὴς ἀγγέλων, the food of Angels preceding there. Of this 'tis here ſaid אֹכַל אִישׁ, which is capable of a double interpretation; either that man eat that food which was brought by Angels, as a ſpecial dignity to the murmuring Iſraelites, to be ſo royally attended; or elſe that as אִישׁ ſignifies quilibet, every one, and is rendred ἕκαστος, Iſai. 36. 16. ſo here every one did eat, in reference to the great abundance of this manna, as it follows, he ſent them meat to the full.

f. אִם

V. 34. When he ſlew them] The full and clear importance of theſe 6. verſes from the beginning of verſe 34. to the end of verſe. 39. will be beſt fetcht from the various acception of the particle וְ, which is ſometimes copulative, and then muſt be rendred and; ſometimes is the note of an ἀντιπόδοσις, introducing the latter part of a disjunctive or comparative ſpeech, and then is ſometimes beſt rendred yet, ſometimes than. If the period begin with אִם when, or if, then וְ that introduceth the latter part muſt be rendred then: If the period being begun thus conſiſt of many members, one involved in the other by way of parenthesis, and וְ be ſtill continued as the means of connecting them, then they will beſt be rendred by though and yet. And ſo it is moſt probably here. For there being very many parts of this period, each of them begun with וְ, the context directs to carry the ſenſe ſuſpended for the four former verſes 34, 35, 36, 37. and to begin the ἀνάπόδοσις, v. 38. after this manner, אִם הָרָגָם — If, or, when he killed them, וְדָרְשׁוּהוּ and they ſought him, and returned —— וְיָשֻׁבוּ and remembred —— וַיְפַתּוּהוּ though they flattered him with their mouth, וּבִלְשׁוֹנָם and with their tongues lyed unto him, וְלִבָּם and their heart was not right with him, וְלֹא and they were not faithful in his Covenant: וְהוּא רַחוּם (there the ἀνάπόδοσις will beſt begin) Yet he being merciful, or compaſſionate, forgave their iniquity —— יְכַפֵּר and remembred that they were but fleſh —— And then here is a full and excellent deſcription of Gods μακροθυμία, long-ſuffering to a provoking nation, not cutting them off preſently in every of their rebellions; becauſe if he doth thus, there is a total diſpatch or end of them, (רוּחַ the animal ſpirit, or breath in their noſtrils being once taken away, returneth not again:) but often chaſtiſing them, deſtroying ſome for their murmurings and provocations, and upon the but ſeeming reformation of the reſt, though he ſee it be not ſincere, yet interpoſing mercy and compaſſion, not proceeding to utter deſtruction of them, but ſtill giving them time to repent ſincerely, at leaſt permitting them to live, and beget others that may be more tractable and obedient, and capable of the promiſed Canaan. And this exactly was the courſe taken by God with the people of Iſrael, puniſhing the provokers, and not permitting any of them to come into Canaan, but yet taking them away by ſuch degrees, that their ſons came up in their ſteads, and at length poſſeſt that which was juſtly denied their Fathers.

g. עָרֹב

V. 45. Divers ſorts of flies] From עָרַב miſcuit, is עָרֹב here, and Exod. 8. 21. and Pſal. 105. 31. the title of one of the plagues that fell on the Egyptians; and it is not certain what is meant by it. The Chaldee read עֲרֻבּוּבֵי חֵיוָת בָּרָה a mixture of living creatures of the wood, the Syriack ܥܪܒܒܐ mixture (from חָלַט miſcuit) which the interpreter rendring muſcas caninas, did certainly but divine, and take his rendring of the Syriack from the LXXII. For thus do our copies of the LXXII. read, κυνόμυιαν, the dog-fly, or terrible bitting fly. But S. Jerome ad Suniam & Fretellam ſaith, it is to be read κυνομυῖαν, from whence the Latine hath cœnomyiam, as Aquila παμμυῖαν. The word, I ſuppoſe, comprehends all creatures of equivocal generation, which ſo frequently change from reptil to flying, and back again, that they are more fitly expreſt by ſome common word as mixtures, or the like, than of animals of any diſtinct ſpecies, unleſs it be that of inſectiles, of which every year ſeems to bring forth variety; of which Ulyſſes Aldrovandus hath written very accurately.

h. חָסִיל

V. 46. The Caterpiller] חָסִיל from חָסַל conſumpſit, ſignifies any kind of vermine that conſumes or devours the fruit of the ground, and is here ſet not a ſeveral ſpecies from the locuſt following, but (by the figure ἐνδιάδυοιν, two words to ſignifie one thing) to joyn with that, and ſignifie the conſuming locuſt, or the locuſt which is ſuch a conſumer (juſt as v. 47. two words are uſed to ſignifie but one thing, the plague of the hail, ſee note g.) For beſide the locuſt Exod. 10. 4. there is no ſeveral plague to which this of the conſumer can be affixt. The LXXII. render it ἐρυσίβῃ, and the Latine arugo, becauſe as the ruſt eats and conſumes metals, ſo the locuſt doth corn or fruits, Exod. 10. 5.

i. בָּרָד חֲנָמַל

V. 47. Froſt] בָּרָד ſignifies hail, or congealed rain, ſo doth חֲנָמַל alſo, ſaith Kimchi, citing R. Saadias that renders it in Arabick אלבקיע (as doth Abu Walid, alſo, and the Jewiſh Arab) whether that be a kind of boar froſt, or of hail; and ſo both together ſignifie but one thing, the plague of hail, Exod. 9. 22. with which there being fire mixed, that is here added to the mention thereof, v. 48. under the title of לָרְשָׁפִים to the fires: רשפי אש, to the fire ſimply, ſay the LXXII. (ſee note on Pſal. 76. a.) but the Chaldee with the addition of אוּר fire to לָרְשָׁפִים, thereby denoting some matter wherein the fire was, to distinguish it from the bare flash of lightning, which is but the air inflamed.

k. מִשְׁלַחַת

V. 49. By sending evil Angels] The Hebrew מִשְׁלַחַת from שָׁלַח to send, is no more then sending or immission, and being joyned by way of apposition to the precedents, wrath and indignation and trouble, denotes most fitly the particular judgment to which those severe titles are affixt, the destroying of the first-born, which was wrought by immission of so many Asmodei or evil angels. Thus the Chaldee reads, wrath and extermination and distress, וְרִמְשַׁתַּלְחָן בֵּירֵיהוֹן, &c. which were sent by the hands of evil angels; so the LXXII. ἀποστολὴν δι' ἀγγέλων πονηρῶν, a message by evil angels; the weapons of evil Angels, saith Abu Walid; by sending Angels of punishment, punishing Angels, or by the message of punishing Angels, saith the Jewish Arab. Aben Ezra here phansies the מַלְאֲכֵי רָעִים to be Moses and Aaron, as messengers of evil to Pharaoh, (when they afore hand denounced them to him) as when Ahijah the Prophet makes use of the like phrase, when Jeroboams wife came to him to enquire concerning her son, אָנֹכִי שָׁלוּחַ אֵלַיִךְ קָשָׁה I am a messenger to thee of hard things, 1 King. 14. 6. But the former is the more probable meaning of the words, and exactly agreeable to the story Exod. 12. 23. where it is said, the Lord will pass through to smite the Egyptians, &c. where the Lords passing must denote the ministery of his Angels; and so it follows there, in reference to the Israelites, The Lord will not suffer the destroyer (the evil angels here) to come into your houses to smite you. Whereby we may better understand the full meaning of יְפַלֵּס in the beginning of ver. 50. (from פָּלַס to librate, to weigh, to direct exactly) be weighed out, or exactly directed the way to his wrath. For so in those latter plagues God separated between the Israelites and the Egyptians, especially in that of the slaughter of the first-born.

יְפַלֵּס

l. חַיָּתָם

V. 50. Their life] חַיָּתָם is by all the antient interpreters rendred in the notion of their cattel: בְּעִירֵיהוֹן saith the Chaldee, τὰ κτήνη αὐτῶν, the LXXII. jumenta eorum the Latine, ܒܥܝܪܝܗܘܢ the Syriack, all to the same sense, their cattel; so the Jewish Arab, their beasts, or living creatures, referring to that part of the plague on their first-born, which fell not only upon the men, but upon the cattel, Exod. 12. 29.

m. אוֹנִים

V. 51. Strength] אוֹנִים strengths, from one notion of אוֹן for robur (of which there be several examples, Gen. 49. 3. Deut. 21. 17. Hos. 12. 3, 8. Psal. 105. 36. Isa. 40. 25, 28. Prov. 11. 7.) is yet by the Chaldee rendred here עֲמַלְהוֹן their labour, as if it belonged to the fruits of their ground, produced by their labour, and so by the LXXII. and Latine, πόνον αὐτῶν, laboris eorum, their labour, from the notion of אוֹן for doluit. But the Syriack have departed from them, and pitcht on the right rendring, רֵאשִׁית אוֹנִים the beginning of their strength, by ܟܠ ܒܟܘܪ ܒܥܘܢܝܗܘܢ every first-born of theirs: and accordingly the Chaldee on Psal. 106. 36. a place exactly parallel to this, renders אוֹנָם by חֵקְפֵּיהוֹן their strength.

n. גְּבוּל

V. 54. Borders] from גָּבַל terminavit, to bound or limit, the Arabs use גבל for an high mountain, because such are generally the boundaries of nations, and from thence גבלי, that pertains to the mountains. This is an argument that thus antiently the word was used in Hebrew, of which the Arabick is but a dialect. And so it seems to signifie here גְּבוּל קָדְשׁוֹ, not the border, but the mountain or hill of his sanctuary, viz. mount Sion, where the Ark was now fixt. For thus the next words inforce, הַר זֶה קָנְתָה יְמִינוֹ this mountain his right hand hath purchased: which must needs belong as the relative to this antecedent גְּבוּל, and so conclude that and הַר זֶה this mountain to be the same.

o. נָפַל

V. 55. An inheritance] From נָפַל cecidit, to fall, is the use of the word for dividing, because as the lot fell, so the division was made. So Judg. 18. 1. the Danites sought them an inheritance, for unto that day לֹא נָפְלָה it had not fallen to them among the tribes; where the Chaldee reads, אִתְפַּלְגַת divided. So Numb. 34. 2. this is the land which תִּפֹּל shall fall to you (the Chaldee again תִּתְחַפְלַג shall be divided to you) for an inheritance. So Josh. 13. 6. Only cast it, or make it fall (in Hiphil) פַּלֵּיגֵהּ say the Chaldee, divide it unto the Israelites for an inheritance; the same that v. 7. is חַלֵּק divide it. So Josh. 23. 4. Behold הַפַּלְתִּי לָכֶם אֶת הַגּוֹיִם I have cast, i. e. divided to you these nations. By these (especially last) uses of the phrase, we may best resolve the meaning of וַיַּפִּילֵם literally, and he made them fall, i. e. divided the nations גּוֹיִם (as in Joshuah) immediately foregoing; and this was done בְּחֶבֶל by the line, (as inheritances or possessions are ordinarily divided by measuring lines) and this נַחֲלָה an inheritance or possession, as in Joshua the phrase was. By this 'tis clear what the rendring must be, viz. this, He divided them by line for an inheritance, and then fitly follows, and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents, i. e. in the tents or dwelling places of these nations, whom, i. e. whose land he thus divided among the Israelites, to every tribe a set portion of it.

וַיַּפִּילֵם

בְּחֶבֶל

p. חוֹלָלוֹ

V. 63. Given in marriage] From חָלַל to praise and celebrate, is חוּלָּה a marriage song, חֲלוּלִים marriages, and בֵּית חֲלוּלָה the wedding house; and so proportionably לֹא הוּלָלוּ (spoken of virgins here) they were not celebrated with verses and dances and Epithalamia, to signifie that they died unmarried, and that, as an effect of the destruction of the בַּחוּרָיו their choise, or their young, the flower of their youth. The Chaldee renders it לָא אִשְׁתַּבְּחָן they were not praised. The LXXII. in proportion v. 64. read οὐκ ἐκλαύσθησαν, bewailed them not, as in the active, taking it for a θρηνῳδία, or mourning song; but the Syriack reads ܘܠܐ ܐܬܬܦܣܘ they were ravisht, from טָרַף rapuit, discerpsit, by that, I suppose, designing to express the same thing that the Hebrew meant, such rapes being not accompanied with the honourable nuptial rites. These wedding-songs were likewise called מִזְמוּטִין. So Job 36. 11. They shall spend their years in pleasure; the Targum reads בְּמִזְמוּטִין in marriage-songs.

בְּחוּרָיו

q. מִתְעוֹרֵר

V. 65. Shouteth] From רָנַן clamavit, to cry out or make a loud noise, is מִתְרוֹנֵן here, one that makes a noise, and thereby rouses and awakes himself; and so here spoken of a gyant, and מִיָּיִן from wine joyned with it, it denotes his awaking out of a deep sleep, such as wine had caused. Thus the antient Interpreters understood it. The Chaldee renders it דְּמִתְפַּקַּח from פָּקַח that opens his eyes or ears, awakes, returns to himself, grows sober again. So the LXXII. ὡς δυνατὸς κατακραπαλῶν ἐξ οἴνου, as a mighty man that hath been drunk with wine, i. e. who having been overcome by wine, now awakes out of that drunkenness: and so the Syriack, and as a gyant ܕܢܦܘ ܡܢ ܚܡܪܐ who hath shaken off his wine, from נָפַץ excussit, to shake off. And thus it best corresponds to the former part of the verse, of his awaking as out of sleep, with which the shouting by reason of wine, making a drunken or rude noise, bears no proportion.

r. כְּמוֹ רָמִים

V. 69. Like high palaces] כְּמוֹ רָמִים is literally, as high or lofty buildings; so the Syriack ܐܝܟ ܪܡܐ on high: but the Chaldee, קַרְנָא דְּרִימָנָא the horn of an Unicorn, as if it were כְּרָמִים Unicorns; and so the LXXII.

LXXII. ὡς μονοκερώτων, as of Unicorns, making this of the tabernacle on the top of mount Sion, to be as the horn on the head of the Unicorn. The Jewish Arab Interpreter reads firmly as the heavens.

The Seventy Ninth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

A Psalm of Asaph.

The seventy ninth Psalm is spent wholly in a view of some great calamity befalling the congregation of the Jews; not so probably the taking of the Ark by the Philistims, (which was not then at Jerusalem, v. 1. but at Shiloh, 1 Sam. 4. 4. as the destroying the Temple in the times of Nebuchadonosor. It was composed by Asaph, either the Recorder in Davids time, and then it was prædiction (see note on Psal. 73. a.) or by some other of that name, and then it might be history. It was fitted, as Psal. 74. for the Church in any time of persecution.

1. O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; thy holy Temple have they defiled, and laid Jerusalem [a] on heaps.

1. O blessed Lord, thy displeasure is heavy upon us, and as an effect and evidence of that, a multitude of wicked men, the professt enemies of thee and thy service, have invaded this people that are called by thy Name, and owned by thee in a special manner: And in this invasion they have not spared that place set apart on purpose for thy service, and the exhibition of thy divine presence, but have foully violated and profaned it, and laid waste the whole city wherein it is situate. a.

2. The dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat to the fouls of the heavens, the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.

3. Their blood have they shed like water round about Jerusalem, and there was none to bury them.

2, 3. At other times in common calamities, some special servants of thine have been exempted, Noah from the deluge, Lot from the overthrow of Sodom, see Ezek. 14. 14.) but now thy chosen people, set apart by thine own appointment, as thy subjects and servants, have all without any discrimination been slain in the field, slaughtered in great abundance, their bodies neglected and left unburied, so that the wild beasts and fowls have fed on them, and their blood poured out most barbarously, and running down in streams through the streets of Jerusalem.

4. We are become a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us.

4. They that formerly lookt on us with reverence, as a people guarded and secured by thy protection, do now deride and scorn us, and upbraid us with our calamities, and the trust which we still repose in God, when we are forsaken by him.

5. How long, Lord, wilt thou be angry, for ever? shall thy jealousie burn like fire?

5. Blessed Lord, be thou pleased in thine own time at length favourably to return to us, and not to pour out thy fiercest wrath, and destroy us utterly.

6. Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee, and upon the Kingdoms that have not called upon thy name.

6. Those that have thus butchered us are aliens from thee, neither know thy laws, nor acknowledge thee to be their God, and consequently never worship nor pray unto thee. 'Twill not be strange for thy heaviest punishments to light on them, as on thy professt enemies: O let them not fall on us, who profess to be thy servants.

7. For they have devoured Jacob, and laid waste his dwelling-place.

7. Beside their heathen sins of Idolatry and all impiety, it cannot but be a great addition to their guilts, a kind of sacriledge and violation of thee, that they have invaded and wasted this land of thine, which thou hast given to the posterity of thy chosen special servants, Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, with whom thou hast entred into Covenant that thou wilt be their God, and they thy people.

8. O remember not against us ‖ [b] former iniquities; † let thy tender mercies speedily prevent us, for we are brought very low.

8. 'Tis certain, our continued obstinacies and rebellions against thee, from the beginning of our being a nation to this time, have most justly brought down thy judgments on us; and if to our present provocations thou add the multitude of our old abominations, that of the golden calf, &c. we can expect nothing but utter desolation and destruction. O be pleased not to lay them to our charge, heap not all our Ancestors idolatries and rebellions upon our shoulders, lest we, that have a full weight of our own, be ascertain'd to sink and be drowned under them. We are now very sore afflicted and distrest, O do thou make all speed to return to us; Our miseries have fully qualified us for thy seasonable mercies, O be thou gratiously pleased to interpose them for us, and rescue us out of our present captivation. b.

‖ old
† make haste, let thy compassions prevent us מַהֵר יְקַדְּמוּנוּ רַחֲמֶיךָ
* the revenge—— be known—— יִוָּדַע נְקָמַת

9. Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name, and deliver us, and purge away our sins for thy names sake.

9. Thou, O God, art our only redeemer and deliverer, be thou gratiously pleased to relieve and rescue us, and thereby to shew forth the glory of thy power and mercy, and all thy divine attributes. O free us from the effects of thy displeasure due to our sins, be thou gratiously reconciled to us. And this we beg and hope, upon no other inforcement but that of thine own mercy, promised to those that make their humble addresses to thee, and of thine honour, which seems to be concerned in the preserving thine own people.

10. Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is their God? [c] let * him be known among the heathen in our sight by the revenge of the blood of thy servants which is shed.

10. If thou do not interpose for our relief, the idolatrous nations will resolve that our God is not able to defend us, and so reproach and blaspheme thee. Be thou therefore pleased to shew forth thy power in relieving us, and requiring our blood at the hands of those which have most unjustly destroyed us, that not only we may be delivered by thee, but our oppressors, thy enemies may be taught to fear thee, by beholding thy power and justice in thy signal vengeance on them. c.

11. Many of us are now in bands ready for the sentence of death, whensoever these tyrannical enemies please; O thou that art the refuge of all such, be thou pleased, in answer to our saddest moans, seasonably to interpose for our preservation.

11. Let the sighing of the prisoner come before thee: according to the greatness of thy ‖ power preserve thou those that are appointed to die. ‖ arm. זְרוֹעֲךָ

d. 12. To repay all those injuries and contumelies, in thy just measure of retaliation, to all those that have oppress and contumeliously handled us, and so to own us as our patron and advocate.

12. And render unto our neighbours seven-fold into their bosom, their [d] reproach † wherewith they have reproached thee, O Lord. † the reproach of them who have——

13. For this timely interposition of thine, O Lord, our constant acknowledgments and commemorations of thy mercies shall be our perpetual tribute through all ages, our posterity to all successions joyning with us in that payment.

13. So we thy people and sheep of thy pasture will give thee thanks for ever, we will shew forth thy praise to all generations.

Annotations on Psal. LXXIX.

a. עִיִּים V. 1. Heaps] עִיִּים from עִיָּה oblique or crooked (or else עִי being it self a theme) signifies heaps. So Mic. 1. 6. I will make Samaria לְעִי for an heap; the Chaldee render it לְיַגְרֵי for heaps, though here by way of paraphrase they read לְצָדוּ for a desolation; and so the Syriack also ܠܫܘܝܐ desolate. The LXXII. here read εἰς ὀπωροφυλάκιον, for an hoard of ripe fruit, because that is wont to be laid in heaps; which the Latine reads, I suppose to the same sense, in pomorum custodiam, for the keeping of apples, or for a place where apples are kept. But the original seems to refer to one sort of heaps, that of graves, which are made by aggestion or casting up of earth, to cover the dead body that lies under. So Job 30. 24. בְּעִי into the grave. And this is here fitly applied to Jerusalem, the stately buildings whereof underwent the same destruction with the inhabitants; it was before their dwelling place, it is now their Sepulchre, the whole city is turned into several tombs or monumental heaps. Abu Walid ascribes to the word the notion of desolations, and wasts, and so the Jewish Arab.

b. רִאשֹׁנִים V. 8. Former iniquities] עֲוֹנֹת רִאשֹׁנִים may probably here have a special reference to those first sins, which this people had been guilty of after their coming out Egypt. Such was their Idolatry in the Golden calf. Of that God tells them Exod. 32. 34. In the day that I visit, I will visit their sin upon them, viz. this sin of theirs. Accordingly the Jews have a received maxim, אין לך פקודה שאין בה אפקידה העגל, there is no visitation, in which there is not some visitation of, or infliction for the calf. To this the Hebrew רִאשֹׁנִים (from רֹאשׁ head or feet) seems to incline, and so doth the Chaldee, which renders it our iniquities דְּמִן שְׁרוֹיָא that were from the beginning; and the LXXII. by ἀρχαίων, (as that is all one with τῶν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, those that were from the beginning) are to the same sense; and so the Syriack by ܥܘܠܗܝ ܩܕܡܝܐ our old sins, and the vulgars Antiquarum, their antient sins.

c. יִוָּדַע V. 10. Let him be known] That יִוָּדַע cognoscatur, let be known, is to be connected to the noun נְקַמַת revenge, and not to the Name of God præceding, is agreed on by the antient Interpreters. So the LXXII. γνωσθήτω ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν ἐνώπιον τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν ἡμῶν ἡ ἐκδίκησις τοῦ αἵματος —— And let the revenge of the blood of thy servants which is poured out be known among the heathen before our eyes. So the Syriack, ܠܡܒܥܐ ܕܚܣܝܢ ܠܕܡ ܥܒܕܝܟ Let the avenging or inquisition be known among the nations in our sight. And so may the Chaldee be rendred also, יִתְגְּלֵי נְעַמָּא לְמֶחֱמֵינָא פּוּרְעָנוּת אֲדָם עַבְדָּךְ, Let the avenging of the blood of thy servants be manifested among the people, that we may see it. And so the others also.

d. אֲשֶׁר V. 12. Reproach] אֲשֶׁר most fitly belongs here to the persons foregoing, viz. our neighbours, and not to the reproach, thus, Render our neighbours seven fold into their bosome, i. e. as they have dealt with us, so do thou deal with them, return to them seven fold, by way of punishment, for all their oppressions and injuries done to us: then follows חֶרְפָּתָם אֲשֶׁר חֵרְפוּךָ, the reproach of them which have reproached thee, O Lord, i. e. repay or return reproach, and (from the former words) seven times as much reproach, to them which have reproached thee, O Lord. Thus the Chaldee their חֵיל יְקָרָיו may be rendred, who have reproacht—and so the Interlinear reads probrum eorum qui affecerunt te probris, the reproach of them that reproached thee.

The Eightieth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

The eightieth Psalm is a complaint of the troubles of Gods Church and people, probably in time of captivity, or by way of prediction of it, and prayer for release from them. 'Twas composed by Asaph, and committed to the Præfect of the Musick, to be sung to the six-stringed instrument that waited on the Ark, or that was used in the sacred commemorations and festivities.

TO the chief Musitian upon ‖ Shushannim Eduth, A Psalm of Asaph. ‖ the hexachord of the testimony, see note on Psal. 40. a

1. Hearken, O Lord, unto our prayers: Thou art the great governour and defender of thy people, and conductest them in all their ways, thou givest responses from the oracle, and exhibitest thy self by the ministry of thy holy Angels to those that make their addresses to thee in thy sanctuary, thou revealest thy will to them, and grantest their petitions; O be thou thus graciously pleased to exhibite and manifest thy self to us at this time.

1. Give ear, O thou shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the Cherubims shine forth.

19. This therefore is the burthen of our ſong, the ſum of our reiterated requeſt to thee, that as thou haſt an immenſe hoſt and many legions of Angels ready preſt for thy ſervice, which can the next minute perfect any the vaſteſt enterprife to which thou ſhalt aſſign them, ſo thou wilt at length return our captivity, reſtore thy ſelf to thy wonted favour and old mercies, caſt ſome beams of thy gracious countenance, evidences of thy being reconciled to us, and then we ſhall certainly be releaſed out of all our afflictions, and till then we have no humane hope of the leaſt reſpite.

19. Turn us again, O Lord God of hoſts; cauſe thy face to ſhine, and we ſhall be ſaved.

Annotations on Pſalm LXXX.

a. לִפְנֵי אֶפְרַיִם

V. 2. Before Ephraim, &c.] What is meant here by לִפְנֵי אֶפְרַיִם before Ephraim, and why Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manaſſes, and no other are here named, muſt be learnt from the order of the Iſraelites march in the Wilderneſs, Num. 2. For there, next after the Ark, the pledge of Gods ſpecial preſence and aſſiſtance, did theſe three tribes follow, Then the Tabernacle of the congregation ſhall ſet forward, &c. v. 17. On the Weſt ſide (i.e. next behind it) ſhall be the ſtandard of the camp of Ephraim v. 18. and his hoſt v. 19. And by him ſhall be the tribe of Manaſſes v. 20. and his hoſt, v. 21. then the tribe of Benjamin and his hoſt, v. 22, 23. Now the returning from the captivity, the deſire whereof is the buſineſs of this Pſalm, being a parallel to the delivery from Egypt, Gods leading them back, ſtirring up himſelf and coming to ſave them, is very fitly begged, and deſcribed in a ſtyle reſembling the former reſcue: There he was ſaid to have ſhined forth, and to have riſen and come, Deut. 33. 2. (the Lord came from Sinai, and roſe up from Seir unto them, he ſhined forth from mount Paran, and he came with holy myriads;) and here in like manner, the Pſalmiſt beſeecheth him that dwelleth between the Cherubims, (that ſure is God in the Ark) to ſhine forth, v. 1. and that before theſe three tribes, which next followed the Ark, and to ſtir up himſelf, and come and ſave.

b. לֶחֶם דִּמְעָה

V. 5. Bread of tears] לֶחֶם דִּמְעָה will here be beſt rendred bread of weeping, thereby moſt probably ſignifying the bread of mourners, לֶחֶם אוֹנִים Hoſ. 9. 4. of which it is there ſaid, all that eat thereof ſhall pollute themſelves, the eater was legally unclean, and ſo ſeparated from the congregation; and ſo were they at that time, in the captivity, detained from the comforts of Gods ſolemn worſhip. To which is elegantly added, that דִּמְעוֹת tears in the plural, and that שְׁלִישׁ in a treble or large meaſure, are the drink apportioned to theſe meats.

V. 9. Preparedſt room] From פָּנָה to look, to turn the face, to bow down, to look out, to look toward any thing, is פָּנָה in Piel, to ſweep, to cleanſe, to remove filth out of the way, and ſo to prepare for the coming of any, to fit or provide an houſe, a way or path. A houſe, and room, Gen. 24. 31. Lev. 14. 36. a way Iſa. 40. 3. and 57. 14. If this be applied to an houſe, then 'tis to ſweep or cleanſe, and ſo the Interlinear here renders it, ſcopaſti, thou haſt ſwept: if to a way, then 'tis to purge or prepare, Iſa. 57. 14. Prepare the way, take up the ſtumbling-block; and ſo the LXXII. here, ὁδοποίησας ἔμπροσθεν αὐτῆς, thou haſt made or prepared the way before it, (though the Latine rendring, dux itineris fuiſti, thou wert the leader or captain of their journey, ſeem to have lookt toward פִּנָּה or פִּנָּה a corner, and by metaphor, a captain.) But being applied to the earth, in order to a plantation, as here, it is moſt fitly rendred either looking out, according to the original notion (as Ezek. 20. 6. a land that I had eſpied for them) or preparing before-hand, or elſe more probably preparing (not room, but) ſoil for it: and to this fitly follows, and didſt cauſe it to take deep root, that being the proper effect of preparing the ſoil. To the notion of looking out, I ſuppoſe the Syriack is to be underſtood בָּהּ חֲזֵיתָ, not as the Latine Tranſlator renders it, intuitus es illam, thou lookeſt on it, but as חזר in Chaldee and Syriack ſignifies alſo ſcrutari, to ſearch, or look out, thou lookedſt out, or didſt ſearch before it, as the twelve ſpies were after appointed to do by Moſes. The Chaldee follow the other notion of ſweeping or purging out, reteining the Hebrew word, ſave only that by way of paraphraſe they thought fit to change it from the figure of a vine to the people of Iſrael, and ſo read פְּנִיתָא מִן קֳדָמַיהוֹן כְּנַעֲנָאֵי thou haſt purged out (or ſwept) from before them the Canaanites.

d. אַרְזֵי אֵל

V. 10. Goodly Cedar-trees] That אַרְזֵי אֵל Cedars of the ſtrong, or as the LXXII. τῷ Θεῷ, of God, ſignifie (as mountains of God) tall and lofty Cedars, there is no queſtion. All the doubt is of the Syntaxis, how it lies. And of that the LXXII. give us the faireſt account, reading the whole verſe thus, ἐκάλυψεν ὄρη τὴ σκιὰ αὐτῆς, καὶ αἱ ἀναδενδράδες αὐτῆς τὰς κλάδους τῷ Θεῷ, the ſhadow thereof covered the hills, and the branches thereof the cedars of God, i. e. covered the Cedars. This ſenſe the Latine exactly follow, Operuit montes umbra ejus, & arbuſta ejus Cedros Dei, the ſhadow of it covered the mountains, and the ſprouts thereof (covered) the Cedars of God. And to this the Hebrew well accords, for as כָּסוּ הָרִים צִלָּהּ the mountains were covered with the ſhadow is directly equivalent with the ſhadows covering the mountains, ſo וַעֲנָפֶיהָ אַרְזֵי אֵל may beſt be rendred, in the ſame common conſtruction, (repeating כָּסוּ were covered, from the former part) and the goodly Cedars were covered with the branches thereof, and that is as perfectly equivalent to the branches covering the Cedars. The Syriack put it out of queſtion, (and after them the Arabick) reading וְעַנְפֵיהֶם ... above the Cedars. Thus the Jewiſh Arab, Her ſhadow covered the mountains, and her branches the divine or ſtately Cedars. That the ſides of hills are the moſt commodious places for vineyards is ſufficiently known, as alſo that the vine hath props on which it climbs, and reſts it ſelf, and theſe are lower or higher according to the nature of the ſeveral ſoils or climates; in fertile ſoils, as now adays in Lombardy, they run up the trees, and cover them. And ſo here in an expreſſion of the luxuriant growth of this fruitful vine, it may not unfitly be ſaid in poetical ſtile to run up, and reach the tops of the tall Cedars, as Joſeph is ſaid Gen. 49. 22. to be a fruitful bough, whoſe branches run over the wall.

כָּסוּ הָרִים צִלָּהּ וַעֲנָפֶיהָ

V. 15. The

e. בְּנָהּ

V. 15. The Vineyard] What נְטָע here ſignifies, is not agreed on by Interpreters. The LXXII. read it as a verb (from כון to prepare) κατάρτισον, and thence the Latine, perfice, make perfect. But there is no appearance of truth in that. The Interlinear reads vitiarium, vineyard, either confounding it with גַּנָּה a garden, as the learned Schindler conjectures, or more probably from the notion of בֵּן for a baſis, and from thence by metaphor the place of habitation, all one with מָעוֹן, which being by the antecedents applied to a vine, is a vineyard. But the Chaldee render it עוּבָרָה a ſprout, for ſo they evidently uſe that word Numb. 13. 23. rendring זְמוֹרָה (ſarmentum, or palmitem, a branch, on which was a bunch of grapes) by עוּבָרָא (and ſo Ezek. 17. 6. for פְּאֵרוֹת branches, they read עוּבָרִין. The Syriack reads ܣܥ which from סָחָה fundavit, is conſonant to the notion of בָּנָה a baſis, and applied to a vine may moſt fitly be rendred a root or ſtock, ſuch as is wont to be planted. Thus Dan. 11. 7. there ſhall riſe from the branch of her roots, בְּנָיו his baſis, the Latine reads plantatio ejus, his plantation, i. e. a rooted ſtock fit to plant. For this we know, that a branch of a vine, being laid in the ground, will take a root to it, and ſo be fit to be tranſplanted. And accordingly Dan. 11. 20. for תַּחְתָּיו עָמַד נָבָל, there ſhall ſtand up, or riſe from his baſis, the LXXII. read ἀναστήσεται ἐκ τῆς ῥίζης αὐτοῦ, there ſhall riſe up out of his root, (and ſo the Arabick alſo) reſolving for us, that (ſpeaking of vines or other ſuch plants) נָטַע or בָּנָה ſignifies a root, which root being fit for planting, muſt be ſuppoſed to be not a root only, but a ſmall trunk, or ſtalk of the vine with a root to it; as in that place of Daniel, c. 11. 20. out of that נָבָל root ariſes מַעֲבִיר, which from the notion of עָבַר in Piel, for propagavit, will ſignifie the very ſame with, עוּבָרָה, which the Chaldee here uſeth, viz. propago, a plant, of a vine; and ſo in that place of Daniel the LXXII. render it φυλὸν, a plant, and ſo the Arabick alſo. By all this it appears, that נָבָל here having in its original notion ſomewhat of ſtrength and ſtability, (as when it is uſed for a foot or baſis, Exod. 30. 28. 31. 9. Levit. 8. 11. 1 King. 7. 29.) and being by the context confined to vines, muſt ſignifie ſuch a ſlip, or young ſtock, or plant, as is fit to be ſet and grow by it ſelf; and accordingly Abu Walid, though he be himſelf of opinion that נָבָל is the ſame with נָגַף by change of ג into ב, yet confeſſes that the moſt of Interpreters take it for חַבְלָה. It ſhould probably be חִבְלָה, the word which the Jewiſh Arab uſeth, and ſignifies a vine, or any root thereof, (חִבְלָה rather ſignifying the burthen or fruit.) And this being by the Maſorites written with a large C ſignifies this eminent plant, the whole people of the Jews, whom God had choſen; and ſo his right hand is truly ſaid to have planted it. And then that will direct us farther in the interpretation of the latter part of the verſe, וְעַל בֵּן אִמַּצְתָּה לָךְ and the ſon, or, upon the ſon which thou haſt made ſtrong for thy ſelf: where as עַל is moſt probably an expletive of no ſignification, (or poſſibly refers to רְאֵה עַל look foregoing, רְאֵה עַל look upon;) ſo בֵּן ſon, in accordance with בָּנָה the root or plant of the vine, muſt denote the ſon of that plant, and that is according to the Hebrew ſtyle, a bough or branch of it. So Gen. 49. 22. Joſeph is a fruitful בֵּן ſon, i. e. bough, by a ſpring, whoſe בָּנוֹת daughters, i. e. branches, run over the wall; by the ſame proportion as יוֹנְקוֹתֶיהָ which ſignifies ſucking children, from יָנַק to ſuck, is here v. 11. uſed for branches. And then in proportion with the people being meant by the root or plant, the branch בֶּן may ſignifie the שֵׁבֶט rod, or tribe of Judah, the Regal tribe of which David was, who being by God inveſted with power, and as his proxy and miniſter on earth, it is properly ſaid, that God hath made him ſtrong for himſelf. The Chaldee therefore paraphraſe it עַל מַלְכָּא מְשִׁיחָא — on the Meſſiah, i. e. anointed King, whom thou haſt confirmed or eſtabliſhed for thy ſelf. And in the prophetick ſenſe that will be farther extended to Chriſt the King or Ruler of his Church: and ſo ſaith Aben Ezra, this may be underſtood of משיח בן אפרים the Meſſiah Ben-Ephraim, others call him Ben-Joſeph, who they ſay is to be killed in war, (being preſt by the text in Zachary to acknowledge a ſuffering Meſſiah) as Meſſiah Ben David (for they admit of two) is to conquer all the world. R. Obadiah alſo interprets it of the Meſſiah. And the LXXII. reads ἐπὶ υἱὸν ἀνθρώπου, and on the ſon of man, and ſo the Latine and Syriack, the title by which any eminent man, a Prince, is fitly expreſt, (and by which Chriſt is ſo frequently called) and ſo moſt expreſly v. 17. the man of Gods right hand, and the ſon of man, not בֵּן ſon ſimply, but בֶּן אָדָם ſon of man, is ſet to ſignifie the King. But it is poſſible alſo, and, I ſuppoſe, more probable, that the בֵּן or branch may be ſet to denote the Temple, for of that it follows immediately v. 16. It is burnt with fire, it is cut down, or as it may beſt be rendred, שְׂרֻפָה בָאֵשׁ כְּסוּחָה being cut down it is burnt with fire, the vine, when 'tis cut down, being good for nothing elſe, Ezek. 15. 3, 4. ſhall wood be taken thereof to do any work, or will men take a pin of it to hang any thing thereon? It is caſt into the fire for fewel, the fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midſt of it is burnt; is it meet for any work? This belongs not well to the King, but agrees perfectly to the Temple at this time of the captivity. And ſo the phraſe which thou haſt made ſtrong for thy ſelf ſeems to be borrowed from Moſes's ſong, Exod. 15. 17. where it is ſpoken of the Temple, Thou ſhalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou haſt made for thee to dwell in, in the Sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have eſtabliſhed. And in this ſenſe it will well agree with the נָטַע or plant foregoing, that ſignifying the nation of the Jews, which God brought in and planted, in Moſes's dialect, and with which the Temple is joyned, Joh. 11. 48. they will take away our place and nation, by thoſe two words there expreſſing more plainly what is here in poetick ſtyle, the root or plant, and branch, i. e. the whole Commonwealth of the Jews, ſo ſtiled Mal. 4. 1. It ſhall leave them neither root nor branch, People nor Temple. Of both theſe it here follows in the plural יֹאבְדוּ they ſhall periſh at the rebuke of thy countenance, i. e. If to the ſpoil of violent men foregoing, the boar out of the wood, and the wild beaſts of the field, v. 13. thou add thine anger and inflictions, both root and branch, People and Temple ſhall be utterly conſumed. To avert which it follows, Let thine hand be upon the man of thy right hand, and the ſon of man, which in all reaſon by the characters of אִישׁ and אָדָם muſt be interpreted of the King.

The

The Eighty Firſt PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The eighty firſt Pſalm, ſaid to be compoſed by Aſaph for the feaſt of trumpets, Lev. 23. 24. Numb. 29 1. and 10. 10. (which was inſtituted to commemorate the deliverance out of Egypt, the ſounding of the trumpet being a token of liberty, Lev. 25. 10.) is a ſolemn invitation to all, to ſing praiſes to God for his great deliverances and ſpecial mercies to his people, whoſe ſins are the only averters of his favour, and originals of their miſery. It was ſet to the tune called Gittith, (ſee Pſal. 8. a.) and committed to the Præfect of the Muſick.

TO the chief Muſitian upon Gittith, A Pſalm of Aſaph.

1, 2, 3. The God of Jacob is our only refuge, preſerver and deliverer, O let us joyn in the moſt ſolemn joyful expreſſions of thankfulneſs to him: All the ſweeteſt and moſt pleaſant inſtruments of Muſick are in all reaſon to accompany, and indeavour to improve our lauds, and all the whole nation to be aſſembled at thoſe times which are ſolemnly ſet apart for theſe offices, the beginning of every month, to conſecrate all that follows.

a. b.

1. Sing aloud unto God our ſtrength, make a joyful noiſe unto the God of Jacob.
2. ‖ [a] Take a Pſalm and † bring hither the timbrel, the pleaſant harp with the Pſaltery.
3. Blow up the trumpet in [b] the * new moon, in the time appointed, on our ſolemn feaſt-day.

‖ Take up, or lift up. † anſwer, or ſpeak, or ſing to * firſt day of the month, on the new moon, on the day of our feaſt.

4, 5. And this is but agreeable to the ordinances of divine ſervice given by God himſelf on mount Sinai for all poſterity moſt ſtrictly to obſerve, ſoon after that great and ſignal time of his ſhewing himſelf in power and majeſty againſt Pharaoh and the Egyptians, when he lived among ſtrangers, and were cruelly handled by them.

4. For this was a ſtatute for Iſrael, and a law of the God of Jacob:
5. This he ordained in Joſeph for a teſtimony, when he went out * through the land of Egypt, where I heard a language that I underſtood not.

* upon, or againſt עַל

6. 'Twas then the mighty work of his over-ruling power, upon our addreſſes made to heaven, ſpeedily to reſcue us out of that great ſlavery, to redeem us from thoſe ſevere tasks of working in the kilns under Pharaohs officers.

c.

6. I delivered his ſhoulders from the burthen, his hands ‖ were [c] delivered from the pots.

‖ paſt away

7. And ſoon after, at the giving of the law in Sinai, when the thunder and lightning and tempeſt was ſo terrible, that they all quaked, and beſought to be freed from it, he was pleaſed to free them accordingly, and ſecure them from all danger. A little before (Exod. 17.) they were in diſtreſs for water at Rephidim, it being for their trial that God ſuffered them to be in want for a while; and though they behaved it very ill, ſhewed themſelves a faithleſs murmuring people, yet God ſpared them then, and inabled Moſes by ſtriking the rock Horeb to bring forth plenty of water for them.

d.

7. Thou calledſt in trouble, and I delivered thee; I anſwered thee in [d] the † ſecret place of thunder, I proved thee at the waters of Meribah. Selah.

† or covert or, hiding-place from thunder, or by, or with thunder.

8, 6. But having this experience of their infidelity and proneneſs to apoſtatize and return to Egypt, preferring the falſe Gods there before the true God, which brought them out from thence, he thought good in that terrible manner, v. 7. to give them ſevere precepts and ordinances of not admitting any Idol or heathen worſhip among them, e.

8. Hear, O my people, and I will teſtifie unto thee, O Iſrael, if thou wilt hearken unto me.
9. There ſhall no ſtrange God be in thee, neither ſhalt thou worſhip [e] any * ſtrange God.

* heathen, or foreign

10. Severely requiring them to commemorate and ſerve and worſhip him, as the God which had with ſuch prodigies of judgments on the Egyptians, and miracles of mercies toward them, delivered them out of that tyrants hands, and by bringing them water in time of diſtreſs out of the hardeſt rock, demonſtrated his power and readineſs to grant them the greateſt abundance, if by humility and obedience and fidelity, and conſtant addreſſes to him in all their wants, they ſhould render themſelves capable of it.

10. I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt: open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.

11. But they were far from the performance of this condition, from qualifying themſelves by obedience, and † acquieſcence and delight in him, for his performance of this moſt gratious promiſe to them.

† לֹא־אָבוּ לְמַיְמְרִי acquieſced not in my word, Chald.

11. But my people would not hearken to my voice, and Iſrael ‖ would none of me.

‖ obeyed me not לֹא אָבָה לִי

12. And accordingly God withdrew his protection, grace and favour from them, delivered them up to follow their own corrupt counſels and purpoſes, to injoy their own choiſes, the vanities of their idol worſhips, which were not able to protect them, and all the ſad conſequences thereof.

12. So I gave them up unto † their own hearts luſts, and they walked in their own counſels.

† the imaginations of their hearts שְׁרִירוּת לִבָּם

13, 14. Had they but performed their part of Covenant to God, afforded chearful obedience, and faithfully obſerved his directions, he would have been moſt ſure to have performed his promiſe to them, and by interpoſition of his ſtrength immediately have diſcomfited and deſtroyed their ſtouteſt enemies.

13. ‖ O that my people had hearkened unto me, and Iſrael had walked in my ways!
14. I ſhould ſoon have ſubdued their enemies, and turned my hand againſt their adverſaries.

‖ or If לוּ

15. All that oppoſed them, and ſo reſiſted the counſels of God for making Iſrael a moſt happy and proſperous people, ſhould certainly have been brought low, and for dread of his power performed a feigned, though not real, obedience to him; and ſo the peace and ſtrength of the people of Iſrael ſhould have been moſt durable and laſting.

15. The haters of the Lord ſhould have † ſubmitted themſelves unto him; but their time ſhould have endured for ever.

† yielded feigned obedience, ſee note on Pſal. 18. c.

16. And that accompanied with all temporal plenty, the moſt fertile harveſts and richeſt acceſſions, the beſt ſorts and greateſt ſtores of every thing, not only for neceſſity, but delicacy. (And ſo parallel to this the world of Chriſtians, if they would but ſet themſelves chearfully to the practice of his precepts, ſhould find a wonderful ſpiritual completion of this promiſe not only ſufficient, yea abundant grace to perform what is required of them in that degree as will be accepted, but withal the moſt exuberant joys and pleaſures in this world, (abſtracted from the bliſs of the other world) in the conſtant exerciſes of his graces, and practice of thoſe duties.)

f. g.

16. He ſhould have fed them alſo with [f] the * fineſt of the wheat; and with honey out of ‖ the [g] ſtony rock ſhould I have ſatisfied thee.

* fat ‖ the rock

Annotations

Annotations on Pſalm LXXXI.

a. שְׂאוּ זִמְרָה

V. 2. Take a Pſalm] What זִמְרָה שְׂאוּ ſignifies, will be diſcerned beſt from the Chaldee, who render it by אֲרִימוּ קָלָא בְּתוּשְׁבַּחְתָּא Lift up your voice in a laud or Pſalm; ſo Abu Walid, ſound, or ſing out aloud praiſe, or ſongs of praiſe; according to the notion of נָשָׂא for lifting up, applied to the voice, whether in ſinging or weeping, which the LXXII. duly render, ὑψοῦν φωνὴν, to raiſe, or lift up the voice. It is alſo applied to ſpeaking, as when Balaam is ſaid to take, or lift up a parable, Num. 23.7, 18, & 24.3, 15, 20, 21, 23. So Job. 27.1. Job added שָׂאָה מְשָׁלוֹ to lift up his parable: the LXXII. render it, προσθεὶς εἶπε, he adding ſpake. So Hab. 2.6. יִשְׂאוּ מָשָׁל they ſhall lift, or take up a parable. All Hebrew dialect for pronouncing, or ſpeaking aloud, or ſolemnly, as here the Pſalm is ſolemnly to be ſung, and ſo to be lifted up. As for תְּנוּ תֹף, which follows, it may perhaps be he beſt rendred, anſwer the timbrel, from the notion of תָּנָה for referre, or perhaps rather according to the Chaldee uſe of the word, ſpeak, or annuntiate to the Timbrel; as Jud. 11.40. the daughters of Iſrael went yearly לְתַנּוֹת to ſpeak to the daughter of Jephtha, i.e. to annuntiate, ſing ſongs to her, by way of lamentation; the LXXII. render it θρηνεῖν, to mourn for, and ſo the reſt of the antient Interpreters agree: and then by analogy, this here will be ſinging a chearful, as that was a doleful ſong. So Jud. v. 11. יְתַנּוּ they ſhall reherſe, by way of Praiſe or Pſalm, the righteouſneſſes of the Lord. But others derive תְּנוּ from נתן; ſo doth Abu Walid, and under that root renders it ſtrike up, or play on the Timbrel. תְּנוּ תֹף

b. בַּחֹדֶשׁ בַּכֶּסֶה

V. 3. In the new moon] The word בַּחֹדֶשׁ muſt here be rendred in the beginning of the month, that ſo בַּכֶּסֶה, that follows, may be rendred, as it truly ſignifies, in the new Moon. 'Tis true, that from חָדָשׁ new, חֹדֶשׁ doth indifferently ſignifie the noviluniu̇m, and the firſt day of the moneth; but here the new Moon being peculiarly expreſt by כֶּסֶה, and that ſaith Aben Ezra, becauſe the moon is then hid (from כָּסָה texit) to which the Chaldee accords, בִּירַחָא דְּמִתְכַּסֵּי in the hidden moon ('tis ſtrange the Latine ſhould render it in menſe qui coopertus eſt, when ירח ſignifies firſt moon, and from thence moneth) to avoid tautology, חֹדֶשׁ muſt be rendred the new moneth, i. e. the firſt day of the moneth. Thus, Num. 28.17. is rendred by the Targum רֵישׁ יַרְחָא the beginning of the moneth, and חָדְשֵׁי יַרְחֵי רֵישֵׁי יַרְחֵי the beginning of the moneths, not of the moons. The Syriack ſet this down here moſt expreſly, בְּרֵישׁ חַדְתָּא וּבְכַסְיָא in the beginning or firſt of the moneth, and on the new moon, which meeting alwayes together, were feſtival among the Jews (the Jewiſh Arab reads, over the ſacrifice, in the dayes that his people keep the feaſt) and ſo the trumpet to be ſounded thereon. The LXXII. read the בַּכֶּסֶה ἐν εὐσήμῳ ἡμέρᾳ, on an eminent day, I ſuppoſe, rather by way of Paraphraſe, for ſuch it was, than by deducing the word from כָּסַם computavit, as ſome imagine, becauſe the feſtival recurs conſtantly on a numbred or fixt day. Then for לְיוֹם חַגֵּנוּ that literally is to be rendred, on the day of our feaſt: the LXXII. joynes it with the former, and reads, ἐν εὐσήμῳ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς ἑορτῆς ἡμῶν, in the eminent day of our feaſt (ſome feſtival dayes being among the Jews more eminent than others, the firſt and laſt dayes of thoſe feaſts, which continued many dayes;) but this ſure again by way of paraphraſe, not of literal rendring, the preposition ל on being not taken notice of in their rendring. לְיוֹם חַגֵּנוּ

V. 6. Delivered] From עָבַר tranſiit, to paſs away, or over, is תַּעֲבִרְנָה here, they paſſed, i. e. went out, or away, to denote an eſcape or deliverance. The LXXII. read ἐδούλευσαν, they ſerved, or had ſerved, as from עָבַד ſervit, through the great affinity betwixt the two letters ד and ר, in which alſo the ſenſe is not amiſs expreſt, if only we read it as in the preterpluperfect tenſe, they had ſerved, for that ſignifies that now they did not, but were delivered from it. As for דּוּד from which they paſt, it ſignifies a pot, or other utenſil made of earth, to be ſet over the fire to heat any thing; and ſuch it ſeems the Iſraelites were imployed in making, when they were under the task-maſters in Ægypt. c. תַּעֲבִרְנָה דּוּד

7. Secret place] סֵתֶר is latibulum, a covering, or place to fly unto from any danger, from סָתַר to hide, protect, or defend. And then if thunder be joyned with it, סֵתֶר רַעַם will be either the covering of thunder, the cloud where the thunder is hid, (to which the ſtory agrees, where God is ſaid to have ſpoken from the midſt of the cloud, and that with thunders, Deut. v. 22.) as Habak. 3.4. the biding of his power, or elſe the covering, or hiding-place from thunder. That here it is to be taken in the ſecond ſenſe, will probably be concluded from a parallel place, Iſa. 32.2. There סֵתֶר זֶרֶם is reſolved to be the covering from rain or inundation; ſo the Syriack expreſly read it ܣܬܪ ܡܛܪ̈ܐ a refuge from the ſhowre, and to the ſame purpoſe the Chaldee כְּמָא דְּמִטַּמְרִין מִן קֻדָּם זַרְמִיתָ as they that hide themſelves from the tempeſt or ſhowre, and the LXXII. ᾗ κρυβήσεται ὡς ἀφ' ὕδατος φερομένου, he ſhall be hid as from driven rain or water; in like manner as in the former part of that verſe, מַחֲבֵא רוּחַ is by us rendred a hiding place from wind, (the ſame that is elſewhere expreſt by the preposition, מַחְסֶה מָגֵן a protection from inundation, Iſ. 25.4.) and ſo the Syriack reads, ܡܓܢ ܡܢ ܪܘܚܐ from the wind, and ſo all the interpreters agree there. And if they there hold, then by juſt analogy ſo it may be here, and thereto the ſtory alſo well accords. The thunder was that which is ſet down, Exod. 19. and which is there mentioned to be ſo terrible on mount Sinai at the giving of the Law, that all the people that were in the camp trembled, v. 16. and removed and ſtood afar off, Exod. 20.18. and were afraid by reaſon of the fire, &c. Deut. v. 5. & v. 23. it came to paſs, when you heard the voice out of the midſt of the darkneſs, ye ſaid, Behold the Lord hath ſhewed us his glory, &c. Now therefore why ſhould we die? for this great fire will conſume us: if we hear the voice of the Lord any more, then we ſhall die, v. 25. Go thou near and ſpeak to us, v. 27. So the Apoſtle, they intreated that the word ſhould not be ſpoken to them any more, Heb. 12.19. And then as God was pleaſed to hearken to this requeſt of theirs Deut. v. 28. The Lord heard the voice of your words when ye ſpake unto me, and the Lord ſaid, I have heard the voice of the words of this people, they have well ſaid, &c. (which is certainly a form of granting their requeſts, as well as an approbation of their promiſe to obey;) ſo here it is ſaid, Thou calledſt in trouble and I delivered thee, relieved thee from that great fear of thine. And then it follows, I anſwered thee in the covert from thunder, i. e. granted thy petition in delivering thee, or giving thee ſafety from the thunder, in that notion of anſwering for granting a requeſt: Or elſe, I anſwered, i.e. I ſpake to thee, in the covert from thunder, becauſe as God thus by thunder anſwered them here, i. e. ſpake to them in the words here following, v. 8. Hear O my people (according to the uſe of עָנָה for ſpeaking as well as anſwering, and the Greek ἀκούειν, in the ſame ſenſe, ſee Mar. 11. note a.) d. סֵתֶר רַעַם עָנָה

ſo did he take ſpecial care to preſerve them from receiving any hurt by it (and accordingly Moſes ſaid unto the people, Fear not —— Exod. 20. 20. and I ſtood between the Lord and you at that time, Deut. v. 5.) and ſo is here ſaid to have anſwered them, בְּסֵתֶר in the covering, or hiding-place from the thunder; ἐν ἀποκρύφῳ καταιγίδος, in the hiding place of, or from the tempeſt, ſay the LXXII. defended them from it (when it thundred moſt terribly) as in a hiding-place, or ſafe refuge. That it belongs to this time of giving the Law is made evident by that which follows, v. 8. Hear O my people, the form of giving the Law, Deut. v. 1. and, I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Ægypt, v. 10. the very firſt words of the Decalogue, Exod. 20. 2. This therefore of Gods ſpeaking to them at Mount Sinai, ſo famous for the thunders, is without queſtion that which is intimated in this place, which way ſoever the interpretation lie, whether of his ſpeaking in the place where thunder is hid, as in a repoſitory, i.e. in the clouds, or that he anſwered, or ſpake in the covert from thunder, which by analogy with the two places in Iſaiah, compared together, Iſa. 32. 2. and Iſa. 25. 4. (where for סֵתֶר רַעַם in one, is מַחְסֶה רַעַם in the other) ſeems more probable, and ſo likewiſe by the coherence with the antecedents here, their calling and Gods delivering. The only ſeeming objection againſt interpreting it of Sinai, is, that that murmuring at Meribah, Exod. 17. was before the thundering on Sinai, Exod. 19. whereas here the thunder is mentioned firſt, and then after that Meribah, in the end of this verſe. But that will eaſily be anſwered, as by the neerneſs of thoſe two paſſages the one to the other, ſo alſo by the liberty taken in Poems of not obſerving ſtrict order in each narration, (ſee Pſal. 83. 9. where the victory over the Midianites, Judg. 7. is mentioned before that of Siſera, Judg. 4.) but eſpecially by looking forward to v. 8. where the ſubject being the commands given in Sinai, and thoſe connecting in ſenſe to Gods anſwering them in Sinai, in that hiding-place of, or covert from thunder, i.e. whether his ſpeaking in the clouds, or his ſpeaking to them in thunder, but protecting them from receiving any hurt by it, that which comes in the midſt betwixt them is in all reaſon to be read, as in a parentheſis, to this ſenſe, that Gods having proved and found them ſo faulty at Rephidim, ſo extremely prone to infidelity and returning to Ægypt, was the occaſion of his giving them that Law on Sinai againſt other Gods, &c. v. 8, 9. Hear O my people —— I am the Lord —— the beginning or firſt words of Gods anſwering or ſpeaking to them in Sinai out of the thunder. All this hath been ſaid on ſuppoſition that רַעַם thunder is to be joyned with סֵתֶר ſecret place. But the Jewiſh Arab gives us another rendring of it, out of the ſecret place, with, or by thunder. And then the ſecret place muſt refer to God, who is ſaid to make darkneſs his ſecret place, Pſal. 18. 11. that is, to dwell in his infinite Majeſty in heaven inviſibly, and ſo here to give anſwer from Heaven by thunder. To this the Chaldee appertains, which paraphraſeth it, the hidden place of the Houſe of Gods Majeſty.

V. 9. Strange God] From נָכַר known, familiar, is the word alſo uſed per antiphraſin for any forrainer or ſtranger, peculiarly for one that is not of the houſe of Iſrael, an alien or Gentile. So Gen. 17. 12. בֶּן נֵכָר a ſtranger which is not of thy ſeed; בַּר עַמְמַיָּא the ſon of the people, ſay the Chaldee, i.e. a Gentile. So Gen. 35. 2. Put away אֱלָהֵי הַנֵּכָר the Gods of the alien, the Gentile God; טַעֲוַת עַמְמַיָּא the Idols of the people, ſay the Chaldee. And ſo here אֵל נֵכָר any Gentile God, for which the Chaldee ſets טַעֲוַת חִילוֹנִי profane Idols. e. נֵכָר

V. 16. Fineſt] The word חֵלֶב ſignifies originally milk, and thence fat, and ſo its poetically applied here to wheat, as Deut. 32. 14. the fat of the kidneys of the wheat, and ſo Gen. 45. 18. חֵלֶב the fat of the earth, and Num. 18. 29. for which the Chaldee ſignificantly reads טוּב the goodneſs, as here טוּב לֶחֶם Good bread of wheat, the LXXII. and Syriack reteining the literal ſtatus the fat. f. חֵלֶב

V. 18. Stony rock] That צוּר ſignifies a rock there is no queſtion, but whether it be literally or poetically to be underſtood here, being joyned with hony, is the only difficulty. And firſt it is not to be thought, that the diſcourſe is of miraculous feeding, (then indeed there is no doubt but God could bring hony, as well as water, out of the hardeſt rock.) It plainly belongs in this place to the deſcription of the plenty of Canaan. Secondly then, if the ſtyle be in this poetical, as it was in the words immediately precedent, the fat of the wheat, it will then be neither impoſſible nor improbable that the rock, to which the hony here relates, ſhould be the hony-comb, becauſe hony out of the comb is the beſt (ſweeter than hony and the hony-comb, by way of aſcent) as the fat of the wheat ſignified the beſt. But then thirdly, becauſe Deut. 32. 13. where hony out of the rock is again mentioned, there is added to it, Oyle out of the flinty rock, it is moſt probable, that the word rock ſhould be equally literal in both places, and ſignifie that to be uſual in thoſe Countreys, which is ſtill ordinary, for Bees to breed and ſwarm in holes of rocks, and thence to ſupply them with hony in great plenty. And then why may not oyl out of the flinty rock ſignify, that there was no rock ſo hard, or barren, but God would make the Olive-trees to grow there, and yield them abundance of Oyle? g. צוּר

The Eighty Second PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

A Pſalm of Aſaph.

The Eighty ſecond Pſalm compoſed by Aſaph, is an admonition to juſtice, and an upbraiding invective againſt the injuſtice of earthly Tribunals, with an appeal unto God the ſupreme and moſt juſt Judge. † See 2 Chron. 19. 7.

† To that place Kimchi refers, and thinks it probable that the Pſalm was written in the days of Jehoſaphat.

1. Be the Rulers and Judges and Adminiſtrators of this world never ſo highly honoured, inveſted by God with his own power, his proxies on earth, as Angels in a manner, i. e. perſons commiſſionated from God; yet muſt they reſolve that God is ſuperiour to all their judicatures and adminiſtrations, preſides in all, and will exact and call them to a ſevere account, judge over again whatſoever hath been judged by them.

1. God ſtandeth in the congregation [a]of ‖the mighty, he is a judge among [b]Gods. a. ‖ God. אֵל b.

2. 'Tis therefore a great folly and impiety in them, to favour any unrighteous cauſe or perſon, and either for bribes or other carnal intereſt to judge falſely.

2. How long will you judge unjuſtly, and accept the perſons of the wicked? Selah.

3. Defend

† justifie. * relieve, or free. דַּלוּ

3. Defend the poor and fatherless; † [c] do justice to the afflicted and needy.
4. Deliver the poor and needy, * rid them from the hand of the wicked.

3, 4. 'Tis the office and business of their calling, intrusted to them by God, to receive all that are most helpless (not which are most powerful and rich) into their care and patronage, to absolve the innocent, be he never so unable to purchase their favour, or secure himself from the oppressions of other men, to plead the cause of such, and rescue them out of the hand of the violent and injurious.

|| move, nod, or are shaken. יְמוֹטוּ

5. They know not, neither will they understand, they walk on in darkness: all the foundations of the earth || are out of course.

5. But impious obstinate men pervert justice, and proceed without all remorse in their corrupt courses, a gift blindeth the eyes of the Wise or Seer, Exod. 23. 8. and so those that should rule and administer the several Nations of the earth uprightly, and preserve Justice among all men, are themselves the most unjust, and thereby the Authors of all mischiefs to the world.

6. [d] I have said, you are gods, and all of you are children of the most High.
7. But ye shall dye like men, and fall like one of the Princes.

6, 7. By their commissions and power derived to them from the God of heaven, they are a sort of terrestrial Angels, imployed and innobled by God, and as children are of parents, his copies and images upon earth. But this doth not so priviledge them as to give them immunity from the common fate of all men, whether people or Prince, that of mortality, not consequently from that severe account and reward of their actions, which after death expects all such. d.

8. Arise, O God, judge the earth; for thou shalt inherit all nations.

8. It being most certain that such a judgment of God shall one day come, wherein the whole world shall be concerned; all the men on earth being the subjects of the supreme Deity, and so accountable and sadly punishable for all they have ever offended.

Annotations on Psalm LXXXII.

a. אֵל

V. 1. The mighty] That אֵל is the title of God, is sufficiently known, taken from his supreme power which he hath over all the world; And then Gods standing, i. e. presiding (so 1 Sam. 19. 20. Samuel עוֹמֵד נִצָּב stood presiding over them) in the congregation of God, i. e. in his own judicature (so the Jewish Arab saith, that it is the repetition of the name again, instead of the affix) or that which is erected and authorized by him, is the same which we read, 2 Chr. 19. 6. He said unto the Judges, Take heed what you do, for ye judge not for men, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. R. Obad. Gaon glosseth it, that God is an assistant and defender when they judge righteously, but a revenger when they pervert judgment. The Jewish Arab reads, Gods command standeth, is placed in the conventions among the judges when they judge, i. e. by his commission it is that they do act.

b. אֱלֹהִים

Ibid. Gods] What אֱלֹהִים here signifies, may be examined by the use of the word in other places. As Ps. 86. 8. There is none like unto thee בֶּאֱלֹהִים among these Elohim: where the Chaldee expressly renders it בְּאַנְגְלִי מְרוֹמָא among the high angels. So 1 Sam. 28. 13. I saw אֱלֹהִים Elohim ascending out of the Earth: the Targum reads again מַלְאָכָא דַיְיָ an angel of the Lord. So here, v. 6. I said אֱלֹהִים אַתֶּם ye are Elohim: the Chaldee read כְּמַלְאֲכַיָּא as Angels. And when it there follows וּבְנֵי עֶלְיוֹן and children, or sons of the most High, they render וְהֵיךְ אַנְגְלוֹ מְרוֹמָא and as the high angels, in the notion of sons of God, Job 1. 6. and 2. 1. בְּנֵי אֱלֹהִים the sons of God came, i. e. saith the Chaldee, in consent with all interpreters in that place, כִּיתֵי מַלְאֲכַיָּא the assemblies of angels] This therefore being the frequent known use of the word, and that taken from the office of angels, to be the ministers and legates and officers sent (from whence is their title both in Hebrew and Greek, מַלְאָךְ and ἄγγελος) and commissionated by God, whose name therefore they bear; it is by the same reason of analogy applyed to all Judges and Magistrates (and accordingly, Psal. 138. 1. this same word is by the Chaldee rendred דַּיָּנַיָּא Judges, and by the Syriack, ܡܠܟ̈ܐ Kings) administring justice to the people, in the name and by commission from God, whose διάκονοι, Ministers they are, Rom. 13. 4. ὑπὸ τῶν θεῶν τεταγμένοι, appointed by God, v. 1. and their assembly the judicature of God, in the beginning of this verse. Among these God is here said to be the שׁוֹפֵט in the Punick notion of Suffes for a Dictator, or Supreme judge. יִשְׁפֹּט

V. 3. Do justice] From צֶדֶק justus fuit, is הִצְדִּיק in Hiphil, to justifie, in the notion of acquitting, or absolving, and is set opposite to condemning, Deut. 25. 1. וְהִצְדִּיקוּ and they shall justifie, or acquit the just, and condemn the wicked. So Prov. 17. 15. מַצְדִּיק he that acquits the impious, and condemns the just. And so here הַצְדִּיקוּ being spoken of a Judge whose office it is to acquit or condemn, must in all reason be rendred in that notion of acquitting from the charge that injurious men lay against him. c. הַצְדִּיק

V. 6. I said ye are gods] These words being cited by Christ, Jo. 10. 34. are introduced in this stile, Is it not written in your Law? From hence the conclusion is necessary, that this Book of Psalms was among the Jews, lookt on as a part of the Divine Law, in a more wide and loose notion of law; as the writings of the Prophets, and all that were inspired by God, and bring divine authority along with them, are styled Law. To this purpose the words of Midras Tehillim are observable: תְּהִלִּים תּוֹרָה the Psalms are thora, i. e. the Law. And to that perhaps may be referred what we find, Psal. 78. 1. Hear my Law, O my people, by law meaning the same thing which in the end of the verse is called the words of my mouth, i. e. the Psalm which he is there inditing, as it follows, I will open my mouth into a parable, &c. d. אֱלֹהִים

The Eighty Third PSALM.

|| A Canticle of Psalm שִׁיר מִזְמוֹר See Note on Psal. 48. a.

|| A Song, or Psalm of Asaph.

Paraphrase.

The Eighty third Psalm, the last of the number of those that were composed by Asaph, is a complaint addrest to God against the oppressors and adversaries of his people the Jews (and, under that type, of the opposers of the Church of Christ) and a prediction of Gods severe punishments that should fall upon them. It seems most probably to have been composed in Jehosaphats time, yet may not unfitly be referred to all the oppositions against the Jews to the time of the captivity under the Assyrians; see note c.

a. 1, 2. O bleſſed Lord, be thou at length pleaſed to ſhew forth thy ſelf, to interpoſe, and vindicate thine own honour, in repreſſing the proud, tumultuous, importunate adverſaries of thee and of thy people.

1. Keep not thou [a] ſilence, O God, hold not thy peace, and be not ſtill, O God.

2. For loe thine enemies make a tumult, and they that hate thee have lift up their head.

b. 3. Their malice and avarice is great, and accordingly their conſultations and deſigns very treacherous and bloody, and cunningly managed for the invading this Nation which ſo neerly relates to thee (but eſpecially thy Temple which is among us, either as that which ſeems to ſecure thy protection over us, or as by the magnificent ſtructure and riches thereof it invites them to pillage it.)

3. They have taken crafty counſel againſt thy people, and conſulted againſt thy [b] †hidden ones.

† or, treaſures.

4. And their joynt reſolution is, that they will imploy all their ſtrength utterly to deſtroy us, to invade, and poſſeſs themſelves of the land, and finally to root out all the inhabitants.

4. They have ſaid, Come, and let us cut them off from being a Nation, that the name of Iſrael may be no more in remembrance.

c. 5,6,7. To this end a multitude of Nations have from time to time combined and joyned in the ſame malitious purpoſe, (if not altogether, yet all in their ſeveral ſeaſons, ſome after, and taking advantage by the others.) Thus the Idumeans and Arabians, of both ſorts, thoſe of the poſterity of Iſmael and from Cethura, the Moabites, and Syrians, and Ammonites, and Amalekites, and Philiſtims, and Tyrians, (the neighbours, but inveterate enemies of this Kingdom, 2 Sam. 8. 11.)

5. For they have conſulted together with one conſent, they are confederate againſt thee;

6. The Tabernacles of [c] Edom and the Iſhmaelites, of Moab and the Hagarens;

7. Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek, the Philiſtims, with the Inhabitants of Tyre.

8. And thus at length the Aſſyrians, either as confederates with them, or as the principal invaders, under Salmanaſar and Senacherib, on the ſame deſtructive and bloody deſign that had been of old eſpouſed, but could not then be effected by the Ammonites and Moabites, have now contributed their utmoſt to the waſting and deſtroying this land, and ſo been ſucceſsful inſtruments of delivering us up to theſe our neighbours rapines. (See note c.)

8. Aſſur alſo is joyned with them; they ‖ have holpen the children of Lot.

‖ were an arme to זְרוֹעַ

d. 9, 10. But this their malice to us is not likely to ſucceed well to them, but ſhall bring upon them the like deſtructions which have from time to time befallen the enemies of this Church and choſen people of God, not by their own ſtrength, but by Gods ſpecial interpoſing for us: even ſuch as befell the hoſt of Midian, when by Gods direction to Gideon they were diſcomfited by no more than Three hundred Men (a moſt diſproportionable number) with empty pitchers and lamps in them, Judg. 7. 16. and by the ſword of the Lord and of Gideon, v. 18. ſuch as under the conduct of Deborah befell Jabin King of Canaan, who was diſcomfited, and Siſera Captain of his hoſt ſlain by Jael a woman, Judg. 4. 21. which fight as it was near the River Kiſhon, Judg. 4. 7. and v. 21. ſo Endor near to Megiddo and Tanaach, Judg. 5. 19. was the peculiar place where the ſlaughter was made, wherein that whole hoſt was utterly deſtroyed.

9. Do unto them as unto the Midianites, as to Siſera, as to Jabin at the brook of Kiſon,

10. Which periſhed at [d] Endor; they became as the dung of the earth.

e. 11, 12. Such as when in the purſuit of Gideons victory over the Midianites, there were four Kings ſlain, f. Oreb and Zeeb, Judg. 7. 25. and Zeba and Zalmunna, Judg. 8. 12. So ſhall it fare with all thoſe that deſign to oppreſs and deſpoil Gods people, and the poſſeſſions ſetled on them by God, or to invade his Temple, and ſacrilegiouſly pillage the riches thereof.

11. Make [e] their †nobles like Oreb and like Zeeb, yea all their Princes as Zeba and as Zalmunna, † Princes.

12. Who ſaid, Let us take to our ſelves [f] the * houſes of God in poſſeſſion.

* beauty, or ornament, or paſtures.

g. 13, 14, 15. Thou, O Lord, ſhalt in thy time (when they have been thy ſcourge to chaſtiſe us) proceed in great ſeverity againſt them, uſe them as the husbandman doth the chaffe in a threſhing floor, firſt threſhing, then winnowing, and then burning it up; and ſo ſhalt thou afflict them, diſſipate them, and finally conſume them.

13. O My God, make them [g] ‖ like a wheel, as the ſtubble before the wind.

14. As the fire burneth a † wood, and as the flame ſetteth the Mountains on fire:

15. So perſecute them with thy tempeſt, and * make them afraid with thy ſtorme.

‖ as. † a forreſt.

* terriſie them. תְּבַהֲלֵם

16. Thy ſeverity toward them may be more for their advantage than any proſperity could be; when they diſcern themſelves diſappointed and diſcomfited in their enterpriſes of malice, this may poſſibly work upon them, and bring them to the acknowledgment of thee.

16. Fill their faces with ſhame, that they may ſeek thy name, O Lord.

h. 17, 18. But if this be not the ſucceſs of it, 'tis then juſt with thee that they ſhould be delivered up to everlaſting confuſion and deſtruction, that others, though not they, may be inſtructed by it, and brought, by the ſight of thy judgments on proud obdurate Atheiſts, to acknowledge thee to be what thy Name Jehovah imports, the one ſupreme ruler and diſpoſer of all the men in the world.

17. Let them be confounded and troubled for ever, yea let them be put to ſhame and periſh.

18. That men may know that thou [h] ‖ whoſe name alone is Jehovah, art the moſt high over all the earth.

‖ art thy name Jehovah, alone the—or according to thy—art—

Annotations

Annotations on Pſal. LXXXIII.

a. דֳמִי

V. 1. Silence] From the two acceptions of the word דָּמָה, to be ſilent, and to be like, is דָּמִי here variouſly interpreted. The LXXII. Latine, Syriack, Arabick and Æthiopick agree to read it in the latter notion, τίς ὁμοιωθήσεταί σοι, who ſhall be likened to thee? But the Chaldee, by reading לָא תִשְׁתּוֹק hold not thy peace, determine it to the former. And ſo doth the Context, the verſe conſiſting of two phraſes more both to the ſame purpoſe.

b. צְפוּנֶיךָ

V. 3. Hidden ones] The Chaldees rendring may here deſerve to be conſidered. Inſtead of צְפוּנֶיךָ, which we render ſecret ones, they read רְמִיחְשִׁין בְּאוֹצָרֶיךָ that are bidden in thy treaſures, and ſo Abu Walid, thoſe that are kept by thee. And thus צָפוֹן is certainly uſed, Pſ. 17. 14. thou ſhalt fill, צְפוּנְךָ with thy hidden, i. e. thy treaſure; and Ezek. 7. 22. They have polluted צְפוּנִי my treaſure. And therefore in this ſenſe it is moſt probable to be uſed in this place alſo. All the queſtion is, what is meant by Gods treaſure; and that is not improbably ſolved by the Chaldee in that place of Ezek. 7. 22. אַרְעָא בֵּית שְׁכִינְתִי the earth, or land of the houſe of my Schechinah, or habitation, the land or people of the Jews, among whom Gods houſe or place of reſidence was, or rather the Temple or Sanctuary it ſelf, (which is expreſly ſaid to be that which ſhould be defiled, their holy places, v. 24. my ſanctuary, and my houſe, chap. 8. 6. and 9. 6. and 7.) of which God was juſtly thought to have ſuch a ſpecial care, and yet which was for their ſins, v. 20. under the title of the beauty of his ornament, delivered up by him to be polluted. (And that this paſſage in Ezechiel may poſſibly be parallel, for the time, to that which is ſpoken of in this Pſalm, ſee note c.) To this I ſuppoſe agrees the rendering of the LXXII. τῶν ἁγίων σου, thy holies, not as of perſons, as the Latine ſanctos tuos, but in the neuter gender, as τὰ ἅγια, the holies, plural, do frequently ſignifie the Sanctuary, and particularly in the places of Ezechiel forecited, c. 8. 6. and 9. 6. and ſo the Syriack, ܩܕܫ̈ܝܟ thy holies.

And thus צְפוּנֶיךָ thy ſecrets, ſeems elegantly oppoſed to סִיד foregoing, they wage their ſecrets againſt Gods adyta. And to this ſenſe will the word צָפוֹן treaſure be the rather interpreted, becauſe of the great wealth in the Temple, which was that which provoked and invited the avarice of wicked men, to conſult and deſign the invading of it. And to this ſenſe it would be determined by v. 12. where they are introduced, ſaying, Let us take to our ſelves the beauty or ornaments of God in poſſeſſion; but that that word נָאוֶה is capable of another interpretation, ſee note f. But if it be taken in the Maſculine for the people foregoing, in the beginning of the verſe, then it muſt ſignifie the people of Iſrael, as thoſe which are under Gods ſpecial protection, c. kept, and in ſpecial manner tendred by him.

V. 6. Edom] It is not reſolved among Interpreters to what times this Pſalm belongs, and who theſe ſeveral people are who are here named. And I ſuppoſe the former of theſe will be probably reſolved on by the latter. Of Edom, and Moab, and Ammon, and Amalek, and the Philiſtims, and the Inhabitants of Tyre and Aſſur, there can be no difficulty: Theſe evidently denote ſo many people, the Edumæans and Moabites, and Ammonites, and Amalekites, and Philiſtims, and Tyrians, and Aſſyrians. Then for the Iſhmaelites, they are the Arabians called Scenitæ, twelve Princes according to their Nations, Gen. 25. 16. And the Hagarenes, the poſterity of Abraham by Cetura, (which is ſuppoſed to be Hagar, after Sarahs death) were Arabians alſo, and joyned together with the Iſhmaelites into one Nation. Then for Gebal, that בְּגָל was the name of a region in Arabia, if we may believe Stephanus, χωρὶς Ἀραβίας Γίβαλα, (though out of Hecatæus he tells us, that Gabala was a City of Phœnice, out of Strabo of Syria) from whence we have the Giblines (Γιβλανοὶ, ſaith Stephanus) 1 King. v. 18. (mentioned as excellent artificers) and ſo again, Ezech. 27. 9. in both which places the LXXII. read Βιβλίοι, for Γιβλίοι. Laſtly, for the children of Lot, thoſe, we know, בְּנֵי לוֹט were Moab and Ben-ammi, and ſo the Moabites and Ammonites before mentioned meant thereby. Now many of theſe did oppoſe and were enemies to the children of Iſrael at ſeveral times, and that in a ſignal manner: To David, 2 Sam. 8. who there diſcomfited the Philiſtims, the Moabites, the King of Zobah, the Syrians of Damaſcus, the King of Hamath, the children of Ammon and Amalek, and the Edumæans. So again in Jehoſaphat's reign, 2 Chron. 20. and to that many circumſtances of this Pſalm very fully accord: For as here 'tis ſaid, they are confederate againſt thee, the Tabernacles of Edom and the Iſhmaelites, of Moab and the Hagarens, Gebal and Ammon; ſo 2 Chron. 20. 1. the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and with them other beſides the Ammonites came againſt Jehoſhaphat to battel, a great multitude, &c. and v. 10, and 22. the inhabitants of mount Seir are diſtinctly named, to anſwer the mention of the Idumæans and Iſhmaelites. And whereas here the Auxiliary Nations are ſaid to have been זְרוֹעַ an arme, or help to the children of Lot, which very probably ſignifies the Moabites and Ammonites to have been the principal in the quarrel, this exactly accords with that ſtory, 2 Chr. 20. 1. So to the mention here, v. 12. of their deſign of taking the houſes of God (of which ſee note f.) in poſſeſſion, Jehoſhaphat, v. 11. ſets the parallel, Behold how they reward us, to caſt us out of our poſſeſſion which thou haſt given us to inherit. Laſtly, as the Pſalmiſt by praying, v. 15. predicts Gods perſecuting them with his tempeſt, &c. ſo in that chapter, v. 22. the Lord ſet ambuſhments againſt the children of Ammon, &c. and they were ſmitten. And it is not improbable that Jehoſhaphat, an eminent reſtorer of the Muſick of the Temple, who alſo indited a Prayer upon this exigent, v. 6. &c. ſhould likewiſe take order for a ſolemn hymn on purpoſe for this occaſion. It is therefore very reſonable, what Kimchi poſitively affirms, נאמר זה מזמור על המלחמה שהיתה בימי יהושפט this Pſalm was ſpoken of the war which was in the days of Jehoſhaphat. And herein it might not be unſafe to acquieſce. Yet the circumſtances of the Pſalm will alſo well enough agree to another interpretation, viz. to all the oppoſitions which had been made to this people from the beginning of their poſſeſſing of Canaan, to that of the Aſſyrians incluſively. For as thoſe others, Moab and Ammon eſpecially, had violently, but not ſucceſsfully, invaded them, both in David's and Jehoſhaphat's time, and had continually a covetous deſire to get this fruitful ſoil into their hands, (and we read not that the Aſſyrians were their auxiliaries in any of thoſe their aſſaults, as here is affirmed, v. 8.) ſo when the Aſſyrians at laſt invaded this people, and carried them captive to Aſſyria, 'tis evident that in doing ſo, they did much gratifie all thoſe other the neighbours and conſtant enemies of the Jews, and principally the Moabites and Ammonites. Of the Edumæans 'tis expreſly affirmed, Pſal. 137. 7. —— the children of Edom in the day

day of (i.e. this heavy viſitation on) Jeruſalem, ſaid, Down with it, down with it, even to the ground. So it is obſervable of the ſame Edumæans, and of the Iſhmaelites and the Hagarens (three of thoſe which are here named) Iſa. 21. the firſt, under the name of the deſert of the Sea, v. 1. viz. in Etham, Exod. 13.20. and 15.22. Num. 33.8. the ſecond, under that of the inhabitants of Dumah, v. 11. one of the ſons of Iſhmael, Gen. 25. 14. the third, under the title of Arabia, v. 13. For all theſe having joyned with the Aſſyrians againſt the Jews, are foretold there the puniſhments which they ſhould meet with for it; as here, v. 9, 10, 11. is likewiſe foretold of them, and of the Edumæans again upon the ſame account, Iſa. 34. 5. and 63. 1. And the ſame muſt be ſuppoſed of thoſe other people, the Moabites and Ammonites, &c. which being neighbours and enemies to the Jews, the Aſſyrians that came and waſted Jeruſalem may not unfitly be ſaid to have been זְרוֹעַ an arme to theſe children of Lot, i. e. to have effectively performed that which they ſo vehemently deſired, and oft attempted to do. And accordingly ſoon after the carrying away of Zedechiah follows the deſtruction of the Ammonites, and that as a puniſhment for their poſſeſſion of the land of Iſrael after their ejection, Jer. 49. 1. ſo again of the Edumæans, v. 7. of the Syrians of Damaſcus, v. 23. of the Arabians, noted by Kedar, v. 28. But moſt expreſly in the Propheſy of Ezechiel, c. 25. where firſt the Ammonites are to be puniſhed for their clapping their hands, and ſtamping with their feet, and rejoycing in heart, with all their deſpight againſt the land of Iſrael, v. 6. and 10. then the Moabites, v. 8. for ſaying, Behold the houſe of Judah is like to all the heathen, i. e. for triumphing and rejoycing over her affliction: then the Edumæans, v. 13. and laſtly the Philiſtims, becauſe they dealt by revenge, and took vengeance with a deſpiteful heart, to deſtroy Iſrael for the old hatred or enmity that was betwixt them, v. 15. And ſo it fared alſo with Tyre, Ezech. 26. Becauſe Tyrus hath ſaid againſt Jeruſalem, Aha, ſhe is broken that was the gates of the people; I ſhall be repleniſhed, now ſhe is laid waſt, v. 2. All which put together, 1. the conjunction of all theſe in this deſolation of the Jews by the Aſſyrians, the former enmities, and frequent invaſions and wars of all theſe againſt the Jews, 2. and the not only rejoycing at it, but partaking of the ſpoils of it, 3. the deſtructions which ſoon befell them as a puniſhment thereof, may ſerve for a key to let us in to the full importance of this Pſalm, which will beſt be divided into theſe two parts, the conjunction and continual (not any one ſingle) conſpiration of the enemies of God againſt his people, and the deſtructions that at laſt attended them, v. 9, 10. &c.

d. עֵין דֹּאר

V. 10. Endor] עֵין דֹּאר Endor is not mentioned in the ſtory to which this paſſage of the diſcomfiture of Jabin's hoſt and ſlaughter of Siſera belongs, Judg. 4. yet appears, Joſ. 17. 11. to be part of the portion that fell to Manaſſes. Now to this adjoyned Taanach and Megiddo, as is expreſt in that place of Joſhua. And in Deborah's ſong we find that this fight with the King of Canaan was in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo, Judg. 5. 19. and ſo it will not be ſtrange, that they ſhould here be affirmed to have periſhed at Endor, which ſo neer joyns to thoſe places.

e. נְדִיבֵמוֹ

V. 11. Nobles] נְדִיבֵמוֹ from נָדַב voluntary, ingenuous, liberal, is the title not of Nobles only, but eſpecially of Rulers or Princes, to whom that quality ſo properly belongs, and ſo well becomes, and bears analogy to that of εὐεργέται, benefactors, Luk. 22.25. (ſee note c. on that Chapter.)

f.

V. 12. Houſes] That אִוָּה in Piel ſignifies to deſire, and נָאוָה in Niphal, deſirable, faire, beautiful (for which the Rabbines uſe נאוה, and נאות; the Chaldee נָאֵי) there is no doubt. From this נָאוֹת here doth regularly come, and not from נָוֶה, and in this ſenſe the word is uſed, Pſal. 33. 1. נָאוָה תְהִלָּה praiſe is comely, πρέπει, ſay the LXXII. So 93. 5. לְבֵיתְךָ נָאוָה קֹדֶשׁ holineſs is comely for thy houſe, and Iſa. 52. 7. How נָאוּ beautifull? And ſo the Chaldee underſtands it here, כָּל גְּוִיתִין all the bravery, or ornaments of God, from the Hebrew עָרָה ornatus eſt (as Ezek. 7. 20. the Sanctuary is ſtyled צְבִי עֶדְיוֹ the glory or beauty of his ornament, in the ſame word which the Chaldee here uſeth.) The Latine render them duly omne mundum; but the Syriack ſeems to have miſread the Chaldee, עִירוֹת Cities, for עִדְיוֹת mundum, and accordingly they read ܡܕܝܢܬܐ City. But the Jewiſh Arab reads, the dwelling places of God, מאוא אללה, the Arabick אוא, that anſwereth to אוה in Hebrew, ſignifying, to dwell, and making it probable that the root in Hebrew alſo might have that ſignification. And the LXXII. ſeem to have expreſt this notion, reading θυσιαστήριον, altar, and ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick; or as other copies have it, ἁγιαστήριον, Sanctuary, which the Latine follows, and read Sanctuarium. This therefore may well be the meaning of the נְאוֹת אֱלֹהִים here, the Sanctuary, or Temple of God, (eſpecially if the Pſalm be underſtood of the Aſſyrian invaſion, for that fell heavy on the Temple) the Hebrew נאות (very eaſily tranſmuted into the Greek νάος, and ναΐος,) that beautiful fabrick, ſet apart to his ſervice. There is yet another notion wherein נָאוָה is oft uſed for paſtures, or feeding grounds, and hath frequently the addition of מִדְבָּר wilderneſs, or deſert, by which title the Jews call all land that was untilled. So Joel 1. 19. the paſtures of the wilderneſs, the LXXII. read ὡραῖα, the beautiful places, and Jer. 9. 10. τρίβους, the paths; but Jer. 23. 10. αἱ νομαὶ τῆς ἐρήμου, the feeding places of the wilderneſs, and Joel 2. 22. τὰ πεδία, the fields of the deſert. And in this ſenſe 'tis poſſible it ſhould be here taken, in reference to the Scenitæ, Arabians, and Moabites (if the Pſalm belong to their war in Jehoſaphat's time) whoſe wealth was their Cattel, and not being content with their own paſtures, they would take theſe paſtures and fat demeans of God into their Common. Thus the Midianites had done, Judg. 6, 5. for they came up with their cattel, and their Tents, &c. and the ſtory of Gideon in repelling theſe, and taking Oreb and Zeeb, Jud. 7. 25. is here mentioned, v. 11. and to the mention of them it here follows immediately, Who ſaid, Let us take to our ſelves theſe נְאוֹת, whether beauties, ornaments, or paſtures of God in poſſeſſion. Which, if it belong to thoſe Midianites in Judges, cannot be applicable to the Temple: And if it belong to the Moabites, &c. in Jehoſaphat's time, then ſtill this circumſtance of the perſons to whom 'tis applied, makes this interpretation the more probable, in caſe the Pſalm belong to that war, wherein the Moabites and Ammonites were the principal, who probably moſt affected theſe their paſtures.

נָאוֹת

g. גַּלְגַּל

V. 13. Wheel] What שִׁיתֵמוֹ כַּגַּלְגַּל here ſignifies, muſt be uncertain, becauſe of the ambiguity of the word גַּלְגַּל, which as it ſignifies a wheel, ſo it is alſo uſed for ſtraws, ſtubble, duſt, or chaffe, &c. which, becauſe of its lightneſs, is toſſed and turned, and carried away by the wind, according to the primitive notion of גָּלַל to turne. In this latter ſenſe the word is found, Iſa. 17. 13. as the chaffe of the mountains before the wind, וְכַגַּלְגַּל and as galgal before the whirlwind. The Chaldee there retain the very Hebrew word כְּגַלְגְּלָא in what notion ſoever belongs to that word; but the LXXII. read κονιορτὸν τροχοῦ, the duſt

of the wheel, and ſo the Arabick from them, and the Syriack to the ſame ſenſe ﻟﻠﺪﻭﺍﻟﻴﺐ, which the tranſlator there duly renders feſtuca; and ſo the Syriack word ſignifies without any queſtion, Mat. 7.3. where for κάρφος, mote in thy brothers eye, they read ﻟﻠﺪﻭﺍﻟﻴﺐ. Thus Abu Walid ſaith that גלגל is here קמאש ſmall motes, or pieces of any thing, lying on the ground, as of ſtraw, &c. which he ſaith is manifeſt by קש, which follows, though, ſaith he, ſome render it in the notion of wheel, by a manifeſt error, though an antient one. So the Jewiſh Arab renders it מאלגואבל as ſmall duſts that one ſcatters with his hand, or ſcatterings of things. And thus the learned Val. Schindler underſtands it in this place, and then there can be no difficulty in the whole paſſage; גַּלְגַּל as motes or chaffe will be all one with כְּמֹץ as motes (the Engliſh word of great affinity with the Hebrew) and ſtubble, which is joyned with it in Iſaiah, and כְּקַשׁ to the ſame ſenſe here. In Iſaiah, they will be chaſed as the מֹץ of the mountains before the wind, and like the גַּלְגַּל before the whirl-wind; where מֹץ and גַּלְגַּל ſeem to differ as little as wind and whirl-wind. And here only the order inverted, and קַשׁ for מֹץ, make them as גַּלְגַּל and as קַשׁ, as chaffe and as ſtubble before the wind. And thus the rendring is very natural. And yet after all this, none of the antient interpreters adhere to this notion, but render it in the former (as Abu Walid truly obſerved of the antients) that of a wheel; ſo the Chaldee with a large paraphraſe to expreſs this to be their meaning, as a wheel וּמִתְחַבְּלְגַל —— which is turned and moved, and never ſtands ſtill in a declivity. The LXXII. ὡς τροχὸν, as a wheel; the Syriack as ﻟﻠﺪﻭﺍﻟﻴﺐ, the word which they certainly uſe for a wheel, Eccl. 12.6. Iſa. 28. 28. and Ezech. 23.24. And ſo the Latine, pone eos ut rotam; and the Arabick and Æthiopick, ſet them as a wheel. And in reverence to this concurrent judgment of all theſe, together with the Interlinear and our modern tranſlators, it will not be amiſs to retain this notion of wheel, yet ſo as may beſt agree with the context, and with the mention of wheels when it is joyned with chaffe, &c. in other places. For the wheel was the inſtrument uſed in husbandry for the beating the corn out of the ſtraw, and breaking the ſtraw into ſmall parts, τροχοὶ ἁμάξης ἀλοητικῆς, Iſa. 28.28. the threſhing-wheels of a Cart: ſee the manner of it largely ſet down in Annot. on Mat. 3.1. And then the phraſe in this ſenſe will be very intelligible and expreſſive alſo, if only we be careful to obſerve, that the wheel here is the inſtrument of breaking or threſhing, and ſo that the words muſt be thus rendred, not make them, ut rotam, as a wheel, i.e. as a wheel is made, but make them, ut rota, as a wheel makes other things, i. e. as a wheel deals with the corn, ſo ſhalt thou deal with them, threſh and break them in pieces. So ſhall we find the phraſe in that eminent place, Iſa. 28. 28. Corn is bruiſed, becauſe he will not ever be threſhing it, nor breaking it with the wheel of his cart, nor bruiſe it with his horſemen: where the wheel is the agent (and not the patient) that which breaks. This was needful to be advertiſed; becauſe in the next word כְּקַשׁ like the chaffe or ſtubble before the wind, the chaffe is the patient (and not the agent) that which is driven away by the wind, after the wheel hath done its execution upon the ſheaves, threſht out the corn, broken the ſtraw, for then what remains, but that the duſt and chaff, and all that is good for nothing, be winnowed, and carried away with the wind? What their manner of winnowing was, is alſo at large ſet down Annotations on Matth. 3. 1. And from thence this 14th. verſe explained, as far as the flames ſetting the Mountains on fire, not burning the earth or body of the mountains, but only burning the chaff which is winnowed from the corne upon the threſhing-floor, ſituate for that turn on ſome eminent place, and ſo making a flame upon the mountain. This being without queſtion the meaning of that latter part of v. 14. it is moſt probable that it ſhould belong alſo to the former. All the difficulty is in the notion of יַעַר, which we render a wood (and may be thought to refer to fire burning wood) but ſignifies any open place, where graſs and trees grow, a foreſt, &c. ſo Pſal. 132.6. where we render יַעַר the wood, 'tis certain the threſhing-floor of Araunah the Jebuſite is meant by it, for there we know the Temple was built; and ſo 1 King. 7. 2. we render יַעַר foreſt, the houſe of the forreſt of Lebanon, Solomons own houſe being near the Temple, in that tract of ground not in that wood) called Lebanon, where the tall Cedars grew. The Chaldee there renders it בֵּית מַקְרֵת מַלְכְּוָא a houſe of pleaſure, or ſummer-houſe for the Kings, ſuch as was wont to be in the freeſt and cooleſt aire. The ſame is, Mic. 3. 12. called, the mountain of the houſe, לְבָמוֹת יַעַר on the high place of the foreſt. And then this very well agrees to the matter in hand, the foreſt and the mountain being in effect as to this uſe, all one, both of them open places, where the wind comes and drives away the duſt and chaffe (eſpecially when it is the higher part of the foreſt, ſuch as that floor of Araunah was) and ſuch as were generally ſet apart for this purpoſe. And ſo for the fire to burn the foreſt, is no more than the flames burning the mountains, both of them to expreſs the concluſion of a threſhing, when the chaffe hath the fire ſet to it, and is burnt all up, that it be not, upon the turning of the wind, blown back on the corn again: of which ſee more, Annot. on Mat. 3.1. That both theſe verſes, 13, and 14, intirely belong to this one matter, the threſhing and winnowing, and burning the chaffe conſequent to it, appears by the ἀνταπόδοσις, or application of the ſimilitude, v. 15. ſo perſecute them with thy tempeſt, and terrifie them with thy ſtorme or whirl-wind, which hath no propriety to any other notion of the words but that of winnowing.

V. 18. Whoſe name is Jehovah] The conſtruction of the words in the cloſe of the Pſalm lyes moſt probably thus, וְיֵדְעוּ and they ſhall know, i. e. it ſhall be known by this means, כִּי אַתָּה שִׁמְךָ יְהוָה thou art thy name Jehovah, i. e. that thou art what thy name Jehovah imports; and what that is, is expounded in the remainder of the verſe, לְבַדְּךָ עֶלְיוֹן —thou only the high over all the earth, that being indeed the meaning of Jehovah, the infinite, eternal, and ſo only ſupreme power over all the world. But it is poſſible that before שִׁמְךָ thy name, ſome preпoſition (as 'tis ordinary) is underſtood, and ſo it will be rendred more expreſly, to the ſame ſenſe, that thou, according to thy name Jehovah, art only, &c. Or becauſe שֵׁם name is among the Rabbins ordinarily uſed for God himſelf, therefore it will not be remote from Hebrew ſtyle, if שִׁמְךָ יְהוָה be reſolved to ſignifie no more than Jehovah, and then this will be the rendring, that thou, Jehovah, art alone the moſt High——

h. וְיֵדְעוּ אַתָּה שִׁמְךָ יְהוָה

The

The Eighty Fourth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The eighty fourth Pſalm is the panting of a pious ſoul toward God, a pathetical expreſſion of the benefits and joy of his publick ſervice, and an encouragement of the people to make the ways of paſſage thither from all quarters fair and paſſable, It ſeemeth to have been compoſed in ſome time of detention from, and deprivation of thoſe advantages and priviledges. It was ſet to the tune called Gittith, (ſee note on Pſal. 8. a.) and committed to the Præfect of the Muſick to be ſung by the poſterity of Coreh, (ſee Pſal. 42. 1.)

TO the chief Muſitian upon Gittith, A Pſalm for the ſons of Coreh.

1. O omnipotent Lord, thou that ruleſt and diſpenſeſt all things by thine own power and wiſdom, yet uſeſt the miniſtery of thy celeſtial Angels herein, and haſt whole armies of them perpetually ready for thy ſervice, and moſt peculiarly makeſt uſe of their miniſtery in the place of thy publick worſhip, there to preſentiate and exhibit thy ſelf to thy ſervants, to teſtify by them that thou reſideſt there, as it were in thy Majeſty, to ſet up a glorious tent among us (a type of thy promiſed Incarnation, inhabiting and pitching thy tent in humane fleſh, John. 1. 14.) what condition can be ſo deſirable or valuable, ſo honourable or joyous, as this, to be thus admitted unto thy preſence, and injoy the divine effects and benefits of it?

1. How amiable are thy Tabernacles, O Lord of hoſts!

2. Of this none is more ſenſible than thoſe which are deprived of theſe felicities: and this is our portion at this time, which raiſeth our deſires to an holy impatience, and vehement panting thirſt (ſee Pſal. 42. 1.) a moſt earneſt purſuit of this ſo great a dignity, of being, after ſo long an excluſion, admitted to this thy throne of grace, thy divine moſt comfortable preſence, without which we faint and are ready to die, our life is no life, but a melancholy image of death without it. To this therefore we aſpire with all our moſt ardent affections, and as with a ſhout or jubilation excite one another to the moſt paſſionate purſuit of it.

a. 2. My ſoul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the Courts of the Lord: my heart and my fleſh ‖ [a] crieth out for the living God.

‖ ſhouteth to

3. Now that we are deprived of this felicity, the ſilly birds (whoſe happineſs we have reaſon to envy) are permitted to inhabit there; no place that they ſeem ſo ambitious to chooſe, to build their neſt and lay their young ones in, as thoſe which were wont to be honoured with thy preſence among thy ſervants (as if the protection which was wont to be afforded us upon our addreſſes to God, were by them eſpecially hoped for there.) O that thou wouldeſt be pleaſed of thine infinite power and goodneſs, to afford us that dignity which thoſe little birds, the ſparrow and ſwallow, are now principally partakers of.

3. Yea the ſparrow hath found an houſe, and the ſwallow a neſt for her ſelf, where ſhe may lay her young, even thy altars, O Lord of hoſts, my King and my God.

4. O what a bleſſedneſs do they enjoy, that are allowed thoſe celeſtial priviledges of thy conſtant ſolemn ſervice, to divide their years betwixt praying and praiſing, petitioning and receiving thy mercies, and then returning their devouteſt acknowledgments to thee at the ſolemn feſtivals;

4. Bleſſed are they that dwell in thy houſe; they ſhall be ſtill praiſing thee, Selah.

b. 5. Who place all their truſt and confidence in thy aids, and ſeek them from thee in thy Temple, the place of thy peculiar reſidence; who are always full of devout thoughts of going up thither to the ſacred ſolemnities, and of fitting the high ways for commodious paſſage to themſelves and others, (or that have free liberty to reſort thither.)

5. Bleſſed is the Man ‖ whoſe ſtrength is in thee, †in [b] whoſe heart are the ways of them:

‖ Who hath ſtrength in thee,
† the high wayes are in their hearts, or in the midſt of them.

c. 6. Which by trenching and draining the moſt wet and watery valleys, make the way very paſſable, in the moiſteſt ſeaſon, from every corner of the land to Jeruſalem.

6. Who paſſing through [c] the * valley of Bacha, make it a well, the rain alſo filleth the pools.

* Mulberry-valley, or valley of weeping,

7. And ſo go up cheerfully and unanimouſly and devoutly on their road, from one ſtage to another, and at length come to that amiable and deſirable place, where God is ſo graciouſly pleaſed to exhibit and preſentiate himſelf. (And ſo in the antitype of the Sanctuary, the Chriſtian Church, there is no doubt but he will give grace, and that abundantly, to all that ask and knock, and perſevere in an holy obedience to his directions, to ſeek and beg it of him in Chriſt.)

7. They go from ‖ ſtrength to ſtrength; every one of them in Sion appeareth before God.

turn it into a ſpring, even when the rain filleth, or covereth—— ‖ valley to valley, the God of Gods ſhall appear in Sion. (a note c.

8. Thou therefore that ſitteſt and ruleſt in the midſt of all thine armies of Angels, and by them ſendeſt down thy bleſſings, as oft as they bear up our prayers to thee, that haſt obliged thy ſelf in a peculiar manner to protect this thy choſen people, and in token thereof vouchſafeſt to be called their God; I beſeech thee to hearken to and grant this prayer of mine for the free and cheerful return of thy people to the place of thy ſolemn and holy worſhip.

8. O Lord God of hoſts, hear my prayer; give ear, O God of Jacob, Selah.

9. Thou art our onely God, our onely protector and defender, we beſeech thee in mercy to behold and receive the petition, to grant the prayer of our Soveraign whom thou with thine holy oyle haſt inaugurated, and by thy ſpecial providence appointed to be King over us.

9. Behold, O God our ſhield, and look upon the face of thine Anointed.

d. 10. It is infinitely more deſirable and valuable to ſpend one day in thy preſence, and ſervice in the place where thou art pleaſed peculiarly to exhibit thy ſelf, than a thouſand days in any other condition, deprived of this priviledge and advantage; more eligible to lye at the threſhold, in the moſt abject condition of neerneſs to this palace of thine, than to have all the pompe and glory of any the moſt ſplendid worldly condition, and to be withheld from this liberty, as men excommunicated and ſeparated from thy preſence.

10. For a day in thy Courts is better then a thouſand: I had rather † be a [d] dorekeeper in the houſe of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedneſs.

† lye at the threſhold.

11. For

11. For the Lord God is a ſun and ſhield; the Lord will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.

11. For this God of ours, that there exhibits himſelf, is the ſpring of all light and ſtrength, directs us in our way and defends us in it; he will not only pity and deliver, but even advance and dignifie, and heap all abundance of bleſſings, both corporal and ſpiritual in this life, and eternal in another life, on all thoſe that faithfully adhere to him, and conſtantly obſerve his commandments. (Surely God heareth not ſinners, but him that is a worſhipper of God, and doth his will, him he heareth, denyeth him no requeſt which is truly for his avail to have granted him.)

12. O Lord God of hoſts, bleſſed is the man that truſteth in thee.

12. O thou bleſſed omnipotent Lord of all Majeſty, how unſpeakably great and valuable is that one felicity, which conſiſts in a conſtant adherence to, and dependance on thee? He that is thus united to the fountain of all good things, can never ſtand in need of any thing that is truly profitable or deſirable.

Annotations on Pſalm LXXXIV.

V. 3. Cryeth out] From רָנַן to cry aloud, vociferate, or jubilate, is יְרַנְּנוּ here, and it is uſed either for grief, but eſpecially for joy and exultation: the LXXII. fitly render it by ἀγαλλίασιν, exceeding joy. And being here joyned with אֶל to, it hath a ſpecial notation, ſuch as is taken from the cuſtom of Mariners, or Soldiers, or husbandmen; the firſt of which when they looſe from land into the ocean, ſet ſail with a ſhout; the ſecond when they aſſault their enemies, incourage one another with a ſhout, when they have gotten the victory, expreſs their joy with a ſhout; the third when they conclude their harveſt, do it with a ſhout, called therefore proverbially (Iſa. 9. 3.) the joy in harveſt: And ſo when they went up to the feaſts at Jeruſalem, they went with an holy jubilation, or ſhout. And this ſeems to be the full importance of the phraſe in this place, My heart and my fleſh, my rational, and even carnal ſenſitive faculties ſhout to the living God, are ardently deſirous of thus going up to the Sanctuary, are ready with their ἀλαλαγμοὺς, evations, and vociferations (when they be allowed that favour) to go up to the preſence of this living God, the joy of their very life, whoſe gratious aſſiſtance and exhibition of himſelf is the only tenure they have in all kind of proſperity.

V. 5. Hearts] The difficulties of this verſe may poſſibly be removed by remembring the notion of לֵבָב and לֵב, not only for the heart, but by metaphor (being oft applyed to thoſe things that have no heart) for the middle. So בְּלֵבַב יַמִּים Jon. 2. 3. not into the heart, but the midſt of the Seas. So Deut. 4. 11. the mountain burnt with fire to the לֵב (not heart, but) midſt of heaven, 2 Sam. 18. 14. Abſolom was alive בְּלֵב in the midſt of the Oake. So Jer. 51. 1. inhabitants of the לֵב (not heart, but) midſt of them that riſe up againſt me. And if בְּלִבָּם may thus, with the learned Grotius, be rendred here in the midſt of them, then the paſſage will be clear, Bleſſed is the man עוּזּוֹ בָךְ עוֹזּוֹ, literally ſtrength, or (as the LXXII. and Syriack and Latine βοήθειαν ——) help to him in thee, i. e. which hath in thee ſtrength, help, or protection, being allowed liberty (as the former part of the Pſalm determins the ſenſe) to reſort to Gods Sanctuary, which is ſometimes called עוֹז, and from whence that protection and aid in all exigencies may be had. Then follows to the ſame ſenſe מְסִלּוֹת בִּלְבָבָם paths, or highwayes, foſſeways, or cauſeys (from סָלַל to raiſe, or pave a way with ſtone) ἀναβάσεις, aſcents, i. e. wayes of going up to the Sanctuary, in the midſt of them, i. e. who have ſuch highways, free liberty to go up to the holy aſſembly in the midſt of them, or (if לִבָּם muſt ſignifie their hearts) who take care and look to the maintenance of theſe cauſeys, in order to the ſacred aſſemblies, which they that are deprived of that priviledge of going up to them moſt ſadly bemoan the want of. When Jeruſalem became the Metropolis of Judæa, the roads to it, upon civil grounds, were to be made large and paſſable; but when the Temple was built there, and by the Law the whole nation obliged thrice every year to reſort thither, this was now, upon weightier reaſons, to be provided for. Eſpecially conſidering that Judæa was a mountainous, uneven Countrey, where the brooks in the valleys upon any fall of rain were apt to ſwell, ſo as to be hardly paſſable. And therefore among the cauſes for a עִיבּוּר intercalation of a month, and alteration of the ſeaſons of the feſtivals thereby, the chief that are ſet down by †Maimonides, are מִפְּנֵי הַדְּרָכִים becauſe of the wayes, (when in reſpect of them occaſion requires it,) וּמִפְּנֵי הַגְּשָׁרִים and becauſe of the bridges. And the ſame Maimonides tells us, Hilch. Roths. c. 8. that for the maintenance of the wayes every year at the 15. of the Month Adar, Commiſſioners were ſent out to look to the repairs of bridges, cauſeys, &c. This makes it not unreaſonable to ſuppoſe that the wayes to the Temple ſhould here be mentioned, in reference to thoſe ſacred ſolemnities, as when Lam. 1 4. 'tis ſaid, The wayes of Zion mourn, becauſe none come to the ſolemn feaſts. And then as it is a felicity to have the uſe of theſe wayes, ſo muſt it alſo have been an act of piety in any to take care of them, that they might be ſerviceable to this end, for themſelves and others. And to this purpoſe alſo the next verſe will be beſt interpreted: ſee note c. Abu Walid ſeems to take מְסִלּוֹת for ſtrengths, and interprets it of ſtrong and firm reſolutions. Kimchi in his roots renders it high praiſes. The Jewiſh Arab expreſſes the whole paſſage by קלובהם מחלאה whoſe hearts are ſincere.

† Hilch. Kid.

6. Valley of Bacha] From בָּכָה flevit, is בְּכִי weeping, and in Arabick بَكَا. And from this notion of the word the LXXII. read κοιλάδα τῶν κλαυθμώνων, the valley of weeping, and the Vulgar, Lachrymarum, of tears; and the Chaldee ſeems to follow that ſenſe. Our later interpreters here make uſe of the notion בָּכָא for a Mulberry-tree (and the Jewiſh Arab telling us in a note that it is a valley in Syria Damaſcena, yet renders it אגאג, as much as to ſay, the valley of Plumb-trees) ſo 2 Sam. v. 23. over againſt בָּכָאִים the mulberry-trees; and ſo again, v. 24. where the Chaldee reads אִילָנַיָּא trees. The uſe of the word muſt probably be deduced from the ſort of the ſoile where mulberry-trees grow. For of them it is obſervable that they uſe to grow (not in dry and waterleſs ſoils, as vulgar Interpreters would fanſy, but) peculiarly in low grounds or valleys (non temere in montibus, ſaith Pliny, l. 16. c. 18.) in a fat and moiſt ſoile, ſay the Herbaliſts. And ſo, if that were the rendring here, the paſſing through the mulberry valley would fitly ſignifie paſſing through a low and wet and moiſt place, which according to the notion of בָּכָה is by us called, a weeping ground. The Syriack here read, ܒܥܡܩ ܕܒܟܐ ܥܒܪܘ ܘܒܥܘ, which will beſt be rendred, they paſſed through, or by, or into profound weeping; yet thereby meaning not tears from mens eyes, ſo probably as waters overflowing the ground by which which they paſt, for ſo Job 28.11. חֹבְשִׁי נְהָרוֹת מִבְּכִי he bindeth the floods from weeping, is by us duly rendred from overflowing. So again, Job. 38.16. we have נִבְכֵי יָם (from the ſame theme) the Interlinear reads fletus maris, the weeping of the ſea: It ſignifies moſt probably the waters that diſtill from thence (as tears from the eyes) and paſs by ſecret meatus in the earth. The LXXII. reads πηγὴν θαλάσσης, the ſpring of the ſea. And then by analogy with theſe, we ſhall beſt render the Hebrew בְּעֵמֶק הַבָּכָא through the valley of weeping, or the moiſt and weeping valley. And to make or turne that into a ſpring (ſo מַעְיָן יְשִׁיתוּהוּ ſignifies, they make it a well, or turn it into a ſpring) is by caſting up earth and trenching it (as the Fens with us are drained) to render it a ſpring, the water whereof having gained a regular courſe, becomes a ſtream, paſſable in the deep of winter, when, as here it follows, the rain covers or fills the pools. So thoſe words will beſt be rendred גַּם בְּרָכוֹת יַעְטֶה מוֹרֶה yea, or though, or even where the rain covers the pools. The ambiguity of the words בְּרָכָה and מוֹרֶה have cauſed very various rendrings of theſe words. But as מוֹרֶה from one notion of יָרָה in Hiphil, for teaching, ſignifies a law-giver, and ſo is by the LXXII. rendred νομοθέτην, ſo from another notion of it for watering, it certainly ſignifies rain, ſo Joel 2.23. he will give הַמּוֹרֶה the rain, and again, מוֹרֶה the early and latter rain; and ſo in proportion with the valley, and the weeping, or waterineſs foregoing, it muſt be thought to ſignifie here. And ſo likewiſe as בְּרָכָה from בָּרַךְ benedixit, ſignifies benediction, and is rendred by the LXXII. εὐλογίας, bleſſing; ſo not only the Chaldee בִּרְכָּה, but with the ſame points as here, the Hebrew בְּרֵכָה is uſed for a pool, Jud. 1.15. give me בְּרָכָה not a bleſſing, but the pool, for thou haſt given me a ſouth land, or dry land; and ſo it there expreſly follows, give me alſo גֻּלּוֹת מָיִם ſprings of waters. And ſo this well connects with the former part of this verſe, they ſhall make the mulberry-valley, or weeping-valley a ſpring, drain it and make it paſſable in a channel or water-courſe, and that even after the fall of the greateſt rains, when the pools are ſwolne and fill'd higheſt; this being the benefit of the foſſe-ways, forementioned, v. 5. This is the moſt probable interpretation of the verſe, in perfect accord with the former, and the deſign of the Pſalm in magnifying the felicities of thoſe that are allowed the liberty of the ſacred aſſemblies at Jeruſalem. And to the ſame ſenſe follows in the next verſe, יֵלְכוּ מֵחַיִל אֶל חָיִל they ſhall walk or proceed from valley to valley (ſo חַיִל ſignifies 1 King. 21.23. בְּחֵל in the valley of Jezreel: ſo in the Targum, Iſa. 28.1. חֵילָה שְׁמַנְתָּה the valley of fatneſs) or perhaps from trench to trench (for ſo חֵיל, Pſal. 122. 7. is rendred by the Interlinear, in antemurali tuo, in thy trench, without the wall: ſo Lam. 2.8. Nahum. 3. 8.) expreſſing the convenience of their journey through all thoſe moſt ſuſpected, and naturally impaſſable places, by the help of trenches, or by means of theſe foſſe-ways; till at length יֵרָאֶה אֶל אֱלֹהִים בְּצִיּוֹן the God of Gods ſhall appear, or be ſeen, or beheld in Sion, i. e. ſhall ſhew or reveal himſelf gratiouſly to them there; or as Jehovah jire ſignifies, Gen. 22.8. ſhall provide, and take care of them, as he will be ſure to do of all faithful ſervants of his, that addreſs themſelves to him there, in his Temple or Sanctuary.

V. 11. Door-keeper] From סַף threſhold is הִסְתּוֹפֵף to ſit, or ly at, or on the threſhold, when one is not admitted into the houſe, in a vile and abject condition. The LXXII. here renders παραῤῥιπτεῖσθαι, to be caſt down in the houſe of God, to lie as a Lazar at the door, or as the παραπεσόντες, in the antient Church, which lay proſtrate without the door of the Church, to beſeech the prayers of them that enter there, being themſelves unworthy to be admitted thither. The Targum reads לְאִדְבָּקָא בְּבֵית to cleave to the houſe, i. e. to lie faſtened to the door of the houſe, which is not the office of the Nethinim or door-keepers, that were admitted in, but the condition of the vileſt perſon that is ſhut out of the Temple, only is admitted to lie and beg mercy at the entrance into it. And this the Pſalmiſt much prefers before any the moſt flouriſhing worldly condition of thoſe that are kept at a greater diſtance from it.

The Eighty Fifth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The eighty fifth Pſalm is a thankful acknowledgment of Gods mercy in returning their captivity, and an humble importunate prayer for the confirming, continuing, and perfecting this mercy to them. It hath ſome degree of propriety to Davids return to Jeruſalem after his flight from Abſolom, but much more to the days of Ezra and Nehemiah, after the captivity. It was committed to the Præfect of the Muſick, to be ſung by the poſterity of Coreh.

To the chief Muſitian, A Pſalm for the ſons of Korah.

1, 2, 3. It is thy ſpecial mercy and compaſſion to us, O Lord, that we that were chaſed and carried captive from our countrey, are now reſtored to it again. Our ſins that brought theſe ſad effects of thy diſpleaſure upon us, thou haſt now been pleaſed to pardon, and ſo being reconciled to us, of thine own abundant free grace and mercy, to releaſe us from thoſe ſevere puniſhments, which have moſt juſtly lain upon us for our provoking offences.

1. Lord, thou haſt been favourable to thy Land; thou haſt brought back the captivity of Jacob.

2. Thou haſt [a] forgiven the iniquity of thy people, thou haſt covered all their ſin. Selah.

3. Thou haſt taken away all thy wrath, thou haſt turned thy ſelf from the fierceneſs of thy anger.

4. From thee, O bleſſed Lord, all our deliverance proceeds be thou pleaſed to interpoſe thy hand, to perfect this work of mercy and reconciliation and reſtauration, which thou haſt ſo gratiouſly begun for us, and pardon the deviations that ſince our return we have moſt unexcuſably been guilty of.

4. Turn us, O God of our ſalvation, and cauſe thine anger toward us to ceaſe.

5, 6. We have long been exerciſed under thy ſharp hand of puniſhments, and allmoſt been tempted to deſpair of any releaſe either to our ſelves or our poſterities; and ſince thou haſt brought us back to our countrey, our new freſh provocations have again withheld thy loving kindneſs from us, caſt back the work of rebuilding thy Temple. O be thou now pleaſed, as thou haſt begun to give us ſome eſſay of thy mercy, to perfect and complete it to us, to reſtore unto us that life and pleaſure and joy, which we were wont to enjoy in approaching to and attending on thee in thy Sanctuary.

5. Wilt thou be angry with us for ever? wilt thou draw out thy anger to all generations?

6. Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoyce in thee?

7. She

7. Shew us thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us thy ſalvation.

7. This is a divine work of mercy and deliverance, O Lord, be thou gratiouſly pleaſed to afford it us.

8. I will hear what God the Lord will ſpeak, for he will ſpeak peace unto his people, and to his ſaints: [b] || but let them not turn again to folly.

|| and they ſhall not, or let them not—

8. And this I am confident thou wilt now do in return to our prayers, if we be but duly qualified to receive ſo great a mercy, ſincerely penitent for our former ſins, faithfully reſolved on a new and holy life, and continue conſtant in theſe vows of never relapſing to our former provoking ſins: All which we ſhall, after ſuch correction, certainly be careful to performe, if we be not the moſt ſtupid fools in the world. b.

9. Surely his ſalvation is nigh them that fear him, that glory may dwell in our land.

9. God certainly on his part will be moſt ready to perfect this mercy to us, that thy Temple may be rebuilt, and the glorious majeſtatick preſence or inhabitation of God may return and be reſettled in Jeruſalem; if we only be on our parts careful to qualifie our ſelves for the receiving it, by ſincere reformation, and perſevering obedience to his divine precepts.

10. [c] Mercy and truth are met together; righteouſneſs and peace have kiſſed each other.

10. Let us be careful to approve the ſincerity of our obedience to God, and he will certainly crown that with his mercies, all felicity and proſperity. c.

11. Truth ſhall ſpring out of the earth, and righteouſneſs ſhall look down from heaven.

11. Let our hearts fructifie in good works, and God will cheriſh and reward them.

12. Yea the Lord ſhall give that which is good, and our land ſhall yield her increaſe.

12. Theſe two things ſhall never be ſeparated, our bringing forth fruits of righteouſneſs, and Gods heaping all manner of good upon us.

13. Righteouſneſs ſhall go before him, and || ſhall ſet us in the way of his ſteps.

|| he ſhall ſet his ſteps in, or to the way: ſecunc c.

13. Our duty it is to walk obediently before him, and then he will follow in performing his part of the Covenant of mercy, bring us to all that is deſirable or valuable to us.

Annotations on Pſal. LXXXV.

a. נָשָׂאתָ עָוֹן

V. 2. Forgiven the iniquity] נָשָׂאתָ עָוֹן, literally thou haſt born, or taken away iniquity, is by the Chaldee rendred שְׁבַקְתָּא pardoned, (and ſo by the Syriack) by the LXXII. ἀφῆκας, remitted. And this, with all that follows, of covering their ſin, taking away his wrath, &c. a lively expreſſion of what went before, v. 1. the bringing back their captivity. It is a maxim among the Jewiſh Doctors, that Captivity is one way of expiation, and ſo to return from thence was a ſure indication that the ſin, for which it was inflicted, was remitted, or done away. This, ſaith † Abarbanel, was obumbrated in the Azazel, or ſcape-goat, which, as the other that was ſlain, was a ſin-offering, as appears, Lev. 16. v. 5. He ſhall take—two kids for a ſin-offering——And then the confeſſing the ſins over him, mentioned, v. 21. (Aaron ſhall lay both his hands on the head of the live goat, and confeſs over him all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael, &c. putting them on the head of the goat: And the goat ſhall bear upon him all their iniquities into a land of ſeparation, v. 22.) ſhews that they were to carry their ſins with them into the land of their captivity, meant by the אֶרֶץ גְּזֵרָה the land of ſeparation, that land, whatſoever it was, whither the divine providence had deſigned their deportation. From whence therefore being now returned, their ſins for which they were thus puniſhed, are ſuppoſed to be left behind them, no more to be laid to their charge, if their return to their former ſins do not cauſe them to be called to remembrance. Thus indeed they did, as appears by the books of Ezra, chap. 9. 1. and Nehem. chap. 5. and chap. 13. and that gave ſufficient occaſion as for the Faſt, Ezra 9. 3. and Nehem. 9. 1. ſo for the earneſt deprecations here following in this Pſalm, v. 4.

† on Levit. 16.

b. וְאַל יָשׁוּבוּ לְכִסְלָה

V. 8. Not turn to folly] For וְאַל יָשׁוּבוּ לְכִסְלָה and they ſhall not, or, and let them not return to folly, (which the Chaldee and Syriack render to that ſenſe) the LXXII. have καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς ἐπιστροφὰς πρὸς αὐτὸν καρδίαν, and to them that turn their heart to him, and the Latine, & ad eos qui convertuntur ad cor, and to them that are converted or returned to their heart. This they ſeem to have drawn from ſome affinity of the Hebrew words, which with ſome light changes produce this, reading for אַל not, אֶל to, and ſo joyning it in conſtruction with אֶל (twice foregoing;) and for לְכִסְלָה to folly, לֵב סֶלָה the heart, Selah: which becauſe it ſtill makes an imperfect ſenſe, and to them that turn the heart, Selah: they have therefore ſupplied the ſeeming Ellipſis, the LXXII. by addition of πρὸς αὐτὸν, to him, i.e. to God, the Latine by inſerting ad before cor, returning to the heart, which is a phraſe to ſignifie repentance or reſipiſcence, growing wiſe again (and ſo better agrees with the Hebrew, which indeed ſignifies, not returning to folly.) That they thus did read the Hebrew words, is not ſo likely, as that by occaſion of this affinity of phraſes they thus thought fit to paraphraſe the Hebrew, which is not unuſual with them in other places. And in this place, though the words be quite changed, the ſenſe doth not ſuffer much by this paraphraſe, this being on both ſides the condition of Gods removing his judgements, that they which receive them be ſincerely penitent, and then they will not return again to the folly of their former ways of ſin.

c. אֱמֶת צֶדֶק חֶסֶד שָׁלוֹם

V. 10. Mercy and truth] אֱמֶת truth, from אָמַן fidus fuit, is frequently uſed for fidelity, and is all one with πίστις, in the paſſive ſenſe for faithfulneſs, and in that notion doth well agree with צֶדֶק righteouſneſs in the latter part of the verſe (and is by the LXXII. rendred δικαιοσύνη, righteouſneſs, Gen. 24. 49. Iſa. 39. 19.) as חֶסֶד mercy, and שָׁלוֹם peace (all proſperity given us by God) are in effect all one alſo. And then the meeting of theſe pairs, mercy and truth, or fidelity, and (by way of ἐνδιάδυο, very frequent in Scripture) of righteouſneſs and peace, will ſignify the performance on Gods part proportionable to the qualification on ours: where truth or fidelity is made good towards God, there mercy will undoubtedly be had from him; where righteouſneſs on our part, there peace on Gods, i.e. all the felicity and proſperity imaginable. This rendring of the place is moſt agreeable to the matter here in hand, the confidence that God will pardon their ſins which unfeignedly return to him, v. 7, 8, 9. And to the ſame purpoſe is that which follows, v. 11. As truth or uprightneſs (ſincere reformation) ſprings out, and aſcends from the earth, the hearts of men, the proper ſoil for it to grow in;

so shall צֶדֶק righteousness in the other notion, very frequent, that for mercy (and to pass from one notion of a word to another is an elegance, and no rarity in these writings) look down from heaven, as the Sun doth upon the World, when it sheds its influences upon it, and cherishes the germina or sprouts, all productions of the earth here below. And so again, v. 12. to the Lords giving הַטּוֹב the good, indefinitely, i.e. all good things, is annexed, our land shall give יְבוּלָהּ. The word signifies from יבל in Hiphil, produxit, all the sorts of fruits which the earth brings forth, and by analogy with v. 11. where Truth was to sprout out of the earth, must signifie that sort of fruit or productions, i.e. truth, or sincerity of obedience to God; and so that again (by way of regressus, naming that first which had been last, and that last which had been first) is all one with v. 11. in the notion we have assigned it. And once more, v. 13. Righteousness, in the notion of v. 10. uprightness and fidelity, יְהַלֵּךְ shall go, or walk לְפָנָיו before his face, i.e. the face of God, mentioned in the former verse; וְיָשֵׂם and he, i.e. God, shall set פְּעָמָיו his feet לְדָרֶךְ to the way, εἰς ὁδὸν, into the way, say the LXXII. i.e. shall follow after, where righteousness goes before; having such a Prodromus or Usher, to prepare the way before him, God will solemnly and in state come on in the Procession, as Psal. 89. 14. mercy and truth are said to go before the face of God, as Heralds to engage his following after. The Chaldee read וְשַׁוֵּי shall set him טָב לְאוֹרַח in a good way, i.e. set him at liberty, in a prosperous condition, rescue, and return the captivity of them that walk uprightly before him. All these but various expressions (as in a Poem it is ordinary) of the same thing, Gods never failing to return in mercy to them that sincerely convert to him by repentance. The Jewish Arab reads this last verse in another sense, They that seek equity or justice, shall walk before him, and shall set their steps in his ways; as likewise before, v. 10. the people of goodness and truth have met together, &c. But the former sense is more probable.

The Eighty Sixth PSALM.

Paraphrase.

A Prayer of David.

The Eighty sixth Psalm was composed by David in some time of distress, probably in his flight from Absolom, and is a mixture of ardent prayer to God, and full undisturbed relyance on him, and adoration of his power and mercy.

1, 2, 3, 4. O God of all mercy, that never failest to hear and answer the prayers of those that being in distress address themselves to thy throne of grace, with humble obedient and devout hearts, with full reliance and affiance on thee, with constancy and perseverance in fervent prayer, I that am qualified by my present distress and want of thy supplies to receive this mercy from thee, that have been wonderfully favoured by thee, and do with all reverence, and yet also with confidence, and importunately, and constantly, and ardently pour out my petitions before thee, beseech thee at length that thou wilt hearken unto me, rescue me out of my present distress, refresh and comfort me in my affliction.

1. Bow down thine ear, O Lord, hear me: I am poor and needy.

a. 2. Preserve my soul, [a] for I am holy: O thou my God, save thy servant that trusteth in thee.

3. Be merciful to me, O Lord, for I cry unto thee daily.

4. Rejoyce the soul of thy servant: for unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul.

5. For it is thy property to hear and answer Prayers, and most gratiously to pardon the sins of all humble suppliants, and to abound to them in mercy and benignity.

5. For thou, Lord, art good and ‖ ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee. ‖ pardoning, סַלָּח

6. And hereon I found my trust and importunity, that thou wilt now grant this my petition.

6. Give ear, O Lord to my prayer; and attend the voice of my supplications.

7. When I am in the greatest streights, then, as in thy special opportunity, I address my prayers unto thee, being then most confident that thou wilt give me an answer of mercy.

7. In the day of my † trouble I will call upon thee, for thou wilt answer me. † distress. צָרָתִי

b. 8. Of all the Angels in heaven, much more of the false heathen Idol gods, there is none fit to be compared with thee; their power to relieve is not comparable to thine, nor proportionably their readiness for such a work of mercy.

8. Among [b] the ‖ gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord; neither are there any works like unto thy works. ‖ or, Angels

9. And this is so evident in thy works of creation (but especially in thy works of redemption, and thy strange providential dispensations, and interpositions of thy hand in behalf of thy servants) that all the blindest Idolatrous Gentiles may therein discern reasons abundantly sufficient to convince them of thy power, and to bring them, as proselytes, to thy worship, to acknowledge and magnifie thy divine Majesty; and so at length they shall do * in the days of the Messias.

9. All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorify thy name.

זֶה יְהוָה בְּיָמָיו הַמָּשִׁיחַ * this shall be in the days of the Messias. Kimchi.

10. For to thee only belongs the soveraign commanding controlling power, to which all creatures yield their obedience, as being the one only God over all the world: None but thou only hast the priviledge of working true miracles, of resisting the most puissant power of men, and so of rescuing the most disconsolate sufferers out of the utmost distresses.

10. For thou art great, and dost wondrous things; thou art God alone.

c. 11. O Lord, let thy spirit direct and guide all the actions of my life, that they may be acceptable to thee, that I may uniformely practice what thou requirest: O be thou pleased to purge all hypocrisy out of my soul, that I may perform a sincere universal obedience to thy commands, not taking any interest of the world or flesh into competition with thee.

11. Teach me thy way, O Lord; I will walk in thy truth: [c] unite my heart to fear thy name.

12.

12. I will praise thee, O Lord my God, with all mine heart, and I will glorify thy name for evermore.
13. For great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell.

11.13. This I am sure is most perfectly due to thee, and with it all the praises and acknowledgments of my whole soul, and that for ever; It being a work of thy superabundant mercy toward me thy poor indigent, helpless, and withall most unworthy servant, that thou hast not permitted me to be swallowed up with that abyss of dangers that have incompast me, but as yet preserved, and so in some degree delivered me out of them.

† formidable, or potent.

14. O God, the proud are risen against me, and the Assemblies [d] of † violent men have sought after my soul, and have not set thee before them.

d.

14. For they are a sort of obstinate, and withall very numerous, powerful, and formidable enemies, that have set themselves purposely to destroy me, without any fear of thee, or imagination that thou wilt interpose any hinderance to the prosperous success of their designs.

15. But thou, O Lord, art a God full of compassion, and gratious, long-suffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth.

15. But thou, O Lord, wilt undoubtedly relieve me, and discomfit them. Of this thy divine attributes assure me, who art so wholly made up of mercy and pity to them that are in distress, and cry to thee for help, that I cannot doubt of thy hearing and rescuing me at this time: and though thou deferrest the execution of thy wrath upon wicked doers, on purpose to reduce them by thy patience to repentance; yet when this work of thy long-sufferance and mercy proves ineffectual, when men go on impenitently and obstinately in their course, thy fidelity and performance to thy servants that are oppress by such, as well as that soveraign property, thy mercy, oblige thee to discomfit and exemplarily to punish them, and relieve and deliver those that are, oppressed by them.

16. O turn unto me, and have mercy upon me: give thy strength unto thy servant, and save the son of thy handmaid.

16. Lord, if it be thy will may this now be thy opportunity, to restore thy wonted mercies to me, to interpose thy power for my rescue, and deliver me thy most lowly servant out of these present dangers.

17. Shew me a token for good, that they which hate me may see it and be ashamed; because, thou, Lord, hast holpen me, and comforted me.

17. Let thy favour and kindness toward me be now by some means, as thou shalt think good, signally and illustriously expres, that it may be effectual to work a shame and reformation in mine enemies, so far at least, as to give over their malitious design, when they discern thee to espouse my cause, to take my part, to assist and support me against all their machinations.

Annotations on Psalm LXXXVI.

a. חָסִיד אָנִי

V.2. For I am holy] The meaning of כִּי חָסִיד אָנִי which we render, for I am holy, may deserve to be examined. The Chaldee directly follow the Hebrew words, and are to be interpreted by them, and give no help toward the understanding them. The LXXII. read ὅτι ὅσιός εἰμι, which is as literal, the very word ὅσιος, with an aspirate for ח (as χάσιος with χ for ח) being most probably formed, by an easie change, from the Hebrew חָסִיד: This signifying originally 1. piety, to God, 2. probity, 3. mercy or benignity, the Syriack, it seems, thought it so unreasonable for the Psalmist to affirm any of these of himself, that taking it in the third notion, that of goodness, as that is all one with mercy, they apply it not to the Psalmist, but to God, טָב אַתְּ thou art good; and so the Arabick also. That this was by them done either through change or misunderstanding the Hebrew, is not probable, when there is another notion of the word, which as it will best accord with this place, so it will perfectly justify this their rendring, that of κεχαριτωμένος, (see note on Ps. 4.d.) one that hath found favour with God. This best accords with the rest of the titles here given to himself, poor and needy, v. 1. thy servant that trusteth in thee, v.2. one that cries daily to thee, v.3. that lifts up his soul to thee, v.4. Which what are they but the description of Gods Eleemosynary, the notion of חָסִיד elsewhere? Another possible notion of the word, and which recedes very little from this, (such as may be owned of the Psalmist speaking of himself) may be taken from Prov. 2.8. For as here the prayer to God to keep or preserve his soul, is backt with this motive, for I am חָסִיד; so there the aphorisme is delivered expresly, for he will preserve the way חֲסִידָיו of his pious ones, which the LXXII. render there ἐυλαβεμένων αὐτὸν, of them that revere, or fear, or worship him. In this sense it is used, Psal. 32.6. For this shall every חָסִיד pious, godly man, (that fears, or worships God) pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found; A promise again of Gods being found granting the requests of such of these, when they pray to him. And in this notion of the word, for one that fears and reveres, and humbly addresseth his prayers to God, there will be no more difficulty for the Psalmist to say this of himself, than that he trusteth in him, in the end of the verse, cries daily to him, v. 3. lifts up his soul unto him, v. 4. calls upon him, v. 5. and 7. or that he prayes and supplicates to him, v. 6. —— And thus, Psal. 116. 15. speaking of himself, pretious, saith he, in the sight of the Lord is the death לַחֲסִידָיו of his holy ones, those who depend, and wait and rely on him, in the former verses. Nor can it be strange that any or all of these should here be introduced with a כִּי for, as the grounds of his begging an audience to his prayers, when God, who though he be not obliged by the merits of our performances, is yet by the force of his own promise, hath promised to hear the prayers of such as come thus qualified to him. The Jewish Arab renders it, Preserve my soul, and I shall be pure.

b. אֱלֹהִים

V.8. The Gods] That by אֲנָבְלֵי מְרוֹמָא אֱלָהִים Gods high angels are to be here understood, is the gloss of the Targum, and so the word frequently signifies, see note on Ps. 82. b. yet the mention of all nations immediately following, and those evidently in the notion of the heathen Idolaters of the world, of whom it is said, that they shall come and worship thee, O Lord, i.e. forsake their Idols, and become proselytes to the true God, makes it reasonable to understand it here of those, whether good Angels or Devils, which are by those nations adored, and prayed to, and depended on, that so the connexion may be evident, Among those Gods none is like to thee, O Lord; and consequently, All nations shall forsake them, and become worshippers of thee.

c. יַחֵד

V.11. Unite] For יַחֵד unite (retained also by the Chaldee,) the LXXII. read εὐφρανθήτω —— Let my heart rejoyce, reading it seems יָחֵד from חָדָה to rejoyce, as when Job 3.6. we read in the Hebrew אַל יָחַד let it not rejoyce, the Chaldee read לָא יִתְיַחַד let it not be united, when yet the next verse determines it to the sense of joy, let no joyful voice come therein. Here the points differing, the rendring must in reason be as from יָחַד univit, and note the contrary to hypocrisie, or unsincere, partial obedience, ordinarily expres by the double heart.

V. 14. Violent]

d. עָרִיצִים

V. 14. Violent] From עָרַץ to fear, or be frighted, is עָרִיץ here, and therefore is most literally to be rendred terrible or formidable. Yet Abu Walid and Kimchi among the significations of it, put fortis, potens; and accordingly the LXXII. renders it κραταιῶν, powerful men, and the Chaldee תַּקִּיפִין which as it signifies potent, so also cruel, oppressing men, from תְּקַף fortis & durus fuit.

The Eighty Seventh Psalm.

Paraphrase.

a. The eighty Seventh Psalm is a brief comparison, first betwixt Sion the place of Gods Worship, and all Judæa besides; and then betwixt it and all other heathen people, particularly in respect of the numerousness of eminent persons in the one, above what was to be found in all the others. It seems to have been composed as a prophetick scheme to foretel the return of the Jews captivity (as Isa. 54. 1. &c.) and the great prosperity of Jerusalem consequent to it, and was designed to be sung by the posterity of Corah.

A Psalm or Song for the sons of Corah.

1. ‖ His [a] foundation is in the holy mountain. ‖ The foundation thereof, or, The foundation, or beginning thereof is on the hills of holiness.

2. The Lord of heaven hath chosen one place on all the earth, wherein he is pleased to reside in a peculiar manner, to exhibit himself to his people that call upon him there; and as this he hath by promise determin'd to the Cities of Judah, rather than any other nation upon the earth, so hath he now of all them chosen out Jerusalem, and on the north side thereof, Psal. 48. 2. the hill of Sion, and there he appointed the Temple to be sumptuously and magnificently built, and many Schools of learning to be erected there.

2. The Lord loveth the gates of Sion, more than all the dwellings of Jacob.

3. This then is the place of Gods residence (the embleme of his future incarnation, or inhabitation of his glorious Majesty among men, as also of the Christian Church, wherein God by his grace exhibits and presentiates himself) and all that ever have spoken of this place, have given it huge elogies, for the beauty of the situation, beyond all other places, Psal. 48. 2.

3. Glorious things are spoken of thee, O City of God. Selah.

b. c. 4. And if it be compared with all other nations, Ægyptians, Babylonians, Philistims, Tyrians, and Arabians, the difference will be found very great, especially in respect of the number of eminent pious men produced by the one, much greater than in all the other. To which also must be added one supereminent advantage, viz. that the only true God by his special presence and providence will continue this flourishing condition to this place above all others.

4. I will make mention of [b] Rahab and Babylon to them that know me: behold Philistia and Tyre, with [c] Æthiopia; ‖ this man was born there. ‖ this was.

5. And of Sion it shall be said, this and that man was born in her; and the highest himself shall establish her.

d. 6, 7. Among the nations very few can be found considerable for piety, and those discernible only by God, who exactly knows and considers every man living; whereas through Gods special favour to the Jews, in taking such care for the instructing them in his will, and ingaging them to his service, the number of eminent knowing and pious men is so great, that the burthen of the song, by which they are praised and celebrated, sounds to this sense, that whole fountains are here to be found, when all other places yield but their single drops; vast multitudes of pious men are here to be met with, and in comparison with them very few in all other nations.

6. The Lord shall count, † when [d] he writeth up the people, that this man was born there. Selah. † In the writing, or the Book of the People, that this was—

7. * As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there: all my springs are in thee. * But the singers as the minstrels shall sound, all——

Annotations on Psalm LXXXVII.

a. יְסוֹדָתוֹ

V. 1. Foundation] Of the meaning of this phrase here in the front יְסוֹדָתוֹ, no judgment can be made, till it be first resolved what is the design of this Psalm. Herein the Hebrew Interpreters do in a manner concur, that it is a Panegyrick on Sion: And if it be so, then probably this first verse is but a part of the title, thus, To the sons of Coreh, מִזְמוֹר שִׁיר a Song-Canticle, or Canticle-Song, יְסוֹדָתוֹ the beginning or foundation whereof בְּהַרְרֵי קֹדֶשׁ is of, or on the hills of holiness, i. e. Gods holy hills, those of Sion, whereon the Temple was built, and of which the next verse (which must then be the first of the Psalm) begins expressly, The Lord loveth the gates of Sion —— Thus from יָסַד fundavit, יְסוֹד is sometimes metaphorically used for a beginning, Ezr. 7. 9. The first day of the first month, which is יְסוֹד the beginning of the going up out of Babel. And to this construction here the the Chaldee accord, who read it thus conjoyned in the title, By the hands of the sons of Coreh was said שִׁירְתָא דְּסִתְיָמַד the Canticle that was founded. If this will not be allowed (as indeed beside the LXXII. and Syriack and other interpreters, Kimchi, Sol. Jarchi, and Midrasch Tehillim agree to make the first verse a part not of the Title but the Psalm) then still applying the Psalm to the Temple, יְסוֹדָתוֹ will hold good in the ordinary notion of a foundation, thus, The foundation thereof, i. e. of the Temple, is on the holy hills; so the Jewish Arab, A Psalm which is a description of the Sanctuary, the foundations of which are in the mountain of holiness, (but then His foundation will have no sense.) To this design of the Psalm, the Hebrew writers generally agreeing, I have thought best to accord the whole interpretation of the Psalm; yet I shall not omit to advertise the reader, that 'tis not improbable the Psalm should be of another scheme, a Carmen Genethliacon at the celebrating the nativity of some eminent person, pointed out to the Jews by God (such was Hezekiah, celebrated by the Prophecy of Isaiah, chap. 9. 6. To us a child is born, &c.) And the use of these is known among the Jews as well as other nations, the Scripture having left us several copies of them, Hannahs Hymn in the Old Testament, Zacharies, and Simeons, and the Angels in the New. And if this should be the design of this Psalm, then יְסוֹדָתוֹ will most probably be rendred, His original, beginning, extraction, is from the holy hills; the person whom we celebrate was born in the Royal Palace, upon the holy hill, contiguous to the Temple, nothing being more frequent in such composures than the mention of the place of his birth. If this which professes to be but a conjecture should be deemed the right, it must then be consequent, that all the Psalm have an interpretation agreeable. As when, v. 4. he saith אַזְכִּיר רַהַב, &c. it must then be rendred, not I will mention, but, I will attest Rahab, i. e. Ægypts, Tyres, Babels, and the Chushites Kings, ‖ confederate with this Prince (suppose Hezechiah) who were jealous of the Assyrian greatness, and secured of so formidable an enemy by his defeat before Jerusalem, and so were fit to give the most competent account of this glorious אַזְכִּיר ‖ See 2 King. 18. 21. & 19. 9. & 20. 12.

rions Prince, and so to be attested to that purpose by the Psalmist. So again, v. 5. if it look this way, אִישׁ וְאִישׁ אִישׁ וְאִישׁ must be rendred this, even this man, this notable person was born there. But the interpretation I adhere to, as most allowed, being the extolling and praising of Sion, to that sense I shall apply all the parts thereof, thinking it sufficient to have made this mention of the other.

b. רָהָב

V. 4. Rahab] From רָהַב to be strong, is רָהָב the title of Ægypt. The Chaldee here render it מִצְרָאֵי the Ægyptians (so Psal. 89. 11. of Rahab they adde הוּא פַּרְעֹה this is Pharaoh) the mention whereof in this place joyned with Babylon, and Philistia, and Tyre, and כּוּשׁ or Arabia (see note c.) was designed as an instance of so many of the chief and eminentest of the heathen nations, which yet were no way able to compare with Mount Sion, the subject of this present Psalm. This is here expresst by the opposition betwixt its being said of these זֶה יֻלַּד שָׁם this was borne there, i.e. some one particular, and perhaps contemptible person, and mens saying אִישׁ וְאִישׁ יֻלַּד בָּהּ this and that man, i.e. many eminent men were born in that. For 1. זֶה this, is but a forme of contempt, either this without any addition, or this fellow, or the like; whereas אִישׁ a man is a note of some honour: and 2. זֶה is some one, and no more, but אִישׁ וְאִישׁ man and man, or man after man, denotes a multitude of several men, as Isa. 61.7. double signifies great, and as etiam atque etiam, again and again signifies very often, and as in all languages, repetition signifies greatness of that which is spoken of, as thrice happy, &c. What sort of eminence it is that is here spoken of, and attributed to the Jews in Sion, before all other Nations, cannot be obscure, when the advantages of the Jews above all others are famously known, Rom. 3.2. where yet the Oracles of God being committed to them is taken notice of as the chief. And to that the Chaldee seems to refer in this place, who in the first verse rendring the gates of Sion, the gates מָתֵי מִדְרְשָׁא of the houses of learning, or the schools which are built in Sion (of which sort the Jewish Writers tell us there were very many in Jerusalem) implies this to be the matter of the comparison betwixt the Jews and all other Nations here, that they have among them many more Learned and knowing men, viz. in the wayes of God, the true, most valuable learning, those that have more understanding of the divine laws than all other people in the World, according to that of the Psalmist, He hath not dealt so with any Nation, and as for his judgments they have not known them, Psal. 147.20.

c. כּוּשׁ

Ibid. Æthiopia] כּוּשׁ Chushi, which is here joyned with Tyre and Philistia, though it be by the LXXII. rendred λαὸς Αἰθιόπων, the people of Æthiopia, (reading עַם with, as if it were עַם the people) is by the Chaldee rendred כּוּשָׁאֵי the Chushites. Who these are there can be little doubt, if (not the authority of Philo and Josephus, and others that follow them, but) the evidence of several texts of the Scripture and the expres paraphrase of Jonathan be considered, Gen. 10. 6. For the Hebrew Chush that hath עַרְבְיָא Arabia. And to that the testimonies of Scripture agree, Hab. 3. 7. Chusan (the diminutive of Chush) is all one with Madian following in that verse; and accordingly Mose's Wife Sephora the Chushite, Num. 12.1. is the daughter of the priest of Midian, Exod. 2. 16. and Midian or Madaan is by Josephus and Ptolemans and others generally placed in Arabia, on the shore of the Red Sea. So Ezek. 29. 10. Where the total desolation of Ægypt is expresst by making it desolate from Syene to Chush, setting those two as opposite points, the one on one side, the other on the other side of Ægypt; and then Syene being the boundary of Ægypt toward Æthiopia by acknowledgment of all, τὴν Συήνην ἀπὸ Αἰθιόπων τὴν Σύρων, saith || Josephus, Syene divides Ægypt from the Æthiopians, it follows of necessity that Chush must signifie Arabia, which borders on Ægypt in the point most opposite to Æthiopia. So when Ezek. 30. 9. immediately after the visitation of Ægypt, follows, Messengers shall go from me in ships to make careless Chush afraid, this is very appliable to Arabia, to which they oft pass by ship from Ægypt by the Red Sea, but not to Æthiopia, to which they cannot pass by Nilus, because of the cataracts near Syene. So 2 Chron. 21.16. the Arabians are said to be neighbours of the Æthiopians: and accordingly when Sennacherib besieged Libna in the Tribe of Judah, 2 King. 19.9. Tirhacha King of Chush came upon him unawares, which their neighbours the Arabians might do, but the Æthiopians could not without first subduing Ægypt, which lay betwixt them. So when Isa. 20.5. Chush is said to have been the Expectation of Ashdod, or Azotus, v.1. (the City of the Philistims) this may well be understood of their neighbours the Arabians, but not of the Æthiopians so far removed from them. To these doth the learned Bochart adde, Isa. 18.1. where Ægypt is by the Prophet in Jewry said to be beyond the Rivers of Chush, which cannot be applied to Æthiopia, which is directly beyond Ægypt. This then may be safely resolved, that Chush in this and other places must signifie the inhabitants of Arabia, those that were vulgarly called Scenitæ, because they dwelt in tents, called thence the tents of Chushan, Hab. 3. 7. and accordingly for the tents of Kedar, Cant. 1.5. the Chaldee reads כְּבָנוֹי דְכוּשׁ as the sons of Chush, which dwell in those black tents, or tents of Kedar.

d. כְּתוֹב

V. 6. When he writeth up] From כָּתַב scripsit, descripsit, is בִּכְתוֹב here in writing, in setting down, ἐν γραφῇ, in the description, or writing, say the LXXII. To this the insuing עַמִּים is to be annext, as in the genitive case, the writing of the people: γραφὴ λαῶν καὶ ἀρχόντων, the writing of the People and Princes, say the LXXII. and Latine, descriptione populorum, say the Syriack, in the book of the people. And what this signifies the Chaldee have more largely expresst by סִפְרָא דִי מְכַתְּבִין בֵּיהּ חוּשְׁבָּן כָּל עַמְמַיָּא the book in which are written the numbrings of all the people, i. e. the roll, or matricula, wherein the names of all the inhabitants are set down. This book as appears by v. 4 must refer to the Nations there named, in the view, or on the inspection of which, God, to whose eyes all mens hearts are discernible, shall count, saith the Psalmist (as before, v. 4.) זֶה יֻלַּד שָׁם this (or this fellow) was borne there, some one pious man or servant of God in an age, in a nation, as Job and the like, Job 1.1. whereas v. 7. שָׁרִים כְּחֹלְלִים the singers as, or like, the minstrels, shall recite or count (so the Ellipsis must be supplied, by repeating the verb used in the beginning of the 6. verse) כָּל מַעְיָנַי בָּךְ all my fountains are in thee. In which words must be explained, 1. what the singers and minstrels refers to, 2. what is meant by all my fountains. For the former it is sufficiently known that the singers and minstrels joyned in celebrating the praises of eminent men, as also in the service of God. And as at the removal of the Arke the singers go before, and the minstrels follow after, the singers begin and lead the tune, as the Precentors, and the players on instruments followed after, as the quire; so here the singers are supposed to begin, and the minstrels, or players on instruments, taberers, tympanistæ, saith the Jewish Arab, follow to the same tune, both joyning in this celebration of the divine knowledge and piety of those that dwell in Zion, and the great multitude of such; which is the most probable probable importance of the laſt words whereof their Antheme conſiſts, All my fountains are in thee. 2. Then for my fountains, it will beſt be explained by מקוריי they that were from the veine, or (as the LXXII. מקורי,) fountains of Iſrael, Pſal. 68. 26. By veins of Iſrael there the people of Iſrael were meant, and thoſe as numerous as the drops of water coming from a ſpring, or duſt of any metal in a mineral vein; and ſo here my fountains, or ſprings, or flowings of water, are the great multitude of pious people, which as ſuch are called my, i. e. Gods fountains. And ſo theſe two verſes 6. and 7. are but the ſame which had been ſaid, v. 4. and 5. only varied in the expreſſion. The Jewiſh Arab reads, the ſingers and taborers ſhall deſcribe [ſet forth, or reherſe] all your root, or ſtock, which is as a fountain to you.

שָׁרִים כְּחֹלְלִים כָּל מַעְיָנַי בָּךְ

The Eighty Eighth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The Eighty eighth Pſalm being a ſad complaint addreſt unto God in time of

a. A Song or Pſalm for the ſons of Corah, to the chief Muſitian upon || Maalath [a] Leannoth, Maſchil of [b] Heman the Ezrahite.

|| the hallow inſtruments for anſwering.

b. לענות *ſome heavy affliction, (moſt probably in the time of the *captivity, as Pſal. 89.) was committed to the Præfect of the Muſick to be ſung by the poſterity of Corah, the hallow inſtruments, pipe, flute, &c. being appointed to anſwer their voices. It was ſet to the tune called Maſchil (ſee note on Pſal. 32. a.) from the title of a divine ſong, compoſed by Heman the ſon of Zerah, the ſon of Judah.

*it was written in the perſon of them that were in captivity. Kimchi.

1,2. Thou, O God, art he from whom my deliverance muſt come, no other means can be effectual for me, to thee I continually addreſs my prayers; O be thou gratiouſly pleaſed to hear and anſwer them.

1. O Lord God of my ſalvation, I have cried day and night before thee;
2. Let my prayer come before thee, incline thine ear unto my cry.

3,4. For this I am one way competently qualified, viz. by the great meaſure of my preſent troubles and dangers, mine own abſolute impotence, and the deplorableneſs and deſperateneſs of my condition.

3. For my ſoul is full of troubles, and my life draweth nigh unto † the grave.
4. I am accounted with them that go down unto the pit: I am as a man that hath no ſtrength:

† hades שאול

c. 5. I am now ſo low, that I begin to have the priviledges of dead men, thoſe that are at the loweſt, or that being brought down to the grave are out of the malice and thought of their enemies: I am laid aſide as one not conſidered, or concerned in the affairs of this world, ſequeſtred from the converſation of Men, and (which is the worſt part of my miſery) from the Sanctuary, accounted by men as one wholly forgotten and forſaken by thee, no part of thy care, and as uncapable of reſtauration by thy power as thoſe that are dead already.

5. [c] Free among the dead, like the ſlain that lie in the grave, whom thou remembreſt no more, and they are cut off from thy hand.

6. Thou haſt permitted me to be brought to a ſtate of the utmoſt diſtreſs and deſtitution.

6. Thou haſt laid me in the loweſt pit, in darkneſs, in the deeps.

7. The effects of thy diſpleaſure lie very preſſing upon me, as one that leans with his whole weight upon another; my afflictions come in one upon the neck of another, as waves of the Sea beating upon any veſſel.

7. Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou haſt afflicted me with all thy waves. Selah.

8. The ſharpneſs of thy puniſhments hath averted all men from me, they account me forſaken by thee, and ſo they forſake me, get aloofe from me, as from an execrable thing, and ſo leave me as in a priſon, a ſtate of reſtraint and perfect ſolitude, from which I cannotiſce in any way of reſcue or redreſs.

8. Thou haſt put away mine acquaintance far from me, thou haſt made me an abomination unto them: I am ſhut up, and I cannot come forth.

9. I look, and waite, and languiſh, but receive no mitigation to my afflictions; I continually pray and importune thee, my voice and hands (and heart) are for ever imployed in ſending up my complaints to thee.

9. Mine eye mourneth by reaſon of affliction: Lord, I have called daily upon thee, I have ſtretched out my hands unto thee.

10. Thou haſt promiſed me relief, and ſo thy fidelity is concerned in it, which therefore I am confident I ſhall at length receive from thee; O when wilt thou pleaſe to reach it out and afford it me? If thou doſt not ſpeedily, I am likely to be conſumed and deſtroyed by my preſſures, and then there will be no remedy, no capacity of thy relief; unleſs thou work a miracle for me, and raiſe me when I am dead, out of the grave again, and ſo exerciſe not only thy ſpecial extraordinary providence and mercy, but even thine omnipotent creative power in my reſtauration.

d. 10. Wilt thou ſhew wonders to the dead? ſhall the [d] dead ariſe and praiſe thee? Selah.
11. Shall thy loving-kindneſs be declared in the grave, or thy faithfulneſs in deſtruction?
12. Shall thy wonders be known in the dark, and thy righteouſneſs in the land of forgetfulneſs?

13. All that I have to do, O Lord, is in prayer and with importunity daily and duly to ſolicite thee, after this manner,

13. But unto thee have I cryed, O Lord, and in the morning ſhall my prayer prevent thee.

14. Lord, be thou at length pleaſed to receive my prayers, which proceed from an humble and devout ſoul, to reſtore thy favour and mercy to me.

14. Lord, why caſteſt thou off my ſoul? why hideſt thou thy face from me?

15. My preſſures are very extreme and of long duration, and the continual new dangers that incompaſs me put me in great anxiety and conſternation.

15. I am afflicted, and ready to die from my youth up: while I ſuffer thy terrors, I am diſtracted.

16. The ſenſe of thy diſpleaſure, and the direful expectation of all the miſerable effects thereof (till thou art pleaſed to look favourably on me) do even overwhelme and deſtroy me.

'Tis thou, O Lord, which hast thus punisht me for my sins; and from the return of thy mercy alone am I to expect relief.

Annotations on Psal. LXXXVIII.

a. מַחֲלַת

Tit. Leannoth] That מַחֲלַת signifies hollow instruments, hath been taken notice of note on Psal. 53. a. To this our English hath joyned Leannoth, as if both together, Mahalath-Leannoth were a proper name. But as the former was a mistake, so the latter is a double addition to it; first in that it is joyned to it, when in the original 'tis not, 2. in that the importance of it, which is plain, is not considered, לְעַנּוֹת is literally (as from the LXXII. their ἀποκρίσεως, the Vulgar and the Interlinear read it) ad respondendum, for answering, for which the learned Castellio reads alternis, by way of answer, or alternation. This, I suppose, refers to the custome in singing their Anthems to instruments, or the conjunction of vocal and instrumental Musick, mentioned note on Psal. 87. d. where the Corahites, or singers beginning the tune, as a præcentor, the instruments follow to the very same tune, which is properly stiled answering them; this being the primary use of עָנָה (as to begin, so) to continue a song, to proceed, or go on in a tune begun by any. So 1 Sam. 18. 7. וַתַּעֲנֶינָה and the women answered playing, and said——which phrase is expounded by the former verse, which tells us, that the women came out of all cities, singing and dancing, with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of Musick, and so their singing going first, they followed or answered their voices with tabrets and instrumental Musick. Proportionable to this was the antient Greek custome, Poetically expresst by Apollo and the Muses, Apollo singing, and they following ἐν ἀμοιβαίῳ, answering with Musical instruments, to the tune which he began. So in Homer in a funeral, there are first θρῆνον ἔξαρχοι, the beginners, or præcentors of the lamentations, and then κλαίων ἀμφίγυτ' ὄμιλος, the company stood about waiting, and ἐπὶ δὲ γυναῖκες γοάασκον, the women came after, or answered in their mourning, this wailing bearing then proportion with the Musick which was after used in their Funerals. See note on Matth. 9. h. And although the Hebrew Musick be not much known or discernible to us of these times, yet perhaps some κειμήλια may be taken notice of in this Psalm, by which to judge of that which now we speak of, their alternation, or answering. For this Psalm seems to be composed of two parts, the one reaching to v. 9. the other beginning at v. 9. and continued to the end of the Psalm, and the several parts of each of these very agreeable and answering the one to the other. Thus when v. 1. the first part begins, O Lord God, I have cried night and day before thee;

the second answers, vers. 9. in the very same scheme,

Lord, I have called daily upon thee, I have stretched out my hands unto thee.

When, v. 3. we read,

For my soul——my life draweth nigh unto the grave;

The tenth bears proportion,

Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee?

Again, v. 6.

Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in the darkness in the deeps:

And then v. 11.

Shall thy loving kindness be shewed in the grave, or thy faithfulness in destruction?

So when v. 7.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves.

The answer is in the 14, 15, & 16 v.

Lord, Why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me? I am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up, while I suffer thy terrors, I am distracted. Thy fierce wrath——

Lastly, as v. 8.

Thou hast put away my acquaintance far from me,——

So v. 18.

Lover and friend hast thou put far from me, and mine acquaintance——

In each of these the analogy is so very discernible in respect of the matter, that we may not unreasonably resolve that the alternation here was not betwixt the first and second verses, and so on betwixt the third and fourth, but betwixt the first and second part, and the several lesser partitions of the one and other. As when among us a tune is made up of many lines or measures, and when that is done, it begins again, and is again completed in the same number of lines or feet, and one of these is performed by vocal, and the other to the very same tune by instrumental Musick. And this seems to be the scheme or sort of the לְעַנּוֹת for answering, or alternation, in this place. The Jewish Arab renders it, A Psalm with which the waiters of the Sons of Korah praised [God] by playing on the Tabrets, and answering with understanding (so they render Maschil) Heman the Ezrahite answering them. And he explains it in a note, that this Psalm David delivered to the sons of Korah, and the sons of Heman, therewith to praise [God] commanding the sons of Korah to play on the instruments, and the sons of Heman to answer them with their voices.

b. הָאֶזְרָחִי

Tit. Ezrahite] Of Heman הָאֶזְרָחִי the Ezrahite, we have mention, 1 King. 4. 31. as of a very eminent person, famous for learning, he and his three brothers, Ethan and Chalcol and Darda; for to set out the wisdom of Solomon not only above the Orientals and Ægyptians, v. 30. but even above all men, v. 31. it is added, he was wiser than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman and Chalcol and Darda the sons of Mahol. Who these four learned men were, appears 1 Chron. 2. 6. where Zerah the son of Judah by Tamar is recorded to have five sons, Zimri, and Ethan, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Dara (for זֶרַח Dara, some copies of the LXXII. read Δαιδάν, the Syriack דָּרְדָּע Dardaa,) Hence appears the reason of their name Ezrahite, both there and here, and in the title of Psal. 89. because they were the sons of Zerah; so the Chaldee interprets it in their rendring, 1 King. 4.31. he was wiser than all men מֵאֵיתָן בַּר זֶרַח than Ethan the son of Zerah —— And whereas it is said in that place, 1 King. 4. 31. that they were the sons of Mahol, it must be resolved that Mahol was the name of a woman, Zerah's wife, whose wisdom transfused to her children, seems to be the cause, that in a comparison of wisdom, her name is set down, and not her husbands, though in that other place, 1 Chron. 2. his name is set down, and not hers, and so likewise in their being called Ezrahites, from Zerah their father. Now that this Heman the grandchild of Judah, and Ethan his brother, both antienter than Moses, were the authors of this and the next Psalm, inscribed לְהֵימָן to or of Heman, and לְאֵיתָן to or of Ethan (as other Psalms לְדָוִד to or of David, a signification of his being the Author) will not be very reasonable to define, there being in the next Psalm inscribed to Ethan, such expresses mentions of David, and Gods oath to him, v. 3. 19, 20, 35. of Gods judgments on the Ægyptians, v. 10. and of all other things of a date much later than the age of Judah's grandchild, that it is not probable that they should be so expresly Prophesied of by one which is not taken notice of in Scripture as a Prophet, when neither Moses nor any other of the Patriarchs had foretold these, or any other such things so expresly. Whether this consideration were it that moved the Chaldee to inscribe, Psal. 89. עַל יְדָא דְאַבְרָהָם that it was spoken by the hand of Abraham, who came out of the East, as thinking this more reasonable, to attribute it to that great Patriarch and Prophet, than to Ethan, I cannot define. But that which seems to me most probable, is, that both this and the next Psalm were written by an unknown author, and that מַשְׂכִּיל לְהֵימָן Maschil of Heman, and so likewise Maschil of Ethan, are but the names of the tune (as of Maschil hath been resolved note on Psal. 32. a.) to which these two Psalms were set, each of those wise men having composed a song known by that name.

לְהֵימָן לְאֵיתָן

מַשְׂכִּיל לְהֵימָן

c. חָפְשִׁי

V. 5. Free] From חָפַשׁ to free, is חָפְשִׁי here, free (in opposition to servitude) manumitted, set at liberty. The use of this word may more generally be taken from 2 Chron. 26. 21. where of Uzziah being a leper, 'tis said, that he dwelt בֵּית הַחָפְשִׁית in an house of freedom, for he was cut off from the house of the Lord. The meaning is, that after the manner of the lepers, he was excluded from the Temple, and dwelt בַּר מִן יְרוּשְׁלֵם saith the Chaldee there, in some place without Jerusalem, which is therefore called the house of freedom, because such as were there were exempt from the common affairs and shut up from the conversation of men. And in proportion with these, they that are dead and laid in their graves, are here said to be free, i. e. removed from all the affairs and conversation of the World, even מִן הַמִּצְוֹת from the commandments, say the Jews, of them that are dead, Nidda, fol. 76. Thus is death described, Job 3. by lying still, and quiet, and at rest, v. 13. in desolate places, v. 14. where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary be at rest, v. 17. where the prisoners rest together, and hear not the voice of the oppressor, v. 18. and where the servant is חָפְשִׁי (as here) free from his master. v. 19. In this verse there seems to be a gradation. To be slain is more than to dye, to be in the grave more than either, but to dye by a כָּרֵת to be cut off by excision, not to have זִכְרוֹנוֹ לִבְרָכָה the remembrance of blessing, to be utterly forgot, and have no share in the world to come, which they say every Israelite hath, is the utmost pitch of misery.

d. רְפָאִים

V. 10. Dead] That רְפָאִים here signifies the dead, those that lye in the grave, there can be no question. The Chaldee render it גּוּשְׁמָהוֹן דְּאִתְסְיָאוּ בְּעַפְרָא the carcasses that are putrified in the dust. So Isa. 26. 14. רְפָאִים shall not rise, is but the interpretation of what went before, they are dead, they shall not live, and so v. 19. the earth shall cast out רְפָאִים the dead bodies. So Prov. 21. 16. the man that wandreth from the way of understanding shall remain בִּקְהַל רְפָאִים in the congregation of the dead: the Chaldee reads עִם בְּנֵי אַרְעָא with the sons of the earth. The same word is elsewhere used for gyants, Gen. 14. 5. and Isa. 17. 5. which makes it probable that the word comes from a notion of the root רָפָא not ordinarily taken notice of by Lexicographers (who generally take it for healing and curing) such as may be common to these two so distant derivatives, dead men, and gyants. The gyants we know are in most languages expresst by phrases taken from the bottom or bowels of the earth γιγάντες γηγενεῖς, and terræ filii, born from, or sons of the earth: and just so the Chaldee even now rendred רְפָאִים where 'twas used for dead bodies, Prov. 21. 16. which gives us reason to resolve that the Radix originally signified something pertaining to the lower parts of the earth, and so 'twill be fitly communicated to these two, which in the notion of healing it will not be. And to this accords a notion of the word רְפָאִים among the Hebrews, for metals, minerals, gold, silver, coral, &c. which are digged out of the earth, and from the very bottom of the Sea, the abysse, which is very agreeable to both these notions of the word, the dead being there laid and disposed of, after their departure out of this world, their bodies in the grave, and their animal Souls in Scheol, the state of separation, not otherwise capable of being described but by ἄδης, hades, ἀφανισμὸς, disappearing, the abyss, or deep; and the gyants by their great strength and exercise of it (in invading and oppressing others) and by being of uncertain originals, phansied to have received their birth from some subterranean powers, and so called by that title. The LXXII. deducing the word from רָפָא to heale, render it here and elsewhere ἰατροὶ Physitians, and the Latine medici; but the Syriack ܓܒ̈ܪ̈ܐ strong men or Gyants.

e. מָחְשָׁךְ

V. 18. Acquaintance] From חָשַׁךְ was darkned, is מַחְשָׁךְ here, an obscure dark place, an hole, or biding-place; and then מְיָדְעַי מַחְשָׁךְ a darke place, or hole to my acquaintance, signifies the lying hid, and sculking of friends, hiding themselves, for fear they should be seen by him, and called to help him. The Jewish Arab reads. And mine Acquaintance are become as darkness.

The Eighty Ninth Psalm.

Paraphrase. The 89 Psalm is a commemoration of the mercies performed, and promised to be continued to David and his posterity to the end of the world, but now (in the time of some great affliction on Prince and People, probably in the captivity, v. 38. &c. see note i.) seemingly interrupted by their sins, MAschil of Ethan the Ezrahite.

ſins, and their breach of Covenant with God, together with an hearty prayer for the return of them. The Author of it is not known. It was ſet to the tune of a Song of Ethan the ſon of Zerah, called Maſchil (ſee note on Pſalm 88. b.)

1. I will ſing of the mercies of the Lord for ever; with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulneſs to all generations.

1. The mercies of our God, in making ſuch gracious and glorious promiſes to his people, and his exact fidelity in performing them is ſo great, that it exacts all our lauds and moſt magnificent commemorations, thereby to proclaim and divulge them to all poſterity.

2. For [a] I have ſaid, Mercy ſhall be built up for ever; thy faithfulneſs ſhalt thou eſtabliſh in the very heavens.

2. God hath promiſed abundant kindneſs and mercy, and that to endure to us to all our poſterities; and ſo I am moſt confident he will perform, make good, by his continual faithfulneſs from his ſeat of mercy and of juſtice, what he hath thus promiſed us. a.

3. I have made a Covenant with my choſen; I have ſworn unto David my ſervant.

3. This promiſe of his was moſt ſolemnly made by way of a ſworn Covenant, ſtricken with David, whom he choſe to be King over his people, when he rejected and removed Saul.

4. Thy ſeed will I eſtabliſh for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Selah.

4. And the ſum of his Covenant was, not only that he ſhould be King over his people, but that this dignity ſhould be continued to his poſterity for many generations, and that in ſome degree (though with great diſturbances which their ſins ſhould bring upon them) as long as this Nation ſhould continue, and that toward the time of the deſtruction thereof, the Meſſias ſhould be born of this very race of David, and erect a ſpiritual Kingdom in the hearts of all faithful men (the only true genuine poſterity of Abraham and David) which ſhould undoubtedly endure to the end of the world.

5. And the heavens ſhall praiſe thy wonders, O Lord, thy faithfulneſs alſo in the congregation of the ‖ Saints.

‖ holy ones, ſee note b.

5. This is a moſt glorious Covenant of tranſcendent and wonderful mercies, which as thou haſt made, ſo thou ſhalt exactly perform to us; the glories thereof ſhall be admired and celebrated by all the Angels in heaven, when they are met together for the praiſing and glorifying thee.

6. For who in the heaven ‖ can be compared unto the Lord? who among the ſons of the [b] mighty can be likened unto the Lord?

7. God is † greatly to be feared in the aſſembly of his ſaints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him.

‖ or ſhall conteſt, or enter the liſts with. † Formidable in the great aſſembly of holy ones, that incompaſs him.

6. For though they be glorious creatures, and inſtruments and miniſters of God, yet there is no leaſt compariſon between all the power and operations of all thoſe, and that which is performed by God in theſe his admirable diſpenſations toward his people; which therefore are to be lookt on with amazement, and higheſt degree of reverence and adoration, by all thoſe glorious creatures which attend him. b.

8. O Lord God of hoſts, who is a ſtrong Lord like unto thee? * [c] or to thy faithfulneſs round about thee?

* and thy faithfulneſs incompaſſeth thee.

8. Thou art the Lord, and only ſupreme commander of all thoſe Armies of Angels: and as thou art armed with power above all thoſe, ſo art thou guarded with fidelity; by the former thou canſt, and by the latter thou wilt certainly perform all that thou haſt covenanted with us, c.

9. Thou ruleſt ‖ the raging of the Sea: when the waves thereof ariſe, thou ſtilleſt them.

‖ over the pride, or elation גְּאוֹת

9. Thy power is ſufficient to bring down and tame the proudeſt and moſt tumultuous element: the very Ocean it ſelf, when it is moſt boyſterous, is immediately quiet at thy command.

10. Thou haſt broken Rahab in pieces as one that is ſlain: thou haſt ſcattered thine enemies with thy ſtrong arme.

10. By this means, as once thou gaveſt thy people the children of Iſrael a paſſage out of Ægypt through the channel of the Red Sea, ſo didſt thou return the Sea upon Pharaoh and the Ægyptians, the tyrannizing enemies of thy people, deſtroyedſt him there as diſcernibly and illuſtriouſly, as if thou hadſt ſlain him with a Sword, and together with him by thine own immediate interpoſition didſt then overwhelme and drown the Ægyptians.

11. The heavens are thine, the earth alſo is thine: as for the world and the [d] fulneſs thereof thou haſt founded them.

11. Thou art the only creator of the whole world, and all that therein is; thou gaveſt it that ſtable firm being that it hath, (ſo that the ſea, though much higher than the reſt of the Globe, doth not yet drown the earth.) And as in the Creation all was ordered by thy command, ſo haſt thou ſtill the only right of power and dominion over all, in the adminiſtration of things. d.

12. The North and the [e] South thou haſt created them, Tabor and Hermon ſhall rejoyce in thy name.

12. All the regions of all the quarters of the earth, as the Northern and Southern, ſo the Weſtern and Eaſtern coaſts, are created by thy power, and protected and ſupported by it, and accordingly are obliged to bleſs thy providence for all the leaſt good that they enjoy. e.

13. Thou haſt a mighty arme; ſtrong is thy hand, and † high is thy right hand.

† exalted תָּרוּם

13. Thy power is far removed above all the oppoſitions and reſiſtances in nature: whatſoever thou wilt, thou art perfectly able to do, and thy providential power of mercy, of delivering and obliging, is, above all the other works of it, eminently obſervable.

14. * [f] Juſtice and judgment are the ‖ habitation of thy throne, mercy and truth ſhall go before thy face.

* Righteouſneſs. ‖ preparing.

14. Whatſoever thou doeſt, thy mercy and pity is diſcernible in it, and ſo is thy juſtice and fidelity alſo: Thou makeſt promiſes of abundant mercy to thy ſervants, and never faileſt to perform them. f.

15. Bleſſed is the people that know the [g] joyful ſound; they ſhall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance.

15. And 'tis no ſmall degree of bliſs to be thus honoured by God, as the people of Iſrael is, to receive ſuch ſtupendious mercies from him, and to be taught the way of praiſing and acknowledging his mercies, ſo as will be acceptable to him: ſuch as they, are ſecured of Gods continual favour, if they be not g.

ſtupidly wanting to themſelves; there being no more required of them, than humbly to beg, and qualifie themſelves to receive his mercies; and then thankfully to acknowledge, and being ſecured of this, they can want nothing to live moſt comfortably and pleaſurably. Pſal. 135. 3.

16. Two ſoveraign benefits ſhall they enjoy hereby; 1. a continual delight and joy, that they are favoured by thee, which they ſhall as delightfully expreſs in ſinging continual praiſes to thee (and this very communion with God, a confidence of Gods kindneſs, and a perpetual bleſſing him for it, is of all others the moſt pleaſurable way of living, a paradiſe or antepaſt of heaven here) 2. the natural conſequent of Gods favour and mercy, his raiſing them up out of the moſt low and dejected ſtate (ſee v. 17.) to the greateſt height of dignity.

16. In thy name ſhall they rejoyce all the day, and in thy righteouſneſs ſhall they be exalted.

17. For though ſuch men have no ſolid ſtrength of their own, yet by additions they receive from thee, they may confidently attempt any thing, and depend on thee for the performance: And that gives us thy ſervants, by thy continued favour and kindneſs to us, an humble aſſurance, that thou wilt raiſe us out of our preſent dejection, v. 38. &c. to an high degree of power and dignity. (ſee Luk. 1. note n.)

17. For thou art the glory of their ſtrength; and in thy favour ſhall our horn be exalted.

h. 18 The ground of our aſſurance being only this, that the ſupreme God of heaven and earth, he that hath made and performed ſuch wonderful promiſes to this people of Iſrael, and by his own ſpecial providence appointed David to be King over us, by this owning us peculiarly as his own Kingdom, is he that undertakes to ſhield and ſecure us from all dangers.

i. 19, 20. One ſpecial act of his goodneſs to us it was, that appearing in viſion to Samuel the good Prophet, he told him who it was that he had choſen to be King in Saul's ſtead, to rule and defend his people, a perſon of eminent vertues, and though mean in the eyes of men, an approved faithful ſervant of his (herein an eminent type of Chriſt, the fountain of all good to mankind.)

19. Then thou ſpakeſt in viſion to thy holy one, and ſaidſt, I have laid help upon * one that is [i] mighty, I have exalted one choſen out of the people;

23. And to bring the greateſt miſchiefs, even deſtruction and utter ruine, on them that deſigned him any. (This had an eminent completion in the crucifiers, and all other the obſtinate oppoſers of Chriſt.)

23. And I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him.

24. And herein, and in all other exerciſes of his mercy, to make good his covenant and promiſe, to approve his fidelity to him, as being the immediate viſible ſignal author as of his firſt advancement, ſo of all the dignities that ſhould be heaped on him.

24. But my faithfulneſs and my mercy ſhall be with him, and in my name ſhall his horn be exalted.

25. To him he then promiſed what he abundantly ſince performed, to extend his dominions from the Ocean to Euphrates (And therein to typifie the progreſs and propagation of the faith of Chriſt to all the regions of the world.)

25. I will ſet his hand alſo in the Sea, and his right hand in the rivers.

l. 26. To deal with him as a father with a beloved ſon, a God with an eminent ſervant, and to ſecure and deliver him from all troubles and dangers, and finally to ſupport him in, or redeem him out of them. (This had a moſt literal eminent completion in the Meſſiah, the eternal Son of God, to whom God was hypoſtatically preſent in all his works and ſufferings on earth, and at length raiſed him out of the grave, and exalted him to his regal power in heaven.)

26. He ſhall cry unto me, Thou art my father, my God, and [l] the rock of my ſalvation.

27. To deal with him as with an eldeſt ſon, to whom the double portion of honour and poſſeſſions is due, advancing him to greater dignity and wealth than any other Prince in the world. (This in the fulleſt latitude was to belong to Chriſt, the firſt-born of every creature, the moſt eminent perſon that ever the World ſaw, on whom all power was inſtated both in heaven and earth.)

27. Alſo I will make him my firſt-born, higher then the Kings of the earth.

28. And herein did the height of this promiſed mercy conſiſt, that it ſhould inviolably be made good to David to the end of the World, and when the royal power over this people of God ſhould fail from his family, there ſhould be another more illuſtrious Kingdom erected in the hearts of men, the ſpiritual Kingdom of the Meſſias, who ſhould be born of the ſeed and poſterity of David, and that Kingdom ſhould never be extinguiſhed, but changed only into the Kingdom of glory in Heaven.

28. My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant ſhall ſtand faſt with him.
29. His ſeed alſo will I make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven.

30, 31, 32. To him it was foretold and bound with Gods oath, v. 35. irrevocably, that as in caſe of uniforme and faithful obedience, his mercies ſhould be continued to his ſeed; ſo in caſe his ſucceeding heirs ſhould depart from that obedience, and violate the commandments of God, falling off to known and wilful tranſgreſſions, God would deliver them up to very ſore and ſevere puniſhments, deportations, and at length to utter rejection from the regal dignity, and upon an univerſal defection of the people and obſtinate impenitency, holding out againſt the moſt efficacious methods, ſend an Univerſal deſtruction on the Kingdom.

30. If his children forſake my Law, and walk not in my judgments,
31. If they ‖ break my ſtatutes, and keep not my commandments.
32. Then will I viſit their tranſgreſſions with the rod, and their Iniquity with † ſtripes.

35. Once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not lie unto David.
36. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the Sun before me.
37. It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah.

33, 34, 35, 36, 37. And even when this should by their sins be most justly brought upon them, yet should not this covenant of mercy, made under oath with David's seed, be in the least measure infringed, the posterity of that faithful servant of God being perpetuated in Christ, the Messias, that should rise and spring from the loines of David; and his Kingdom, though not an earthly or secular, yet in a much greater height, a divine and spiritual Kingdom in the hearts of Christians, is secured, that it shall never have an end, or be destroyed, as long as this world lasts. And this is a full evidence of the fidelity and performance of Gods promise to David and his seed, beyond any thing that any creature in the world injoys. The heavens are lookt on as an immutable unchangeable body, the Sun and Moon divide all time betwixt them, and are ordained and fixt in their spheres to be signs of times and seasons, Gen. 1.14. and so they shall certainly continue as long as this world lasts: But then, when there shall be no farther use of them, they shall be set aside; whereas the Church and Kingdom of Christ, that spiritual seed of him which is the most eminent son of David (when all other branches of this stock are destroyed) shall endure beyond all time, lasting as long as this world lasts, and then not be concluded, but removed only and transplanted to heaven.

39. Thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant, thou hast profaned his Crown * by casting it to the ground:
40. Thou hast broken down all his hedges, and hast || brought his strong holds † to ruine.

38, 39, 40. But notwithstanding this firm promise to David and his posterity, and the perpetuating of the Kingdom to them, thy punishments are now very heavy upon his family. They have provoked thy wrath, and thy covenant with them (the condition being broken on their part) hath not secured them from the bitterest effects of it, devesting them of their regal power, and demolishing and laying wast all their forces. (The Covenant it seems, mutable in respect of this seed of David, and if they continue in their sins, revocable; but under oath, v. 35. and immutable only in respect of Christ, that eminent promised seed of Abraham and David.)

41. All that pass by the way spoil him, he is a reproach to his neighbours.

41. They that were wont to be victorious over all their assailants, that subdued in Davids time the Philistims and Edumeans, and Ammonites and Moabites, &c. are now by their captivation under the Assyrians, delivered up to be spoiled and scorned by all these their revengeful neighbours (see Psal. 83. 6. &c.)

42. Thou hast set up the right hand of his adversaries, thou hast made all his enemies to rejoyce.

42. And now their enemies and assailants are as continually prosperous, as David himself was wont to be.

† rise. הֲקִימוֹתָ

43. Thou hast also turned the edge of his sword, and hast not made him to || stand in the battel.

43. Their weapons that were for ever victorious, by thy forsaking them have quite lost their keenness; they that were never accustomed to defeats in their fights, are now subdued, and unable to make any farther resistance.

† splendor. מִטְהָרוֹ

44. Thou hast made his † glory to cease, and cast his throne down to the ground.

44. The great fame and renown and power which they had among all men is now utterly lost:

45. The days of his youth hast thou shortned; thou hast covered him with shame. Selah.

45. Our Princes slain, and their people subdued, and captivated, and contumeliously handled.

46. How long, Lord, wilt thou hide thy self, for ever? shall thy wrath burn like fire?

46. This is a most sad estate, and if we be not speedily rescued out of it, we shall all be finally destroyed, and the people, and seed of David to whom those illustrious promises were made, utterly consumed.

* what my age is אֲנִי מַה חָלֶד
|| hades שְׁאוֹל

47. Remember * how short my time is: hast thou made all men in vain?
48. What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of || the grave? Selah.

47, 48. Our age and space of life here is very transient and flitting, and is soon and certainly concluded in the grave, that inevitable lot of all mankind: And in this state of captivity we have little joy or comfort in that life which is afforded us, we are born miserable, and pass through a succession of miseries here, and are shortly seised with death. (And this is far distant from the purport of that Covenant made with David, the benefits of which we, it seems, by our sins have, as to this age of ours, utterly forfeited.)

† primitive

49. Lord, where are [m] thy † former loving kindnesses which thou swarest unto David in thy truth?

49. O blessed Lord, be thou at length pleased to be propitiated, to pardon these our provoking sins, to remember and resume thy methods of mercy, and by what wayes thine own wisdom shall best choose, to perform the purport of thy Covenant so long since ratified to David. In this thy fidelity is concerned, and this we are sure will be made good in the eyes of all. O that it might be thy good pleasure to manifest it at this time by the restoring of Davids posterity, our Monarchy, Temple and People to the former dignity. m.

† total of many people. בְּלִי לַבִּים עַמִּים
|| delayes.

50. Remember, Lord, the reproach of thy servants, how I do bear in my bosome the * reproach of all the mighty people,
51. Wherewith thine enemies have reproached, O Lord, wherewith they have reproached [n] the || foot-steps of thine anointed.

50, 51. Till thou please thus by some means to rescue us, we are likely to be the reproach of all the heathen people about us, who will now object the evacuation and frustration of our faith and hopes founded on thy promises to David's seed, and say by way of derision, that our Messias is very long a coming. n.

52. Blessed

51. But whatever their contumelies, or our sufferings are, they shall not discourage, or take us off from Blessing and Praising thee, and steadily relying on thee; whatsoever desertion our foul provoking sins have most justly now brought upon us, yet upon our reformation thou wilt certainly return in mercy to us; and whatsoever interruptions thy promised Mercies may seem to have in respect of our captive Prince and People, the present posterity and Kingdom of David, yet 'tis most certain, the Promises made for sending the Messias, whose Kingdom and redemption is not of this world, but spiritual and eternal, the erecting of his Throne in his servants hearts, and the redeeming them from Sin and Satan, shall in due time be performed in Christ, that most illustrious son of David, to whom (and none else) belonged the promise under the oath of God. And in this completion of Gods Covenant with David his servant (of which all Gods faithful servants shall have their portions) we securely, and with full confidence acquiesce, and all joyn in an ardent and most devout celebration of God's fidelity, his constant performance of all his promises, and so conclude. So be it, Lord, and so certainly it shall be.

52. Blessed be the Lord for evermore. Amen, and Amen.

Annotations on Psalm LXXXIX.

a. אָמַרְתִּי

V. 2. I have said.] That אָמַרְתִּי I have said, belongs to God, and not to the Psalmist, appears v. 3. where in connexion with this, is added, I have made a Covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant. When the LXXII. therefore, and Syriack and Latine, &c. read it in the second person εἶπας, thou hast said, it is to be lookt on as their paraphrase to express the meaning, and not that they read it otherwise than the Hebrew now hath it; and this the rather, because of the great affinity betwixt אָמַרְתָּ and אֲמַרְתִּי, the second and the first person. But when it follows תָּכִין אֱמוּנָתֶךָ thy faithfulness shalt thou establish, these again, as those of v. 1. are the words of the Psalmist speaking unto God. And of such permutation of persons, God saying the former part, and the Psalmist by way of ἀντίφωνον, answering God in the latter, there are many examples. One follows here in the next words, the third and fourth verses being evidently spoken by God. I have made a Covenant —— Thy seed will I establish —— But the fifth by way of answer by the Psalmist, And the heavens shall praise thy wonders, O Lord. The Jewish Arab, who seems with some other Interpreters to refer it to the Psalmist, נמא עלמת as I have known, or made known, (though being without vowels it may be read in the second person, as thou hast declared) adds in the beginning of v. 3. who hast said, I have made a Covenant, &c.

b. אֱלִים

V. 6. Mighty.] As of אֱלֹהִים hath been shewed (note on Psal. 82. 6.) so of אֱלִים here is to be resolved, that it signifies Angels, even those that are in heaven, in the beginning of the verse (the word אֵל which is applied to God, being communicated also to them) there being no more difference betwixt those two phrases בַּשַּׁחַק in heaven, and בְּנֵי אֱלִים among the sons of God, than there is betwixt compared in the former, and likened in the latter part of the verse: where we read can be compared, the Hebrew hath יַעֲרֹךְ from עָרַךְ, which is ponere, disponere, there to set himself in aray, to enter the lists, Job. 6. 4. and thence 'tis to dispute, to aray, or order words against another, Job. 32. 14. & 33. 5. and from thence to contest for preeminence, to enter the comparison. The Chaldee here reads, דְּמִשְׁתְּוֵי is equalled, and that is exactly the same with יִדָּמֶה is likened, that follows. And so the Jewish Arab hath יאדל shall be equal with, and Abu Walid, shall be like unto. And thus have all the Interpreters understood it; the Chaldee בְּאוּכְלוֹסֵי מַלְאֲכַיָּא among the quires of Angels, the LXXII. ἐν υἱοῖς Θεοῦ, among the sons of God, (and so the Latine) the Syriack ܒܒܢܝ ܡܠܐܟܐ among the sons of Angels. The same are again expresst v. 7. by סוֹד קְדֹשִׁים רַבָּה the great counsel or assembly of holy ones (as before, v. 5. by קְהַל קְדֹשִׁים congregation of holy ones) as appears by the end of the verse, where the same are again expresst by כָּל סְבִיבָיו all that are about him; say the Chaldee, all the angels that stand about him. Only the רַבָּה great (which is best joyned with סוֹד assembly, the number of Angels, when assembled together, being so very great) the Chaldee applies to God, that he is רַבָּה וּדְחִיל great and to be reverenced; and so the LXXII. and Syriack and Latine also. The Jewish Arab for heavens, v. 5. reads the inhabitants of heaven, &c. and for congregation of Saints, assembly of Angels: And so v. 7. In the congregation of many Angels. Yet בְּנֵי אֵלִים he renders מן דוי אלטאקה of those that are indued with power, or might.

סוֹד קְדֹשִׁים

רַבָּה

c. V. 8. Or to thy faithfulness.] The rendring of וֶאֱמוּנָתְךָ סְבִיבוֹתֶיךָ will be best learnt from the antient Interpreters: they read it by it self, separate from the former part of the verse, καὶ ἡ ἀλήθειά σου κύκλῳ σου, and thy truth is round about thee; and the Latine, & veritas tua in circuitu tuo, and so the Chaldee, וּקְשׁוֹטָךְ חָזוּר לָךְ and thy truth or fidelity is round about thee; and so the Syriack also, and the Jewish Arab, And thy truth is עלי אחאטוך round about thee. The elegancy of the phrase (which is poetical) seems to be taken from the style of Angels, v. 7. סְבִיבָיו they that incompass God, signifying, that as they wait upon God and execute his will, so, far above the strength of those, Gods fidelity, his care to perform his promise exactly, incompasses him, is ready prest to perform all that he hath ever promised to do.

סְבִיבָיו

d. מְלֹאָהּ

V. 11. Fulness thereof.] From מָלָא to be filled, is מְלֵא and מָלוֹ fulness, and מְלֹאָה the fulness thereof here, and being applied to the world, signifies the whole number of the inhabitants thereof, without which every place is empty and desert. So Psal. 24. 1. the earth and the fulness, is after expresst by the world, and they that dwell therein. So Ps. 50. the forest, and cattel, v. 10. is expresst by the world and fulness thereof, v. 12. see Psal. 46. 11. 48. 7. Isa. 42. 10. The Jewish Arab reads באסרהא all of it. The word מָלָא in Piel signifies also to gather together, or congregate, and from thence is מַלָּא a multitude, collection, or congregation: So in Arabick מלא signifies a multitude, or congregation of people. And from that is the use of πλήρωμα, Rom. 11. 12. and very frequently in the most antient Ecclesiastical writings, for the coming in of believers to the Church.

e. יָמִין

V. 12. South.] The Hebrew יָמִין which is vulgarly used for the right hand, being here a denotation of a particular quarter of the world, must not be rendred in that primitive sense, but (as 'tis elsewhere oft used, 1 Sam. 23. 19. Cant. v. 15. Ezek. 21. 2. and the opposition to צָפוֹן the North exacts) the South, because looking towards the East, as in prayer 'twas customary to turn the face that way, and from thence the East is stiled פָּנִים face, and the West אָחוֹר the hinder part, the South by consequence must be on the right hand: so the Chaldee here renders it, דִּי בְּדָרוֹמָא those that are in the South,

South, and the LXXII. to the ſame ſenſe, θαλασσα ocean, the Latine mare, the Syriack ܝܡܐ the חבור וחרמון right hand, or the South. By proportion with theſe two (the North and the South) are תָּבוֹר וְחֶרְמוֹן Tabor and Hermon to be interpreted, the Weſt and the Eaſt, theſe being the names of two mountains in the Holy Land, Tabor on the Weſt, Hermon on the Eaſt of it. So ſaith the Chaldee by way of paraphraſe of the latter, חֶרְמוֹן דִּי בְמַדְנְחָא Hermon which is on the Eaſt. By which the former, Tabor, being oppoſite to it, muſt be concluded to be in the Weſt.

f. צֶדֶק חֶסֶד V. 14. Juſtice] What is frequently obſervable of צֶדֶק and חֶסֶד righteouſneſs and mercy, that they are uſed promiſcuouſly for works of mercy, differing at moſt but by degrees one from the other, is here to be obſerved, v. 14. And by proportion משפט אמת thereto, מִשְׁפָּט judgment, and אֱמֶת truth, or faith, or fidelity, are equivalent alſo; by judgment meaning Gods moſt juſt and righteous performances of his promiſes, for then that is the known meaning of fidelity. Theſe two when applied to men, comprehend all duties toward men, Juſtice and Charity. So we have judgment and mercy, Mat. 23. 23. as contradiſtinguiſhed to faith, or the duties of the Firſt Table, called in the parallel place, Luk. 11. 42. the מכון כסאך love of God. And being here applied to God, they are ſaid to be מְכוֹן כִּסְאֶךָ a preparation of thy throne; ſo מְכוֹן is rightly rendred by the LXXII. ετοιμασια, preparation, and ſo the Jewiſh Arab, מהיאה preparation: and to that ſenſe, the going before thy face, in the end of the verſe, interprets it, it being directly all one to go before ones face, and to prepare either his way or his dwelling, Luk. 1. 76. And Gods throne or ſeat being ſaid to be prepared for, or in judgment, Pſal. 9. 7. לְמִשְׁפָּט in juſtice, ſay the LXXII. in judgment; from hence it is that the Jews ſay, God hath two thrones, כסא רחמים the throne of mercy, and כסא הדין the throne of judgment, (the former of which is mentioned, Heb. 4. 16.) By theſe two all Gods judicatures are managed, mercy in all his diſpenſations, and ſo likewiſe fidelity (making good his promiſe) in all; whenſoever he adminiſters or doth any thing, theſe two are the Præcones or Heralds to go before, and erect his tribunal, and ſo by theſe two his throne is prepared, in theſe two it is erected.

g. תְּרוּעָה V. 15. Joyful ſound] From רוּעַ vociferatus eſt, is תְּרוּעָה here, for thoſe vociferations or jubilations with which God is praiſed, the ſinging and inſtruments of Muſick, (both which are noted by this word) which are wont to be uſed in giving lauds to God. (ſee Pſal. 150.) To this ſenſe the Chaldee render it, Bleſſed is the people that know לְרַצּוּיֵי בְּדִיחוּן to pleaſe their creator with jubile, the LXXII. that knows αλαλαγμον, jubilation, the Syriack ܬܫܒܚܬܟ thy praiſes, and ſo the Jewiſh Arab, whoſe cuſtome is to ſhout to thee; and that is the moſt perſpicuous rendring of it: qui te Jova cantare novit, ſaith Caſtellio, happy is the people that knows how to praiſe and celebrate thee.

h. לַיהוָה V. 18. The Lord] The Hebrew לַיהוָה muſt be rendred, of, or from the Lord, in both places in this verſe, Of the Lord is our ſhield, or defence; Of the Lord, or from him, i. e. of his appointment, is our King. So the Chaldee appear to have underſtood it, reading דֵּיי in both places: and Aben Ezra gives this account of it, כי מלכנו הוה דיד &c. becauſe David our King is choſen by God, God hath promiſed that the horn of David ſhall flouriſh. And to this the nineteenth verſe belongs; (ſee note i.)

i. גִּבּוֹר V. 19. Mighty] What גִּבּוֹר and בָּחוּר ſignifies here, may be worth inquiring. That the place belongs to Gods exaltation of David to the Kingdom, when he was firſt anointed by Samuel, 1 Sam. 16. 13. is evident here, v. 18, & 20. And that David when he was thus exalted, was no powerful, or, to outward appearance, eminent man, but the contrary, a youth feeding ſheep, 1 Sam. 16. 11. and even the youngeſt and leaſt probable to outward judgment of all his brethren. And this circumſtance, that he was ſo when God choſe him, is taken notice of both there, v. 7. and Pſal. 78. 70, 71. It is therefore not altogether improbable, that ſo it ſhould be here alſo. And though he be ſoon after deſcribed by Saul's ſervants to be גִּבּוֹר a mighty valiant man, a man of war, 1 Sam. 16, 18. yet with this is there joyned the Lord is with him, and that refers it to the time after his being anointed, on which it is expreſly affirmed, v. 13. the ſpirit of the Lord came upon him from that day forward. And accordingly his dealing with the Lion and the Bear, ch. 17. 34. moſt probably refers to ſome acts conſequent to this his anointing, after which 'tis evident he continued to keep the ſheep, and from them was ſent for to come to Saul, chap. 16. 19. And then though גִּבּוֹר from גָּבַר valuit viribus, being ſtrong or prevailing, ſignify a ſtrong or honourable man; yet as vir from virtue, fortitude or virility, is frequently taken for a man ſimply, ſo is גֶּבֶר, and ſo perhaps might גִּבּוֹר be conceived to do alſo, and then having the addition of בָּחוּר בָּחוּר, which as it ſignifies electi, ſo alſo 'tis frequently taken for a young man (Deut. 32. 25.) בָּחוּר גַּם בְּתוּלָה the young man and the virgin, and 2 Sam. 6. 1. all the בָּחוּר youth, or young men in Iſrael, vulgar, ſay the LXXII. and accordingly the Chaldee here render it עוּלַיִם a young man) the conjunction of them might poſſibly ſignifie no more than a man, and that a young man, a man not by way of excellence, above, but of diminution, below other men, till by Gods free choſing and anointing him, he was thus advanced. That בָּחוּר ſhould thus ſignify, it would not much be doubted. The only difficulty is of גִּבּוֹר which (though גֶּבֶר be no more than a man) is generally an eminent kind of man, a gyant, or an heros. In this difficulty the Chaldee may ſeem to have interpoſed ſeaſonably, by paraphraſing it דְּמִתְגַּבַּר בְּאוֹרַיְתָא one that was eminent in the Law, referring to the true piety and virtue of David, the practical knowledge of the law, which denominated him David God's ſervant, v. 20. and in the ſight of God, without any external accompliſhments, might, and certainly did, render him an illuſtrious perſon. And thus it is moſt reaſonable to interpret it, that by this means it may in the more ſublime ſenſe refer to Jeſus Chriſt here typified by David, ſtiled by Iſaiah אֵל גִּבּוֹר the mighty as well as God; not in reſpect of any outward worldly greatneſs, which here he was poſſeſt of (though he were a King, yet his Kingdom was not of this world) but of his inward divine excellencies, and his ſpiritual inviſible power in the hearts of believers. And upon this account it will not be amiſs to take בָּחוּר alſo in its firſt notion, for a choiſe eminent perſon, one choſen מֵעָם from the people, preferred before all others, eſteemed ſuch in the ſight of God, who ſeeth not as man ſeeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh upon the heart, 1 Sam. 16. 7. which being there ſaid by God to Samuel, on purpoſe to direct him to find out and anoint David of all the ſons of Jeſſe, is an intimation that there was ſomewhat of internal eminence in David, on which he was choſen by God to be King in Saul's ſtead. If this be not it, it muſt then refer to what God by choſing and anointing made him, for after that he was a גִּבּוֹר an heros indeed.

V. 22. Exalt

נשא

V. 22. Exalt] יִנָּשֵׂא, with the point on the right hand of ש, signifies to deceive; and that either with the preposition על or ל after it, as Isa. 36. 14. Let not the servants of Hezekiah יַשִּׂא לָכֶם deceive you, or with ב, as here. So the Chaldee understands it, rendring it יְטַעֵי בֵּיהּ deceive him; and the LXXII. I suppose, to the same sense, when they read οὐκ ὠφεληθήσει ἐχθρὸς ἐν αὐτῷ, nihil proficiet inimicus in eo, saith the vulgar, his enemy shall not profit, or gain by him, the deceiving or depriving of one, being the gaining to him that doth deceive.

l. צור ישועתי

V. 26. Rock of my Salvation] The full importance of this phrase צוּר יְשׁוּעָתִי rock of my salvation, both here and again, Psal. 95. 1. may perhaps best be fetcht from the figure ὑπαλλαγῆς, and then it will be all one with my rock and my salvation, Psal. 62. 2. he to whom I fly as to a refuge (so צור rock oft signifies) and from him receive deliverance out of approaching danger. To this agrees the LXXII. their rendring of it, ἀντιλήπτωρ τῆς σωτηρίας μου, the helper of my salvation, i. e. he which helps, and rescues or delivers me. Or else taking צור rock in the notion of strength (as oft 'tis used) it is then (as the Chaldee renders it תְּקֵיף פּוּרְקָנִי) strength of my redemption, i. e. he from whose strength all my deliverance proceeds. The Syriack expression of it is most facile, ܬܘܬܒ ܦܘܪܩܢܝ my most potent deliverer.

m. הָרִאשֹׁנִים

V. 49. Former] From ראש head, or beginning, הָרִאשֹׁנִים here must signify primitive, or primordial; and so the Chaldee reads שְׁרוּיָא from שְׁרֵי to begin, and so the LXXII. τὰ ἀρχαῖα, old, or primitive, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning. From the importance of this word St. Augustine argues that this Prophecy was to be fulfilled in the Christians, in respect of whom the time when the promise was made, viz. David's age, might be truly called tempus antiquum, the antient time. But it must be considered, that not at the time of the completion, but at the time of writing these words by the Psalmist, it was an antient time: and that indeed proves that this Psalm was penned long after *David*s time, probably under the Captivity, to which all this complaint from v. 38. doth evidently belong. Meanwhile it cannot be denied, what that Father conceived, that the full completion of that promise to David was reserved to the days of the Messiah.

* De Civ. Dei, lib. 17. c. 12.

n. עקבות

V. 51. Footsteps] From the notion of עקב heel, many other acceptions there are of the word; first, for paths, or ways, or actions, Psal. 77. 19. Secondly, for the end of any thing, Psal. 119. 33. Thirdly, for a reward, Psal. 19. 11. there rendred ἀνταπόδοσις, retribution, and here ὑπάλλαγμα, commutation by the LXXII. Besides these there is a notion of the verbe עקב in Piel, in Syriack and Chaldee, for delaying, or detaining, Job 37. 4. and from thence the Chaldee here rightly deduces עִקְּבוֹת, and accordingly renders it אוּחַר רוּשְׁמַת רַגְלֵי the slowness of the footsteps of the feet of thy Messiah, or Anointed: And that may most reasonably be pitcht on as the true importance of the word, which by the dagesch in ק appears to be deduced from the verb in Piel, and then that will be the denotation of the sort of the reproaches of their Atheistical enemies, that the promises the Jews so firmly depended on had now failed them, their Messias, whom they expected to rescue and redeem them out of their captivity, had now deceived them. So saith Kimchi, the delays of the Messiah, the discourse, saith he, being of those, who say, שלא יבא לעולם that he will never come. A style taken up in the times of the Gospel against the Christians by the scoffing Gnosticks, Where is the promise of his coming? and he is slack in coming: in opposition to which the Apostles tell them, that he will come, οὐ χρονίσει, and will not tarry, Heb, 10. 37. 37. & 2 Pet. 3. 9. the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness.

The End of the THIRD BOOK.

THE

THE FOURTH BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Ninetieth PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The Ninetieth, being the firſt of the Fourth Book of the Collection of Pſalms, is a complaint of the afflictions and ſhortneſs of life, together with a prayer for the return of mercy; compoſed either by Moſes, that † eminent Prophet, which in Gods ſtead governed the people of Iſrael, and conducted them out of Egypt; or elſe, as in his perſon, by ſome other, with reflexion on thoſe times wherein Moſes lived, when the children of Iſrael in the Wilderneſs were ſorely afflicted, and great multitudes of them untimely cut off for their provocations.

† or, for] A Prayer ‖ of Moſes the Man of God.

† נְבִיאוֹ the Prophet of God Chald.

† refuge, or help, or ſupport

1. Lord, thou haſt been [a] our † dwelling-place in all generations.

1. Bleſſed Lord, we have never had any helper but thee, any other to whom we might reſort for aid and relief, from time to time; Thou haſt been our only protector and defender: O do not now forſake and deſtroy us utterly. a.

* or the earth were in travail,

2. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever [b] thou * hadſt formed the earth, and the world, even from everlaſting to everlaſting, thou art God.

2. Before any part of this world was formed by thee, thou hadſt an infinite, incomprehenſible being, a power by which this whole Orb, wherein we move, was at firſt created, and thou remaineſt immutably the ſame almighty power, and ſo ſhalt do to the end of the world: O let us thine afflicted creatures receive at this time the benefits and auſpicious effects of this thy both power and mercy. b.

‖ a broken eſtate,

3. [c] Thou turneſt man to ‖ deſtruction, and ſayeſt, Return ye children of men.

3. Thou art the great Ruler and moſt juſt Diſpoſer of all events; when thoſe whom thou of thine infinite power and goodneſs didſt create, fell off, and made defection from thee, 'twas then juſt with thee to puniſh them for their ſins, and return them back to the earth, that loweſt and vileſt condition, from which man was firſt brought forth by thy creative power. This was the ſentence againſt Adam, and thus thou art at this time juſtly provoked to deal with great multitudes of us. c.

4. For a thouſand years in thy ſight are but as yeſterday, when it is paſt, and as a watch in the night.

4. And if in the old world, ſuch as had thus offended, were permitted (ſome of them, even Adam himſelf, to whoſe ſin death was awarded by God) to live near a thouſand years after it, yet alas what is that, compared with thy infinity? Thou art without all beginning, O bleſſed Lord, moſt abſolutely eternal; a thouſand years being conſidered in thy duration, are but as a drop ſpilt and loſt in the Ocean, no more than the ſhorteſt time among men, but a day, and that paſt and gone, or but the ſixth part of that, the ſpace of four hours in the night, (ſee note on Pſal. 130. b.) which is inſenſibly paſt over in ſleep.

‖ overflow-eſt them, they ſhall be a dream in the morning as graſs is changed

5. [d] Thou ‖ carrieſt them away as with a flood, they are as a ſleep; in the morning they are as graſs which groweth up:

6. In the morning it flouriſheth and groweth up, in the evening it is cut down and withereth.

5, 6. As for us men, we are naturally frail and ſhort-lived, our whole age is inſtantly at an end by the courſe of nature: But then when thy wrath alſo breaks forth againſt us, death comes as a torrent, and ſweeps us away in the midſt of our ſtrength; our life then is but as a dream, when one awakes out of ſleep, but a phanſie at firſt, and that ſoon vaniſht; whilſt we live, we do but ſeem to live, and ſtraight death comes, and that phaſm vaniſhes. Our condition here is no more ſtable and durable than that of the flower or graſs of the field, which when it flouriſhes moſt, is ſubject to inſtant fading and withering; but if the ſythe or ſickle come, the emblem of thy judgments on ſinners, then it falls in the prime of its verdure: In the morning it is freſh and proſperous and in its growth, and the very ſame day it is cut down, and then immediately fadeth, loſeth all its verdure and beauty before the night. d.

7, 8. And just thus it is with us: Our sins have provoked thee to cut us off in the prime and most flourishing part of our age; our open and crying sins, these, as the Rector of the Universe, thou thinkest fit to punish with excision; and beside these, many more secret sins there are, unknown to men, but most clearly discernible by thee, our secret apostasies, and in our hearts returning to Egypt, our dislike of thy methods, thy presiding and governing us, and preferring the satisfaction of our lusts before the observance of thy commands, and these also provoke thy wrath, call forth thy vengeance against us, and by this means (as with a torrent v. 5.) we are swept away, and consumed in a visible formidable manner.

7. For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled.
8. For thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.

e. 9. Thou hast been incensed by our Atheistical murmurings, thy displeasure is gone out against us; and so the years that were allowed us here, and might otherwise have been prolonged for some time, are now suddenly cut off, our race is ended in a trice, we are seised on with a swift destruction.

9. For all our days are passed away in thy wrath; we † spend our years * as a tale that is told.

† end, כָּלִינוּ
* thought or breath.

f. 10. The vast numbers of 603550. that were fit for war, and so were listed at our coming out of Egypt, do all drop away one after another, thy oath being gone out against them, that but two of that whole number shall enter into Canaan, all the rest leaving their carcasses in the Wilderness. By this means it comes to pass, that great multitudes die before they advance to more than the seventieth year of their age, viz. all that were but thirty years old at their coming out of Egypt. Others that were then in their prime, about forty years old, are sure not to out-live eighty. (And for the youth that were not numbred, those that were to enter into Canaan, and so out-live the rest, they have yet little joy in their life, nothing but wearisome journeys and turmoils, see Psal. 78. 33.) and so our complaint is most just, as to a vast multitude of us, that our age is even as nothing in respect of true duration, but a thought or breath, v. 9. our most vigorous men being cut off in their prime, and so there is an end of them.

10. The days of our years ‖ are [f] threescore years and ten, and if † by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we flee away.

‖ to them are seventy years, † in vigor, eighty years, and the strength of them is labour—

g. 11, 12. Whilst thus we daily cut off, the great unhappiness of it is, that no man is careful to lay to heart these terrible effects of Gods heavy wrath upon us; no man is so far instructed by what he sees daily befal multitudes of other men, as to be sensible of his own danger, and the shortness of his life, so as to live well, while he is permitted to live. Lord, be thou pleased to give us this grace, so to instruct us, and convince us of the shortness of our lives, that we may be brought to pay that constant reverence and obedience that is due to thee, and wherein true wisdom consists, there being nothing so unwise as our provoking of thee, and adventuring to be cut off in our sins. *

11. Who knoweth the power of thine anger? * even according to [g] thy fear so is thy wrath.
12. ‖ So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

* as thy fear thy wrath, or and the terror of thine indignation, ‖ To number our days, do thou so teach us, that we may

13. And if it may be thy good pleasure, O Lord, reverse that sentence of excision which is gone out against us: let it suffice that thy displeasure hath flamed to the devouring so great numbers of us, and at length vouchsafe to be pacified and reconciled with us.

13. Return, O Lord, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.

14. We have layn very long under thy wrath, O Lord, O delay not to afford us the full streams of thy mercy which we have thus long wanted and impatiently thirsted after; that so for the remainder of our time we may have some matter of ovation and rejoycing, after so much sadness.

14. O satisfie us early with thy mercy, that we may rejoyce and be glad all our days.

15. Our afflictions and miseries have lasted long; O let us have some proportion of joy to so much of sorrow.

15. Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16. O magnifie thy glorious work of grace and mercy to us and our posterity, which is most properly thine, (thy acts of punishments being thy strange works, Isai. 28. 21.)

16. Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

17. Shew forth thy loving kindness and light of thy countenance toward us, look graciously and favourably upon us, give us thy grace to direct us in all our ways, work thou in us both to will and to do, and then by thy good providence prosper our designs and undertakings.

17. And let the ‖ beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish thou the work of our hands upon us, yea the work of our hands establish thou it.

Annotations on Psalm XC.

a. מָעוֹן

V. 1. Dwelling] From עוּן to dwell, the noun מָעוֹן ordinarily signifies habitation, and so the Syriack understands it here rendring בֵּית house. But the Arabick usage of the verb in another notion, for aiding or protecting, is a sign that thus the word antiently signified; and so Deut. 33. 27. the Lord מְעוֹנָה is thy refuge, we render it, Καταπαύσει σε, shall cover thee, say the LXXII. and so indeed every house being a covert, the notions of house and refuge will well agree: and Aben Ezra, that resolves this Psalm was written by Moses, proves it (among other reasons) by this word being there used by Moses in Deuteronomy. And then from that signification of it there, מָעוֹן may here best be rendred protector or helper; and so the Chaldee seem to have understood it, who having paraphrased the word Lord, with some reflexion on that notion of the word מָעוֹן in their dialect, wherein it signified the Temple, O Lord, whose habitation of the house of thy Schechina or Majestatick presence is in heaven, add אַתְּ הֲוֵיתָא לָנָא מְעִיד thou hast been to us a helper. The Jewish Arab, which looks to the former notion, and renders it מוֹשְׁנָא, which is a place of abode, yet gives a reason of his version in a note, to this purpose, The meaning is, Thou hast born (or supported) as much, and held our hands (or held us by the hand) and been to us as a place to bear us in our reliance on thee. To the same purpose Abu Walid, having interpreted the word מעון for an habitation, place, or place of abode, makes mention after-afterwards of this verſe and ſome others, in which the word might ſeem not ſo exactly to bear that ſignification, and ſaith that it is attributed as an Epithet to God, from the notion of a place, which remaining bears or ſuſtains him that is in it. Though God be the Creator both of place and time, and the deſtroyer of them, yet figuratively it is attributed to him: ſo that according to their underſtanding of it, it ſhould be literally a place, but in ſignification, a ſupport to us. Kimchi mentions another interpretation of his Fathers, who would have מעון derived from עין an eye, as if it were, our reſpect, or whom we reſpect, or whom our eyes are ſet; but he himſelf puts for explication of it, מקום ומחסה a place and refuge. The LXXII. both here and Pſal. 91. 9. render it καταφυγὴ, refuge, which being applied to a perſon, as 'tis here to God, muſt needs ſignifie one, from whom he that flies to him expects help, and ſo [helper] will be the beſt rendring of it.

b. וַתְּחוֹלֵל

V. 2. Thou haſt formed the earth] The phraſe וַתְּחוֹלֵל אֶרֶץ will beſt be rendred, and thou earth wert in travail; or, taking תְּחוֹלֵל in the third perſon, אֶרֶץ being moſt uſual in the ſæminine gender, and the earth was in travail: ſo the Syriack ſets it more plainly حيل لاسحب before the earth fell in travail. By this phraſe is poetically meant the the earths bringing forth the mountains, when from the firſt round or globular form of it, ſome parts were lifted up above the reſt, the high riſing whereof became the mountains, which therefore may be called the iſſue of the earth: and then, as they are ſaid to be brought forth in the former part of the verſe, ſo by analogy the earth muſt be ſaid to travail, and bring them forth. And this to expreſs the very firſt minute that there was time to compute from, and ſo as far as our expeſſions can go, the infinity of God. The Jewiſh Arab verſion hath reſpect to another notion of the word for beginning, and renders it by قبل ما before thou broughteſt forth the mountains, and beganneſt (or firſt createdſt) the habitable, with the reſt of the earth, or elſe (as, being without vowels, it may be read) before the mountains grew up, (or were brought forth) and the habitable with the reſt of the earth began.

c. אַל

V. 3. Turneſt man] The LXXII. begin this v. 3. with μὴ, not, either taking the Hebrew אֵל God, from the end of v. 2. and converting it into אַל not, and prefixing it to this v. 3. or elſe reading the Hebrew by way of interrogation, which they therefore think fit to interpret by the negative, wilt thou turn man, &c. by μὴ ἀποστρέψεις, turn thou not. Which the Latine follow in the form of a prayer, Ne avertas —— Turn not man to humility —— The word which they render humilitatem, (from the LXXII. their ταπείνωσιν) is in the original וְדַכָּא from דָּכָא to bruiſe or beat to pieces. By this, deſtruction, or diſſolution of parts in death, and the reſolution of the body to duſt, may be fitly expreſt; and accordingly the Chaldee read עַד מוֹתָא to death: and to that the inſuing part of the Pſalm may ſeem to apply it, treating of ſhort life, and ſpeedy death; and if ſo, then to this ſenſe we muſt alſo, with the learned † Schindler, underſtand the immediate conſequents, וְתֹאמֶר שׁוּבוּ בְנֵי אָדָם and ſayeſt, Return ye ſons of Adam, i. e. return to the earth, from whence Adam had his name, and from whence he firſt came, according to that of Gen. 3. 19. Out of the ground waſt thou taken, for duſt thou art, and unto duſt ſhalt thou return. So Pſal. 146. 4. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth. And Eccleſ. 12. 7. then ſhall the duſt return to the earth as it was. But it is poſſible that דָּכָא may ſignifie no more than bringing low by puniſhment, and that in order to amendment, according to the importance of Pſal. 51. 17. and Iſai. 57. 15. and then שׁוּבוּ בְנֵי אָדָם return ye ſons of men muſt be meant of returning by repentance; and thus indeed generally the Imperative שׁוּבוּ taken by it ſelf ſignifies. To this thoſe words of the Chaldee, which are inſerted in the beginning of the ſecond verſe, (but ſomewhat out of their place) ſeem to refer, קֳדָם אִתְגְּלִי &c. When it was revealed before thee that thy people would ſin, thou preparedſt repentance; according to that tradition of the Jews, that repentance was one of the ſeven things created before the world. And thus the Arabick reads it more expreſly, in the LXXII. their form of deprecation, Bring not men back to deſtruction יקר קלת ſince thou haſt ſaid, Come back ye children of men: he that hath promiſed to forgive upon repentance, defeats his own act of grace, if he cut off the tranſgreſſor in his ſin. Thus Jarchi interprets the bringing to deſtruction to be קרוב למות near to death, and the returning to be מרחיקים הרע from evil ways. But ſtill the context ſeems to authorize the former interpretation of deſtruction, and ſpeedy returning to the earth, which is evidently the ſubject of the fifth and ſixth verſes. And for verſe the fourth, it ſeems to be the preventing of an objection, ready to offer it ſelf from the long lives of the Patriarchs, who lived near a thouſand years; but thoſe, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, are in Gods ſight, or in reſpect of his infinity, but a very unconſiderable time. The number, ſaith Jarchi, hath a peculiar reſpect to Adam, to whom God had ſaid, thou ſhalt die in the day that thou eateſt, and yet he lived nine hundred and thirty years.

V. 5. Carrieſt them away] To ſet down the ſhortneſs of mans life, the compariſon is here made between God and us: A thouſand years, which is longer than Adam or Methuſelah lived, and ſince thoſe days, as long as many ages of men, bears not the leaſt proportion with Gods eternity, v. 4. whereas (here v. 5.) mens years are preſently at an end; זְרַמְתָּם, from זָרַם to overflow, and ſweep, and carry away, thou (i. e. God) ſweepeſt them away, with the ſame force and ſwiftneſs that a torrent carries any thing before it, and there is no reſiſting it. And to the ſame purpoſe, in another ſimilitude, שֵׁנָה יִהְיוּ a ſleep ſhall they be, or, as שֵׁנָה alſo ſignifies, a dream. So the Chaldee, חֵיוַ חֲלָמִין יְהוֹן as dreamers ſhall they be. To this I ſuppoſe בַּבֹּקֶר in the morning muſt be annext (and not prefixt to the conſequents) a dream in the morning, as that is all one with a dream when one awakes, Pſal. 73. 20. in the notion of vaniſhing: as a dream, when the morning comes, and the man awakes, preſently vaniſheth; ſo ſhall they vaniſh, (for to this of vaniſhing, and coming to nought, both here and Pſal. 73. the phraſe is uſed) no conſiderable matter is done by them in their lives, but a few ſlight actions, which have but the nature of dreams, and ſuddenly they die, or vaniſh, as at the coming of morning, this ſleep, or but dream as it were of life, is at an end. Both theſe expreſſions of the overflowing, and the dream, the LXXII. by ſlight changes put together into one. For זְרַמְתָּם thou overfloweſt them, they ſeem to have read with other points זַרְמָתָם their flowings, and rendring the ſenſe, and not the word, tranſlate that τὸ ἐξανάλωμα αὐτῶν, their being turned to nothing. Then for שֵׁנָה dream or ſleep, from יָשַׁן dormivit, they read שָׁנָה year, and ſo make but one ſentence of both, τὰ ἔτη ἡμῶν ἀνάλωμα ἔσονται, their years are things of nought; very full to the ſenſe, though not to the letter, and the two ſimilitudes in the Hebrew.

† In the word רַכָּא שׁוּבוּ

The ſame again is ſuccinctly expreſt by a third ſi-כְּחָצִיר militude, כְּחָצִיר יַחֲלֹף As graſs is or ſhall be changed, יַחֲלֹף or paſs away, (viz. the verdure and beauty of it.) The Hebrew חָלַף ſignifies to alter the thing, or the place, to change, or to paſs away. The Jewiſh Arab renders it יסעי, which in the ordinary uſe of the word ſignifies paſſeth away: and ſo is fitly applied to the graſs. When that begins to fade, to loſe its freſh green colour, 'tis then ſaid to change and paſs away; παράγεται, paſs away, ſay the LXXII. and Latine, but the Chaldee הֵיךְ עִסְבָּא דְּמִתְפַּרְכָּא as the graſs which is cut down יְתַחְלְפוּן they ſhall be changed, i. e. loſe their verdure, and wither, and ſo paſs. To this of the graſs the whole ſixth verſe belongs alſo, where we have another diſtant notion of חָלַף. In the יציץ morning יָצִיץ they ſhall flouriſh, וְחָלָף and (not paſs וְחָלָף away, or fade, or change from better to worſe, but, in a good ſenſe) change to the better, ſpring, and grow, is renewed, ſaith Abu Walid: ſo that ſame word חָלַף ſignifies alſo to ſpring, or ſprout out, Job 14. 7. There is hope unto a tree, if it be cut down, that it will ſprout out again. The Hebrew hath יַחֲלִיף, the Chaldee יְשַׁבְּשֵׁב, ſprout out, the LXXII. ἀνακμάσει, reflouriſh. So Iſai. 40. 31. They that wait on the Lord יַחֲלִיפוּ כֹחַ ſhall (we render it) renew their ſtrength, but the Chaldee ויוספון— ſhall add or increaſe in ſtrength, and be renewed to their youth כְּצִפּוֹחַ דְּסַלְיָק as a ſprout that grows: and ſo the conſequents interpret it, they ſhall mount up with wings as Eagles— And ſo ſure 'tis here, וְיִסְגֵּי and it ſhall increaſe or grow, ſaith the Chaldee. And the uſing it here in this ſo different ſenſe from that of v. 5. is not without example, but poetical and elegant, oft obſervable in theſe books, in this very Pſalm, where שָׁנָה is v. 3. in the notion of a year, but v. 5. of a ſleep or dream; Yet the Jewiſh Arab taketh יַחֲלֹף and חָלָף in the ſame ſenſe in both places, and thus paraphraſes the whole paſſage, So haſt thou ſet them, or conſtituted them (the years foregoing) as if they flowed, and were as a ſleep, and we in our morning are as graſs that paſſeth away. For in the morning bloſſoming it paſſeth away, and in its evening is dry, and is broken. Abu Walid rendring the latter is renewed, declareth not his opinion of the former which he ſubjoyneth to יְמוֹלֵל it. And then it follows, In the evening יְמוֹלֵל it ſhall וְיָבֵשׁ be cut down וְיָבֵשׁ and be dried up or wither. In one and the ſame day it thus alters its fate, it is florid and thriving, ſprouting out and growing in the morning; and before the end of that very day, it is cut down, and withers inſtantly.

e. V. 9. As a tale] הֶגֶה (from הָגָה to ſpeak, and דְּגִ֫ה that either with the tongue or heart) ſignifies either a thought or ſpeech, and being here uſed to expreſs the ſhorteſt duration imaginable, it may moſt probably ſignifie a thought, as that which alone is quicker than a word is ſpoken. When the Latines would expreſs the greateſt ſwiftneſs, they do it by dicto citius, and this Caſtellio hath choſen to make uſe of here, finimus annos noſtros dicto citius, we end (ſo כְּלִינוּ כְּלִינוּ literally ſignifies) our years ſooner than one can ſpeak; and that ſure is as ſoon as one can think. If this be not it, then it muſt be remembred that הֶגֶה ſignifies alſo gemitus and halitus, a ſigh and a breath, and accordingly the Chaldee render it here, דְּיוֹךְ הַבֶל פּוּמָא דְּסִיחָא as the vapour or breath of the mouth in winter; agreeable to which is the definition of our life in Saint James, ch. 4. 14. What is our life? It is even a vapour, that appears for a little while, but afterward vaniſheth. The LXXII. here read τὰ ἔτη ἡμῶν ὡσεὶ ἀράχνην ἐμελετῶντο, our years as a ſpider have meditated; and the Latine, ſicut aranea meditabuntur, or (as the conformity with the Greek exacts) meditabantur, did meditate, reading for the noun הֶגֶה the verb הָגָה, and for כָּמוֹ by a light change of מ into ט, כָּטוֹ which the learned Schindler mentions (from טוה to ſpin) as all one with the Chaldee טוּיְתָא or שׁוּיְתָא a ſpider. For this the learned Hugo Grotius hath a more remote conjecture, ſuppoſing them for כמו to have read שָׁמָם, the word which is uſed for a ſpider, Prov. 30. 28. But beſides that שָׁמָם is very diſtant from כָּמוֹ (nothing but מ common to them) there would, in that ſuppoſed reading, be nothing to anſwer the Greek ὡσεί, and though that alſo may be conceived to have been by them added by way of ſupply to an Elliptis (as ſometimes it is) yet ſtill that makes the conjecture the more remote, which hath two ſuch difficulties in it. Meanwhile their meaning, in theſe words, though ſomewhat obſcure, may probably be this, Our years as a ſpider have meditated, or exerciſed themſelves; or been imployed, viz. in weaving ſuch webbs as the next broom ſweeps away; our age is ſpent in fruitleſs ſlight labours, which preſently come to nothing. And ſo this they might take for no inconvenient paraphraſe of our years as a breath, or thought, which they found in the Hebrew, referring the כָּלִינוּ we have finiſhed or ended to the former part of the period.

f. V. 10. Threeſcore years] In this verſe what is ſaid שִׁבְעִים of the age of man, that it is but שִׁבְעִים שָׁנָה ſeventy, שָׁנָה or at moſt שְׁמוֹנִים eighty years, is thought by moſt to belong to later ages than that of Moſes, by whom the Pſalm is ſuppoſed to have been compoſed. The period of life is indeed by Solon thus ſet, εἰς ἑβδομήκοντα ἔτια ἔρον τῆς ζωῆς, ἀνθρώπῳ περιίδημι, the term of a mans life is ſeventy years, ſaith Herodotus of him, Lib. 11. and ſo Laertius in his life, Σόλων ἤ ἔρον ἀνθρώπινε βίυ φησὶν ἔτη ἑβδομήκοντα, Solon ſaith ſeventy years are the term of mans life. But in Moſes's time it was ſure much larger, Moſes himſelf was 120. years old, and his eye was not dim, nor his natural force of vigor abated, Deut. 34. 7. and was eighty years old when God made him Captain of his people, as Aaron likewiſe was eighty three before he was made High-Prieſt, Exod. 7. 7. which is evidence enough, that that age of eighty was not an extreme decrepit age at that time. This hath made many reſolve that this Pſalm was of a far later date than that of Moſes. But with how little reaſon they have thus reſolved, will ſoon be made manifeſt, and the difficulties of this verſe ſufficiently cleared, by remembring the ſubject matter of the whole Pſalm, the afflictions, and ſhortneſs of life, not abſolutely to all at that time, בָּהֶם but peculiarly בָּהֶם to them that are there ſpoken of; ܒܗܘܢ to or among them ſaith the Syriack, ἐν αὐτοῖς, the LXXII. the Latine in ipſis, in or among them, i. e. to the children of Iſrael in the deſert, when for their murmurings and other provocations which they were guilty of, Gods wrath and oath was gone out againſt them, that of all that were numbred of them at their coming out of Egypt, not one, ſave only Caleb and Joſhua, Numb. 14. 29, 30. Deut. 1. 35. no not Moſes himſelf, Deut. 32. 52. Numb. 17. 13. ſhould enter into Canaan. This oath of Gods was to be exactly performed in the ſpace of forty years, (whilſt they wandred in the Wilderneſs from place to place, without any houſe or city to dwell in) the whole number of thoſe that were then numbred, all the males from twenty years old and upward that were able to go forth to war, except only thoſe two, were conſumed. How great that number was, appears by the liſt appointed to be made, Numb. 1. 3. ſix hundred thouſand, and three thouſand and five hundred and fifty, Numb. chap. 1. verſ. 32. Of this number then, all that were but twenty years old were ('tis evident) cut off before they exceeded the ſixtieth year of their age; of all that were but thirty years old, none out-lived the ſeventieth year; of all that were forty, none, ſave only thoſe two out-lived his eightieth. And of theſe that exceeded not forty, and were not under twenty at the coming out of Egypt, who conſequently, all but two, died before they attained to eighty years, certainly the number muſt be very great, probably near three hundred thouſand, it being unlikely, that the number from forty to the age of diſcharge from war, ſhould do much more than equal that from twenty to forty; and conſequently the reaſon of the complaint very conſiderable in that age, beyond any other age of thoſe times, that without any Epidemical diſeaſe, ſo vaſt a number ſhould die before eighty years old. This I ſuppoſe the meaning of the addition here וְאִם בִּגְבוּרֹת שְׁמוֹנִים שָׁנָה and if in vigor, fourſcore years. גֶּבֶר is a ſtrong man, and בּוּר ordinarily uſed for a warlike perſon, and גְּבוּרָה 2 King. 18. 20. ſtrength for war; and the prime age for ſuch was about or under forty years old. Thoſe then that at their numbring were not above forty years old, might poſſibly live to fourſcore, but falling (all but two of them) in the Wilderneſs in the forty years ſpace, they cannot be imagined to have ſurvived that age. And for all others, thoſe under twenty years old, that were not numbred at the coming out of Egypt becauſe of their youth, the next part of the period ſeems to belong to them, וְרָהְבָּם עָמָל וָאָוֶן and the ſtrength of them is labour and ſorrow. By רָהְבָּם (from רָהַב ſtrong) Aben Ezra and Rabbi Solomon underſtand the ſtrength of youth, i. e. of the beſt of mans age, the ſtrength, or firmneſs that is in, or to a man in thoſe days. And thus it may ſignifie Synecdochically (as by the Youth of the nation we mean in ordinary ſtile) thoſe under twenty years old. The LXXII. reads τὸ πλεῖον αὐτῶν, which the Latine renders, Quod amplius eorum, the overplus of them, taking רָהְבָּם in the notion of רֶהְבָּם from רֹב multitude; ſo Abu Walid, reading רֶהְבָּם, doth yet render it, the overplus, what exceeds of them. And thus the ſenſe will well bear, the overplus of them, that is the youth that were not numbred; and to this the Chaldee and Syriack ſeem to refer, who both render it וְסוּגְעֵיהוֹן and the increaſe of them, not plerique ipſorum, the moſt of them, as the tranſlator of the Syriack renders, but the increaſe of them, i. e. of the Iſraelites, viz. their little ones, Num. 14. 31. which God there promiſed to bring into the land of Canaan, when all that were numbred, ſhould fall in the Wilderneſs, v. 29, 30. Of theſe therefore it is added, that though they were not ſo ſhort-lived, yet for that while they had little comfort of their lives; though they ſurvived and entred into Canaan, Numb. 14. 31. yet all the ſpace of the forty years in the Wilderneſs, it was moſt true of them what here follows, their life for that ſpace was עָמָל hard travail or moyl, the LXXII. duly renders it κόπος, laſſitude, or weariſome toyl; וָאָוֶן and ſorrow or labour, πόνος, ſay the LXXII. dolor the Latine, both joyned to expreſs the weariſomneſs of their tedious deſart-marches. This later paſſage ſeems to be here ſet in a parentheſis, (to give ſome account of the overplus, thoſe that were not numbred, as well as the former words did of thoſe that were) for not to them, but the former belongs the concluſion of the verſe, with the cauſal particle in the front; כִּי גָז חִישׁ —— for it is ſuddenly cut off, and we flee away; ſo to all them it was that were numbred at the coming out of Egypt, ſave only to Caleb and Joſhua, in the ſpace of forty years their carcaſſes fell all and every of them in the Wilderneſs, and ſo they were גָּז mowed graſs, or ſtubble, cut up by the roots, (ſo the word ſignifies from גָּזַז to pluck up) and like ſtubble before the wind, or a rolling thing before the whirl-wind, Iſa. 17. 13. they fled away. The Jewiſh Arab reads, when the harveſt is nigh, we flee, ſo taking it from גזז. If it be deduced from גוז it may then be compared with the Arabick גוז or גאז to paſs along, and ſo R. Solomon renders it by עבר. But to the reſt this cannot be applied, who did ſurvive in Canaan, and were not thus cut off. This the LXXII. have much transformed, ὅτι ἐπῆλθε πρόσκαιρος ἡ ὀργή σου ἡμῶν, καὶ ταραχθησόμεθα, and ſo after them the Latine, for tranſitory is come upon us, and we ſhall be ſtricken. How they came thus to render the words, is not, that I find, taken notice of by any. That which ſeems to me moſt probable is, that the Greek copies are corrupt, and that their original reading was, not ἐπῆλθε πρόσκαιρος, or πρόσκαιρος ἐφ' ἡμᾶς καὶ ταραχθησόμεθα; as now we have it, but ἐπῆλθε πρωΐ, καὶ ἡμεῖς ταραχθησόμεθα, it is early gone and we ſhall be ſmitten. For ſo גוז and גז which ſignifies to cut off, ſignifies alſo to paſs and go away, and ſo might probably be rendred ἐπῆλθε, is gone away; and חִישׁ celeriter, quickly, might as fitly be rendred πρωΐ, early, as that is frequently uſed for quickly, (ſee v. 14.) and ſo the Chaldee here adds in the end of the verſe, לְצַפְרָא in the morning, to expreſs the ſwiftneſs of the flight. And then for וְנָעֻפָה from עוּף to flee, they ſeem to have deduced it from נָגַף to ſmite, changing the ע into ג, and ſo to have rendred it καὶ ἡμεῖς ταραχθησόμεθα, and we ſhall be ſmitten.

V. 11. Thy fear] All difficulty will be removed from this verſe, if only the כ in וְכִירְאָתְךָ may be taken, as an expletive, unſignificant, for then the words will lie plainly thus, who knows the power of thy thy anger, וְיִרְאָתְךָ עֶבְרָתֶךָ and thy terror or terribleneſs of thy wrath? Thus the Syriack have taken it, rendring וְיִרְאָתְךָ by ܘܕܚܠܬܟ and the terror. Thus to know the force and terror of Gods wrath, is to diſcern the cauſe of it, our ſins, and to be truly affected with it, ſo as to prevent it by ſeaſonable reformation. This is the interpretation of knowledge in Scripture-ſtile, as 'tis uſed for ſpiritual prudence, and practice proportionable to our knowledge. And this the Chaldee have paraphraſtically and more largely expreſt, מַן הוּא דְיָדַע —— Who is he that knoweth to avert the ſtrength of thy anger, but the juſt who fear thee and appeaſe thy fury? The rendring the particle כ as, or according to, ſeems not here ſo facile or agreeable; for by that according to thy fear, ſignifying our fear of God, 'tis certain that Gods wrath is not proportioned to our fear of him. And that our fear of God ſhould ſignifie our want of that fear, to which only his wrath is apportioned, is very remote and without example. Aben Ezra would have it to ſignifie the ſame with thoſe words of the Law, Levit. 10. 3. I will be ſanctified in all them that come nigh me, viz. that Gods anger is encreaſed according to our knowledge of him, and ſo Jarchi, and Kimchi. But ſeeing the knowledge of God is oft ſeparated from obedience to him, but the fear of God in the ſacred ſtyle is not ſo ſeparable, and therefore they that know God, and ſo only approach him may incur his higheſt diſpleaſure, but they that fear God cannot be imagined to do ſo; therefore I cannot adhere to that notion. Yet if the former ſhall ſeem remote, then I ſhall propoſe this third, that the phraſe כְּיִרְאָתְךָ עֶבְרָתֶךָ as thy fear thy wrath, ſhall bear proportion with that way of ſpeaking, Judg. 8. 21. כְּאִישׁ גְּבוּרָתוֹ as a man, his ſtrength; which proverbial form may probably have been transferr'd to other things, and then the meaning here may be, that Gods wrath is equal to what men fear or apprehend of it; God

God affrights not with vain, empty terrors, but will really inflict on impenitent ſinners to the utmoſt of his threats, or of what they can apprehend, or expect. This may not improbably be the meaning of the phraſe. Yet the context ſeems better to accord with the other, the prayer following, So teach us, being fitly oppoſed to the former complaint, that no man takes notice, or lays to heart the terribleneſs of Gods wrath, in cutting off ſo many daily before their eyes. And therefore of that only I have taken notice in the paraphraſe. For indeed that which follows in our books, as the beginning of v. 12. לִמְנוֹת יָמֵינוּ to number our days, will beſt be adjoyned to this v. 11. and ſo the LXXII. joyn ἐξαριθμήσασθαι —— (only for יָמֵינוּ our days, they ſeem to have read יְמִינְךָ thy right hand, and ſo render it δεξιάν σου.) If thus we ſet it, the ſenſe will be moſt current in the firſt way of intepretation, Who knows the power of thine anger, &c. —— to number, i. e. ſo knows the power of Gods anger, and terror of his indignation, as thereby to be moved, or to learn to number his days, i. e. to look upon his life as ſhort and fading (for ſo we number that which is ſhort, pauperis eſt numerare pecus, the poor man, that hath but a few cattel, may number them, the flocks of the rich are innumerable) and accordingly to ſpend it the more to his eternal advantages. The asking the queſtion מִי יוֹדֵעַ Who knows? ſignifies a ſtrong negation, and complaint, that no man knows, they fall every day, and no man conſiders it ſo (in the example of others) as to number his own days, or apply it to his own benefit or amendment. And then follows a prayer to God כֵּן הוֹדַע Do thou ſo teach us or make us know, that we may apply —— or as that phraſe may better be rendred, וְנָבִיא לֵבָב חָכְמָה that we may bring an underſtanding heart; ſo רוּחַ חָכְמָה an underſtanding ſpirit, Exod. 28. 3. and Iſai. 11. 2. and in many other places: and then by that will be ſignified that knowing the terribleneſs of Gods wrath, the want of which was matter of complaint, v. 11. And ſo this is a facile and obvious rendring of theſe two verſes. Yet it is not amiſs to mention other deſcants. The Jewiſh Arab ſeems not to take עברה v. 11. for wrath, but (according to an Arabick uſe of that word) for conſideration, and ſo goes in his interpretation far different from others, thus, מִמֶּן יִעְלַם &c. And who knows the power of thy wrath, ſo as to conſider thy fear? As the number (or according to the numbring) of our age which is known, that we might bring an heart of wiſdome, or wiſe heart. Adding in a note, that the meaning is, that our days are numbred and known, and if we did continually know (or acknowledge) the power of thy wrath, and puniſhment, as we acknowledge that our days and ages are fading, we would come before thee with a wiſe heart, and by repentance turn unto thee. וּדְע he ſeems to take not for the Imperative, but for the preterperfect tenſe paſſive. Abu Walid takes that in another ſenſe, and thus interprets it, According to the meaſure of our age, ſo diſcipline (or chaſtiſe) us, exceed not meaſure in chaſtiſing us, becauſe our age is ſhort, &c. and he compares it with Job 7. 19. How long wilt thou not depart from me, nor let me alone? &c. But this Kimchi in his Roots ſeems not to like of. R. Moſes, mentioned by Aben Ezra, thus makes the meaning, He that knows the force of thy wrath, and knows how to number our days, the truth is known to him.

The

The Ninety First PSALM.

The ninety first Psalm is a meditation of the special security of the truly pious man, who relies on God alone for it, together with all other blessings of this world, as the reward of his firm adherence to God. ('Tis affirmed by the Chaldee and LXXII. and Latine to have been composed by ‖ David, in reference perhaps to Gods being intreated for the land, and removing the pestilence, 2 Sam. 24. 25. just as it was seizing on Jerusalem, see note b. and hath its most eminent completion in the Messias.)

Paraphrase.

† remains in the protection

1. HE that † dwelleth in the secret place of the most High, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

1. He that adheres to God, that seeks and expects all his safety from his sole protection, (and accordingly qualifies himself for a capacity of that, keeps in those ways to which God hath promised his safeguard) shall be sure never to fail of receiving it; His tenure cannot fail, as being founded on so sure a title, as is the promise of him that hath all power and dominion over all creatures in the world, and can certainly, and as undoubtedly will perform, whatsoever he hath promised.

2. I will say of the Lord, he is my refuge, and my fortress, my God; in him will I trust.

2. This general never-failing axiom gives me confidence chearfully to repose my whole trust and affiance in God, as the most sacred inviolable sanctuary, the most strong, provided, impregnable fort, the supreme and divine power, that governs and over-rules the whole world, and hath by his promise obliged himself never to destitute me that thus hang on him.

3. Surely he will deliver thee from the snare of the fouler, and from the noysome pestilence.

3. In this safeguard I shall be secured from those dangers that are in the eye of man most unavoidable, the most secret ambush that is most cunningly laid, and the most killing poyson that propagates it self most insensibly.

4. He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust; his truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

4. For as an Eagle or other bird doth with her wings protect and secure her feeble young ones from all approaching dangers, and to that safeguard they confidently resort, without seeking or soliciting any other, (from whence, and by analogy with which it is, that in the Holy of holies the Cherubims with their wings overshadow the mercy-seat, to signifie Gods gratious care and protection over all that there address themselves to him) so shall God guard and defend me, and in his protection will I repose all my hope and trust, the power of the Almighty being abundantly sufficient, and (upon his promise given) his fidelity ingaged to afford his continual defense to all that are thus qualified for it.

5. Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by [a] night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day,
6. Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day.

5, 6. To this it is consequent, that I have no cause to apprehend with terrour either the most secret or the most open dangers, the most unavoidable evils that can threaten destruction or mischief to me, either by night or day. a.

7. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee.

7 Those judgments which seise on multitudes of wicked men, on every side of me, shall (like the plagues that swept away the Egyptians, but past over the Israelites, or the plague that slew seventy thousand from Dan to Beersheba, but fell not on Jerusalem) be forbidden to seise on me.

8. Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold, and see the reward of the wicked.

8. All the sense of evil which I need fear, is in its seising on others, not on my self, the beholding the untimely deaths of many others, such as is by the law denounced to ungodly men, (but in time of epidemical diseases, oft seises upon others as well as them.)

‖ O Lord, art my hope, thou hast made the most High thy help or refuge (see Psal. 90. a.)

9. Because [b] thou ‖ hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most High thy habitation.

9. I have placed all my affiance in the Lord, and thereby secured my self of all the protection and safeguard that the Omnipotent Monarch of heaven and earth can bestow on me. b.

10. There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.

10. By strength hereof no kind of mischief shall by any mishap befal or approach me.

11. For he shall give his Angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.

11. God having set a guard of his about me, given charge to the holy Angels, that always attend and execute his commands, that as long as I cleave fast unto him, they shall secure me from all manner of evil that his providence shall permit to approach me.

† carry thee ישאונך

12. They shall † bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone.

12. When any such approacheth, those holy officers of his shall be ready with their aid, and preserve me safe from it.

* Asp or Basilisk, פתן Βασιλισκον, LXXII.

13. Thou shalt tread upon the Lion and * Adder; the young Lion and the Dragon shalt thou trample under feet.

13. The most ravenous and venemous beasts, which prey on and mischief all they meet, shall not be permitted to annoy me, but as so many conquered creatures acknowledge my power over them. (This was most eminently to receive its completion in the Messiah, here typified by the Psalmist in the miraculous power which he had over the whole creation, healing all manner of diseases, and casting out devils, and communicating this power to his Disciples, (see Mar. 16. 18.)

14. Because

14. I have placed my whole joy and delight in God, most faithfully observed all his commands, and revealed them to others, given them knowledge of his will, how he expects to be served by them; (This had its eminent completion in Christs espousing the will of his father, and preaching it to the world) and this shall be sure to be rewarded by him with preservation or delivery from all danger, if any approach and involve me, he shall be sure to rescue me out of the power of it. (This was most literally verified in the resurrection and ascension of Christ.)

14. Because he hath ‖ set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him; I will set him on high, because he hath known my Name. ‖ delighted in me בִּי חָשַׁק

15, 16. God hath obliged himself by promise, and shall certainly perform it, whatsoever request I address to him, shall certainly be granted me; when any affliction comes, I am secured of his support under it, rescue out of it, and higher degree of exaltation attending it, great length of days in this world, (This belonged not to Christ, but was abundantly made up by his resurrection) even as great as I can desire, and then a joyful vision of him in another world.

15. He shall call upon me, and I will answer him; I will be with him in trouble, I will deliver him and honour him.

16. With long life will I satisfie him, and shew him my salvation.

Annotations on Psal. XCI.

a. V. 5. Night] In this verse, saith the learned Joseph Scaliger, Ep. 9. is an enumeration of the several sorts of evils that humane life is subject to, and those distinguisht by the several parts of the natural day, by the vicissitude of which our time and whole age is made up. The parts, saith he, are four, midnight, and midday, the beginning of night, and beginning of day. The two former here expresst by, 1. לַיְלָה night, 2. צָהֳרַיִם midday; the two latter by, 1. אֶפֶל duskyness or twilight, (fit to denote the evening which is such) and 2. יוֹם interdiu, the day-time. To these four, saith he, are appointed four sorts of evils, 1. פַּחַד fear, terrour, consternation, (those dangers or evils, that falling out in the night, are by the darkness and solitude of that much improved, as suddain assaults, or fires, &c.) 2. חֵץ the arrow flying by day, (any disease or open assault, any calamity that usually befals men.) 3. דֶּבֶר the pestilence, (any infectious disease, that invisibly diffuseth it self, and can no more be prevented than an assault in a mist or twilight.) 4. קֶטֶב יָשׁוּד a wasting slaughter, (when with all the advantages that midday can give to an open assault of over-powering enemies, an utter desolation and spoil is wrought.) This the LXXII. renders σύμπλωμα καὶ δαιμόνιον μεσήμβρινον, a midday accident and devil; for which Scaliger there professes to know no reason, (it is no doubt according to their custom of taking one word for some other that hath affinity with it, for שוד reading שד, which they render elsewhere δαιμόνιον, Psal. 106. 37. and Deut. 32. 17.) But after all his care in approving this his critical observation, he hath not made it probable that יוֹמָם in the day-time should have any propriety to the morning, the fourth part of his νυχθήμερον, (not otherwise accounted for) which indeed upon all occasions is opposed to לַיְלָה the night, and never to the crepusculum, or evening. 'Tis therefore much more probable, (and agreeable to the practise of poetick writers) that the two latter, the darkness and noon-day, should be but an explication of the two former, by night and by day, and so but the two known parts of the νυχθήμερον be referred to, the night and the day; and proportionably the evils here mentioned by the Psalmist will be at most but of two sorts, the night terrour being no more than the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the arrow that flyeth by day the same thing with the destruction that wasteth at noon-day. But indeed both these in effect but one, the destroying angel, which by the pestilence swept them away both by night and day: and accordingly the Chaldee interpret the terrour by night, the fear דְּמָזִיקִי of the devils that walk in the night; the arrow by day, the arrow דְּמַלְאַךְ מְוָתָא of the Angel of death; the destruction that wasteth at noon, סִיעַת שֵׁירִין, a company or troop of devils; all three, as well as the pestilence, named, to signifie the destroying angels, instruments of those Epidemical diseases sent from God. That the Psalmist here principally pitcheth on this instance of pestilential diseases, or destroying angels, may probably be in reference to that plague, which for the sins of the people first, 2 Sam. 24. 1. and then for David's sin in numbring the people, fell upon Israel, and destroyed seventy thousand from Dan to Beersheba, v. 15. but when it was ready to fall on Jerusalem, the angel stretching out his hand upon that to destroy it, v. 16. the Lord repented, and said to the angel that destroyed, It is enough, stay now thine hand; and the Prophet Gad coming to David, and directing him to rear an altar, and offer burnt-sacrifice to God in Araunahs threshing floor, v. 18. (the place where the Angel stood, 1 Chron. 21. 15.) upon the humiliation of David and the Elders of Israel, 1 Chron. 21. 16. and calling upon God, and offering burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, v. 26. God was intreated, and propitiated, and the plague was stayed, and fell not on Jerusalem at all. On this occasion it follows, that David sacrificed there on that threshing-floor of Araunah; (the tabernacle and the altar of burnt-offering, which Moses made in the Wilderness, being at this time in Gibeon, v. 29.) and so designed that place for Gods house, ch. 22. 1. and there the Temple was afterwards built by Solomon, 2 Chron. 3. 1. This then being so remarkable a passage of Gods providence, and mercy in sparing Jerusalem, when seventy thousand were slain in other places round about it, it might very fitly be referr'd to by the Psalmist, as a signal instance of Gods mercy, and care, and remarkable preservations over his people, and an evidence that there is no means of security, no way to avert or remove any, though but temporal evils, disease, and the like, but that one of applying ones self to God by humiliation, and reformation, and sacrifice, i. e. solemn intercession: and then as when Saint James, ch. 6. 14. gives the like directions in time of sickness, and promiseth that the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, it is not yet to be imagined, that no such person, which observed such directions, should ever die, but that generally this should be a successful way, and that no means should have that assurance of being effectual as this; so in this Psalm, the promises of immunity from dangers, pestilential diseases, &c. made to those that remain in the protection of the most High, v. 1. i. e. to pious men in the use of these means, thus adhering to, and not departing from God, are not so to be interpreted, that no pious man shall die of any Epidemical disease, any more than that he shall not die at all, but that this of adherence and address to God with humiliation and intercession, is the only means either to preserve single persons, or multitudes, whole nations at once; which is the full importance of Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the Temple, 1 King. 8. 31. &c. which may be taken taken as a comment on this Psalm: whereas wicked men, that have no right to any part in this promise, are to expect excision, whole multitudes of them together, thousands and ten thousands, v. 7. and that as the just reward of their impiety, v. 8.

b. אַתָּה V. 9. That אַתָּה thou must here in the beginning of the verse be understood of God, is most evident, and so the rendring clear כִּי אַתָּה יְהוָה מַחְסִי for thou, O Lord, art my hope; and so all the antient Interpreters have understood it: אַתָּה הוּא יְיָ —— thou thy self, O Lord, art my trust, say the Chaldee; and the LXXII. exactly accord, σὺ κύριε ἡ ἐλπίς μου, thou, O Lord, art my hope —— and so the Syriack and Latine, &c. But then that which follows, עֶלְיוֹן שַׂמְתָּ מְעוֹנֶךָ the most High hast thou set or made thy help or refuge, is a part of a soliloquie between the Psalmist and his own soul, i. e. himself. And though the Chaldee feigning the Psalm to be (in stead of a soliloquie) a Dialogue betwixt David and Solomon, understand this, as the former part of the verse, of God also, that he hath set the house of his Majesty on high, and so the Syriack also, thou hast set thy house on high; yet the LXXII. and Latine, not discerning two persons in the Psalm (beside God) but only the Psalmist and his own soul, have agreed to understand it of the soul making God her refuge, σὺ γὰρ ὑψισον ἐθου καταφυγήν σου, altissimum posuisti refugium tuum, thou hast set, or made, the most High thy refuge. And indeed in this manner hath the whole Psalm proceeded, sometimes in the first person, ver. 2. אֹמַר I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge —— then in the second person, ver. 3. Surely he shall deliver thee —— i. e. thee, my soul, which is in effect my self: and so the most perspicuous way of paraphrasing the whole Psalm is, by understanding it throughout in the same, i. e. first, person; but that so, as to extend it as appliable to all other pious men, as well as the Psalmist, (according to the general Aphorism in the first verse, He that dwelleth ——) and in a most eminent manner to the Messiah, to whom the devil applies it Matth. 4. 6. If thou be the son of God, &c. for it is written (v. 11. and 12. of this Psalm) he shall give his Angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands shall they bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone. And so saith Aben Ezra of the last verse, and shew him my salvation, it refers לימות חמשיח to the days of the Messias. And so R. Gaon, and Kimchi also. And so especially the latter part of the Psalm, though in a lower sense it may agree to David, yet hath its fuller completion in Christ. The Jewish Arab takes the whole Psalm for a Colloquie, or discourse by David directed to a godly man: and therefore as he reads the first verse of the Psalm, O thou that sittest under the covert of the High, &c. I say of the Lord, &c. v. 2. so he renders this ninth verse, Because thou hast said to the Lord, Thou art my refuge, and hast made the High thy habitation.

The Ninety Second PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

The ninety ſecond Pſalm is a joyous meditation on the gratious works of God toward his people, and his judgments on wicked men, appointed in the Jewiſh Church to be uſed on the Sabbath day; not ſo much to commemorate the Creation, and Sabbath following that, as to foretel their peace and proſperity in this world, and withal, that † reſt from perſecutions which God had promiſed to give his Church under the Meſſiah. See note a. on the title to the Romans, and 2 Theſſ. 1. note a. and Heb. 3. c. (The Jewiſh Arab aſcribes this Pſalm alſo to David.)

A Pſalm or Song for the || Sabbath day.

|| day of Sabbath, ſee note c.

1, 2, 3. There is nothing that better becomes a pious man than to confeſs and laud and magnifie the great and glorious Name of Almighty God, morning and evening every day to proclaim his gratious goodneſs in promiſing, and his fidelity in performing what he hath promiſed, and to do this with all the advantage that art and all ſort of Muſical Inſtruments and voices can add to it; there being no ſo proper and ſeaſonable imployment for all theſe, as that of worſhipping and glorifying the great and good Creator of all the world, and faithful protector of his ſervants.

1. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to ſing praiſes unto thy name, O moſt Higheſt;

2. To ſhew forth thy loving-kindneſs in the morning, and thy faithfulneſs every night;

3. Upon an inſtrument of ten ſtrings, and upon the Pſaltery, upon the || harp with a ſolemn ſound.

|| ſong or loud voice (ſee Pſal. 33. 6,) on the harp. עלי הגיון בכנור

4. The works of thy creation were all exceeding good, and thy continued protections and preſervations, the glorious, all-wiſe and all-gratious diſpenſations of this thy providence, are matter of the moſt raviſhing tranſporting exultation.

4. For thou, Lord, haſt made me glad through thy work; I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

5. Thy actions and thy counſels are evidences of thy tranſcendent unfathomable power, and wiſdom, and goodneſs.

5. O Lord, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.

a. 6, 7. Such, as wicked men, that go on proſperous and uninterrupted in their courſe, do not at all diſcern or comprehend the meaning of; for when they from their ſucceſſes gather matter of triumph, applaud and congratulate their proſperities, this is a moſt groſs and ſad miſtake in them: The only true account which is to be made, or concluſion to be collected from theſe their temporary ſucceſſes, being rather this, 1. That now they are haſtening to their exciſion, their bravery like that of a flower being a moſt certain indication of their approaching ruine, whilſt the righteous flouriſh like a Palm or Cedar, v. 12. get heighth and ſtrength and glory from their age; and, 2. That Gods vengeances due to them, and not yet inflicted, will one day come upon them the more direfully and unavoidably for theſe their preſent ſhort proſperities, even utter ruine and deſtruction.

6. A brutiſh man knoweth not, neither doth a fool underſtand this.

7. [a] When the wicked ſpring as the graſs, and † when all the workers of iniquity do flouriſh, * it is that they ſhall be deſtroyed for ever.

† all

* that they may be deſtroyed

8. And herein Gods power and juſtice and fidelity is, and ſhall be moſt eminently diſcernible, to the eternal diſcomfiture and confuſion of all the enemies of him and his Church.

8. But thou, Lord, art moſt high for evermore.

b. 9. For God ſhall certainly diſtinguiſh and make a difference betwixt wicked and pious men, his enemies and his friends and faithful ſervants; and what-ever indiſcrimination there appears between them here in this world for ſome time, he will undoubtedly make the ſeparation, he will viſibly ſeiſe on the ungodly, the oppreſſors and perſecutors of his Church, blaſt their greateſt proſperities, diſſolve their ſtrength, rout their armies, bring them to nought, and adjudge them to irremediable periſhing.

9. For lo thine enemies, O Lord, for lo thine enemies ſhall periſh: all the workers of iniquity [b] ſhall be || ſcattered.

|| or ſeparated.

c. 10. Whilſt, on the other ſide, the truly pious men ſhall have all their oppreſſions and ſufferings repaired, and be rewarded abundantly with honour and exaltation, deliverance and peace here in Gods ſeaſon, advancement to a flouriſhing condition here in this world, and eternal bliſs in another life.

10. But my horn ſhalt thou exalt like the horn of an Unicorn; I ſhall be [c] anointed with freſh oyl.

11. And this change ſhall be moſt viſible and illuſtrious; the judgments of God and deſtructions that fall upon the obſtinate enemies of God and his Church, ſhall be very ſtupendious and remarkable.

11. Mine eye alſo ſhall † ſee my deſire on mine enemies, and mine ears ſhall * hear my deſire of the wicked that riſe up againſt me.

† behold or look on mine enemies. חבט

12. And the proſperity and peaceable flouriſhing of the Church in the fruits as well as the profeſſion of piety, in the former reſembling the fertility of the palm-tree, in the latter the tallneſs of the Cedar, ſhall be as remarkable alſo.

12. The righteous ſhall flouriſh like a palm-tree; he ſhall grow like a Cedar in Lebanon.

13, 14. They that ſincerely and faithfully give up their names to the ſervice of God and his worſhip, ſhall at length injoy great tranquility, liberty of holy offices, and all other ſuch moſt deſirable priviledges and opportunities of piety: ſuch trees as theſe, (as men are ſaid to be trees inverted) may, without violation of the law, be planted near the altar, and flouriſh in the courts of God. And the Church ſhall be much increaſed by this means, propagated beyond the holy land over the face of the whole earth, and not decay with age, but herein alſo imitate the palm-tree, v. 12. that the older it grows, is ſtill the more fertile.

13. Thoſe that be planted in the houſe of the Lord, ſhall flouriſh in the Courts of our God.

14. They ſhall || ſtill bring forth fruit in old age, they ſhall be fat and flouriſhing:

|| Yet more עוד

15. All this as an eminent teſtimony of the great juſtice and uprightneſs of Gods judgments, who although he permit wicked men to flouriſh, and his own people to be afflicted for a while, yet at length changeth the ſcene, and by interpoſition of his almighty power ſubdues the wicked, reſtores and advances his faithful ſervants to all proſperity and flouriſhing in this life.

Annotations on Pſal. XCII.

a. V. 7. When the wicked] The 7. and 8. verſes are ſo to be joyned together, and read as in one period, and affixt to v. 6. that they may ſet down the error that is there imputed to the ignorant or inconſiderate wicked man; he thinks well of his own condition, meaſuring by his preſent ſucceſſes, and atheiſtically deſpiſing any future account that he ſhall be concerned in: and this is the error noted v. 6. and refuted in the two following verſes; בְּפָרַח רְשָׁעִים in the wickeds ſpringing or ſprouting out like graſs, or flower of the field, or when, or that, or how the wicked do ſpring וַיָּצִיצוּ כָּל —— and all the workers of wickedneſs do flouriſh, לְהִשָּׁמְדָם to their deſtruction, or that they may be deſtroyed for ever; ὅπως ἀν, ſay the LXXII. that they may, this being the event and conſequent of their flouriſhing like graſs, for ſo, we know, the flouriſhing of that abodes its ſuddain periſhing, either by exciſion, or natural decay (which is not true of the flouriſhing of palms and Cedars, v. 12.) וְאַתָּה and, or but thou, Lord, art moſt high —— They flouriſh, and thereby do but accelerate their ruine, and over and above, make it more ſad when it comes, but God remains juſt and magnified in theſe ſtrange turns of his providence. The Jewiſh Arab here refers the ſixth verſe to what precedes ver. 5. reading it, How great are thy works, O Lord, and thy thoughts, &c. And man is more fooliſh than that he ſhould know them all, and more bruitiſh than that he ſhould underſtand it; and then begins a new ſentence with the ſeventh verſe.

בְּפָרַח וְאַתָּה

b. V. 9. Scattered] From פָּרַד partitus eſt, whence both the Latine partiri, and the Engliſh part, (in the notion of dividing or ſeparating) is deduced, is יִתְפָּרְדוּ here in Hithpael, which the Interlinear renders ſegregabuntur, ſhall be parted or ſeparated. And thus it may poſſibly be a judicial phraſe, to denote the diſcrimination that is made betwixt men, as betwixt the ſheep and the goats, Mat. 25. 32. All the nations ſhall be gathered together or aſſembled before him, (as a Judge) and ἀφορίσει ἀυτὺς ἀπ' ἀλλήλων, he ſhall ſeparate them one from another, as the ſhepherd ἀφορίζει, ſeparates the ſheep from the goats. For this interpretation we have the authority of the Chaldee which paraphraſe it by מִתְפָּרְשִׁין &c. in the world to come they ſhall be ſeparated from the congregation of the juſt. And in this ſenſe, if it be admitted, it will be all one with what is ſaid in more words, Pſal. 1. 4. The ungodly are not ſo, but —— and the ungodly ſhall not ſtand in the judgment, nor ſinners in the congregation of the righteous, v. 5. as that ſignifies condemnation, rejection, periſhing, v. 6. and ſo ἀφορίζειν (as in the Jewiſh, ſo) in the Chriſtian Church, hath been always uſed to ſignifie the cenſures. But the LXXII. render it by διασκορπισθήσονται, ſhall be ſcattered, and the Syriack ܢܬܦܪܫܘܢ ſhall be diſperſed: we have the word, Pſal. 22. 14. my bones are out of joynt, parted aſunder; but here being ſomewhat beyond periſhing, it ſeems to be the ſcattering of enemies in a rout, which have been worſted in battel, and ſo this may be pitcht on as the more probable rendring.

יִתְפָּרְדוּ

c. V. 10. Anointed] From בָּלַל perfundere, is בְּלֹתִי here I am anointed; and ſo the Chaldee and Syriack appear to have read it. The LXXII. ſeem to have read it as from בָּלָה ſenuit, and ſo render it τὸ γῆρός μου, my old age, and ſo the Latine and Arabick: and then for בְּשֶׁמֶן רַעֲנָן with freſh or green oyl, the copies which we now have of the LXXII. read ἐν ἐλέῳ πολλῷ, which the Latine render in miſericordia uberi. But as the Syriack, ſo the Arabick and Æthiopick depart here from the Latine, and aſſure us that the LXXII. wrote not ἐλέῳ, but ἐλαίῳ, oyl. Now as there were many uſes of oyl, ſome vulgar among the Jews (ſee Mat. 6. note i.) others were extraordinary, the ceremony of inauguration to ſome office of dignity; ſo it might here be uncertain to which of theſe the phraſe belonged, did not the context determine it, and the conjunction of anointing with exaltation, וַתָּרֶם קַרְנִי the exalting of the horn, קַרְנֵי רְאֵמִים as of an Unicorn, is queſtionleſs the advancing to Regal Monarchick power, of which that horn of an Unicorn is a moſt ſignificant Emblem: and then the anointing with freſh or rich oyl, adjoyned to it, muſt in all reaſon be applied to the ſame matter, and denote the inauguration to the Regal power; and then as the Chaldee confirm this, רַבִּיתָא יָתִי בְּמַשַׁח רְבוּתָא, thou haſt magnified, i. e. exalted or inaugurated me with the oyl of exaltation or inauguration (anointing by them being ſtill expreſt by exalting) ſo the very reading of the LXXII. (though varied from the Hebrew) may bear a commodious ſenſe, and that which ſufficiently expreſſes the true meaning, τὸ γῆρός μου ἐν ἐλαίῳ πολλῷ, my old age ſhall be in fat oyl, i. e. the latter part of my age ſhall be advanced to regal power. What is primarily meant by this, or ſo as might be applied to the Pſalmiſt's time which wrote it, cannot eaſily be determined, becauſe the writer of the Pſalm is not reſolved on among the Jews: the Rabbins ſaying it to have been made by Adam preſently after the creation, before the Sabbath, and ſo the Chaldee paraphraſe, and Kimchi; but others, as Aben Ezra, ſaying that all from the XC. to CI. were written by Moſes. Which though it be readily refuted from Samuels being mentioned Pſ. 99. yet may have truth to this, as to ſome others, particularly the XC. and then that being accepted that Moſes was the author of the Pſalm, and the title of the Pſalm being A Pſalm or Song (a joyful Euchariſtical celebration) לְיוֹם הַשַּׁבָּת for the day of Sabbath, deſigning it to be uſed on their Sabbath-days, and probably referring to that Sabbath, that reſt, which was by Moſes promiſed the people of the Jews, Deut. 12. 9, 10. this may moſt fitly be reſolved on as the primary ſenſe of it, that God would bring his people the Jews at length, after a wilderneſs of troubles and many enemies, to reſt in Canaan, and eſtabliſh them a Kingdom in peace. But the more eminent, and that as (or more literal ſenſe of it, pertains to the Chriſtian Church, firſt Chriſt, then Chriſtians. Chriſt the Meſſias, after his being perſecuted and crucified, was to be raiſed and inaugurated to his ſpiritual Kingdom, and that commencing in the deſtruction of his enemies the Jews; and the Chriſtians for ſome time after his death perſecuted by the ſame Jews, were to have their reſt, halcyonian days of peace (ſee note on Heb. 3. c.) and this expreſt by their being Kings and Prieſts unto God (ſee note on Apoc. 1. d.) parallel to the horn being exalted as the horn of an Unicorn, and being anointed with freſh oyl here, as it hath before been interpreted.

וַתָּרֶם קַרְנִי רְאֵמִים

The Ninety Third PSALM.

The ninety third Pſalm is a brief meditation on the power of God, and his providence, as in the works of his creation, and the ſtability of thoſe laws whereby all are governed, notwithſtanding the tumults of this ſublunary world, ſo in ſetling his Church in peace, and faithful performing of his promiſes to his ſervants. It is reſolved by the ‖ Jews to have its fulleſt completion in the Meſſias.

‖ R. Saad. Gaon, and Raſi, and Kimchi.

Paraphraſe.

1. The Lord hath now been pleaſed powerfully and illuſtriouſly to ſhew forth himſelf, to give ſignal teſtimonies of his omnipotence, he is come out as in a royal, ſo in a military manner, hath ſecured the whole nation (ſee note on Matth. 24. c.) from all the dangers that incompaſt it, and ſet it ſafe from the fear of evil; (And this an emblem of the ſpiritual Kingdom of Chriſt, ſee note c. on Pſal. 106.)

1. THe Lord reigneth, he is clothed with Majeſty; the Lord is clothed with ſtrength, † wherewith he hath girded himſelf: the world alſo is eſtabliſhed, that it cannot be moved.

† he hath girded himſelf עָזַּר

2. This gives us occaſion now ſeaſonably to praiſe and magnifie him in all his glorious attributes of power and juſtice, which from all eternity have belonged to him, his righteouſneſs being as eternal as his being.

2. Thy throne is eſtabliſhed of old, thou art from everlaſting.

3. When the violent uproars and ſeditions of wicked men did their utmoſt to diſturb and overwhelm all, imitating the waves and ſurges of the rivers or ſeas, v. 4. which make a great noiſe and roaring. (And ſo when the devils and wicked men ſtood out againſt, rejected and crucified the Meſſias.)

3. The flouds have lifted up, O Lord, the flouds have lifted up their voice, the flouds lift up their waves.

4. God was then pleaſed ſeaſonably to interpoſe his allmighty power, to ſubdue and quiet them, and fruſtrate their moſt boiſterous aſſaults, ſhewing them and all the world beſide, that his ſtrength is far ſuperiour to the ſtrength of the moſt riotous unruly creatures, and can, when he pleaſe, reſtrain and ſtill them: (And ſo did he in the reſurrection ſet up the Kingdom of the Meſſias)

4. The Lord on high is mightier than the noiſe of many waters, yea even than the mighty waves of the Sea.

5. And according to his ſtrength, ſo is his fidelity; he is able to perform whatſoever he pleaſe, and having interpoſed his promiſe, he will certainly fulfil it; he can no more fail in that, than he can renounce his holineſs, which is of all others his moſt divine attribute, always moſt illuſtriouſly viſible in all his proceedings, and ſo ſhall continue to the end of the world. (And this diſcernible in nothing more, than in his making good his promiſes to the Chriſtian Church.)

5. Thy teſtimonies are very ſure; holineſs becometh thine houſe, O Lord, ‖ for ever.

‖ to length of days, לְאֹרֶךְ יָמִים

The Ninety Fourth PSALM.

The ninety fourth Pſalm is an earneſt prayer to God, and a confident aſſurance of him, that he will diſſipate the attempts of wicked men, and uphold the righteous. 'Tis † thought to have been compoſed in Babylon, for redemption from thence.

† So R. Gaon, Sol. Jarchi, and Kimchi.

Paraphraſe.

1. Thou Lord of heaven and earth, to thee only pertains that great judicial office of diſtributing puniſhments and rewards in the world; we that are injured and oppreſt, as we are not able, ſo neither is it our duty to avenge our ſelves; this is the divine prerogative annext to thy ſoveraignty. Be thou now pleaſed to interpoſe on our ſide, and teſtifie to all, that at length thou takeſt the matter into thine own hands.

1. * O Lord God to whom vengeance belongeth, O God to whom vengeance belongeth, ſhew thy ſelf.

* O Lord, thou God of revenges, thou God of revenges אֵל נְקָמוֹת יְהוָה—

2. Thou art the one ſupreme Governour of the world, againſt whoſe Edicts it is that theſe proud oppreſſors exalt themſelves. It is juſt with thee to depreſs thoſe that exalt themſelves, to puniſh the injurious; O be thou now pleaſed to execute thy juſtice upon them.

2. Lift up thy ſelf, thou judge of the earth, render a reward to the proud.

3, 4. Wicked men, if they be long permitted to thrive and proſper in their courſe, are apt to talk Atheiſtically, to perſwade themſelves and others that they have maſtered heaven, that there is no power ſuperior to theirs, that they can carry all before them. Bleſſed Lord, permit them not to go on in this proud errour; ſubdue at length and humble, and let them no longer continue under ſo dangerous a temptation to impiety and profaneneſs, as their proſperities have proved unto them.

3. Lord, how long ſhall the wicked, how long ſhall the wicked triumph?
4. How long ſhall they utter and ſpeak hard things? and all the workers of iniquity boaſt themſelves?

5, 6, 7. When they oppreſs and grind the faces of the people and ſervants of God, riot and glut themſelves with the blood of thoſe whom by all obligations of charity they ought to relieve and ſupport, tyrannizing over all that are weaker than they, they flatter themſelves that God either doth not ſee, or will not call them to any account for all this.

5. They break in pieces thy people, O Lord, and afflict thine heritage.
6. They ſlay the widow and the ſtranger, and murther the fatherleſs.
7. Yet they ſay, The Lord ſhall not ſee, neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard it.

8. This is a ſtrange, brutiſh, irrational, mad folly, for any that hath the underſtanding of a man to be guilty of.

8. Underſtand, O ye bruitiſh among the people; and ye fools, when will ye be wiſe?

9. He

9. He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall he not see?

9, 10. Certainly the Creator of eyes and ears, he by whose only power it is that any creature is indued with those faculties, cannot be

10. [a] He that || chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct? he that teacheth man knowledge, shall not he know?

|| instructs the nations, he that teacheth man knowledge, shall not he rebuke?

a.

imagined to want himself, or not to possess in a more eminent manner what he out of his own fulness hath derived in some lower degree to others. 'Twere hard to think that the sole omnipotent Creator should want any power or excellence which he alone hath imparted to his creatures: And so there can be no question of his most exact seeing and knowing all which is here done by wicked men. And as strange it were, that having taken such care as God hath done to reveal his will, to give laws to the sons of Adam and Noah, and after by Moses to the Jews, (and at last to send his own Son and Spirit, and by those divine means to dispense his commands of transcendent purity and charity to all the men in the world) he should not after all, demand exact obedience to these commands, and chastise and punish all disobedience.

11. The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are [b] vanity.

11. Let those that thus flatter themselves and blaspheme God, and think that they shall carry it away unpunished, know this, that even these very thoughts of theirs, so false, so foolish and Atheistical, are perfectly discerned by God the searcher of all hearts, and shall one day be severely punisht by him.

b.

12. Blessed is he whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy law.

12. The prosperity of impious men is so far from being a felicity to them that injoy it, (as these men deem) that the direct contrary to it, viz. to be punisht and rebuked by God for all that we do amiss, and by that means to be reduced to the sense and practice of our duty, is indeed the greatest favour and mercy of God, and so the most valuable felicity, and evidence of Gods tender care of us, (whereas they that are left in their sins unpunished, permitted to go on securely in their course, have reason to look on it as an act of the severest vengeance from God, a leaving them and delivering them up unto themselves.

13. That thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity, † [c] untill the pit * be digged for the wicked.

and persecutions, when they have obtained their desired end upon us, rectified and reformed what was amiss: for then without question God will at once restore rest and tranquility to the oppresst pious man, and destroy and consume the ungodly oppressor, cast the rod into the fire, when his children have been sufficiently corrected by it.

14. For the Lord will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance.

14. For though God may and sometime will fatherly correct and chastise his children, and permit them a while to abide under sharp oppressions; yet will he not utterly forsake them, but in his own chosen season restore their prosperity, and subdue their enemies.

15. But judgment shall return [d] || unto righteousness, and † all the upright in heart shall follow it.

|| even to
† after it all the upright in heart.

15. The time shall certainly come, that all wrong judgments shall be reverst,

d.

that the sufferings of good men shall be turned into their greatest advantages, that the righteous and truly pious man shall be the most thriving and prosperous even in this world, and all impious opposers and oppressors the most improsperous: (This was eminently fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem and heathen Rome, the crucifiers of Christ, and bitter persecutors of Christians, and the halcyonian days that the Christians had after each of these, see Psal. 96. 13. and Isai. 42. 1. and Rev. 1. 6.) and then shall good men have all kind of incouragements to follow and adhere to goodness, (hereby the profession of Christianity shall be propagated over all the world) as that which (though with some mixture of persecutions, hath the promise, and is sure to be rewarded even in this life, Matth. 19. 29. and 1 Tim. 4. 8. (and not only in that which is to come.)

16. Who will rise up for me against the evil doers? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?
17. Unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had almost dwelt in silence.

16, 17. But this is to be wrought, not by any humane aids or means, by armies raised to defend piety against impiety; when these are wanting, and impiety is backt with the greatest visible strength, then shall God himself by his own ways and means in his due time interpose, and rescue his faithful people from the utmost imminent destruction.

18. || When I said, My foot slippeth, thy mercy, O Lord, held me up.

|| If אִם Chald. אֵין LXXII. εἰ

18. If at any time the danger appear greater than ordinary, that the pious man is ready to think himself lost, then is Gods special season to interpose his hand for his relief.

19. In the multitude of my thoughts within me, thy comforts † [e] delight my soul.

† have cherished or refreshed

e.

compast with apparent hazards on every side, and from thence disquieted and troubled, God then chooseth most seasonably to interpose, to deal with him as a tender parent with a querulous child, provides for him whatsoever may be most grateful and satisfactory in this condition.

20. Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law?

20. Let men sin never so confidently, make laws for impiety, as * Nebuchadnezzar did for the worshipping his golden image, Dan. 3. 4. and set up wickedness on the throne or tribunal, confound all justice, and substitute oppression and rapine in stead of it; the comfort is, God will never be drawn to take part with them, to favour or countenance their impiety.

* So Sol. Jarchi expounds it.

21. They gather themselves together against the soul of the righteous, and condemn the innocent blood.
22. But the Lord * is my defence, and my God || is the rock of my refuge.

* to me for a defense לִי

21, 22. Be they never so violent and unanimous in their pursuit of the life of blameless pious men, and their forms of process never so solemn and legal, there is yet an appeal behind to the unerring supreme tribunal, and my resort to that shall never fail to bring me a rescue from their bloudiest sentence; God shall reverse that, and protect me, and all that chearfully depend on him.

23. And he shall † bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness; yea the Lord our God shall cut them off.

† render or return וְיָשֶׁב

23. And he shall most certainly requite and punish the wicked oppressors, return that mischief on them which they designed to bring on others, and by making their sins their own scourges and certain ruine, manifest his fatherly care and providence over his obedient faithful servants.

Annotations on Pſalm XCIV.

a. יַסַּר

V. 10. He that chaſtiſeth] יַסֵּר, from יָסַר to inſtruct and inſtitute, (as well as to correct) is in all reaſon ſo to be underſtood and rendred here, he that inſtructs גּוֹיִם the nations, all the people in the world. The LXXII. duly render it ὁ παιδεύων ἔθνη, he that inſtructs the nations; but the Chaldee more fully יְיָ אוֹרַיְתָא —he that gives the law to his people. This is here ſaid of God, as in the end of the verſe to the ſame ſenſe הַמְלַמֵּד אָדָם דַּעַת he that teacheth Adam or man (all the men in the world) knowledge: the firſt man, ſaith the Chaldee, referring to thoſe precepts which were given in the Creation, called the precepts of the ſons of Adam, (as after of Noah.) Now theſe two being the attributes of God, (as well as that of planting and forming the eye and ear in the Creation, and ever ſince in Procreation, v. 9.) that which is in the midſt, הֲלֹא יוֹכִיחַ ſhall not he rebuke or puniſh? from יָכַח increpavit, corripuit) muſt in all reaſon belong κατ' ἐξοχήν, to both thoſe, and to that purpoſe be beſt rendred in the end, after both, He that inſtructeth—and he that teacheth—ſhall not he rebuke or puniſh? Is it poſſible, ſaith the Chaldee, that God ſhall have given law, וְכַד יְחוֹבוֹן and when they have ſinned, ſhall they not be rebuked or puniſhed? what is added by the Engliſh tranſlation in the end of the verſe, ſhall not he know? is not in the Hebrew, but was added as a ſupply to a ſuppoſed Ellipſis. But the right rendring of the verſe hath no need of that aid, the ſenſe is much more perſpicuous without it.

הֲלֹא יוֹכִיחַ

b. הֶבֶל

V. 11. Vanity] From הָבַל which firſt ſignifies to vaniſh or come to nought, (Jer. 2. 5. they walked after הַהֶבֶל vanity, וַיֶּהְבָּלוּ and vaniſhed, or came to nought) is הֶבֶל here; and if in that notion, then it muſt ſignifie vaniſhing, tranſient, that ſoon comes to nothing: and ſo the Syriack renders it, ܒܥܠܡܐ a vapour, (as they do Jam. 4. 14. where our life is called a vapour) and thus we have it, Pſal. 144. 4. man is like לַהֶבֶל to a vaniſhing tranſitory thing, for as it follows, his days are as a ſhadow that paſſeth away. But there is another notion of הָבַל, by metaphor lightly varied from hence, for ſtulteſcere, growing fooliſh; ſo Pſal. 62. 11. it is beſt rendred from the Hebrew, truſt not in oppreſſion and rapine, אַל תֶּהְבָּלוּ become not vain, i. e. fools, to ſignifie that thoſe that ſo truſt, that depend on unlawful means for the enriching themſelves, will certainly be deceived, find this the moſt perfect folly in the event. And this of folly being that by which the Atheiſt is moſt frequently expreſt in Scripture, will be moſt agreeable to this place, where the Atheiſts cogitations are deſcribed, v. 7. confident of Gods not ſeeing, not regarding; which thoughts of his, as they are Atheiſtical, and ſo falſe, and ſo fooliſh in one ſenſe, as folly is ignorance, ſo are they moſt impudent, (which is practical and the greateſt folly) will never ſecure his wicked actions of impunity, but on the contrary will betray him to all the ruine in the world. And to this ſenſe it is, that verſe 8. we find in the like ſtyle, Underſtand, O ye bruitiſh; and ye fools, when will ye be wiſe? and ſo this is the adæquate notion of the word here.

אַל תֶּהְבָּלוּ

c. עַד מִימֵי רָע

V. 13. Until] The rendring of עַד until, in this place, may much diſturb the ſenſe, and make it believed that the reſt מִימֵי רָע from the evil days, i. e. from perſecution (ſee Epheſ. 5. 16.) which God gives to good men, is to continue till the pit be digged up for the ungodly, i. e. till the meaſure of their ſins be filled up, and ſo deſtruction be ready for them: whereas the contrary to this is evident, that either the deſtruction of the wicked is firſt, and the quiet and reſt of the good, (oppreſſed by them) a natural effect of that, and ſo ſubſequent to it; or that both of them are of the ſame date, at once tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you who are troubled, reſt, 2 Theſſ. 1. 6, 7. And this is evidently the meaning of it here, and ſo will be diſcerned, if only the עַד be rendred dum, whilſt, (as it is elſewhere uſed, Jon. 4. 2. עַד הֱיוֹתִי whilſt I was, Job 1. 16. עַד זֶה מְדַבֵּר whilſt he was ſpeaking) for then thus it will run very fitly, That thou mayſt give him reſt—whilſt the pit is digged—

d. עַד צֶדֶק

V. 15. Unto righteouſneſs] The notion of צֶדֶק righteouſneſs for charity and mercy hath oft been obſerved; only the Emphaſis of the preposition עַד unto here offers it ſelf to conſideration, which will beſt be expreſt by even unto, as when Gen. 14. 23. we read, from a thred עַד even to a ſhooe latchet, and Gen. 7. 23. Every living ſubſtance was deſtroyed from man to beaſt, to creeping things, וְעַד & uſque ad, ſaith the Interlinear, and even to the fowls of heaven (which were in leaſt danger to be deſtroyed with water.) And thus here it ſeems to import, that the preſent rigour of their enemies ſhall by Gods judging, or taking their part, not only be removed, but be even converted into the greateſt mercies. Thus in every revolution of ſtate it is ordinary, none are ſo likely to eſcape and be favoured by the conquerer, as they that were oppreſt by the former government. And ſo was it to the Jews of the Captivity (of whom the learned Jews underſtand this Pſalm) when the Perſian executes judgment on the Babylonian, when the ſacrilegious drunken Tyrant is taken in his city, as in a pit or ſnare, v. 13. the Jews then are no loſers by their former oppreſſions, but receive preferments in the commonwealth, Dan. 6. 5. and licence to return to their own countrey. And the ſame obſervation held both in the deſtruction of the Jewiſh and Heathen enemies of Chriſt, the Chriſtians were not only freed from their perſecutions, but became moſt flouriſhing. And this is the full importance of judgments returning even to righteouſneſs; God not only pleading their cauſe and delivering them (which is meant by judgment) but even converting their former ſufferings into their greateſt advantages. To this is added וְאַחֲרָיו כָּל יִשְׁרֵי לֵב and after it all the pure in heart. What אַחֲרָיו ſignifies, may be learned from Jud. 5. 14. אַחֲרֶיךָ בִנְיָמִין, after thee Benjamin, i. e. ſaith the Chaldee, Saul the ſon of Benjamin ſucceeded Joſhuah, noted before by Ephraim. And ſo after this all the upright in heart, i. e. to this ſhall immediately ſucceed the flouriſhing proſperous condition of all pious men: יִתְפָּרְקוּן they ſhall be redeemed, ſaith the Chaldee; but it is ſomewhat more, they ſhall return to a flouriſhing condition; and ſo this very fitly agrees to what went before, and is as the proof of it. The ſeverity of their enemies is turned into mercy, and then follows the proſperity of all pious men.

וְאַחֲרָיו כָּל יִשְׁרֵי לֵב

e. יְשַׁעֲשְׁעוּ

V. 19. Delight] יְשַׁעֲשְׁעוּ, from שָׁעַע to look upon with delight, is in Piel doubled, and uſed for looking kindly and lovingly, imbracing, and making much of, doing any thing that is grateful to another. So the Chaldee underſtood it, rendring it יְפַנְּקוּן, from פָּנַק to make much of: ſo they uſe the word Prov. 29. 21. for that which we render, delicately bringeth up. And hence it is that the LXXII. render it here ἠγάπουν, have loved, i. e. behaved themſelves in a loving manner, ſo as they which love are wont to do. Iſa. 11. 8. it is uſed for playing or ſporting, dealing friendly and with confidence with any; and Iſa. 66. 12. for being dandled on the knees like a child by the nurſe or parent: and by analogy with all theſe, being here applied to Gods conſolations, it will moſt ſignificantly be rendred, have cheriſhed, or refreſh't, careſſed, or gratified my ſoul.

The Ninety Fifth PSALM.

The Ninety Fifth Pſalm is an invitation to all to bleſs and praiſe the Name of God, and to live obediently before him. 'Tis affirmed to be written by David, Heb. 4. 7. and may probably have been fitted by him, among others here put together, for the ſolemnity of bringing the Ark to the place of Gods reſt, v. 11. and is by the Jews * confeſt to refer to the duties of the Meſſias, as we ſee it applyed, Heb. 3. & 4.

Annotations on Pſalm XCV.

a. עַם מַרְעִיתוֹ וְצֹאן יָדוֹ

V. 7. His paſture] When the Pſalmiſt uſeth theſe two phraſes together, עַם מַרְעִיתוֹ people of his paſture, and צֹאן יָדוֹ ſheep or cattel of his hand, 'tis obvious to diſcern the ſeeming impropriety, and withal to cure it, by interchanging the adjuncts, and annexing the hand to the people, and the paſture to the ſheep. But it is more reaſonable to fetch the explication from the different ſignifications of רָעָה, as for feeding, ſo for governing, equally appliable to men and cattel, from whence it is but analogy, that מִרְעֶה which ſignifies a paſture, where cattel are fed, ſhould alſo ſignifie dominion or kingdom, or any kind of βασιλεία, wherein a people are governed. And then the other part, the ſheep of his hand, will be a fit, though figurative expreſſion, the ſhepheard that feeds, and rules, and leads the ſheep, doing it by his hand, which manageth the rod and ſtaff, Pſal. 23. 4. by which they are adminiſtred. The Jewiſh Arab reads, the people of his feeding, or flock, and the ſheep of his guidance.

b. אִם

Ibid. If] אִם, which is here rendred If, is elſewhere oft uſed for an optative ſign, and expreſſion of a wiſh. So Luk. 19. 42. εἰ ἔγνως, If thou kneweſt, for, O that thou kneweſt; and Luk. 22. 42. εἰ βέλει παρενεγκεῖν, If thou wilt, for, O that thou wouldeſt remove this cup from me. So Exod. 32. 32. אִם תִּשָּׂא, If thou wilt, for, O that thou wouldeſt forgive them. And if ſo it be here, then the rendring muſt be, הַיּוֹם אִם &c. O that to day you would hear his voice, live obedient to him, as people to a Ruler, or ſheep to a Paſtor. And this may be thought needful to the making the ſenſe compleat in this verſe, which otherwiſe is thought to hang (though not ſo fitly) on the eighth verſe, and not to be finiſht without it. But it may be conſidered alſo, whether this verſe be not more complete in it ſelf, by rendring אם if, thus, Let us worſhip, and bow down, and kneel before the Lord our Maker; For he is our God; and we are the people of his paſture, and ſheep of his hand, if ye will hear his voice to day, (or, as the Jewiſh Arab reads, ſheep of his hand, or guidance to day, i. e. ſpeedily, if ye will hear his voice, perform obedience to him) ſetting the words in form of a conditionate promiſe, thereby to inforce the performance of the condition on our part. The condition to the performance of which they are exhorted, v. 6. is paying God the worſhip and lowly obedience due to him; and the promiſe ſecured to them on this performance, that he will be their God, and they his people of his paſture, &c. i. e. that God will take the ſame care of them that a ſhepheard of his ſheep, preſerve them from all enemies, Midianites, Philiſtims, Canaanites, &c. and that though for their rebellions and diſobediences againſt God, they had hitherto been oft diſturbed, and not long ſince the Ark taken by their heathen enemies, yet if now, to day, they ſhall at length hear Gods voice, and perform this obedience ſincerely, they ſhall alſo be ſecured, that their enemies ſhould no more diſturb them, their Ark ſhould no more be captive, but enjoy a reſt, v. 11. with them for ever in Jeruſalem. That to this of Jeruſalem, the reſt ſpoken of by David referred, as well as to the land of Canaan, in Moſes's time, is the obſervation of Rab. Solomon, לארץ ישראל וירושלם קראתיה מנוחה to the land of Iſrael, and alſo Jeruſalem, which is called a reſt, as 'tis ſaid, This is my reſt for ever, here will I dwell. And ſo their enjoying this reſt of Gods, theſe priviledges of the Ark and Gods preſence among them, was the completion of the promiſe on Gods part, that he would be their God, and they his people, &c. And according to this ſenſe of this verſe, the Apoſtles diſcourſe ſeemeth to be framed, Heb. 4. 6, 7. thus, ſeeing they to whom it was firſt preached entred not in becauſe of unbelief: Again he limiteth a certain day, ſaying, To day, &c. i. e. notwithſtanding all former rebellions, if you will now come in, the promiſed reſt ſhall be made good to you. Which the Apoſtle there applies to the Hebrews, under the preaching of the Goſpel; not as if it had no completion in Davids time, by the carrying up the Ark to Jeruſalem, and Gods reſting, and their worſhipping him there; but becauſe beyond that, the Pſalm had a farther completion in the Meſſias, (as the Jews themſelves. Rab. Kimchi and others confeſs, in whom God did much more eminently dwell, than he ever did in the Ark, or Temple at Jeruſalem. From whence therefore the Apoſtle concludes, that there then remained a reſt to the people of God, the perſecuted Chriſtians, and to all unbelieving Jews, upon condition, if they ſhall hearken to the voice of God in the preaching of the Goſpel. For then notwithſtanding all their misbehaviours continued untill that time (or his writting to them that warning) they ſhould yet be Gods people, and enjoy the glorious promiſes of peace and happineſs under the Meſſiah. In which words, to day if, a farther offer of grace and pardon is made to thoſe Jews, on condition of timely reformation. And ſo elſewhere, according to theſe grounds, the Apoſtle ſaith, 'twas neceſſary that the Goſpel ſhould firſt be preached to the Jews, but they then again refuſing, it was to depart from them, and be promulgated to the Gentiles, who in the ſcheme here uſed in this verſe, are called by Chriſt other ſheep, Joh. 10. 16. which are not of this fold, taken in by God into his Church upon their hearing his voice, when the Jews, who, if they would have heard at that time, had ſtill continued his ſheep, were caſt out, and given over, as loſt ſheep, for their not hearing.

The Ninety Sixth PSALM.

The ninety ſixth Pſalm is a form of common thankſgiving and praiſing of God for all his works of grace and mercy, as the great Creatour and Preſerver, Redeemer and Judge of the world. It was firſt compoſed by David, and, among others, delivered into the hand of Aſaph and his Brethren, at the carrying up of the Ark from the Houſe of Obed-Edom to Zion, 1 Chron. 16. 23, &c. and afterward lightly changed, and || ſaid to have been uſed at the re-building the Temple after the Captivity: And is in the prophetick ſenſe very appliable to Chriſt's ſpiritual Kingdom and the effects thereof in the converſion of the Gentiles, &c. (ſee note c.)

|| ſee the LXXII. their title of the Pſalm.

1. O Sing unto the Lord a new ſong; ſing unto the Lord all the earth.
2. Sing unto the Lord, bleſs his name, ſhew forth his ſalvation from day to day.

Paraphraſe.

1, 2. O let all men in the world acknowledge and bleſs and magnifie the Lord of heaven, and this in the utmoſt chearfull joyous manner, every day of their lives; but more peculiarly we at this time, who have this preſent ſignal addition to his wonted mercies, commemorating all the glorious works and mighty deliverances which he hath wrought for his people.

3. Declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people.

3. Let this zeal of ours indeavour to extend it ſelf to the benefit of all the heathen people in the world, thoſe that know not God; and by proclaiming the glorious miraculous acts of his power and goodneſs to his faithfull ſervants, invite and perſwade all to become proſelytes to his ſervice.

4. For the Lord is great, and greatly to be praiſed: he is to be feared above all Gods.

4. For certainly his power and goodneſs, his majeſty and his mercy is moſt worthy to be adored by all rational creatures; and his divine vengeance (ſo lately felt by the Philiſtims, whoſe Gods were plagued by him, as well as their votaries, and by the Jews themſelves, in that breach upon Uzza, 1 Chron. 13. 11.) ought in all reaſon to be admired, and reverenced, and trembled at by all oppoſers, much more than all the feigned deities that are feared and worſhipped among men, and are not able to ſecure their worſhippers or themſelves.

5. For all the Gods of the nations are [a] idols; but the Lord made the heavens. a.

5. The choiceſt of thoſe that the heathen people of the world have adored for Gods, are but either Angels, or ſouls of men, or celeſtial bodies; and what are theſe but the creatures of God? (who is the Creatour of the higheſt heavens, and of all that inhabit there) and are therefore in all reaſon to give place to the kingdom of the Meſſias, which is to be erected in mens hearts: (ſee note c.)

6. † Honour and majeſty are before him, ſtrength and beauty are in his ſanctuary.

6. The ſanctuary or holy place appointed for the aſſembly to whom God will powerfully preſentiate himſelf, is the moſt glorious majeſtick place in the world; the Angels, thoſe ſplendid miniſters of his, reſide there, and by their miniſtery our prayers are heard, our wants ſupplied, and ſo ſufficiency of ſtrength imparted to thoſe that ſtand in need of it, and there petition for it. And this an image and imperfect type of what ſhall be at the coming of Chriſt, that ſpiritual kingdom of his among us, by the efficacy of his grace in his Church.

8. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name, bring an offering, and come into his courts.

8. Let them pay to him thoſe acknowledgments which his all-wiſe and gracious providence and diſpoſals, and the redemption which he hath wrought for the whole world, exact from all, and offer up themſelves and their prayers (thoſe their ſpiritual ſacrifices) together to him in his Church.

10. Say among the heathen that [c] the Lord reigneth; the world alſo ſhall be eſtabliſhed, that it ſhall not be removed: he ſhall judge the people righteouſly. c.

10. Let his people of the Jews inſtruct the heathen world in theſe great Articles of their Creed, not onely that the God of Iſrael, the Creatour of the world, is alſo the ſole Governour of it, but farther that the Meſſias his eternal Son having conquered death, ſhall have all dominion over his Church committed to him by his Father; that by his divine providence and power he ſhall ſo over-rule, and ſettle, and compoſe the diſturbances and oppoſitions among men, that he ſhall plant miraculouſly, and then powerfully ſupport his Church againſt all the enemies thereof, deſtroying in a remarkable manner thoſe that hold out againſt him, and will not be ſubject to his kingdom.

ture, Christs destroying their false Gods, and casting them out of their Temples, and by their forsaking those ridiculous detestable idol-worships and all the pollutions annext to them, and receiving the Christian faith, and with it mortification of lusts, practice of all Christian vertues, and tasting the inward joys and comforts of these, shall be obliged to bless and praise and magnifie God, and acknowledge this sovereign mercy far beyond all that ever they aspired to, and admire his justice and wisedom in this blessed turn of his providence, and withall the uprightness of his judgments, the exact justice thereof in dispensing both his punishments and rewards to all the people in the world, protecting those that by adhering to him take care of their eternal welfare, and eminently and signally destroying those that will not permit so gracious a Saviour and Redeemer (with his easie and pleasant yoke, and not onely light, but beneficial burthen) to rule and reign over them.

Annotations on Psal. XCVI.

a. אֱלִיל

V. 5. Idols.] From אַל not, is אֱלִיל a thing of nothing, that which profits not: Job 13. 4. רֹפְאֵי אֱלִיל Physicians that profit not, are not esteemable, are not able to cure or help. So a false vision or prophecy, not fit to be heeded, or depended on, is called אֱלִיל a nothing, Jer. 14. 14. and a shepherd that leaveth the flock, that instead of visiting, healing, feeding, devoureth and teareth the flock in pieces, Zach. 11. 16. is called a pastor רֹעֵה הָאֱלִיל of nothing. From this notion, is the word used of the false Gods of the heathens, which Hesth. 14. 11. are styled τὰ μὴ ὄντα, things that are not, and of which therefore the Apostle pronounceth that an Idol is nothing, 1 Cor. 8. 4. Not simply nothing, for that physician was not nothing, nor that vision, nor that shepherd, but, as the context there inclines to interpret, we know an Idol is nothing in the world, and that there is no other God but one; that the Idol-God is אַל אֵל not a God, there being in the whole world but one such, the Creatour and first cause of all other λεγόμενοι θεοὶ those that are called Gods; and again that the Idol-Gods are not able to profit, to preserve or defend their worshippers. So Deut. 32. 16. they provoked me to jealousie בְּלֹא אֵל with that which was not God, and Jer. 2. 9. they walkt after לֹא יוֹעִילוּ those that profit not; where the notion of the heathen Gods is, that they are not Gods, and that they profit not. In which respect they are Esth. 14. 10. called μάταια vain things, and 3. Mac. both κεναὶ and μάταιαι, empty and vain. And so here, when the Gods of the heathen are said to be אֱלִילִים, the meaning is clear, they are not Gods, but creatures of God's making; for be they Angels of heaven, or the souls of eminent men, supposed to be assumed thither, or the Sun, Moon, and Stars, it is the Lord that made the heavens (as here it follows) and consequently all that is comprehended in them; and being creatures they are not able to profit their worshippers. 'Tis here observable with what variety the ancient Interpreters in this place have expreſt this word. The Syriack have ܛܘܦܣ̈ܐ (from ܛܪܟ vain or empty) the vain things, as μάταια in Hester and 3. Mac. The Chaldee have טָעֲיָא from טָעָה to erre, and to fornicate, either as a wandring from the true to false Gods, or else as the worships of them had all manner of filthiness joyned with them. The Jewish Arab reads Idols. Abu Walid, as he puts the ordinary interpretation of the name, as denoting things of no possibility, and vain, so he commends another respect to be had in the understanding of it, according to the use in the Arabick of the word אליל, in the notion of grief and dolour, as things bringing and causing grief, and so may be compared with that other name given to an Idol, אָוֶן from trouble or molestation. But the LXXII. and Latin have δαιμόνια dæmonia, which elsewhere they use also, Isa. 65. 11. for fortune (so the Jews expound Gad there) Isa. 34. 14. for צִיִּים the wild beasts of the desert, Satyrs, &c. Deut. 32. 17. and Psal. 105. 35. Psal. 90. 6. for שֵׁד and יָשׁוּד the destroyer or evil Angel, as again Tob. 3. 8. 6. 17. 8. 2. and Isa. 13. 21. for שְׂעִירִים the Satyr again, and Bar. 4. 7, 35. for the false Gods promiscuously, as they are there v. 7. opposed to the one true God. By all which it appears that the δαιμόνια in the LXXII. and the Hellenists signifie neither evil spirits (or devils) alone, as it is vulgarly thought, nor peculiarly the souls of men departed (as others conceive of the word) but more comprehensively all sorts of false heathen Gods, as they are opposed to the true God, whatsoever creatures have by the errours of men been deified and worshipt, in the notion wherein Plato uses θεοὶ Gods in the plural, when, in Timeo, he saith that the supreme God, the parent of all things, created all the rest of the Gods. See Augustin de Civit. Dei li. 9. c. 23. Of the original of this creature-worship, as far as it concerns the stars of heaven, Maimonides hath spoken at large, l. 1. de Idololat. and in opposition to those אֱלִילִים no Gods, it is here literally to be understood, the Lord made the heavens; these visible spheres which they so admire and adore as Gods, the one God of the Jews did make. As for that of deified men, Istiæus Milesius hath as clearly deduced the story of it, (see Euseb. Chron. l. 1.) that of the line of Japhet came Zerug, ὅστις πρῶτος ἤρξατο τῆς ἑλληνισμῆς —— who first began the Grecian or heathen worship; for, saith he, Zerug and they that were with him did with statues of pillars honour those which had anciently been warriours or Captains, or that did any vertuous or valiant act in their lives worth the commemorating, and worshipped and sacrificed to them as Gods. After them others arising, and not knowing their predecessors intention, viz. that they honoured them as their ancestours and inventours of good things with memorials onely, they worshipt them as Gods of heaven, and sacrificed to them. And this was their form of making Gods of them. After their deaths they put their names in the Books of their Priests, and solemnized a feast to them at a set time, saying that their souls were gone to the fortunate Islands, &c. In this relation thus set down in those fragments set out by Scaliger, there is certainly a foul mistake, an οὐκ not left out. For when of the first institutours it is here said, that they honoured those Heroes μνημείοις μόναις with memorials onely, how can it be imagined that in the relation of that very passage foregoing, Istiæus should say, ὡς θεοὺς προσεκύνουν καὶ ἐθυσίαζον, they adored them as Gods and worshipt them? It must therefore of necessity be thus read, that Zerug —— did with statues of pillars honour their Captains —— καὶ οὐκ ὡς θεοὺς προσεκύνουν καὶ ἐθυσίαζον, and did not worship them as Gods, or sacrifice to them, as others arising afterward did. And of these again it is as clear, that these deified men, who were supposed to be assumed to heaven, and were no doubt doubt many of them truly gone thither in their ſouls, were yet but אֱלִילִים not Gods, but creatures of that one ſupreme Jehovah, who שָׁמַיִם עָשָׂה made the heavens, and thoſe moſt eminent ſaints that dwelt there. And this ſeems to be the fulleſt importance of this verſe.

b. עז V. 7. And ſtrength] As (from עָזַז fortis fuit) is עֹז ſtrength; ſo doth the ſame word ſignifie what the Greeks call ἐξουσία power, dominion, empire. In the notion of ſtrength or robur it may probably be uſed v. 6. where as beauty, ſo ſtrength is ſaid to be in his Sanctuary; beauty in reſpect of the glory of the divine preſence, by the guard of Angels that attend there, and ſtrength in reſpect of the aſſiſtance that is by God provided and furniſhed there to all that ſeek it by prayer. But the latter notion is fitter for this place, where it is joyned with glory and attributed to God; and ſo 1 Pet. 5. 11. which ſeems to be taken from hence, it is αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα καὶ τὸ κράτος to him be glory and dominion; and the Arabick there reade וראלאעז, a light variation from the עֹז here: and from hence Gods title of παντοκράτωρ is beſt rendred (not almighty, or he that hath all ſtrength, but) he that hath the עֹז or κράτος dominion or empire over all. And thus in the Doxology annext to the Lord's Prayer, kingdom as well as power is joyned with glory, when they are attributed to God. And to this accord the LXXII. which here render it τιμὴν honor, or dignity, referring to the royal power, to which that dignity belongs. And ſo their giving him the power or empire here, is agreeable to the proclaiming v. 10. that the Lord reigneth.

c. יהוה מָלָךְ V. 10. Lord reigneth] That the Lord in this place is the Meſſias, is the reſolution generally of the ancients, both Jews and Chriſtians. Of the Jews, R. Solomon affirms this is ſpoken of the days of the Meſſiah, and gives it for a rule, that whereſoever 'tis ſaid שִׁיר חָדָשׁ a new ſong, 'tis meant of the future age, (and thus indeed Rev. 5. 9. and 14. 3. the new ſongs are ſung unto Chriſt) And R. Gaon renders the reaſon, becauſe then there ſhall be a new heaven and new earth. Kimchi alſo ſaith the Pſalm concerns the days of the Meſſias. And to this בַּשְּׂרוּ v. 2. hath a great propriety, having a particular notion of good tidings, or Goſpel, and is duly rendred by the LXXII. εὐαγγελίζεσθε Evangelize, or as a piece of Goſpel preach, declare his ſalvation; פֻּרְקָנֵיהּ his redemption, ſaith the Chaldee. Of the Chriſtians ſee Juſtin Martyr in his Dialogue with Trypho the Jew p. 298. &c. And the Pſalm being (as appears 1 Chr. 16. 23.) firſt compoſed on occaſion of the bringing of the Ark to Sion (though afterward lightly changed and fitted, if we believe the Greek title of it, to the re-building of the Temple after the captivity, ὅτε ὁ οἶκος ᾠκοδόμητο μετὰ τὴν αἰχμαλωσίαν) may thus fitly be underſtood in its prophetical extent to embrace Chriſt's aſcending to heaven in his humane nature: By his aſſumption of humanity he did truly dwell among us, and that much more eminently than ever he did in the Ark or Sanctuary; and the carrying of this to heaven was anſwerable to the bringing up the Ark, and placing it ſolemnly in Sion. Now to this exaltation of his, the Croſs was the fore-runner, and ceremony, as it were, of his inauguration, his Kingly Office commencing at his reſurrection from the grave, to which the Croſs conveyed him, τὸν μετὰ τὸ σταυρωθῆναι ἀποθνήσκοντα, καὶ βασιλεύειν πάσης τῆς γῆς κεκληρωμένον, God after his death upon the Croſs having given him the Kingdom of all the Earth, ſaith Juſtin p. 300. A. This is the meaning of the words, and of that ancient Scholion which S. Auguſtin on the Pſalms, and Arnobius and ‖ others after him, and (of the moſt ancient) † Juſtin Martyr, and * Tertullian recite, as from this place, ἐβασίλευσεν ἀπὸ τοῦ ξύλου. The Lord hath reigned from the wood or tree, i. e. from the Croſs. That theſe words ἀπὸ ξύλου from the wood, or Croſs, were once in the Text, and by the Jews taken out from thence, though it have the authority of Juſtin, and be eagerly defended by Lindanus, hath no degree of probability in it. The very LXXII. (which alone are concerned in the charge) in the Copies which have come down to us, have it not, nor the vulgar Latin, nor yet the Arabick, nor Æthiopick, which all follow the LXXII. no nor the verſion of S. Jerom, much leſs the Chaldee or Syriack, from all which it cannot with any ſhew of reaſon be pretended that the Jews have raſed or ſtoln it out; (for how was it poſſible for them to corrupt the Greek Bible throughout the world, many of which were in the hands and Libraries of heathens?) or that the univerſal Church, which for many hundred years hath allowed of and confirmed the Original Copies, and all theſe Tranſlations, hath joyn'd with the Jews in their ſacriledge, and oppoſition to Chriſtianity, and that after it had received warning from ſo great a perſon as Juſtin was. Many other evidences are produced to this purpoſe by our learned Country-man Nicholas Fuller, Miſcell. l. 3. c. 13. and his concluſion is unqueſtionable, that it was but a Scholion of ſome of the ancients written in the margin of his book, (as the reſult of his obſervation of the Kingdom of Chriſt, diſcernible in this prophecy) which after by ſome unskilfull Scribe was inſerted in the Text, and ſo perhaps in more than one, found by Juſtin, and by his writings communicated to others, who examin'd not the truth by the Hebrew Text, or more ancient Copies of the LXXII. Meanwhile by this gloſs, and the reception of it with Juſtin, and Tertullian, and Auguſtin, &c. it competently appears to have been the opinion of the firſt Chriſtians, thoſe before as well as after Juſtin, that theſe words the Lord reigneth, and ſo this Pſalm, belonged to the reſurrection of Chriſt, and the regal power wherein that inſtalled him (and accordingly it was uſed in the Eaſtern ſervice) and this Kingdom of his ſet up here in this world, in converting both Jews and heathens, and bringing them into the Church. This is the ground of the ſtyle wherein the verſe begins, and this his Kingdom is mentioned, Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth; as before v. 6. that all the Gods of the heathens are Idols or no Gods, but 'tis God that made the heavens, i. e. that this God, that made the heavens, ſhould caſt out all the heathen Gods out of their Temples, and ſet up his ſpiritual Kingdom in its ſtead, throughout the heathen world, which is the interpretation of his coming to judge the earth, v. 12. thus exerciſing his regal power, to which he was inaugurated, in deſtroying idolatry through the world. From this and the like predictions it was, that as Tacitus Hiſt. l. 5. c. 13. Sueton. in Veſpaſ. c. 4. and Joſephus de Bell. Judaic. l. 5. c. 12. tell us, there was an univerſal belief and rumour ſcattered through the Eaſt, before the reign of Veſpaſian (ſoon after the reſurrection of Chriſt) that a King ſhould come thence and reign over the whole world; which the heathen ignorantly applied to Veſpaſian, but was thus verified in Chriſt; not in his birth, but in this ſpiritual exerciſe of his regality, partly in converting Jews and Gentiles to the Faith, and partly in deſtroying their worſhip, the Moſaical Rites, together with the Temple

V. 11. The heavens] The heavens, and earth, and ſea, and fields, and trees, are here put together (after the Scripture-ſtyle, which uſeth by the enumeration of parts, to ſignifie the whole) to denote the whole inferiour world, which (interpreting the heavens of the aiery regions) is made up of theſe, ſee note on 2 Pet. 3. e. Then for that phraſe, the whole world, that in the ſacred dialect alſo, as πᾶσα κτίσις, every creature, ſignifies the whole heathen world, ſee note on Mar. 16. b. and Rom. 8. d. and ſo theſe two v. 11. and 12, 13. are but a poetical expreſſion of the great cauſes of joy that this Kingdom of Chriſt (expreſt by the Lord's reigning, v. 10. and coming to judge the world, v. 13.) which ſhould be ſpiritually erected among them, ſhould bring to the heathen world.

The Ninety Seventh PSALM.

The ninety ſeventh Pſalm, agreeable to the ninety ſixth, is the praiſing the God of heaven for his works of juſtice and mercy. 'Tis ‖ thought to be compoſed by David on occaſion of his peaceable re-eſtabliſhment in his kingdom, after the rebellion and deſtruction of Abſalom; but it as literally contains a prediction of the Meſſias his inauguration to his regal Office, and the ſignal exerciſe thereof in the deſtruction of his crucifiers, and all other enemies of his kingdom. See note a.

Paraphraſe.

1. God hath ſubdued all the enemies and oppoſers of that kingdom which he hath been pleaſed to erect, to ſeat his anointed quietly in his throne, an eminent type of the kingdom of the Meſſias, which is to commence at his reſurrection, and to be ſet up in the hearts of believers, and ſhall prove matter of all true joy to all the heathen world, and the ſeveral nations thereof, as well as to the Jews.

1. THE Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoyce; let the † multitude of the Iſles be glad thereof.

† many Iſlands אִיִּים רַבִּים

2. His judgments are ſecret and unſearchable, and ſo the infinitely wiſe ways and depths of his providence; but all founded in, and managed with moſt perfect juſtice and rectitude.

a.

2. Clouds and darkneſs are round about him; righteouſneſs and judgment are [a] the * habitation of his throne.

* baſis.

3, 4, 5. Thoſe that will not receive him when after his miraculous reſurrection and aſcenſion the Goſpel is preached to them, ſhall be ſoon overwhelmed with ſignal judgments from heaven, as remarkable and formidable, and as fully evidenced to be the effects of God's wrath, as if fire from heaven, or flames of lightnings, or Angels the witneſſes of God's preſence, ſhould viſibly appear in their deſtruction. (And this firſt and in the moſt illuſtrious manner to be executed on the nation of the Jews the crucifiers, the City and Temple of Jeruſalem, and after upon heathen Rome, &c.)

3. A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about.
4. His lightning inlightned the world; the earth ſaw and trembled.
5. The hills melted like wax at the preſence of the Lord, at the preſence of the Lord of the whole earth.

6. And all Angels and men ſhall diſcern and acknowledge and proclaim the great juſtice of it, and the glorious manifeſtation of the divine power of Chriſt in the ruine of his malicious oppoſers.

6. The heavens declare his righteouſneſs, and all the people ſee his glory.

7. This vengeance all are to expect among the nations, who do not preſently forſake the worſhip of their falſe Gods (ſee Pſal. 96. note a.) that ſtill adhere to idols, when the faith of Chriſt the eternal God, Creatour of the world, whom the very Angels adore and obey, Heb. 1. 6. is preached among them. (There being no way to reſcue Idolaters from this ruine, but an hearty ſpeedy acceptation of the Chriſtian faith, as appeared in the Roman Empire.)

b.

7. Confounded be all they that ſerve graven images, that boaſt themſelves of idols: worſhip him all ye [b] ‖ Gods.

‖ Angels.

8. This was good news both to Jeruſalem, and the villages and towns about, the daughters of that mother city: And all the true children of Abraham, all the believing Jews (and Gentiles, alſo) ſhall by this means be delivered from their perſecutions, and ſo obliged to glorifie the juſtice and mercy of God in it.

8. Sion heard and was glad, and the daughters of Judah rejoyced, becauſe of thy judgments, O Lord.

9. For this (Meſſias whom we have hoped for ſo long) is the ſupreme God of heaven and earth, whoſe creatures they are which all the idolatrous people of the world have worſhipt for Gods; and accordingly at the preaching of the Goſpel all their oracles and worſhips ſhall vaniſh.

9. For thou, Lord, art ‖ high above all the earth; thou art exalted far above all Gods.

‖ moſt high עֶלְיוֹן

10. O let all that pretend to love or honour or ſerve him, fly from all pollution both of fleſh and ſpirit, all that he hath forbidden, all that may any way provoke his wrath, who is a God of pure eyes, and cannot behold iniquity. And if all their lives be laid out on this one care of approving themſelves to him, their time will be well ſpent in this ſervice; and beſide the endleſs reward in another world, they ſhall not fail of the evidences of his goodneſs and graciouſneſs here in giving them ſignal preſervations and deliverances from all the machinations of wicked men, and in his time reſt and ceſſation of perſecutions, peaceable aſſemblies and opportunities of ſerving him.

10. Ye that love the Lord, hate evil: he preſerveth the ſoul of his ſaints, he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked.

11. [c] Light

11. c Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart.

11. For though the service of God under the Gospel have being dispensed by the divine providence for many salubrious and beneficial ends, yet is there that seed and foundation of joy and abundant delight to all honest and truly pious hearts sown there, that shall not fail to bring forth all comfortable and blessed effects to them even in this life, by the practice of Christian vertues, by the comforts and peace of conscience, and that lively hope that is afforded to all faithfull obedient disciples, and over and above, after this life, the fruition of endless bliss and glory. c.

12. Rejoyce in the Lord ye righteous, and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness.

12. This therefore is matter of the greatest exultation, and thanksgiving, and commemoration of God's infinite goodness and mercy to all truly pious men.

Annotations on Psal. XCVII.

a. מְכוֹן נְכוֹן בְּסָאוֹ

V. 2. Habitation of his throne] From כון and נָכוֹן prepared, fitted, confirmed, is סְכוֹן here, used for a place, seat, but especially a basis whereon any thing is set: from whence the LXXII. had their μεγιστᾶνες (the very Hebrew מכונות) for basis, 1 King. 7. 27. The Chaldee here retains the Original סָכוֹן, but the LXXII. from the notion of the verb for fitting, reade εὐθύτης, the setting right of his throne; the Syriack by way of paraphrase, by equity and judgment ܒܫܘܬܐ ܘܒܕܝܢܐ thy throne is confirmed: all which concurr to the notion of basis and foundation, which is the thing which gives the rectitude first, and then the stability, to the chair or throne that is set on it. And so that is without question the right, intelligible rendring of the phrase, Righteousness and judgment are the (not habitation, but) basis of his throne, i. e. his sentences, decrees, judicatures are all built upon righteousness and judgment, as a throne is built and established on a foundation. The Jewish Arab renders it הילה the condition, state, or manner.

b. אֱלֹהִים

V. 7. Gods.] That אֱלֹהִים sometimes signifies Angels hath been formerly noted. And that in this place it doth so, and not as it doth afterward v. 9. and Psal. 96. 4, 5. the Gods of the Gentiles, the Idol false Gods, or as here the Chaldee understand it, כָּל עַמְמַיָּא פָּלְחֵי טָעֲוָתָא all the nations that serve Idols, is manifest not onely by the LXXII. that render it ἄγγελοι αὐτῷ his Angels, and the Syriack ܟܠ ܐܠܗ̈ܐ ܕܣܓ̈ܕܝܢ ܠܗ to the same sense, and so the Latin, &c. but especially by the Apostle, Heb. 1. 6. where speaking expresly of Christ's preeminence above Angels, and bringing testimonies of it out of Scripture, he adds that ὅταν εἰσαγάγῃ τὸν πρωτότοκον εἰς τὴν οἰκουμένην, when it, i. e. the Scripture, would introduce the first born, i. e. the Messias, into the world, i. e. that superiour world call'd οἰκουμένην μέλλουσαν the world to come, c. 11. 5. λέγει, it saith, καὶ προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες ἄγγελοι θεοῦ, and let all the Angels of God worship him. Which words being evidently taken from the LXXII. in this place, as they convince אֱלֹהִים here to signifie Angels, so they are a key to admit us into the full importance of this whole Psalm, that it is the introducing the Messias into heaven, a description of Christ's middle coming, so frequently styled in the New Testament παρουσία the coming or presence (as here v. 5.) of the Son of man, and the kingdom of God, and of heaven, viz. his ascent thither, and so entring on his regal power, v. 1. which he was to exercise there. To which therefore are annext the effects thereof on those that would not permit or allow him to reign over them, destroying the obstinate rebels, both Jews and Gentiles, and giving all cause of rejoycing to all that received the faith, and subjected themselves to his Government. That this so usefull a key to this Psalm may not be wrested from us, it is not amiss to take notice, that some shew of probability there is, that the words Heb. 1. 6. may be taken from Deut. 32. 43. (and not from this Psalm) where the LXXII. reade these very words, προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες οἱ ἄγγελοι θεοῦ, Let all the Angels of God worship him. But first, the Hebrew in that place hath no such words, but onely these, הַרְנִינוּ גוֹיִם עַמּוֹ, which the Chaldee, and Syriack, and Samaritan, and Arabick, and Vulgar Latin, all with exact accord, render, Praise his people ye Gentiles, (or proclaim, depredicate his people, promulgate God's special favour to them) for which the cause is rendred in the next words, for he will avenge the blood of his servants, whereas the LXXII. as our Copies now have it, presents us with this great variety, no less than four expres Scholions, for this one plain sense, Εὐφράνθητε οὐρανοὶ ἅμα αὐτῷ, καὶ προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες ἄγγελοι θεοῦ. Εὐφράνθητε ἔθνη μετὰ τοῦ λαοῦ αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐνισχυσάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες υἱοὶ θεοῦ, Rejoyce ye heavens together with him, and let all the Angels of God worship him; Rejoyce ye Gentiles with his people, and let all the sons of God be strong to him. Of these it may be observed, that as onely the first and the third pretend to be rendrings of the Hebrew, and the second and fourth paraphrases or explications of their meaning in them; so the false reading of עמו with him for עמו his people, hath begotten them both. For having rendred that in the former, ἅμα αὐτῷ, together with him, they have converted גוים nations into οὐρανοὶ heavens, then annext the second to render an account of that, let all the Angels of God worship him, signifying the Angels worshipping him to be that which they meant by the heavens rejoycing together with him, and so those heavens, those Angels in them, to be the גוים the nations there called to, to praise or rejoyce with him. In the third they have rendred הַרְנִינוּ גוֹיִם by Εὐφράνθητε ἔθνη, rejoyce ye nations, (which differs but lightly from praise or proclaim ye Gentiles) but then again for עמו his people, they reade μετὰ τοῦ λαοῦ αὐτοῦ with his people, which is the conjunction of עמו and עמו both. As for προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες οἱ ἄγγελοι θεοῦ let all the Angels of God worship him, it is so far from having any the least affinity with the words in the Hebrew, that 'tis no way probable that it was in the original Copies of the Greek, (but onely by some Scribe cast into the margin, from this Psalm) it being certain that none of those ancient Translatours, which use to follow the LXXII. do follow it in this. This consideration therefore will render it very unreasonable to fetch those words, (which the Apostle citeth out of the Scripture) from this place of Deuteronomy, where the original Text hath nothing like it, and which the Hebrews, to whom the Epistle was written, did know was not to be found in the Hebrew, when this this Text in the Pſalm in the Hebrew, as well as Greek, did ſo readily afford it. Secondly, this citation Heb. 1. coming in conſort with many other teſtimonies of the Old Teſtament, 'tis obſervable that all the reſt of the teſtimonies (ſave onely that of I will be to him a father, and he ſhall be unto me a ſon, which ſeems to be taken from 2 Sam. 7. 14. where they are ſpoken of Solomon the ſon of David, a ſpecial type of Chriſt) are taken out of this one book of Pſalms, Thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee, v. 5. from the expreſs words Pſal. 2. 7. Who maketh his Angels ſpirits, &c. v. 7. from Pſal. 104. 4. Thy throne, O God, is for ever, &c. v. 8, 9. from Pſal. 45. 6, 7. Thou Lord, in the beginning, &c. v. 10, 11, 12. from Pſal. 102. 25, 26. Sit thou on my right hand, &c. v. 13. from Pſal. 110. 1. And therefore in all probability from the ſame book of Pſalms, and therein from the expreſs words in this Pſalm, this teſtimony was cited by the Apoſtle.

V. 11. Light] R. Solomon reads אור here in the notion of a plant, or herb, as we have it Iſai. 26. 19. אורות עלי the dew of herbs, and 2 King. 4. 39. where the LXXII. reade ἀειῶθ, a corruption of the Hebrew אורות. If this might be admitted, it would be appliable to the Germen David, which was to ſpring up as a tender plant. But the conjunction with gladneſs here, gives it the ordinary notion of light, which is ſo gladſome, and ſo fitly uſed for joy, (as darkneſs for ſorrow) the ſeed whereof is little, ſaith Aben Ezra, but the harveſt great; which R. Saadiah interprets, the ſeed is in this world, but the harveſt in that to come. The Jewiſh Arab reads, Light is powred forth to the righteous. c. אור

The Ninety Eighth PSALM.

Paraphraſe. A Pſalm.

תּוֹשַׁבְחָת נְבוּאָה
A Prophetick Pſalm Chald.
† Ψαλμὸς τῷ Δαυὶδ
LXXII. Syr. Lat. &c.

The ninety eighth Pſalm, compoſed probably as a breviate of Moſes's ſong at the delivery of the Iſraelites, and deſtroying Pharaoh and the Ægyptians, Exod. 15. 1, &c. is (as the ninety ſixth and ſeventh foregoing) a ‖ prediction of Chriſt's Kingdom, and the bringing the Gentile world in ſubjection to it: it is thought to have been compoſed by † David.

a. 1. It is now a moſt opportune ſeaſon to praiſe and magnifie the Lord of heaven, for all the miraculous deliverances which he hath wrought, but eſpecially for that glorious reſurrection of the Meſſias out of the grave (the pawn and pledge of ours) a work of his omnipotent power, and an evidence of his fidelity in making good his promiſe to him.

1. O ſing unto the Lord a new ſong, for he hath done marvellous things: his right hand and his holy arm hath * gotten him the [a] victory.

* helped him, or brought him ſalvation, or deliverance.

2. This mighty work of his in raiſing the Meſſias from the dead, and the exact completion of his predictions and promiſes therein, is by God appointed to be annunciated and proclaimed to all the men in the world; to the Jews firſt, beginning at Jeruſalem, Luk. 24. 41. (ſee v. 3.) and then through all the Gentile regions, to every creature.

2. The Lord hath made known his ſalvation; his righteouſneſs hath he openly ſhewed in the ſight of the heathen.

3. And this not as a miracle onely, though of a moſt ſtupendious nature, but as an act of infinite goodneſs, and promiſed mercy, and ſo of fidelity in performing it; the benefits whereof as they were firſt reached out to his own peculiar people the Jews, ſo were they to extend, and ſoon after to be preached and promulgate, to the utmoſt nations of the world, who have all their parts in the redemption from ſin and ſatan atchieved and wrought by it.

3. He hath remembred his mercy and truth to the houſe of Iſrael: all the ends of the earth have ſeen the ſalvation of our God.

4, 5, 6. This is true matter of the greateſt joy and exultation to all men, and deſerves to be celebrated in the moſt ſolemn manner, with all the inſtruments of muſick uſed in the ſervice of God; and all little enough to expreſs the glory of the work, and the infinite advantages deſigned to us, by Chriſt thus entring on his regal office, and ſubduing all the world to the power of the Goſpel, that Scepter of his Kingdom.

4. Make a joyfull noiſe unto the Lord all the earth; make a loud noiſe, and ‖ rejoyce and ſing praiſe.

5. Sing unto the Lord with the harp, with the harp, and the voice of a Pſalm.

6. With trumpets and ſound of cornet, make a joyfull noiſe before the Lord the King.

‖ cry vehemently וְרַנְּנוּ Pſ. 96. 12.

b. 7, 8, 9. The whole habitable world, the heathen people that have been long under the ſervitude of their falſe idol-worſhips, ſhall now be redeemed from that ſlavery of ſin and Satan, their oracles and temples deſtroyed, and the doctrine of the true God, and practice of piety and juſtice and charity, ſet up in their ſtead, and thereby a moſt happy joyfull reformation wrought among men, which deſerves all the acknowledgments of humble and thankfull hearts. See Pſal. 96. 11, 12, 13. and note d.

7. Let the Sea † roar and the fulneſs thereof, the world and they that dwell therein.

8. Let the * floods [b] clap their hands, let the hills ‖ be joyfull together

9. Before the Lord, for he cometh to judge the earth; with righteouſneſs ſhall he judge the world, and the people with † equity.

† make a loud noiſe יִרְעַם Pſ. 96. 11.
* Rivers נְהָרוֹת ‖ cry vehemently יְרַנְּנוּ † uprightneſs. מֵישָׁרִים

Annotations on Pſal. XCVIII.

a. הוֹשִׁיעָה לוֹ

V. 1. Victory] From יָשַׁע to deliver, is הוֹשִׁיעָה here in Hiphil, and being in conſtruction with לְ the dative caſe, ſignifies to bring help or relief to any. The Jewiſh Arab reads, And his right hand and his excellent power hath holpen his people. So Pſal. 116. 6. I was brought low, וְלִי יְהוֹשִׁיעַ and he helped me. The Chaldee פְּרִיקַת לֵיהּ hath relieved, or redeemed him: the LXXII. ἔσωσεν αὐτῷ, and the Latin ſalvavit ſibi, hath ſaved for him; the Syriack ܦܪܩ ܠܗ, as the Chaldee, hath relieved, or redeemed him. This being here applied to God, that his right hand and holy arm hath relieved him, helped him, brought him ſalvation or deliverance, though by ſome figure it may be interpreted of God's relieving his people, and ſetting forth himſelf victorious in the eyes of men, yet moſt literally it belongs to the prophetick ſenſe, accompliſht in the reſurrection of Chriſt; for then in an eminent manner did the divine power, called יְמִינוֹ his, i. e. God's, right hand, and God's fidelity in making good his promiſed relief (he will not leave my ſoul in hades——) fitly ſtyled וּזְרוֹעַ קָדְשׁוֹ his holy arm, bring him, i. e. Chriſt, relief, in raiſing his dead body out of the grave, and exalting him perſonally to God's right hand in heaven: and this peculiarly ſeems to be the נִפְלָאוֹת the wonderfull things, the complication of miracles, which are here mentioned in the beginning, and are the matter of the ſolemn thanſgiving in the enſuing Pſalm.

b. יִמְחֲאוּ כָף

V. 8. Clap] יִמְחֲאוּ כָף ſhall clap the hands, is here applied to נְהָרוֹת the rivers, as an expreſſion of great joy. The whole heathen world are here expreſt by the ſeveral parts of this viſible globe, Sea, and World, and Rivers, and Hills, as before by Earth, and Sea, and Field, and Trees, Pſal. 96. lec. Note d. and ſo the joy that is here attributed to each of theſe, being the joy of men in the world, is fitly deſcribed by thoſe expreſſions of joy which are frequent among men; yet ſo as may have ſome propriety to thoſe inanimate parts, of which they are literally ſpoken. In triumphs and ovations it is ordinary among men to make a loud and vehement noiſe, and the roaring of the ſea is not very unlike that; and ſo likewiſe the mugitus which hath ſometimes been heard to break out from hills, in an earthquake; and accordingly יִרְעַם make a loud noiſe, is here applied to the ſea, v. 7. and יְרַנְּנוּ cry vehemently, to the hills v. 8. And ſo the clapping of the hands being a token of delight and approbation, and the ſtriking or daſhing of the water in a river being, for the noiſe of it, a reſemblance of that, the rivers are here ſaid to clap their hands. The Chaldee, ſaith Schindler, explain it by יִסְחוֹן חִפְיָא אִידָא they ſhall ſtrike or play on the timbrels with the hand, but ſure that is a falſe reading of the Chaldee; the more emendate Copies reade יִסְחוֹן כַּפְיָא כְּחֵדָא let the rivers clap their hands together, &c. and ſo the LXXII. κροτησάτωσαν χεῖρι, ſhall clap the hand. The ſame phraſe is uſed of trees, Iſa. 55. 12. and there both Chaldee and LXXII. agree in the rendring, יִשְׂחֲקוּן בְּעֻנְפֵיהוֹן, ἐπικροτήσουσι τοῖς κλάδοις, they ſhall clap the hand, or applaud with the boughs, the claſhing of boughs together in the tree, being a like ſound to that of clapping of hands. The Jewiſh Arab reads, And let the people of the rivers ſtrike or clap their hands, and the people of the mountains all of them cry aloud or ſhout.

The Ninety Ninth P S A L M.

The ninety ninth Pſalm, anciently || attributed to David, ſeems firſt to refer to his quiet eſtabliſhment in that Throne to which God had choſen him, but prophetically alſo (as the former) to the kingdom of the Meſſias.

|| Ψαλμὸς τῷ Δαυὶδ A Pſalm of David. LXXII. Syr. Lat. &c.

† be unquiet * that ſitteth

1. THE Lord reigneth, [a] let the people † tremble: he * ſitteth between the Cherubims, let the earth be moved.

Paraphraſe.

a. 1. The omnipotent God of heaven, that God that hath promiſed to be preſent in his ſanctuary, and appointed the Cherubims to be placed covering the propitiatory, thereby to denote his preſence there to all that ſeek him and pray to him, hath at length been pleaſed to ſhew forth his power in behalf of his ſervant David, hath diſcomfited the Canaanites and Jebuſites, and other his heathen enemies, and now quietly ſeated him in his throne (a lively image of his erecting the Meſſias's kingdom in mens hearts) and ſo ſhall firmly continue in deſpite of all commotion or oppoſition whatſoever. (The gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt the Church, the ſpiritual kingdom of Chriſt here.)

2. The Lord is great in Zion, and he is high above all people.

2. And herein hath God magnified himſelf in the ſight of all the people round about, the God that is worſhipt and preſentiates himſelf in the Ark, now placed in Zion, is diſcerned even by heathen men to be far too ſtrong for any nation to reſiſt or oppoſe.

|| They ſhall confeſs יודו † that

3. || Let them praiſe thy great and terrible name, † for it is holy.

3. This they now are forced to acknowledge, to dread his power and vengeance, and confeſs that it is moſt juſtly evidenced on them, to the ſubduing of them, and magnifying his people. (This was more eminently fulfilled in the converſion of the Gentiles to Chriſt.)

4. The King's ſtrength alſo loveth judgment: thou doeſt eſtabliſh equity, thou executeſt judgment and righteouſneſs in Jacob.

4. All the ſtrength and ability that David hath had to bring him to this height and peace and ſtability, he hath received wholly from God: and that God which hath thus holpen him, hath done it to this great end, to puniſh ſin, and ſet up all manner of vertue, caſting out and deſtroying the deteſtable idolaters, ſeverely viſiting their their unnatural ſins upon them, and by excellent Laws, and Rulers after his own heart, indeavouring to advance the practice of all purity and juſtice and charity among the Jews.

5. O let us all make our humbleſt united approaches unto him: and as they that petition a Prince on earth, uſe to caſt themſelves proſtrate at his feet, ſo let us be proſtrate in his ſanctuary (ſee v. 9.) that place of his peculiar reſidence, where we are appointed to aſſemble; and let us there uniformly adore, and praiſe, and magnifie him for this ſignal act of his glorious goodneſs and mercy toward us, and offer up our prayers and ſupplications unto him, as to one that never fails to make good his promiſe of hearing and anſwering the prayers of his faithfull ſervants, which are ardently addreſt to him.

5. Exalt ye the Lord our God, and worſhip at his footſtool; for he is holy.

b. 6. Thus hath he conſtantly diſpenſed his mercies to his people at the prayer of thoſe holy men whom he hath ſet over them. Three eminent inſtances there are of it recorded. One Exod. 32. 11. when at the prayer of Moſes God was propitiated after the great provocation of the golden calf. A ſecond Numb. 16. 46. when upon Aaron's making the atonement for the people in the buſineſs of Coreh, the plague was ſtayed. A third 1 Sam. 7. where upon Samuel's burnt-offering v. 9. and prayer v. 5. and crying importunately and conſtantly to God for the people v. 8. the Lord heard him v. 9. and the Philiſtims were diſcomfited v. 10.

6. Moſes and Aaron among [b] his ‖ prieſts, and Samuel among them that call upon his name: they called upon the Lord, and he anſwered them.

‖ chief men

c. 7. With every one of theſe God was pleaſed to commune and talk, as a friend with a friend, giving them vocal anſwers out of a bright cloud which incompaſſed them, a wonderfull dignation of God's to thoſe faithfull ſervants of his which obeyed and obſerved his commands.

7. He ſpake unto them in [c] the † cloudy pillar: they kept his teſtimonies, and the ordinances that he gave them.

† pillar of cloud

d. 8. And when the people had provoked God, and God's wrath was already gone out againſt them for their crying ſins, theſe mens prayers were ſo effectual with him, as to avert the plagues, and obtain remiſſion for them.

8. Thou anſweredſt [d] them, O Lord our God; * thou waſt a God that forgaveſt them, though thou tookeſt vengeance of their inventions.

* O God thou wert propitiated for their ſakes, even puniſhing, or when thou wert puniſhing their machinations.

9. O let theſe unſpeakable dignations of his, and ſignal anſwers unto the prayers of his ſervants, bring us all to his ſanctuary on our knees, to praiſe and adore his ſacred and glorious majeſty, and offer up our continual and ardent prayers unto him.

9. Exalt the Lord our God, and worſhip at his holy hill; for the Lord our God is holy.

Annotations on Pſal. XCIX.

a. רָגַז

V. 1. Tremble] Of רָגַז we have ſpoken before (ſee note on Pſal. 4. e.) and obſerved the notion of it, as for anger ſo alſo for fear (ſo ſaith Abu Walid of this root, that in the Arabick it ſignifies trembling and commotion, and is ſometimes from anger, ſometimes from fear, and other occaſions) the word generally ſignifying motion or commotion, either of body or of mind, and both theſe being equally commotions of mind. Here the context may ſeem to direct the taking it in the notion of commotion ſimply, as that ſignifies ἀκαταστασία ſedition or tumult of rebels or other adverſaries. And then the ſenſe will lye thus, The Lord reigneth, יִרְגְּזוּ עַמִּים let the people be moved, i.e. Now God hath ſet up David in his Throne, and peaceably ſettled the Kingdom on him, in ſpight of all the commotions of the people. The LXXII. render it to this ſenſe (as Pſ. 4. 4.) ὀργίζεσθαι καὶ, let the people be angry or regret it, as much as they will. The Chaldee and Syriack uſe the ſame word רְוָעִין, from רָעַשׁ to be moved, which competently agrees to this notion, as alſo the latter part of this verſe; for as יֹשֵׁב כְּרוּבִים in the participle, he that ſiteth on or inhabiteth the Cherubims, is all one directly with יְהוָה the Lord, ſo תָּנוּט from נוּט, which, as נוֹר alſo, ſignifies motion and agitation, is exactly the ſame with יִרְגְּזוּ, and accordingly the Chaldee renders it יְוַעֲוַע, the former word וע or ע reduplicated, and ſo to the very ſame ſenſe; the LXXII. have σαλευθήτω be ſhaken, the Latin moveatur be moved, the ſame alſo. Yet may it alſo be read as in the future, and in the notion of fearing and quaking; The nations ſhall tremble, and the earth ſhall be moved, as appearances of God are wont to be received with trembling and amazement, and at the giving the law, the people trembled and the earth ſhook, and this will be a fit expreſſion of the ſubjecting the heathen world to Chriſt's Kingdom. Abu Walid doubts whether תָּנוּט ſhould be referred to אֶרֶץ to ſignifie let the earth be moved, the ſame with תָּמוּט, or whether to God, and ſo be of the ſignification with נוּט in Arabick, to hang, making the earth the accuſative caſe, he that ſitteth between the Cherubims hangeth (faſt) the earth, according to that of Job 23. 7. and hangeth the earth upon nothing. And thus in an Hebrew-Arabick gloſſary it is rendred מעלק hanging.

יִרְגְּזוּ עַמִּים

יֹשֵׁב כְּרוּבִים תָּנוּט

b. כֹּהֵן

V. 6. Prieſts] כֹּהֵן, from כָּהַן to miniſter, is a common title of Civil as well as Eccleſiaſtical Officers. Hence it is that Exod. 2. 16. where the Hebrew hath כֹּהֵן, the Chaldee reads רַבָּא the Prince of Midian. So Exod. 19. 22, 24. הַכֹּהֲנִים clearly ſignifies, not the ſons of Aaron, but the firſt-born or chief of the families. So 2 Sam. 8. 18. David's ſons were כֹּהֲנִים, not Prieſts, but Princes or chief Rulers; רַבְרְבִין great men, ſaith the Chaldee, the ſame, called הָרִאשֹׁנִים principal or chief men at the hand of the King, 1 Chron. 18. 17. Of which ſort was Ira, called כֹּהֵן, not a Prieſt, but a chief Ruler about David, 2 Sam. 20. 26. And in the more general notion of the word, as it comprehends both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Rulers, it is evident that Moſes as well as Aaron are here rightly recited בְּכֹהֲנָיו among God's Rulers or chief men.

c. עַמּוּד עָנָן

V. 7. Cloudy pillar] What עַמּוּד עָנָן ſtation or pillar of cloud here ſignifies, as far as refers to Moſes and Aaron, there is no difficulty. For as in their paſſage out of Ægypt, God conducted and protected them by a bright cloud, Exod. 13. 21. which is there, as here, called עַמּוּד a pillar, ſignifying thereby the form or ſimilitude of an hollow pillar, or concave body over their heads, coming down to the ground on every ſide of them, and ſo like wings incompaſſing and ſhielding them (ſee note on 1 Cor. 10. a.) ſo when 'tis added c. 14. 1. that the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, that Lord that that in the verſe immediately foregoing went before them in a pillar of cloud, there can be no doubt but God, as here is ſaid, ſpake unto them in a pillar of cloud. So Exod. 16. 10. the glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud, and the Lord ſpake unto Moſes ſaying: ſo Exod. 17. 6. when God ſaith unto Moſes, I will ſtand before thee upon the rock in Horeb, and thou ſhalt ſmite, and water ſhall come out, this is again this עַמּוּד pillar, or (according to the notion of the theme עָמַד ſtetit) ſtanding of the cloud on Horeb. So Exod. 19. 9. Lo I come to thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I ſpeak with thee, and believe thee for ever: and ſo v. 16. as there were thunders and lightnings, ſo there was a thick cloud upon the mount, and the Lord deſcended v. 18. and anſwered Moſes by voice v. 19. and to this commerce Aaron was admitted v. 24. So c. 20. v. 21. Moſes drew near to the thick darkneſs (all one with the cloud) where God was, and the Lord ſpake unto Moſes v. 22. All the difficulty is, what relation this of the pillar of cloud can have to Samuel, in whoſe time this is not reported. To this the anſwer might be, that although the anſwering them v. 6. were common to all the three perſons, Moſes and Aaron and Samuel, yet there is no neceſſity that the pillar of cloud ſhould be common to them all; 'twere ſufficient that it is applicable to Moſes and Aaron, though not to Samuel. But yet even of Samuel it is evident, that (as 'tis here) God ſpake unto him, calling him by his name, 1 Sam. 3. and 'tis there ſaid at the fourth time of calling, when he proceeded to ſpeak and reveal himſelf to him, v. 10. the Lord came, and ſtood, and called, Samuel, Samuel. This muſt certainly ſignifie the ſame thing that was ſaid of God's appearing to Moſes, Exod. 17. 6. I will ſtand before thee upon the rock. And that being reaſonably reſolved to be this of the pillar of cloud, in probability this to Samuel being parallel to that, may be conceived to be this pillar of cloud alſo, though at three former calls 'tis certain it appeared not. So again at the time when Samuel's offering and prayers were ſo ſignally heard at Mizpeh, 1 Sam. 7. it is ſaid v. 9. the Lord anſwered him, and v. 10. the Lord thundred with a great thunder; where God's voice, and thunder, were queſtionleſs like that of Exod. 19. 16. where the cloud is mentioned as well as the thunder; and indeed where thunder is, a cloud is ſuppoſed to be, and ſo this anſwering of Samuel with thunder, muſt be God's ſpeaking to him at this time (if not before) out of the cloud alſo. Thus in the New Teſtament we ſo frequently have the voice of God out of a cloud, that when the voice is mentioned without the mention of the cloud, the cloud is yet to be ſuppoſed, as that from whence the voice came.

d. לָהֶם V. 8. Them] The difficulty of this v. 8. will beſt be cleared by obſerving the notion of לָהֶם, not to them, or barely as a dative caſe (forgaveſt them) but for them, i. e. for their ſakes. The Chaldee render it אסתלהון for, or becauſe of them. And נשׂא then God's being נָשָׂא pardoning or propitiated (ſo נָשָׂא oft ſignifies remiſſion, propitiation) לָהֶם for them, is his ſparing the people for their prayers, as he certainly did in all the examples of Moſes and Aaron and Samuel; for all their prayers being for the averting of God's wrath from the people, God's being propitiated for them (or as the LXXII. ἱλαὸς αὐτοῖς, eaſily propitiated by them) is God's pardoning not them, but the people for their ſakes, or at their requeſts. This ſignal dignation of God's to them, in being thus propitiated and reconciled to the people for, or by their prayers, is here farther ונקם ſet of by the addition of וְנֹקֵם —(literally,) and revenging their inventions, i. e. when thou wert revenging or puniſhing their wicked deeds, when thou wert juſt entring on the work, then thou wert propitiated. Thus in the firſt example, that of Moſes, it is viſible; The people had terribly provoked God, and God was juſt puniſhing them, and he was ſtayed onely by Moſes's prayers, Exod. 32. 10. Now therefore let me alone, ſaith God, that my wrath may wax hot, and that I may conſume them, and I will make of thee a great nation; i. e. God's wrath was gone out againſt them to the deſtroying of ſome of them, for this idolatry of theirs: ſo it appears v. 35. the Lord plagued the people becauſe they made the calf— i. e. the Lord was נֹקֵם עַל עֲלִילוֹתָם ונקם על עלילותם ἐκδικῶν ὅτι τὰ ἐπιτηδεύματα αὐτῶν, avenging, or acting revenge on their deeds or machinations, and ſome of the people were already fallen by God's hand, and three thouſand in one day were ſlain by the Levites at Moſes's command v. 28. and if Moſes would have let God alone, they had been all utterly conſumed: and now, when God's wrath was thus high, and ingaged in the execution, Moſes beſought the Lord v. 11. and God repented him of the evil which he thought to doe unto this people v. 14. So in the ſecond example, that of Aaron. Num. 16. God ſaith to Moſes v. 45. Get you up from this congregation, that I may conſume them as in a moment, and it follows, they fell upon their faces (and prayed to God) then v. 46. Moſes ſaid to Aaron, Take a Cenſer, and put fire therein from off the Altar; and put on incenſe, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them, for there is wrath gone out from the Lord, the plague is begun, and v. 47. behold the plague was begun among the people: (and ſo God was literally נֹקֵם avenging or puniſhing their deeds) and he, i. e. Aaron, put on incenſe, and made atonement for the people, and ſtood between the dead and the living, and the plague was ſtayed. The like is alſo intimated in the third inſtance, that of Samuel, 1 Sam. 7. For there 'tis evident the Iſraelites were ſore preſt and worſted by the Philiſtims, and afraid of them v. 7. and Samuel tells them, that if they do return unto the Lord with all their hearts, then they muſt put away their ſtrange gods— and God will deliver them out of the hand of the Philiſtims, v. 3. And they do as he bid them v. 4. and kept a ſolemn faſt v. 6. (certainly for the averting ſome judgment under which they were) and they ſaid to Samuel v. 8. Ceaſe not to cry unto the Lord our God for us, that he will ſave us— And juſt then it was, that God was propitiated by Samuel's prayers, Samuel took a lamb and offered it, and cryed unto the Lord for Iſrael, וַיַּעֲנֵהוּ and the Lord anſwered him, as here in the beginning of the verſe, אַתָּה עָנִיתָם thou anſweredſt them, O Lord our God. And ſo in every of the examples here ſpecified, this appears to be the full and ready importance of this paſſage.

The Hundredth PSALM.

Paraphraſe. A Pſalm || of praiſe. || for thanksgiving. לְתוֹדָה

The hundredth Pſalm being made up of lauds and praiſes of God for all his mercies, was appointed to be uſed at the offering of thoſe peace-offerings which were for a thankſgiving, Lev. 7. 12. the præfect or præcentor beginning, and ſinging,

1, 2. O let all the people in the world bleſs and worſhip and praiſe, and offer up their prayers and ſupplications to the God of heaven, reſort daily to his ſanctuary, and conſtantly attend his ſervice, and count this the moſt eſtimable and delectable task, the moſt renowned and glorious imployment:

1. Make a joyfull noiſe unto the Lord, all † ye lands;
2. Serve the Lord with gladneſs, come before his preſence with * ſinging.

† the earth הָאָרֶץ
* ovation or triumph בִּרְנָנָה

a. 3. As being our way of converſing with the great and glorious omnipotent creator of heaven and earth, to whom we owe all that we have, our very being and conduct and preſervation, and to whom we are obliged to pay all the obedience and obſervance that the meekeſt creatures in nature pay to thoſe that have care and conduct of them.

3. Know ye that the Lord he is God, || it is he that hath made us, and [a] not we our ſelves: we are his people and the ſheep of his paſture. || he hath הוּא

4. O let us make our ſolemn addreſſes to his ſanctuary, that court or palace where his divine Majeſty is ſignally pleaſed to exhibit himſelf, and to teſtifie his peculiar reſidence, and favourable audience to them who aſſemble there, by the preſence of his holy Angels in that place; let us come thither with all the humility and devotion of loyal thankfull hearts, and praiſe and magnifie his name for all the mercies we have ever received from him. To which beginnings of the Præfect, the whole quire of Prieſts anſwer,

4. Enter into his gates with thankſgiving, and into his courts with praiſe: be thankfull unto him, and bleſs his name.

b. 5. To this we have all imaginable obligations, not onely that of his ſovereign dominion over all, to which therefore all the performances of our lives are but a moſt unproportionable tribute; but alſo his abundant benignity, his rich promiſes of a never failing mercy, and his conſtant fidelity in performing to every man, that is qualified for receiving it, the utmoſt that he ever promiſed to any.

5. [b] For the Lord is good, his mercy is everlaſting, and his truth endureth to all generations.

Annotations on Pſal. C.

a. V. 3. Not we our ſelves] The Jewiſh Arab follows here another reading, not לֹא, but לוֹ to him, and accordingly interprets it, we are לֹה to him, or his, his people, and the ſheep of his paſture. And ſo the Chaldee alſo, he hath made us, וְרִילֵיהּ אַנְחְנָא and we are his; but the Syriack and LXXII. and Latin and Arabick accord in the other reading οὐχ ἡμεῖς, and not we.

b. כִּי טוֹב V. 5. For the Lord is good] That the Pſalm was appointed to attend the oblation of the peace-offering, appears by the title of it, מִזְמוֹר לְתוֹדָה a Pſalm of confeſſion, acknowledgment, thankſgiving, proportionable to that ſacrifice of thankſgiving, ſo ſtyled Lev. 7. 12. Now as in the offering of ſuch, the prieſts prepared and fired the ſacrifices, ſo the ſingers prepared and began the lauds. And this Pſalm being, in the former part of it, an admonition to bleſſing and praiſing, (which was the Levites office, as the Deacons in the primitive Church, who was therefore ſtyled the monitor, that invited or called upon them to pray) Make a joyfull noiſe, ſerve, Come before his preſence, Know ye, Enter, be thankfull— but in this laſt verſe a General form of prayer, uſed upon all occaſions, the Lord is good, his mercy is everlaſting, and his truth endureth— this laſt ſeems to be the Reſponſe of the whole Chorus of the Prieſts, at the inſtant of the firing of the ſacrifice, the præfect or præcentor having begun the reſt.

The Hundred and Firſt PSALM.

Paraphraſe. A Pſalm of David.

The hundred and firſt Pſalm, compoſed by David, is a meditation, and reſolution of all care of piety both in his own perſon and family, and in the adminiſtration of the regal office, to incourage and advance vertue, and rebuke and chaſtiſe impiety. It ſeems to have been compoſed on occaſion of bringing up the Ark to the city of David, to qualifie them for the preſence of that amongſt them: and it is an excellent directory to all perſons in the greateſt or loweſt place of authority on earth, whoſe ſole end and deſign it ought to be, if they deſire God's bleſſing upon them, to people the world with vertuous living, and to diſcountenance all wickedneſs.

1. I will sing of mercy and judgment; unto thee, O Lord, will I sing.

1. This Psalm will I addreſs unto the Lord of heaven, the ſubject of it being a firm reſolution and vow that I have inwardly made to him, for the ſetting up all goodneſs in my own, my ſervants, and ſubjects hearts, and for the managing of that office to which he hath raiſed me, ſo as may moſt tend to the incouraging of piety, and repreſſing of impiety, by diſtributing rewards and puniſhments with that impartial juſtice as ſhall moſt contribute to thoſe ends.

‖ inſtruct in the perfect– † when he ſhall come unto me,

2. I [a] will ‖ behave my ſelf wiſely in a perfect way: † O when wilt thou come unto me? I will walk within my houſe with a perfect heart.

2. Now that God hath reſtored my peace, and eſtabliſht me in the Kingdom, and afforded me this ſignal teſtimony of his preſence, the Ark of his Covenant, I am obliged to endeavour my utmoſt to fit and qualifie my ſelf for ſo great mercies, and am therefore ſtedfaſtly purpoſed, that from the day of his Arks coming into Jeruſalem, I will with all the wiſedom and prudence with which he ſhall indow me, ſet my ſelf to the moſt exact performance of my duty, and in all things indeavour to approve my ſelf to him, ordering all my affairs and actions, thoſe eſpecially of my Court, and of publick adminiſtration, ſo as may beſt demonſtrate the ſincerity of my heart, and the uprightneſs of my deſires and purpoſes in his ſervice. a.

3. I will ſet no wicked thing before mine eyes: I hate the work of them that turn aſide, it ſhall not cleave to me.

3. I will not entertain any one unlawfull deſign, though it ſhould pretend to reaſon of ſtate, or appear to contribute to worldly advantages never ſo much. The leaſt declination from the rules of juſtice, whatſoever the plauſible pretence be, I will for ever deteſt and avoid, and never permit my ſelf to be thus inſnared by the politick maximes of the world, as to admit that as prudential, which is not exactly conſonant to the ſtricteſt laws of juſtice and piety.

* crooked or cunning ‖ know no evil רַע לֹא אֵדָע

4. [b] A * froward heart ſhall depart from me: I ‖ will not know a wicked perſon.

4. He that ſhall think to obtain my favour, or gain admiſſion into my Court or Counſels, by being more ſhrewd or ſubtle or cunning than other men, by being able to direct me to ways of ſerpentine wiſedom, ſhall much fail in his project: There is none I ſhall more ſolicitouſly avoid, and baniſh from my ſecrets or ſervice, than ſuch, being abſolutely bent never to make uſe of any one ſuch art in all my deliberations. b.

† wide or vaſt רָחָב

5. Who ſo privily ſlandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off: him that hath an high look and [c] a † proud heart, will not I ſuffer.

5. Thoſe ways of whiſpering and detraction, by which men are wont to gain confidence and favour and imployment from Princes, ſhall not onely miſs of that ſucceſs with me, but be ſure to be ſeverely puniſhed, whenſoever I meet with them: As for thoſe whoſe pride, and ambition and inſatiable deſires of inriching or advancing themſelves, do put them forward to ſeek offices or imployments under me, I will have no patience for them, aſſuring my ſelf that thoſe that deſign ſuch advantages to themſelves, are never likely to intend the good of the publick. c.

6. Mine eyes ſhall be upon the faithfull in the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way, he ſhall ſerve me.

6. In the choice of Counſellors, or ſervants and officers, this ſhall be my conſtant rule, to ſeek out thoſe that are of moſt tried fidelity and exact honeſty, that for any advantage whatſoever, even the preſervation of the Kingdom, will not admit of any unlawfull practice: ſuch and none but ſuch I ſhall expect will do me ſervice; and I will not admit any elſe, but ſuch as ſhall thus approve themſelves, into any imployment about me.

* in the midſt of בְּקֶרֶב

7. He that worketh deceit ſhall not dwell * within my houſe; he that telleth lies ſhall not tarry in my ſight.

7. A ſubtile, cunning, falſe perſon ſhall be ſo far from getting advancement in my Court or Counſels, or being preferred to the ſupreme offices of ſtate, that he that hath been found guilty of ſuch arts as theſe, that makes no conſcience of injuſtice or deceit, ſhall not be indured in my preſence.

a. אַשְׂכִּילָה

V. 2. Behave my ſelf wiſely] From שָׂכַל to underſtand, is אַשְׂכִּילָה here in Hiphil, I will make wiſe, or inſtruct; ſo Pſal. 32. 8. אַשְׂכִּילְךָ I will inſtruct thee. The Chaldee interpret it as a ſpeech of God to David, אַשְׂכְּלִנָּךְ I will inſtruct thee; but the reſt of the Pſalm favours not this interpretation, being all in ſequence to the firſt verſe, in the firſt perſon, applicable to none but David himſelf. Of him therefore the word here in Hiphil being uſed, it muſt be applied in relation to his Kingdom, or Family, that he will inſtruct them, or perhaps as 'tis ſometimes uſed intranſitively, I will underſtand, or (as elſewhere 'tis frequent) in the notion of Hithpael, reciprocally, I will inſtruct my ſelf: which the LXXII. have ſufficiently expreſt by συνήσω, I will underſtand, and the Syriack by ܐܗܠܟ and I will walk, which is the paraphraſe, though not the literal rendring of it; the onely end and uſe of his knowing, learning, or inſtructing himſelf in the way, being the walking in it. And indeed knowing in the ſcripture-ſtyle ſo frequently ſignifying doing (viz. the practical knowledge) and wiſedom being uſed for piety, as folly for ſin, 'tis but regular, and agreeing to rules of analogy here, that underſtanding, or inſtructing ones ſelf in the right way, ſhould ſignifie the walking in it. The Jewiſh Arab here reads, I will ſhew underſtanding or deal with underſtanding in an upright way, or I will conſider the perfect way, till thy enlargement or refreſhment come unto me, and I will walk in perfectneſs or uprightneſs of my heart, in the midſt of my family. But if we conſider the latter part of the verſe, which may moſt probably direct us to the occaſion of compoſing this Pſalm, we ſhall find reaſon to apply it to others as well as himſelf, and indeed particularly to his houſhold, or family. When David reſolved to bring up the Ark of the Lord to Jeruſalem, 2 Sam. 6. they brought it on a cart out of the houſe of Abinadab, and Uzza driving the cart and taking hold of the Ark, God ſmote Uzza and he died v. 7. On this David was diſ- pleaſed v. 8. and afraid v. 9. and ſaid, How ſhall the Ark of the Lord come to me? And David would not remove the Ark unto him into the City of David, but carried it aſide unto the houſe of Obed-Edom, and there it continued three months. But then being incouraged by the bleſſing of the Lord on Obed-Edom and his houſhold, v. 12. he reſumed the enterprize again, and brought up the Ark of God into the City of David with gladneſs, and offered ſacrifice v. 13. and danced v. 14. and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings v. 17. and bleſſed the people v. 18. and dealt to all the people to every one a portion of bread, and fleſh, and wine, v. 19. and then David returned to bleſs his houſhold v. 20. Where beſide the ſolemnities of carrying up the Ark, two things are obſervable in order to this preſent verſe of this Pſalm: 1. his being afraid of the Lord, which cauſed him to ſay, How ſhall the Ark of the Lord come to me? v. 9. and 2ly, his returning to bleſs his houſhold v. 20. Theſe two paſſages had in all probability relation the one to the other. He was afraid, the ſins and unworthineſs of his family might ſo far unqualifie them for receiving benefit by the preſence of the Ark, that it might bring a curſe inſtead of a bleſſing upon him; and although by the experience of it on Obed-Edom, he was encouraged to hope well, yet as ſoon as he had brought up the Ark, he omits no time, neglects no care, to fit and prepare his family for ſuch a bleſſing; and that ſure was by inſtructing them in the rules of God's worſhip and obedience, purging out all unreformed evil livers, not permitting one wicked perſon, ſlanderer, lyar, to remain in his houſhold, which as it is the meaning of his returning to bleſs his houſhold (in the notion of bleſſing Act. 3. 26. for turning every one from his iniquities) and withall, the interpretation of what we reade in the latter part of this Pſalm, A froward heart ſhall depart from me: I will not know a wicked perſon v. 4. Who ſo privily ſlandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off: him that hath an high look and proud heart, I will not ſuffer v. 5. Mine eyes ſhall be on the faithfull, that they may dwell with me, and ſerve me v. 6. He that worketh deceit, ſhall not dwell in the midſt of my houſe; he that tells lies ſhall not tarry in my ſight v. 7. ſo it is exactly equivalent to his inſtructing in a perfect way here, (which therefore probably muſt be interpreted to belong, as the bleſſing did, to his houſhold or family, yet including himſelf as his firſt care, the chief member of it.) Thus again to thoſe words of his, cauſed by his fear, אֵיךְ יָבוֹא אֵלַי אֲרוֹן יְהוָה how ſhall the Ark of the Lord come to me? the next words here are anſwerable, מָתַי תָּבוֹא אֵלָי when it ſhall come to me, by it meaning the Ark or God, which had that his peculiar reſidence in the Ark. (Aben Ezra reads, I will underſtand the perfect way, when it, i. e. that way ſhall come unto me.) By this accordance we have little reaſon to doubt, but this of the ſecond preparation of bringing up the Ark to Jeruſalem, was the occaſion and ſeaſon of compoſing this Pſalm, and his reſolution of purging, and ſo bleſſing of his houſhold, the ſubject of it: and this will prove a fit key to let us in to the meaning and full importance both of this verſe, and the reſt of the Pſalm; and therefore I have thus far enlarged on it.

מָתַי תָּבוֹא אֵלָי

V. 4. A froward heart] From עָקַשׁ pervertit, curvat, to bend the wrong way, or make crooked, is עִקֵּשׁ crooked, or cunning; he, or that, which recedes from ſtreighneſs or directneſs; and ſo 'tis to be taken here, in ſequence to them that decline or turn aſide, v. 3. The LXXII. render it καρδία σκαμβὴ a crooked heart (ſo ſaith Heſychius, σκαμβὸς στρεβλὸς, the word ſignifies crooked) in oppoſition to directneſs and clearneſs of dealing; and ſo the Chaldee עִוְקְמָנָא, from עִקֵּם oblique or crooked. All to expreſs that ſerpentine ſubtilty, made up of crooked motions and Mæanders, which are moſt oppoſite to upright and honeſt and clear dealings. b. עִקֵּשׁ

V. 5. Proud heart] From רָחַב latus or dilatatus eſt, is the noun רָחָב here, broad, or wide, or large, and being applied to the heart or ſoul, it notes Largeneſs of deſires. So Prov. 28. 25. רְחַב נָפֶשׁ he here that is large in ſoul, The LXXII. fitly rendred ἄπληστος inſatiable, applying it either to wealth or honour, the inſatiate deſire of either of which (as there it follows) ſtirrs up ſtrife. And ſo here they have rendred it again, ἀπλήστῳ καρδίᾳ, he that cannot be filled in the heart, i. e. the covetous or ambitious man: the Syriack reade ܪܚܝܩ wide or broad, ſo the Jewiſh Arab, Him that is high of eyes, and wide of heart, I can have no patience with thoſe two. c. רָחָב

V. 8. Early] The Judicatures for the examination and ſentencing of wicked men were wont to be in the morning, ſaith the learned Hugo Grotius, who thinks this alſo to be the meaning of Job 38. 13. where of the morning 'tis ſaid, that wicked men are driven away by it. And thus 'tis poſſible that phraſe of being diſpelled or driven away may be uſed for the cutting them off in Judicature, for ſo Pſal. 1. 4. the ungodly being driven away by the wind, is attended with their not ſtanding in judgment. But it may perhaps in that paſſage in Job more probably referr to the diſperſing of thoſe, whom the darkneſs of the night incouraged to wickedneſs, thieves, treacherous perſons, &c. whom the light would diſcover. To thoſe the conſequents ſeem to refer it; ſee the learned Caſtellio on that place. However of the cuſtom it ſelf there can be no doubt, both as to ſitting in Courts of Judicature, and to executions, that among them, as among us, they were uſually in the morning, at leaſt began then, when they continued till the evening. And to this moſt probably לַבְּקָרִים in the plural, in the mornings, here referrs, the ſeaſon wherein David, as a Judge, entring on the Tribunal, deſtroys and cuts off the wicked doers. The former part of the Pſalm contains his reſolution for choice of counſellers and officers of ſtate, preferring the plain, honeſt, and not the ſubtileſt contrivers; and this laſt for the execution of juſtice, diſcountenancing, and judicially cutting off all wicked men. The Jewiſh Arab reads according to the paſſing of the mornings, i. e. continually, day after day, every day or morning. d. לַבְּקָרִים

The Hundred Second PSALM.

A Prayer of the afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before the Lord.

But herein this one great comfort remains, that thy ſtrength is beyond our weakneſs, thy eternity is oppoſed to our frail tranſitory ſtate, thy mercy ſurmounts our wants and miſery; and on this I ſtill found an hope and confidence, that thou wilt in thy good time return the captivity of our Church and Nation, reſtore us to the priviledges and bleſſings of peaceable aſſemblies, and that it will not now be long ere that moſt deſirable and acceptable time come.

14. To this hope I am induced by thine own promiſe, that whenſoever thy people are carried captive by heathen enemies, if they ſhall be truly ſenſible of thy puniſhments, and humbled for their ſins, thou wilt then remember thy Covenant, and reſtore them. And this is our condition at this time. Now thy Church is laid waſte among us, (ſee Nehem. 1. 3.) we cannot chooſe but be ſenſible of our loſs and our ſins, and with all compaſſion and affection be tranſported, when we think of either. At preſent the want of outward proſperity hath not rendred her leſs deſirable in our eyes, but rather inhanſed the value of thoſe interdicted felicities, and made us vow all readineſs to endeavour the repairing of thoſe ruines, whenſoever thou ſhalt pleaſe to grant us that welcome opportunity.

15. So the heathen ſhall fear the name of the Lord, and all the Kings of the earth thy glory.
16. When the Lord ſhall build up Zion, he ſhall appear in his glory.

great a deliverance wrought for thy people, their captivity returned, and their Temple re-edified, evidences as of the omnipotent power of God, ſo of his readineſs to hear the prayers of thoſe that are brought to the loweſt ebbe of miſery and deſtitution.

18. The wonderfulneſs of this deliverance ſhall be recorded to all poſterity, and in probability be a means of bringing in thoſe that have not yet any being, to be proſelytes to the ſervice of ſo great and compaſſionate a God;

18. This ſhall be written for the generation to come, and the people which ſhall be created ſhall praiſe the Lord.

19,20,21,22. When they hear how ſignally he doth exerciſe his power and providence in affairs of the world here below, and how ready he is to relieve and reſcue thoſe that are in the greateſt diſtreſs and deſtitution, to return their captivity, and reſtore them to their country again, there to bleſs and praiſe, and proclaim the power and mercy of God in his Temple, making their conſtant ſolemn reſort thither, from all the quarters of the land, at the times by God appointed.

19. For he hath looked down from the height of his ſanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth,

h. 23,24. When I conſider the ſadneſs of our ſtate, the miſery and ſhortneſs of our lives, and on the other ſide the ſtrength and eternity of God, I cannot but addreſs my prayers unto him, with ſome hope that he will ſpare us, and reſtore us to ſome proſperity, and not cut us off in the moſt flouriſhing part of our lives.

23. [h] He weakened my ſtrength in the way, he ſhortened my days.

24. I ſaid, O my God, take me not away in the midſt of my days: thy years are throughout all generations.

25,26,27. 'Twas he, that by his almighty power at firſt created the whole world, and all the parts thereof; and though by the ſame he will in his due time either deſtroy, or change them quite from the condition of their creation, yet through all theſe tranſmutations he ſhall continue the ſame to all eternity.

25. Of old haſt thou laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thy hands.

And this irreſiſtible power and immutable will of his is a ground of firm hope and confidence to me, that there ſhall be a time of reſt to God's faithfull ſervants, that upon our ſincere return to him, and reformation of our ſins, he will return our captivity: and if this fall not out in our days, yet our children and their poſterity ſhall receive the benefit and comfort of it, and be continued a people to him, and thereby for ever ingaged to ſerve him.

28. The children of thy ſervants ſhall continue, and their ſeed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee.

Annotations on Pſal. CII.

a. כָּלוּ בָעָשָׁן

V. 3. Like ſmoak] For בָּעָשָׁן in ſmoak, which we reade in the Hebrew, the Chaldee and LXXII. are thought to have read בְּעָשָׁן as ſmoak, and accordingly they render it הֵידְ תְּנָנָא ὡσεὶ κάπνου as ſmoak. But 'tis more probable that they ſo expreſs what they thought to be the meaning, than that they read it otherwiſe than we do: For the Jewiſh Arab, though reading בָּעָשָׁן, yet renders it כמא, &c. as ſmoak is conſumed or vaniſheth. The Syriack reade ܟܥܫܢ in ſmoak, and ſo the ſenſe will beſt bear either my days or time of my life כָּלוּ conſume, and wither in ſmoak, as Pſal. 119. 83. a bottle in the ſmoak, afflictions have had the ſame effect on me, as ſmoak on thoſe things that are hung in it, dried me up, and deformed me: or perhaps כָּלוּ end, or fail, or conſume in ſmoak (as when any combuſtible matter is conſumed, ſmoak is all that comes from it, and ſo it ends in that:) and to that the latter part of the verſe may ſeem to incline it, וְעַצְמוֹתַי and my bones, or members, or body, נֶחֱרוּ are burnt up, as that is all one with conſumed; ſo חָרַר ſignifies uſtus, exuſtus eſt, Iſa. 24.6. the inhabitants of the earth חָרוּ are burnt up, ſaith the Chaldee, are conſumed; and Ezech. 15. 4. it is caſt into the fire for fewel, the fire devoureth both ends, and the midſt נָחַר is burnt up; and Exec. 24. 10. ſpeaking, as here, of the bones יֵחָרוּ let them be burnt up. As for כְּמוֹקֵד, that is added, the interpreters differ in the underſtanding it. The word coming from יָקַד accenſus eſt, may be either the place where the fire is, or the pot which is heated by the flame of the fire, or the wood which is ſet on fire. The Syriack ſeems to take it in the firſt notion, rendring it, my bones are grown white, as the hearth, for ſo the chimney or hearth doth with the fire conſtantly burning on it. The Chaldee reads חֵידְ חַפְיָא as one of the ſtones that is ſet under the pot or cauldron, for that is the moſt probable meaning of חַפְיָא, and the Arabick אחפיא, ſee note on Pſal. 68. 8. But the LXXII. reade ὡσεὶ φρύγιον as dry wood (ξηρὸν ξύλον ſaith Heſychius) and the Latin, ſicut cremium, as dry combuſtible wood, and that is moſt appliable to the matter in hand; the bones or members of the body there being burnt up as dry wood, notes the ſpeedy exhauſting of the radical moiſture, which ſoon ends in the conſumption of the whole. And then the whole verſe fitly accords, My days are withered away in the ſmoak, or perhaps end in ſmoak, my bones are burnt up like dry wood.

b. חָרְבָּה

V. 6. Deſart] From חָרַב to be deſtroyed, or laid waſte, Iſa. 60. 12. Jer. 26. 8. Zeph. 3. 6. is חָרְבָּה, a waſte place, or deſolation, the ruines of an houſe, or an houſe ready to fall down, being uninhabited. In this ſenſe it muſt here be taken, ſo as to fit it for the Owle (ſo כּוֹס ſignifies Lev. 11.17. Deut. 14. 16.) here mentioned, for that is known to chooſe its lodging or place of abode in ſuch ruinous places. The LXXII. render it ἐν ἐκκαύσει in the foundation of an houſe that is fallen; though the Latin miſtook it, when they read, in domicilio, in an houſe. The Jewiſh Arab read waſte deſolate places, or ruines. כּוֹס

c. מִתְהוֹלֵל

V. 8. Mad againſt me] הָלַל, which ordinarily ſignifies landavit, ſignifies alſo to behave ones ſelf indecently, indecently, like a mad-man, and in the Chaldee and Syriack dialect to reproach, or ſlander. Thus Pſal. 75. 5. I ſaid לְהוֹלְלִים, the Chaldee renders it לְסַחֲרָנַיָּא to the ſcoffers, אַל תְּהוֹלּוּ they reade again לָא תְּסַחֲרָנוּן ſcoff not, and ſo the ſenſe beſt bears there, ſpeaking of the rebels that depraved and defamed and ſlandered him. And ſo here מְהוֹלְלָי, adjoyned to חֵרְפוּנִי אוֹיְבַי my enemies reproach me, are moſt probably my reproachers, or ſlanderers; the Chaldee reads again מְסַחֲרָנַי my ſcoffers or backbiters, and to them moſt properly belongs, בִּי נִשְׁבָּעוּ they have ſworn againſt me, confirmed their ſlanders by oaths, or execrations upon themſelves if they be not true, ſee Num. 5. 21. The LXXII. reade οἱ ἐπαινοῦντές με, they that commend me, from the firſt notion of הָלַל laudavit, and the Syriack and Latin and Arabick agree with them.

בִּי נִשְׁבָּעוּ

V. 9. For] That כִּי ſometimes is a note of the cauſe, ſometimes of the effect, and accordingly is ſometimes rendred ὅτι for, or becauſe, ſometimes διὸν wherefore, ſee note Luk. 7. d. And to the latter ſenſe the context inclines it here, his eating aſhes for bread, i. e. his mourning (ſee note e.) and plenty of tears, being ſure the effect of the reproaches and ſlanders precedent, cauſed by them, and therefore not to be thought mentioned here as the cauſe of them, as the Greek ὅτι, and Latin quia, and Engliſh for, muſt import.

d. כִּי

Ibid. Eaten aſhes like bread] The importance of this phraſe אֵפֶר כַּלַּחְמִי I have eaten aſhes, may perhaps be miſtaken by thoſe who interpret it literally, of feeding on aſhes, or mixing aſhes with their food, whether it be by eating panem ſubcinericium, bread baked in the embers, which is not cleanſed from the aſhes that ſtick to it, or whether by making aſhes one of the ingredients in their bread, or (as ‖ Bonaventure ſaith of S. Francis) caſting aſhes upon his meat. The uſe of aſhes in mourning is frequently mentioned in Scripture, but that not as of a kind of diet, but as of that which accompanied ſackcloth, and was caſt upon their head, or tumbled and wallowed in, or ſat in. See 2 Sam. 13. 19. Eſth. 4. 1, 3. Job 2. 8. and 42. 6. Iſa. 58. 5. and 61. 3. Jer. 6. 26. Lam. 3. 16. Ezech. 27. 30. Dan. 9. 3. Jon. 3. 6. And that certainly was the uſe of aſhes among the Jews to diſguiſe them (ſee 1 King. 20. 38. and 41.) to make them look ſadly and neglectedly. But this had no relation to eating, but was generally uſed in their times of humiliation and faſting, when they ate nothing at all. Onely Iſa. 44. 20. we reade, He feedeth on aſhes, but that certainly in a prophetical, i. e. figurative ſenſe; for it is applied to the Idol-worſhipper v. 17. who prayed to that which cannot hear or help him, any more than aſhes would nouriſh; he cheats and abuſeth himſelf, a deceived heart hath turned him aſide, as there it follows. It remains therefore that this one place here in this Pſalm, which ſpeaks of eating aſhes like bread, be lookt on as a poetical phraſe, to be interpreted by the context, and by the general uſe of aſhes in the Scripture. The context ſpeaks of ſadneſs and mourning, and aſhes were the ſolemn rite thereof, being caſt upon the head, &c. and then faſting being joyn'd with mourning, the union of theſe two are here poetically expreſt by eating aſhes like bread, i. e. eating no bread, taking no food at all, but inſtead of that, entertaining themſelves with aſhes, though not eating them, but ſitting down or wallowing in them. And this being the importance of this phraſe, the other that follows וְשִׁקֻּוַי בְּבָכִי מָסָכְתִּי I mingled my drink with weeping, muſt be underſtood by analogy therewith, not literally, that he put any of his tears into his drink, but that inſtead of drinking (which is expreſt by mingling of drink, becauſe they commonly drank their wine mixt with water) he ſpent his time wholly in weeping and lamenting. Thus Pſal. 42. 3. my tears have been my meat, is no more, but inſtead of eating I weep; as when Chriſt ſaith Jo. 4. 34. My meat is to doe the will of him that ſent me, i. e. he follows that task incumbent on him from his Father, and his doing ſo ſupplies the place of eating, he doth this inſtead of that: and ſo Pſal. 80. 5. Thou feedeſt them with the bread of tears, giveſt them tears to drink, i. e. they weep and faſt, or eat nothing. And ſo that is the utmoſt importance of this whole verſe, mourning and faſting accompanied with aſhes, the ceremony, and tears, a natural conſequent of both theſe.

V. 10. Lifted up] What is meant by נְשָׂאתַנִי thou haſt lifted me up, &c. is to be judged by the immediate antecedents, וְעַסְּךָ וְחֻצְפָּךְ indignation and wrath; by thoſe is meant a vehement diſpleaſure and anger, and in God, in whom anger is not found, effects that bear analogy with thoſe which proceed from angry men. To ſuch it is ordinary to caſt to the ground any thing that they are diſpleaſed with, and when the diſpleaſure is vehement, to lift it up firſt as high as they can, that they may caſt it down with more violence, and daſh it in pieces by the fall. And this is the meaning of the phraſe here, and ſo is a pathetical expreſſion of his preſent affliction, heightned by the dignity of the publick Office wherein Nehemiah was at the time of writing this mournfull Pſalm, Nehem. 1. 1. and 2. 1. The greater his place was at Shuſhan, the deeper this ſorrow for his countrey-men, and for Jeruſalem, Nehem. 1. 3. pierced him, whereupon he complains that God by way of indignation hath dealt with him, as thoſe that take an earthen veſſel, and throw it againſt the pavement, and that they may beat it to pieces the more certainly, lift it up firſt, as high as they can, to throw it down with more violence. This the LXXII. have fitly rendred ἐπάρας κατέῤῥαξάς με, and the Latin elevans illiſiſti me, having lifted me up, thou haſt daſht me to pieces. The Jewiſh Arab reads, as if thou hadſt carried me, and then caſt me to them.

f. נְשָׂאתַנִי

V. 14. Take pleaſure in her ſtones] The fulleſt meaning of רָצוּ אֶת אַבְנֶיהָ will be fetched from the promiſe of God to the Jews, Lev. 26. 41. that when they are carried captive by the heathens, and there pine in the enemies land, if they ſhall confeſs their iniquity — and if their uncircumciſed heart be humbled, וְיִרְצוּ אֶת עֲוֹנָם we reade, and accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity, then will God remember his Covenant with Jacob, &c. and remember the land. In thoſe words it is certain, that עָוֹן is (as we render it) the puniſhment of iniquity, ſee 1 Sam. 28. 10. and ſuch ſurely was the demoliſhing of the Temple, the ruine of that fabrick, which is here expreſt by אַבְנֶיהָ her ſtones, i. e. rubbiſh, or heaps of the ruinated ſtones of the Temple. So that in what ſenſe ſoever יִרְצוּ is taken in Leviticus, applyed to עָוֹן puniſhment of iniquity, in the ſame it muſt be taken here, where 'tis applied to the ſtones or ruines of the Temple; and that is ſure a paſſionate reſentment with humble melting ſorrow, to look upon the judgments inflicted, aſſenting to the equity of them. In this ſenſe, I ſuppoſe, רצה muſt be taken in the thirty fourth verſe of that 26. of Levit. אָז תִּרְצֶה הָאָרֶץ אֶת שַׁבְּתֹתֶיהָ then ſhall the land reſent (we miſrender, enjoy) her ſabbaths, ſpeaking of the deſolate countrey, lamenting and bewailing the loſs of thoſe precious opportunities which they formerly had, and made not uſe of. Veſpaſian's Veſpaſian's coyn, in memory of the conqueſt of Palaſtine, there was on one ſide a woman ſitting weeping under a Palm-tree, and Judæa Capta Jury taken, in the reverſe. And ſo of this Captivity the Pſalmiſt tells us, Pſal. 137. 1. By the waters of Babylon we ſat down, and wept when we remembred thee, O Sion. To which kind of melting reſentment ſeeing the promiſe is made in that place of Levit. that God will then remember the covenant, and the land, the Pſalmiſt here fitly endeavours to prove that the time is come, in which God ſhould have mercy upon Sion, v. 13. by this argument, for or becauſe thy ſervants רָצוּ paſſionately reſent her ſtones, &c. referring in all likelihood to that promiſe of God, of which that reſentment was the expreſs condition. As for that which follows, יְחֹנְנוּ אֶת עֲפָרָהּ יְחֹנֵנוּ it will beſt be rendred (as it is) in the future tenſe, they will or ſhall favour, or deal kindly with her duſt or rubbiſh, i. e. they now promiſe moſt affectionately to repair her ruines, according to that of Zorobabel, Zach. 4. 7. he ſhall bring forth the head-ſtone thereof with ſhoutings, חֵן חֵן לָהּ grace, grace to it, or favour, favour, in accord with יְחֹנֵנוּ ſhall favour the duſt of it here: they that now paſſionately bewail and lament thoſe ruines, and their own and their fathers ſins, as the cauſes of them, ſhall hereafter joyfully joyn in the repairing thereof, and celebrate their finiſht work with the ſame tender, though more gratefull or pleaſing paſſion. The Jewiſh Arab thus renders the verſe, For now thy ſervants are pleaſed with the ſtones thereof, contented [or contentedly] and are tenderly affected towards its duſt, in honour [or honouring it:] and he explains himſelf in a note, that whereas formerly they ſet light by the Sanctuary, and ſinned againſt it, they now ſought after it, veſtigium poſt oculum (an Arabick phraſe proverbially ſignifying the ſeeking after that which one hath let go) magnifying, or honouring the duſt thereof, how much more the building thereof, if it might be built?

יְחֹנְנוּ

V. 23. Weakned] From the different acceptions of עָנָה for anſwering and afflicting, and by reading כֹּחִי for כֹּחַ, the LXXII. have much deformed this ver. 22. rendring עִנָּה בַדֶּרֶךְ כֹּחִי he hath afflicted or humbled my ſtrength in the way, by ἀπεκρίθη αὐτῷ ἐν ὁδῷ ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ, he anſwered him in the way of his ſtrength; and the Latin take it from them, reſpondit ei in viâ virtutis ſuæ; but the Syriack depart from them, and reade ܐܡܟܟ &c. They have humbled my ſtrength on earth. Then to קִצַּר יָמַי he hath ſhortned my days, the LXXII. connect the אֹמַר I will ſay, following, and render it ἡ ὀλιγότητα τῶν ἡμερῶν μου ἀπάγγειλόν μοι —— and the Latin likewiſe, paucitatem dierum meorum nuncia mihi, declare to me the paucity of my days. And herein the Syriack alſo agree with them; onely the Chaldee divide them, and render them aright, My ſtrength is afflicted through the labour of the journey of my exile, my days are ſhortned, I will ſay before the Lord. And this is ſurely the full rendring of the verſe. The Jewiſh Arab reads, He hath weakned in this way my ſtrength, and ſhortned my age from it, i. e. ſaith he, the way of patience, or enduring and calling [out on thee] and we being in captivity our ſtrength is weakned from [or by it, or from bearing] it, by reaſon of the length of it.

The Hundred and Third PSALM.

Paraphraſe.

‖ A Pſalm of David.

‖ Davids. לְדָוִד

The hundred and third Pſalm is a ſolemn acknowledgment of the great and abundant mercies and deliverances of God, eſpecially that of pardoning of his ſin, and not exacting the puniſhments due to it, which muſt interweave in every mercy or deliverance which is beſtowed on ſinfull men, whoſe demerits have ſo much provoked the contrary. It was compoſed by David, as 'tis † thought, on a recovery from ſickneſs, and is alſo a * prophetick deſcription of the ſtate of Chriſtians under the Goſpel.

† ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi.

* אִתְאַמַּר בִּנְבוּאָה it was ſpoken by prophecie, Chald.

1, 2. When I behold God in himſelf and his glorious divine attributes, but eſpecially in his works of mercy toward me, I am obliged with my whole heart, and all my moſt ardent affections of devotion, to bleſs and praiſe his name for all the mercies and favours which in great bounty he hath afforded me.

1. Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, and all that is within me bleſs his holy name.
2. Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, and forget not all his benefits:

3, 4, 5, 6. Particularly that for ſome time having corrected me for my good, to bring me to repentance, he hath now returned to me in mercy, pardoned my ſins, which moſt juſtly deſerved this his wrath, and withdrawn his puniſhments from me; and not onely reſcued me from the greateſt dangers hanging over my life, out of the bowels of his compaſſion to his diſtreſſed creature, but reſtored me to a perfect health, and to a moſt proſperous condition, a confluence of all mercies, to ſurround me, and ſatisfie all my deſires, and ſo made my old age like that of the Eagle, when ſhe hath moulted the old, and comes out furniſhed and adorned with new young plumes, as freſh and flouriſhing as in youth it ever had been; hereby exerciſing that ſignal property of his, to vindicate the cauſe of all thoſe that ſuffer injuries, to puniſh the oppreſſor, and relieve thoſe that are not able to defend themſelves.

3. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diſeaſes:
4. Who redeemeth thy life from deſtruction, who crowneth thee with ‖ loving kindneſs and † tender mercies:
5. Who ſatisfieth [a] thy mouth with good things, ſo that [b] thy youth is renewed like the Eagles.
6. The Lord executeth righteouſneſs and judgment for all that are oppreſſed.

7, 8. Thus did he once proclaim his name to Moſes and the Iſraelites, Exod. 34. and therein his glorious nature, and the manner of his dealing with men, all exactly according to the rules of the moſt abundant mercy, in giving and forgiving, and ſparing long, and never ſending out his thunderbolts or deſtructions, till our provocations, continued in impenitently, extort and force them from him.

7. He made known his ways unto Moſes, [c] his * acts unto the children of Iſrael.
8. The Lord ‖ is mercifull and gracious, ſlow to anger, and plenteous in mercy.

9. He

9. He will not always chide, neither will he keep his anger for ever.
10. He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.

9, 10. And this is God's constant course; though he rebuke and expresse his just displeasure, and punish us for our sins, yet upon our reformation and serious return to him he takes off his punishing hand again, and will not proceed with us according to that measure that our sins might justly expect from him.

† or above

11. For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy [d] † toward them that fear him.

11. On the contrary, to them that love and fear and serve him faithfully; his mercy is most abundantly poured out, as much above the proportion of their services, as heaven is above the earth, nay infinitely more, there being indeed no proportion between them. d.

12. As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.

12. And by that mercy of his it is, that at this time he hath so perfectly reconciled himself to us, and freed us from the punishments due to our sins:

13. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him.

13. And so he constantly will deal with all that sincerely return from their sins to new obedience, having the bowels of a father to all such, which will never permit him to be wrath with penitents, to scourge but rather compassionate that child that reforms that for which the punishment was sent.

14. For he knows our frame, he remembreth that we are dust.

14. For he knows and considers the frailness and ficklenes and great infirmities of our lapsed sinfull nature, our first original out of the dust of the earth, an emblem of our meanness and vileness, to which the ‖ corruption introduced by Adam's first sin, (see note on Psal. 51. 3.) and hereditarily derived to us, hath added wicked inclinations, which oft betray us to actual sin, if we do not strictly watch and guard our selves; and such is our weakness in this lapst state, that the most perfect, being not able to keep always upon so diligent and strict a watch, do oft slip and fall: All which God is graciously pleased to weigh, and not to deal in rigour with us, to punish us, or to cast us out of his favour, or withdraw his grace from us for every sin that we commit through this weakness, but in all his proceedings with us, to make an allowance for such sins as are committed through infirmity, sudden surreption, continual incursion of temptations, &c. and for these to afford his mercy (in Christ) to all that sincerely endeavour his service, and do not indulge themselves to any deliberate sin.

‖ יָצְרֵנוּ בִּינָה דַּכְּרֵנוּ יְהֵא

Our evil concupiscence that hurries us to sin.

‖ The days of man אֱנוֹשׁ יָמָיו

15. ‖ As for man, his days are as grass; as a flour of the field, so he flourisheth.
16. For the wind passeth over it and it is gone, and the place thereof shall know it no more.
17. But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto childrens children,
18. To such as keep his covenant, to those that remember his commandments to doe them.

15, 16, 17, 18. Man is a pitifull, weak, feeble, frail creature, fit to be compared with the most short-lived herb, or flour, which in its height of flourishing is suddenly blasted and destroyed, and gone, never to return again. And herein is the infinite mercy of God toward his servants to be seen, that it is much more durable than their lives: If they adhere faithfully to him in constant loyalty to his precepts, perform their part of the Covenant made with him, that of uniform, sincere, though not of never-sinning obedience, his mercies shall continue to them even after death (and then what matter is it, how short their present life is?) to their persons in eternal immarcescible joy and bliss in another world, and to their posterity in the blessings of this life, which he hath promised not onely to the third and fourth, but to the thousandth generation, Exod. 20. 6. and being thus by promise obliged, will be sure to perform it to all those that are carefull to observe the condition of it.

Child.

19. The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens, and his kingdom ruleth over all.

19. This is he surely able to doe, being the omnipotent God of heaven and earth, sitting in heaven as a great Monarch in his throne, and exercising dominion over all creatures in the world, who are all most ready to obey him, and doe whatsoever he will have them. But most eminently this will he doe, by sending his Son the Messias into the world, the spring of all grace and mercy, who, after his birth and death, shall rise, and ascend, and enter on his regal office in heaven, subduing the whole heathen world in obedience thereto. See Rev. 4. 2.

20. Bless the Lord, ye his Angels, that excell in strength, that doe his commandments, [e] † hearkening unto the voice of his word.
21. Bless ye the Lord, all ye his hosts, ye ministers of his, that doe his pleasure.

† at hearing the—

20, 21. A natural and proper consequent to this it is, that (as Rev. 4. 8. at the erecting of Christ's throne, all the living creatures rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy—so) the Angels of heaven (meant by those living creatures) those Courtiers that attend his throne, and are by him indued with the greatest power of any, that incompass him, many Myriads of them, and doe whatsoever he commands them with all the readiness and speed imaginable, these glorious creatures that are witnesses and ministers of his great and wonderfull acts of mercy, should for ever bless and magnify his sacred name. e.

22. Bless the Lord, all his works, in all places of his dominion: bless the Lord, O my soul.

22. And that all the men in every corner of the world acknowledge and bless and praise his name, as being all the subjects of his kingdom as well as works of his power; among whom it is most just that I, that have received such mercies from him, should take up my part of the Anthem, make one in the quire and consort of those that sing continual praises to him.

Annotations on Psal. CIII.

a. עָרְיֵךְ

V. 5. Thy mouth] What עָרְיֵךְ here signifies, is not agreed among interpreters. The Chaldee renders יוֹמֵי סִיבְוּתָיְכִי the days of thy old age, referring it, saith Schindler, to עָרִיךְ old, worn out clothes, opposed to the renewing of the age, which here follows. But the word is used for the mouth Psal. 32. 9. עָרִי whose mouth must be holden—— the LXXII. there render it στόμασιν αὐτῶν his jaws. According to this notion it is that the Syriack here render it ܦܓܪܟ thy body, but the LXXII. ἐπιθυμίαν σου, thy desire, or sensitive appetite, the satisfying of which is the providing for the body all the good things it ſtandeth in need of, and ſo is a commodious paraphraſe for filling the mouth, the organ of conveying nouriſhment to the body. Aben Ezra, and Kimchi, that refer this Pſalm to David's recovery from ſickneſs, give this farther account of the phraſe, becauſe in ſickneſs the ſoul refuſeth meat, Job 33. 20. and the Phyſician reſtreins from full feeding, and preſcribes things that are nauſeous: In which reſpects the bleſſing of health is fitly deſcribed by the contrary. Abu Walid recites two interpretations; 1. that of our tranſlators, 2. taking עֶדְיָה in the notion of ornament, that multiplieth thy adorning with good, i. e. that abundantly adorneth thee with good, Aben Ezra approves the notion of ornament, but applies it to the ſoul, the ornament of the body, i. e. who ſatisfieth thy ſoul with good: And an Hebrew Arabick Gloſſary renders נסרך thy body.

b. בַּנֶּשֶׁר Ibid. Thy youth is renewed like the Eagles] Of the Eagle S. Auguſtin affirms, that the beak grows out ſo long that it hinders her taking her food, and ſo would endanger her life, but that ſhe breaks it off upon a ſtone; and of this he interprets the renewing her youth here. But S. Hierome on Iſa. 40. 30. more fitly expounds it of the changing of feathers. Of all birds it is known, that they have yearly their moulting times, when they ſhed their old, and are afreſh furniſhed with a new ſtock of feathers. This is moſt obſervable of Hawks and Vultures, and eſpecially of Eagles, which when they are near an hundred years old, caſt their feathers, and become bald, and like young ones, and then new feathers ſprout forth. From this ſhedding their plumes, they ſeem to have borrowed their name, נֶשֶׁר an Eagle from נָתַר or נָשַׁר decidit, deſluxit to fall or ſhed. To their bareneſs, or baldneſs, the Prophet Micah refers, c. 1. 16. inlarge thy baldneſs as the Eagle, כַּנֶּשֶׁר הַרְחִרִי קָרְחָתֵךְ as the Eagle whoſe feathers ſhed. And to the coming again of their feathers Iſaiah relates, c. 40. 30. they that wait on the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength יַעֲלוּ אֵבֶר כַּנְּשָׁרִים as Eagles they ſhall ſend up their feathers: πτερορυήσουσιν, they ſhall ſprout out their feathers, ſay the LXXII. and ſo the Syriack ܢܫܕܪܘܢ they ſhall ſend out their wings; but the Chaldee וְיִתְחַדְּתוּן לְעָלְמַיְהוֹן and they ſhall be renewed to their youth, juſt as here תִּתְחַדֵּשׁ נְעוּרֵיכִי thy youth ſhall be renewed as an Eagle; which therefore in all reaſon muſt refer to the new or young feathers, which the old Eagle yearly ſprouts out. Aquila longam ætatem ducit, dum vetuſtis plumis fatiſcentibus, novâ pennarum ſucceſſione juveneſcit. The Eagle is very long-lived, whilſt the old plumes falling off, ſhe grows young again with a new ſucceſſion of feathers, ſaith S. Ambroſe Serm. 54. So the Jewiſh Arab reads, So that thy youth is renewed like the feathers of Eagles.

c. עֲלִילוֹתָיו V. 7. His acts] From עָלַל to machinate, to deſign, to ſtudy, to attempt to doe any thing, is עֲלִילוֹתָיו here annext to דְּרָכָיו his way, by theſe to ſignifie the nature and ways of God, or his diſpenſations toward men. The place here evidently refers to Exod. 33. There Moſes petitions God, ſhew me thy way that I may know thee, v. 13. and I beſeech thee ſhew me thy glory, v. 18. by his way and glory meaning his nature, and his ways of dealing with men, that they might diſcern what to conceive of him, and expect from him. And he ſaid, I will make all my goodneſs paſs before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord, v. 19. by which his nature is ſignified: and what that name is, is ſet down by enumeration of his attributes, c. 34. 6. The Lord, the Lord God mercifull and gracious, long-ſuffering and abundant in goodneſs, juſt as here in the next verſe, The Lord is mercifull— Which concludes that God's עֲלִילוֹת here are his nature, that which in men would be called ſtudium or indoles, diſpoſition or inclination, as דְּרָכָיו his way is his dealings, his methods or courſe of dealing with men, the firſt his attributes, the ſecond his actions, all which are totally made up of mercy and compaſſion, and grace, not puniſhing his ſervants according to their ſins. The LXXII. fitly render it θελήματα αὐτοῦ his wills, or inclinations, but the Chaldee עוֹבָדוֹי his doings (and ſo the Syriack ܥܒܝܕܘܗܝ) but the learned Caſtellio moſt fully to the ſenſe of the place in Exodus, naturam ſuam, his nature. The Jewiſh Arab שמאילה his nature or properties in the plural (for ſo the word here is.)

d. עַל V. 11. Toward] Though עַל ſignifie on, and toward, as well as above, or over, and be fitly ſo rendred v. 13. and 17. where (as here) God's mercy is ſaid to be עַל upon his children, and עַל upon them that fear him; yet the compariſon that is here made between the heaven and the earth, and the height or excellence of one עַל (not upon, but) above the other, being anſwered, in the ἀνταπόδοσις, by the greatneſs or ſtrength (ſo גְּבֶר ſignifies) of God's mercy עַל יְרֵאָיו, that phraſe muſt by analogy be rendred, above, not upon, or toward them that fear him. And then the meaning muſt needs be this, that whatſoever our fear or obedience to God be, his mercy toward us is as far above the ſize or proportion of that, as the heaven is above the earth, i. e. there is no proportion between them, the one is as a point to that other vaſt circumference; nay the difference far greater, as God's mercy is infinite, like himſelf, and ſo infinitely exceeding the pitifull imperfect degree of our obedience. The other expreſſion that follows v. 12. taken from the diſtance of the Eaſt from Weſt, is pitcht on, ſaith Kimchi, becauſe thoſe two quarters of the world are of greateſt extent, being all known and inhabited. From whence it is that Geographers reckon that way their Longitudes, as from North to South their Latitudes.

e. לִשְׁמֹעַ V. 20. Hearkning] The notation of לִשְׁמֹעַ in this place ſeems beſt expreſt by the Arabick, ſtatim atque audiunt, as ſoon as they hear, for that is the character of the Angels obedience, that as ſoon as they hear the voice of God's word, as ſoon as his will is revealed to them, they promptly and preſently obey it. The Chaldee render it לְמִשְׁמַע קָל at his voices being heard, the LXXII. τῇ ἀκοῇ as they hear, or as ſoon as they hear.

The

The Hundred and Fourth PSALM.

The hundred and fourth Psalm is a most elegant pious meditation on the power and wisedom of God, in framing and preserving all the creatures in the world. Tis uncertain by whom it was composed, though in ‖ some Translations it hath David's name in the inscription of it.

‖ Greek, Latin, Syriack, Arabick, Æthiopick.

1. BLess the Lord, O my soul: O Lord my God, thou art very great, thou art clothed with † honour and majesty;

† glory and beauty, הוֹד וְהָדָר

Paraphrase.

1. There is no more consonant imployment or exercise for the soul of man, whose chief end and hope it is to come to the vision of God, than to ponder and meditate on his glorious essence and attributes, his power and providence or wisedom, the greatness and vastness of the one, and the infinite goodness and excellence of the other, such as cannot but be liked and admired by all that consider it. To which if I add his grace and mercy, wherein he hath revealed himself to me, not onely as a Lord and Prince of the whole creation, but withall as my most gracious God, and Father, and Preserver and Redeemer, I shall be obliged to acknowledge my self under innumerable ingagements to bless and magnifie him with my very soul, and all the faculties thereof.

2. Who covereſt thy self with light as with a garment, who stretchest out the heavens like a [a] * curtain;

2. He hath set up his throne and palace in the highest heavens, that place of the greatest splendor, which was at first all light, the chief work which is mentioned of the first days creation, Gen. 1. 3. In this he afterwards on the fourth day placed those glorious luminaries, the Sun, Moon, and multitudes of Starrs, Gen. 1. 14. and on that glorious spangled robe, the great Jehovah seems to shroud himself from humane view; and whensoever he appears, or exhibits himself to his servants (being in himself an infinite spirit, and so invisible to the eye of flesh) he doth it in a bright shining cloud, a weak image of that immense splendor and glory, thereby to challenge that admiration and reverence which is most due to him. Then under that pure luminous body of the heavens, he framed on the second day the regions of the air, Gen. 1. 6. erected them as a spacious Tent or Tabernacle or Pavilion, expanded and extended round about, so as to incompass the earth, which was placed in the midst of that great globe, as the centre of it, and by his secret power he hath ever since susteined it in this posture.

5. Who * laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed for ever.

5. As for the globe of the earth, which is incompassed with the regions of air and celestial spheres, and hath no visible support to sustain so heavy a body, hanging in the midst of such an expansion, yet hath God settled and established it as firm as if it rested on the most solid basis or foundations, fitted so strange a place for it, that being an heavy body, one would think it should fall every minute, and yet which way soever we would imagin it to stir, it must contrary to the nature of such a body fall upwards, and so can have no possible ruine but by tumbling into heaven. Thus hath God provided for its sustentation, and so shall it be sure to continue till the end of the world.

6. Thou coveredst it with the deep as with a garment, the waters stood above the mountains.

7. At thy rebuke they fled, at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away.

6, 7. At the first creation, the earth was covered all over, and as it were clothed with the great deep, that vast expansion of air and waters; those that are now the highest mountains, were then all under that liquid element: But in the second day a division was made, and the Firmament placed between the upper and lower waters, Gen. 1. 7. And then as at God's command v. 9. these inferiour waters were all gathered together into one place, and dry land appeared, and in the cavities of the earth large room was made for an ocean of waters, and for many lesser streams and lakes, and so the earth became habitable by this means, and a bare word of God did all this; so the other portion of those waters were made to float aloft in the air, and when they are ready to discharge themselves, thereby to drown what is beneath them, at the blast of an unseen wind, as at a rebuke of God's, they disperse and hide themselves, and at the voice of thunder which purifies the air, they immediately vanish, and are so far from overflowing the earth, which their posture seemed to threaten, that they are not discerned to be at all, save onely to refresh us sometimes with their seasonable showers.

8. [d] They ‖ go up by the mountains, they † go down by the valleys, unto the place which thou hast * founded for them.

d.

8. This great body of waters being thus disposed, and withall the earth distributed into mountains and valleys, some parts much higher than the other, it pleased God that the water which was thus placed in the lower abyss or ocean, should by secret passages through the bowels of the earth, where it meets with an advantage to rise by, ascend far above its level, and so break forth and spring in those mountains, and from thence tumble down into the valleys, and so again by a perpetual alternation return unto the Ocean;

9. Thou hast set a bound that they may not pass over, that they turn not again to cover the earth.

9. And being there inclosed, though it be perpetually tumultuous, foaming and swelling and tossing it self, labouring to overswell and overflow them by its waves, and billows, and surges, daily threatning to recover its old position of incompassing the face of the whole earth, yet hath God set such boundaries and banks to it, and by his own power so wonderfully restrained it, and promised always to doe so, that it observes a regularity in its its disorder, a temper in its madness, keeps still a just return of ebbing and flowing, seldom transgresses the known water-marks, and so frees us from all fear that it shall ever be able to prevail to drown the earth (see Jer. 5. 22.)

10, 11, 12. But on the other side, the water thereof God dispenseth through veins of the earth, which (weetens and takes off all the brackishness of it, and then pours it out in springs, and those fill the hollow or low places, set by him for receptacles of waters; and having from the hills, as they pass, still fresh supplies, they grow at length into deep and navigable rivers, from which all the wants of men and beasts and fowls of the air (that feed on flyes and insects, and fishes generated there, and are sheltered with the thickets which that moisture plentifully produces, and fill the woods with variety of sounds) are sufficiently provided for.

f. 12. By them shall the fowls of the air have their habitations, [f] which * sing among the branches. see note e. * send out their voice from between the boughs or leaves.

13, 14, 15. As for those superiour parts of the earth which are not thus furnished, the clouds are a store-house for them, and those God by his special care and providence empties out upon the earth, when he sees fit, and gives it its fill of moisture, whereby it is inabled to bring forth grass for the beasts, all manner of plants and grain for men, bread and wine and oile, all manner of provision both for necessity and delight, for daily food and festivities; all which are by this means demonstrated to be the special productions of God's all-wise and gracious providence.

13. He watereth the hills from his ‖ chambers: the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works. ‖ or upper rooms, see note b.
14. He causeth the grass to grow for the cattel, and herb for the service of men, that he may bring forth food out of the earth,
15. And wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and oil to make his face to shine, and bread which strengthneth mans heart.

16, 17, 18. And the same wise providence extends to the trees of the forrest, affords maintenance even to the tallest and goodliest of them, the Cedar and the Firr; and that in the most improbable soil, the tops of the barrenneſt mountains, never manured nor planted by humane industry, in the midst of rock and flint, where no grass can grow to any height, and where 'tis hardly imaginable how the roots of such trees should fasten: This sure is an act of no less than a divine power and wisedom, designed for some more than common end. The Cedars are of such excellent use for buildings, that they seem to have been planted and nourished by God on Lebanon on purpose for the most magnificent structure of the Temple; and both that and the firr-tree grow to a vast height, so as to secure the birds that build in them, as the tops of the steepest hills secure the goats (that have the peculiar faculty of climbing them, where no hunter can follow them) and as the holes in the rocks are a safe retreat for the rabbets, passing a mine and building themselves an house, where no crows of iron could make entry.

g. 17. Where the birds make their nests: as for the stork, the [g] firr-trees are her house.
h. 18. The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats, and the rocks for the [h] conies.

19. A special work of the same providence it is, that by the motion and influences of the moon, the fit seasons of husbandry and other humane actions are measured and directed, according to the different quarters thereof; on this depend the stationary returns of tides, the growth of plants, the increase and decrease of humours in the body even of man, and peculiarly his brain, the seat of his understanding, is much concerned in it. In all which respects it is, that the sun, which hath so much to do in the governing and blessing every part of the world, doth not always keep up in any horizon, but leaves some part of every natural day to that other luminary to manage.

19. He appointed the moon for seasons, the sun knoweth his going down.

20, 21. And as between these the day and the night are divided, so there are evidences of God's wisedom in each of these, special uses for each. The dark of the night is useful to beasts of prey, which are pursued by mankind, and are fain to keep in their holes and caverns all day, when if they should come abroad, they would much disturb the quiet of men, but then by advantage of the darkness of night are inabled to ravage, and feed, and sustein themselves; and though the Lions for want both of swiftness and of scent be ill qualified to provide for themselves, yet hath divine providence taken care of them, directed them to make use of another creature which is swift, and of a quick scent, and that joyns in league with them, and having seised the prey, stands by, till they have filled themselves: A wonderfull dispensation, to which, and to the hand of God in it, they owe their food as discernibly as they would do, if God in answer to their roaring, as by way of return to our prayers, immediately power'd down, or bestowed their food upon them.

20. Thou makest darkness, and it is night, wherein all the beasts of the forrest † creep forth. † treal or move, see note k.
i. 21. The young Lions * roar after their prey, and seek their [i] meat from God. * roaring for prey, and to seek. שאגים לטרף ולבקש

22, 23. And the day is more eminently useful for other offices, the doing all the works incumbent on us, for the culture of the earth, &c. and for this a fair space is assigned from sun-rise till sun-set, all which space those beasts of prey lie close in their dens, to which they gather themselves in companies, though by the same providence it is ordered that they go not out in herds, (if they did there would be no resisting them) and thither they betake themselves at the same time that men rise to their labour, i. e. constantly every morning.

22. The sun ariseth, they gather themselves together, and lay them down in their dens.
23. Man goeth forth to his work, and to his labour untill the evening.

24, 25, 26. Thus hath God created and disposed not onely these, but all things else, in all variety of excellencies; his wisedom and his bounty is seen in all things; and not onely in the earthly part of the globe, but in the other as to appearance barren and destructive element, that most vast and spacious ocean, furnished with such a multitude of fishes of all sorts and sizes, useful also to the benefit of men by navigation, and famous for the great sea-dragon, the whale, which is fortified against all force and art, so as to contemn all assaults of men.

24. O Lord, how manifold are thy works? in wisedom hast thou made them all; the earth is full of thy riches.

29. Thou hideſt thy face, they are troubled: thou takeſt away their breath, they die, and return to their duſt.

30. Thou ſendeſt forth thy ſpirit, they are created, and thou reneweſt the face of the earth.

29, 30. And from him their very life, and all the joys and comforts thereof every minute depend. The withdrawing his favour and benign aſpect and concurrence, and ſuſtentation, is the cauſe of all their miſery, of all the ſtrokes and judgments that light upon any part of this lower world, and of their preſent death, and return to the elements whereof they are compounded, when he ſees fit to ſummon them. And as at firſt by his bare will and command, as by a breath and word of his mouth, all theſe were created out of nothing; ſo by the ſame omnipotent creative power and wiſe diſpoſal, of his own meer will and pleaſure, he continues the ſpecies of each by ſeed and ſucceſſion, by which, as by a natural ſtock of ſupply to all that decays and departs, he doth yearly and daily renew the world, and keep it up as full as if nothing ever periſhed in it, (an emblem of his future dealing with us men in the reſurrection.)

31. The glory of the Lord ſhall endure for ever; the Lord ſhall rejoyce in his works.

31. This method and courſe of Gods, for the ſetting out and illuſtrating the glory of his infinite power and providence, ſhall thus laſt as long as this world continues; and as God in the firſt creation, had his reſt and ſabbath, took delight in his own work, lookt on it altogether, and behold it was exceeding good; the ſame complacency hath he in the continuance, and managery of it ever ſince. (O let not us men be the onely ungratefull part of his creation; let us for ever praiſe and glorifie his name, tranſcribe that feſtival Sabbath of his, and return him the tribute of our obedience and our moſt pious acknowledgments for theſe and all his abundant mercies, afford him that equitable content and delight, of not pouring out his benefits on ſuch unworthy receivers as we men moſt frequently are, and as we ſhall be, if we live not in uniform obedience, in all works of piety before him.)

32. He looketh on the earth, and it trembleth; he toucheth the hills, and they ſmoak.

32. And as his providence, ſo his ſovereign power and dominion is continued over all the creatures in the world. As one breath or act of his will created all, ſo one look of his, one leaſt expreſſion of his diſpleaſure, is enough to ſet the whole earth a trembling, and the loftieſt parts of it, the mountains, a ſmoaking (and ſo to caſt the ſtouteſt proudeſt ſinner into an agony of horrour and dread. 'Tis a moſt formidable thing to fall into the hands of the living Lord. As the Law was given on Sinai with thundrings and lightnings and earthquakes; ſo ſhall our obedience be exacted of us, and our diſobedience avenged in a moſt fearfull manner. And the foreſight of all that may very reaſonably charm us to all duty and obſervance.)

33. I will ſing unto the Lord as long as I live; I will ſing praiſe to my God while I have my being.

33, 34. On both theſe accounts every faithfull ſervant of his having a rational ſoul to apprehend, a ſpirit inflamed and enlightned to obſerve, and a tongue and voice to ſpeak theſe wonders, will find very frequent occaſions of continuing to bleſs and praiſe his name as long as God allows them life and faculties to doe it: They will take care to be conſtantly and diligently exerciſed in performing this moſt acceptable duty to him, and take more pleaſure in it, than in all the moſt delectable divertiſments or tranſporting ſenſualities in the world, and never be fully cheared but in ſome exerciſes of piety or vertue, which they are aſſured is gratefull to him, and will be it ſelf a reward to him that is thus exerciſed; and yet hath aſſurance of much more, God himſelf will be to all ſuch their joy and gladneſs. † ſhall be ſweet to him. o.

35. Let the ſinners be conſumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more. Bleſs thou the Lord, O my ſoul. Praiſe ye the Lord.

35. As for thoſe that will ſtill ſtand out againſt his ſo juſt, ſo reaſonable, ſo honourable, ſo joyous an imployment, and in ſpight of all conviction and obligation maintain their ſtubborn diſobedience againſt the all-wiſe, all-powerfull, all mercifull Creatour, and force him to the exerciſe of his juſtice, they can look for nothing but periſhing and utter deſtruction. O let my lot be among them that praiſe him here, and ſhall for ever praiſe him hereafter, I will therefore make haſte to joyn with the bleſſed Saints and Angels in heaven, and now early beforehand practice that which I hope to chant out for ever, and end, as I began, by calling all men to joyn with me in an Hallelujah. Bleſſed be the name of the Lord now and to all eternity.

Annotations on Pſal. CIV.

a. יְרִיעָה

V. 2. Curtain] What יְרִיעָה properly ſignifies, will appear by Exod. 36. there we find ten יְרִיעֹת of fine twined linen — v. 8. and thoſe being coupled one unto another became one Tabernacle, v. 13. Over theſe he made יְרִיעֹת of goats hair for the tent or covering over the Tabernacle. Here 'tis evident that both the ſides of the Tabernacle, ſuch as we uſually call curtains, and the top, which in a Bed we call a Teſter, in a Tent the covering, were indifferently called יְרִיעָה; which concludes it to be an expanſum, whether of linen or skin, of which tents were wont to be made, and from thence the tent it ſelf, which conſiſted of ſuch. So 2 Sam. 7. 2. the Ark of God which was then in the Tabernacle or Tent, was ſaid to dwell בְּתוֹךְ הַיְרִיעָה in the midſt of the curtain, ſay the LXXII. in the midſt of the Tent or Tabernacle, as that is there oppoſed to an houſe of Cedar. So Cant. 1. 5. the יְרִיעוֹת of Solomon are to be underſtood by analogy with the tents of Kedar precedent, from which they differed as fair from black, thoſe being plain and black, but Solomon's (as all the reſt of his furniture) ſumptuous and magnificent, but ſtill both of them of the ſame common nature of Tents, though one much finer than the other. From hence it is that Jer. 4. 20. dwellings are expreſt as by tents, ſo by יְרִיעוֹת, which the Chaldee there renders מְדוֹרַי my towns or cities. So that ſtill the word ſignifies a Tent or Tabernacle, or the materials whereof ſuch were made, which being ordinarily skins, the LXXII. here render it διφθέρ, the Latin pellem a skin, the Syriack and Chaldee reteining the Hebrew word. And being here applied to the heavens or body of the air (which is oft expreſt in the Scripture by this word שָׁמַיִם heavens) it muſt probably ſignifie not the uppermoſt part of the tent, the teſter or canopy onely, but the whole tent, canopy and curtains both, for by that the air which incompaſſes the earth is moſt fitly reſembled, in reſpect of us here below, for whoſe uſe it is that God hath thus extended or ſtretcht it out. Agreeable to this it is that Gen. 1. 6. the air, which there divideth or ſeparateth, (as אוּרץ from ורץ in Arabick is to ſeparate as a curtain doth) betwixt the waters, is called רָקִיעַ, which we render firmament, but coming from רָקַע expandit, is better rendred expanſum, expanſion, being thus extended over all the earth, as a tent about it; ſo that the earth is placed (as it was ſaid of the Ark, 2 Sam. 7.) בְּתוֹךְ הַיְרִיעָה in the midſt of a Tent or Tabernacle. This Tent God is ſaid to ſtretch out, by his ſecret inviſible virtue doing that which in Tents here below is wont to be done with cords.

b. עֲלִיּוֹתָיו V. 3. Chambers] עֲלִיָּה from עָלָה aſcendit, ſignifies any upper room, to which they aſcend. So 2 Sam. 18. 32. he went up to עֲלִיַּת הַשָּׁעַר the chamber over the gate. Accordingly the LXXII. here render it ὑπερῶον an upper room, and the Latin ſuperiora ejus, his upper ſtories. By עֲלִיּוֹתָיו therefore muſt be meant, though not the ſupreme, yet the ſuperiour or middle region of the air, which is here deſcribed as an upper ſtory in an houſe, laid firm with beams (accounting the earth and the region of air about that as the lower room) and this floor is here ſaid poetically to be laid in the waters, thoſe waters which Gen. 1. are above the expanſum. This is moſt evident by v. 13. where God is ſaid to water the mountains מֵעֲלִיּוֹתָיו from theſe his upper rooms, theſe clouds, whence the rain deſcends: the Chaldee calls them בֵּית גִּנְזֵי עִלָּאֵי the houſe of his ſuperiour treaſuries, where plenty is ſtored up, and from whence it is rained down upon us. And ſo as v. 2. the higheſt heavens are in the firſt place ſet down, expreſt by light covering God, (a luminous palace where he dwells eſpecially, who is every where preſent, and next after that, the element of air, as a Tent or Tabernacle for the earth; ſo here in the third place we find the waters, that part of them which remained in the middle region of the air (when the lower region of the air called רָקִיעַ the expanſion, Gen. 1. 6. divided the waters from the waters, the ſuperiour waters kept in the air from the inferiour which now fill the Ocean) in which, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, the beams of theſe upper rooms were laid; (ſee note [a] on Pſalm 148.) i. e. whereas in the building of an upper ſtory, there muſt be ſome walls or pillars to ſupport the weight of it, and on that the beams are laid, God here by his own miraculous immediate power laid, and ever ſince ſupported theſe upper rooms, there being nothing there but waters to ſupport them, and thoſe, we know, the moſt fluid tottering body, not able to ſupport it ſelf: and therefore that is another work of his divine power, that the waters, which are ſo fluid, and unable to contein themſelves within their own bounds, ſhould yet hang in the middle of the air, and be as walls or pillars to ſupport that region of air, which is it ſelf another fluid body.

c. רוּחַ Ibid. Wind.] What רוּחַ, which ſometimes ſignifies ſpirit, ſometimes wind, which is nothing but air moved, is ſet to import here, might be ſomewhat uncertain, were it not for the next verſe, where 'tis ſaid of the Angels, He maketh his Angels רוּחוֹת, and his miniſters a flaming fire, (which the Apoſtle Heb. 1. 7. expreſly expounds of the Angels.) There as Angels and Miniſters are but ſeveral names of the ſame divine creatures, ſo רוּחוֹת and fire are but expreſſions of the ſeveral appearances of them, ſometimes in airy, ſometimes in flaming clouds. In this part of v. 3. is deſcribed the uſe of clouds for God's appearing to us here below, expreſt by mention of his chariot and walking. He is we know an infinite Spirit, and ſo inviſible to any material, created, finite faculty; yet he is ſaid to come down to us, to preſentiate and exhibit himſelf to us at ſome times more than others, then eſpecially when the Angels, who are the attendants and officers of his Court, the ſatellitium or guard that wait upon him, † mentemque profundam circumeunt, and incompaſs this profound Mind (as the Platoniſts ſtyled God) do viſibly appear unto us. And theſe again being in their own nature either ſpiritual, and ſo inviſible ſubſtances, or elſe, if bodies, of a moſt ſubtile, indiſcernible nature, are wont (when they purpoſe to appear) to come in clouds, either airy, or (that air being aſcended) fiery and flaming. In which reſpect that airy or fiery cloud, when it is in motion eſpecially, is fitly reſembled to an Eagle with wings, in which thoſe Angels deſcend, and overſhadow firſt, then perhaps light on us, as an Eagle, or Dove doth firſt hover over, then light on any thing, and then God is agreeably ſaid to come, or fly, or walk on thoſe wings of the wind, or moved air, or white cloud, i. e. to be eminently preſent, where the Angels thus appear. From hence therefore it may be reſolved that as רוּחוֹת in the plural in the next verſe are the winds, i. e. agitated air, or clouds, wherein the Angels appear, and thoſe defined (by their oppoſition to flaming fire) to be clouds of pure air, white not fiery clouds; ſo the רוּחַ here is the generical word, belonging to both thoſe ſorts of clouds, which the Angels make uſe of to deſcend and appear in, and thoſe clouds of ſuch a breadth, as to reſemble the wings of an Eagle or great Bird: and then God who makes the clouds his chariot, his vehiculum to bring him down, may fitly be ſaid to walk on theſe wings toward us. Thus Pſal. 18. 10. God's riding on the Cherub, is again expreſt by flying on the wings of רוּחַ which we there alſo render the wind. There the Angels are ſure meant by the Cherub, and thoſe (as in the Ark) pictured with wings. Now in the Ark the wings of the Cherubim were ſo placed one toward the other, that they made over the Propitiatory a kind of Seat, and that was looked on as the ſeat of God; and accordingly the רוּחַ or ſpirit, there and here, on whoſe wings God is ſaid to fly there, and walk here, muſt be thoſe agitated clouds, whereby, as with wings, the Angels fly down to us; and ſo God is ſaid to walk, or be preſent on them. This makes it neceſſary to render רוּחַ in the ſame ſenſe in both verſes, and that (according to the original notion of it) air, or wind, which are exactly all one, ſave that the latter intimates motion, and ſo is the fitter to expreſs theſe clouds by which the Angels deſcend, moſt frequently with ſome incitation, πνεῦμα σφοδρὸν βιαῖον, a violent ruſhing blaſt, Act. 2. 2. Aben Ezra and Kimchi in this fourth verſe are willing to take the word רוּחוֹת winds in the genuine notion, and Angels in a metaphorical, interpreting it by Pſal. 148. 8. wind and ſtorm fulfilling his word, where the wind is deſcribed as a kind of miniſter, and ſo Angel of God. But the Apoſtle Heb. 1. 7. expreſly applying the words of this fourth verſe to the Angels, obligeth us thus to interpret them.

רוּחוֹת

d. הָרִים בְּקָעוֹת V. 8. They go up by the mountains—] It is not here certain whether הָרִים mountains, and בְּקָעוֹת valleys or plains, be to be read as in the nominative, or as in the accuſative caſe. If they be in the nominative, then we muſt reade as in a parentheſis (the mountains aſcend, the plains or valleys ſink down) joyning the end of the verſe, unto the place—to haſte away, v. 7. thus, The waters once ſtood above the moun- mountains, thoſe places which now are ſuch, but at the uttering God's voice, they fled and haſted away (the mountains aſcending, and the valleys deſcending) unto the place which thou haſt prepared for them. Thus the LXXII. and Latin underſtood it, ἀναβαίνουν ὄρη, καταβαίνουν πεδία, aſcendunt montes, & deſcendunt campi, the mountains aſcend, and the plains deſcend, referring to the change that was made in the earth, from being perfectly round and incompaſſed with waters, into that inequality wherein now it is, great mountains in ſome parts, and great cavities in other parts, wherein the waters were diſpoſed, which before covered the face of the earth. But they may be more probably in the accuſative caſe, and then מַיִם the waters v. 6. which were underſtood v. 7. though not mentioned (for it was the waters that there fled and haſted away) muſt be here continued alſo, viz. that the waters יַעֲלוּ aſcend or climb the mountains, and יֵרְדוּ deſcend or fall down upon the valleys or fiſſures, or hollow places, ditches and the like receptacles of waters (for ſo בִּקְוָע now ſignifies among the Rabbins.) And this ſenſe the Chaldee follow, they aſcend from the abyſs לְטוּרַיָּא to the mountains, and they deſcend בְּבִקְעָתָא into the valleys, to the place— And this is the cleareſt expoſition of it, rendring an account of the courſe of waters, ſince the gathering them together in the Ocean, that from thence they are by the power of God directed to paſs through ſubterranean meatus to the uppermoſt parts of the earth, the hills and mountains, where they break forth in ſprings, and then by their natural weight deſcend, and either find or make channels, by which they run into the Ocean again, that מָקוֹם place which God hath hewed out as a receptacle for them; and by their thus paſſing they are profitable for the uſe of men, in watering the cattel, and the fruits that grow on the earth, v. 10. &c.

e. יִשְׁבְּרוּ

V. 11. Quench] יִשְׁבְּרוּ from שָׁבַר to break, and applied to hunger, or (as here) to thirſt, muſt ſignifie to allay, or quench, to debilitate, and take off the keenneſs of the appetite. The phraſe is communicated to other languages, and is uſual among us, who take breaking of faſt, for eating. The LXXII. here reade ἀπεκδέχονται εἰς δίψαν, they expect or wait for their thirſt; and ſo the Latin expectabunt, reading no doubt יִשְׁבְּרוּ from שָׁבַר with שׁ (not שׂ) which ſignifies to expect or wait: ſo v. 27. all theſe wait on thee יְשַׂבְּרוּן, the LXXII. there, as here, reade, ἀπεκδέχονται expect. So Pſal. 145. 15. the eyes of all יְשַׂבֵּרוּ wait on thee. But (as the Chaldee, ſo) the Syriack aſſures us of the other reading of it, who render it ܢܬܪܘܝܘܢ are filled or ſatisfied, when they thirſt. This is here peculiarly remarkt of the aſſes in the dry remote and ſandy deſarts, which though a dull and ſtupid creature, are by providence taught the way to the waters, and there is no ſuch way for the thirſty traveller, as to obſerve the herds of them deſcending to the ſtreams.

f. עָפְאִים

V. 12. Sing] The word עָפְאִים is not elſewhere uſed in the Bible, but onely in the Chaldee Dan. 4. 12, 14, 21. There 'tis interpreted by the LXXII. φύλλα leaves, as here by the Chaldee וְאַנְוָיָא boughs or leaves (from נוע being moved or ſhaken) becauſe the boughs or leaves are agitated by the wind. There it is diſtinguiſhed from κλάδοι branches, which are there expreſt by another word, עֲנָפוֹהִי his branches. It is therefore moſt reaſonable to render it here either boughs or leaves, and מִבֵּין muſt be in ſtrict rendring from between (ſo בֵּין muſt be rendred v. 10. not among but between, ἀναμέσον ſay the LXXII. to denote the hollow receptacles for waters betwixt the hills, or riſings of the ground on both ſides.) From between theſe boughs or leaves then the fowls of the air יִתְּנוּ קוֹל ſend out their voice, not by ſinging onely (for that is peculiar to few) but by making any noiſe that is proper to them. It is here hard to divine upon what ground, or by what underſtanding of the word, the LXXII. ſhould render it πετρῶν rocks, and yet the Latin follow them in the reading, and the Syriack by ܛܘܪܐ mountains, or rocks, ſeem to conſent to them, the context inclining it to the notion of boughs or leaves, and the uſe of the word in Daniel confirming it. 'Tis poſſible they might apply it to the ſprings precedent, v. 10. which coming out of rocks or mines, they might think thoſe rocks poetically expreſt by branches of thoſe ſprings. But it is moſt probable that for עָפְאִים they reade כְּפָאִים, and ſo render it rocks, for ſo we know Cepha ſignifies.

g. בְּרוֹשִׁים

V. 17. Firr-trees] For בְּרוֹשִׁים firr-trees, ſo underſtood both by the Chaldee and Syriack, the LXXII. reade ἡγεῖται αὐτῶν is the captain of them, the Latin, dux eſt eorum, reading, 'tis probable, בְּרֹאשָׁם in the head of them.

h. שְׁפַנִּים

V. 18. Coneys] For שְׁפַנִּים rabbets or coneys (ſo uſed Lev. 11. 5. Deut. 14. 7.) ſome copies of the LXXII. now reade χοιρογρυλλίοις hedghoggs, others λαγωοῖς hares, and the Latin follows the former; reading herinaceis hedghoggs; and that moſt probably is the right reading of the LXXII. becauſe both in Leviticus and Deuteronomy they ſo render שְׁפַנִּים. That the word cannot ſignifie hares, is certain both from Deut. 14. 7. where הָאַרְנֶבֶת the hare is ſet down diſtinct from it, and from the context here, which makes the rocks their refuge, as to coneys they are, but not to hares: and the ſame prejudice lies againſt the other; and therefore the Chaldee render it טַפְוְיָא coneys, and ſo Abu Walid, ſaying, 'tis a creature not ſo common in the Eaſt, but in the Weſtern parts frequent, and call'd אלקנליה, Alconilie, the corruption of Cuniculi; and ſo the Jewiſh Arab, ללובר to the Coneys; and the Syriack ܠܫܦܢܐ (not as the Latin Tranſlator Leporibus, but) to coneys.

i. מָאכָל אָכְלָם

V. 21. Meat from God] What is here ſaid of the Lions peculiarly, that they roar after their prey, and ſeek their meat from God, may be illuſtrated by what is obſerved of thoſe creatures, that to their great ſtrength, and greedineſs, and rapacity, they are not proportionably provided with ſwiftneſs of body to purſue thoſe beaſts in the deſart on which they prey, nor yet ſo quick-ſcented, as to be able to follow and trace them to their places of repoſe. It hath therefore been neceſſary to the providing for theſe, that ſome ſupply ſhould be made to theſe defects by ſome other way. And it hath been affirmed by ſome, that their very roaring is uſefull to them for this end, and that when they cannot overtake their prey, they do by that fierce noiſe ſo aſtoniſh and amaze the poor beaſts, that they fall down before them. But it is more credible, what is reported of the Jackales, a ſort of larger Foxes, that being provided of thoſe abilities which the Lion wants, is joyned to him, firſt by intereſt (as wanting that ſtrength which the Lion hath) but more by the great Law of Nature, into a league and ſtrict confederacy, and ſo conſtantly hunts for the Lion, and when he hath ſeized the prey, ſtands by, till the Lion hath ſufficiently gorged himſelf, and then contents himſelf with the remainder. If this have that truth, which

it

it professes to have, it gives a clear account both of the phrase of roaring after the prey, and of seeking it from God: of roaring, as being able to doe nothing else toward the getting it, but onely thus to frighten the hearers, and express his own hunger and want, in which respects the Devil, in seeking whom he may devour, is exprest in this style of a roaring Lion, 1. as very greedy of his prey, 2. very unable to get it, unless we voluntarily yield to his loud noises, beside which he hath no other means to prevail upon us, and if we resist or not give our consent to his temptations, we have conquered, and he, as worsted, will fly from us. Of his seeking his meat from God, who by this extraordinary dispensation bestows it on him, as it were in answer to his call, the roaring here being proportionable to the crying, or gaping of the young Ravens, Psal. 147. 9. and so this, as that, interpreted to be a natural way of calling on God, which he that relieves the destitute, obliges himself to answer.

k. רַב יָדַיִם

V. 25. Wide sea] One Epithet of the sea here is, that 'tis רַחַב יָדַיִם, which the Latin renders spacioſum manibus, wide in hands, by hands signifying the extent of the branches thereof both ways, on this side and on that side; but the Chaldee פְּתֵי תְחוֹמִין wide or spacious in the bounds; the Jewish Arab, wide of banks or shores; and the LXXII. very properly εὐρύχωρος of wide extent. The Syriack reteins the Hebrew, ܝܕ̈ܝܡ from ܝܕ, which as it signifies hand; so it is used also for space or place, because those are wont to be distinguished by the right and left hand. So Deut. 23. 12. וְיָד and thou shalt have a place without the camp, where the LXXII. reade τόπος place. So 2 Sam. 8. 3. יָדוֹ his place, we render his border; and so many times more in the Old Testament.

l. רֶמֶשׂ

Ibid. Things creeping] רֶמֶשׂ (from רָמַשׂ to tread or go) signifies any kind of incessus or motion, whether on the earth or water, and must be rendred as the context directs it. v. 20. 'tis used of the beasts חַיְתַ֥ת חָרֹֽשׂ of the forrest, חָרֹשׂ, and then must be interpreted not creep, but go, or move, or walk; and here being applied to the fishes of the sea, it must be rendred swimming; and so Gen. 1. 21. where in the waters God is said to bring forth Whales and every living soul רֶמֶשׂ הַנֶּפֶשׁ that moves as things move in the waters, i. e. that swims. In proportion wherewith חַיּוֹת the חַיּוֹת that follows, are not to be rendred beasts (which we use not to apply to fishes) but by some more general word or phrase, living creatures, which is exactly answerable both to the original חַיּוֹת from חָיָה vixit, and the Greek ζῶα.

m. לִוְיָתָן

V. 26. Leviathan] Of Leviathan, the Whale, or vast bulk of fish, we have a large description Job 41. 1. &c. The sum of it is, that he is of too great a size to be taken with hooks and lines, as other fishes are, to be brought to hand, or managed, as beasts of the land oft are, and so made useful and serviceable either to our sports or business, to be slaughtered for food, and either eaten or sold, as others, or any ways to be assaulted and taken. He is so fortified by nature, that there is little hope to combate with him, and prevail; consequently all care and sollicitude is removed from him, as long as he hath his guide, the Ἡγεμὼν or Musculus, by whose conduct he steers, but being deprived of that (which 'tis the fishers first design to procure) he runs himself a ground, and so perisheth. And this may give us the notion of לְשַׂחֵק here, which is applied to Leviathan. The word signifies to deride, scoff, or contemn, and is applied to God Psal. 2. 4. speaking of the oppositions and tumults of the people, He that sitteth in heaven יִשְׂחָק shall laugh at them, contemn them, as those that are not able to doe any thing against him. So Job 39. 7. יִשְׂחַק he shall laugh at the tumult of the city; and in the description of Leviathan ch. 41. 29. וַיִּשְׂחַק and he shall laugh at the shaking of the spear, i. e. contemn all the weapons that can be brought against him. And this certainly is the meaning of it in this place, that the Whale is so fortified with his scales, which are so near one to another, that no air can come betwixt them, they are so joyned and stick together, that they cannot be sundred, Job 41. 16, 17. (and from thence the word Leviathan seems be fetcht, from לָוָה to be joyned and stick fast together) that he scorns and laughs at, and triumphs over all opposition or assaults which can be made upon him in the sea. The LXXII. well render it ἐμπαίζειν, to mock, or scoff, or laugh at.

לְשַׂחֵק

יִשְׂחָק

n. טוֹב

V. 28. Good] טוֹב hath the notion of goodness onely, not of benignity also; which we accordingly in vulgar style call Bounty or Bonity. The LXXII. here reade χρηστότης benignity, and other copies πιότης fatness: and it is here applied to the great plenty that God provides for all creatures, even to saturity (so יִשְׂבָּעוּן signifies) a kind of festival diet, according to the notion of יוֹם טוֹב a good day, i. e. a festival. The word is also used sometimes to signifie a great degree, as when in our language we use a good deal, for a great deal, and well done, for throughly done; and so the LXXII. oft renders it σφόδρα very much, and ἀκριβῶς exactly; and so here יִשְׂבָּעוּן טוֹב may signifie well, i. e. plentifully filled, and that returns to the same sense.

יִשְׂבָּעוּן

o. עָלָיו

V. 34. Of him] It may be thought dubious whether עָלָיו to, or on him, belongs to the meditation, or the sweet. If to the first, then our English is right, My meditation of, or on, him shall be sweet, viz. to him that meditates; and to that the consequents well accord, I will be glad, (which is an effect of sweetness in him to whom it is such.) But all the ancients joyn in the second way of understanding it, My meditation shall be sweet to him, or as the Jewish Arab, עִנְדָה with him, according to that of the Psalmist, Psal. 19. 14. Let the meditation of my heart be always acceptable in thy sight. Thus the Chaldee here קֳדָמוֹי before him, the LXXII. Ἡδυνθείη αὐτῷ, Let it be sweet to him, the Syriack ܥܠ̈ to him, and so the others also. And so עַל signifies to, as well as on.

The

The Hundred and Fifth P S A L M.

The hundred and fifth Pſalm is a thankfull pious commemoration of all God's mercies, and providences, and fidelities to his people, the firſt of thoſe three that David delivered to the hand of Aſaph and his Brethren, 1 Chron. 16. 8. to be uſed in the daily miniſtery before the Ark, to record and bleſs the name of God.

1. O Give thanks unto the Lord, call upon his name, make known his deeds among the people.

Paraphraſe.

1. O let us all, in our daily prayers to God, confeſs and acknowledge, and proclaim to all the world, the great and gracious works which he hath wrought for his people.

2. Sing unto him, ſing Pſalms unto him, talk ye of all his wondrous works.

Praiſe ye the name of his holineſs.

3. [a] || Glory ye in his holy name: let the heart of them rejoyce that ſeek the Lord.

2, 3. Let us both in his publick ſervice, and in our more private diſcourſes and converſation, indeavour to promulgate his miracles of mercy, and ſo bring all other men, that worſhip God, to do it with all delight and joy, as to him that hath moſt abundantly obliged and ingaged them. a.

4. Seek the Lord and [b] his ſtrength; ſeek his face evermore.

4. And ſo in like manner let our prayers be conſtantly addreſt to him in his ſanctuary, and all the relief and deliverance we at any time want be begged from his omnipotence. b.

5. Remember his marvellous works that he hath done, his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth,

6. O ye ſeed of Abraham his ſervant, ye children of Jacob his choſen.

5, 6. To both theſe conſtant duties of prayer and praiſe, the people of the Jews, and all that tranſcribe the copy of Abraham's or Jacob's fidelity, are eternally obliged by the great and miraculous mercies afforded them by God, and the portentous judgments and puniſhments on their enemies, which he, by a word of his mouth, by the exerciſe of his immediate power, hath wrought for them.

7. He is the Lord our God: his judgments are in all the earth.

7. By his mercy and providence, and the exerciſe of his omnipotence, it is, that we have been conducted and ſupported, and our heathen enemies, whereſoever we came, ſubdued under us.

8. He hath remembred his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thouſand generations:

9. Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Iſaac;

10. And confirmed the ſame unto Jacob for a Law, and to Iſrael for an everlaſting Covenant,

8, 9, 10. And all this as the exact performance of his part of that Covenant and Law, which he ſolemnly and by oath eſtabliſhed with Abraham and Iſaac and Jacob, and their poſterity after them, that not to them onely, but to all their ſucceſſors to the end of the world, he would be a moſt conſtant protector and rewarder, in caſe they adhered faithfully to him; (and in caſe of their apoſtaſie and rebellion, he would yet make good that promiſe to all others that ſhould come in, and tranſcribe that copy of fidelity performed by thoſe Patriarchs, receive the faith of Chriſt, and perform ſincere uniform conſtant obedience to him.)

11. Saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance;

|| ſcarce a number of perſons, and they ſtrangers—

12. When they were || but a [c] few men in number, yea very few, and ſtrangers in it;

13. When they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people.

11, 12, 13. The ſumm of this Covenant, as it concerned Abraham and his ſeed according to the fleſh, was, the bringing them into a moſt fruitfull and deſirable land, the land of Canaan (a type and image of the ſtate of the Goſpel, and joys of heaven) diſpoſſeſſing the inhabitants thereof, and conducting them to a quiet ſecure injoyment of it, as of an inheritance bequeathed to them by God himſelf, and not to be acquired by any ſtrength of their own. In which reſpect it was, that as God choſe to make this promiſe to him, Gen. 12. 6, 7. at a time when he had none but his wife, and ſo could hardly make up a number, a pitifull weak family, and thoſe but in a journey, admitted but as ſtrangers to lodge in their paſſage to Sichem, v. 6. ſo, that they might be obliged to acknowledge the whole work to be wrought by God in relation to his promiſe, he ſo diſpoſed it, that they ſhould no: now reſt, but be removed out of Canaan, and paſs from one nation and kingdom to another, from Sichem, where he built one Altar to God, v. 7. to a mountain on the Eaſt of Bethel, where he built another, v. 8. and from thence to Ægypt, v. 10. c.

14. He ſuffered no man to doe them wrong, yea he reproved Kings for their ſakes, 15. Saying, Touch not [d] mine anointed, and doe my Prophets no harm.

14, 15. When they were there, God was pleaſed to afford them one ſpecial inſtance and pledge of his favour to them, and protection over them; when the King of Ægypt took Sarah into his houſe, Gen. 12. 15. and was in danger to have defiled her, and ſo again ch. 20. in Gerar, when Abimelech King of Gerar took Sarah v. 2. (a like paſſage there was afterward betwixt Abimelech King of the Philiſtims and Rebecca Iſaac's wife, Gen. 26. 8.) God plagued that King, Gen. 12. 17. and ſeverely threatned the other, Gen. 20. 3. and ſuffered neither of them to violate her chaſtity, v. 6. but told Abimelech, that Abraham was a Prophet, v. 7. and one very highly valued by him (deſigned to be the root of a potent Kingdom, and the ſtock from whom the Meſſias ſhould come) and therefore commanded him by a moſt ſevere interdict not to doe any harm to him, or his wife. d.

16. Moreover he called for a famine upon the land; he brake the whole ſtaff of bread.

16. After this, in Jacob's time, the ſeaſon being not yet come of performing this promiſe unto Abraham's ſeed, and that God's work of poſſeſſing them of Canaan might be the more remarkable, and wholly imputable imputable to him, and not to any ſtrength of their own, or to natural proceedings, or caſual event, God thought fit ſo to diſpoſe of it, that all the poſterity of Abraham ſhould be removed out of this land, where yet they were but as ſojourners. And thus it was, There fell out to be a very ſore famine in all that land of Canaan, ſo that they had not corn for the neceſſities of life; and ſo Jacob was forced to ſend his ſons down into Ægypt to buy corn for his family.

17. And herein a wonderfull act of providence was diſcernible. Joſeph, one of Jacob's ſons, being envied and hated by the reſt of his brethren, had been firſt taken and caſt into a pit, then by occaſion of ſome Iſmaelite merchants coming by in that nick of time, Gen. 37. 25. taken out, and ſold to them, and carried into Ægypt, and there bought by Potipher for a ſervant.

17. He ſent a man before them, even Joſeph who was ſold for a ſervant:

e. 18. Where being falſely accuſed by his miſtreſs, he was caſt into priſon, and fetters, and extremely injured and afflicted by this calumny;

18. Whoſe feet they hurt with fetters, [e] || he was laid in irons,

|| the iron entred his ſoul

f. 19. And ſo continued till God, by revealing to him the interpretation of Pharaoh's butlers and Pharaoh's bakers dreams, which accordingly came to paſs, brought him to the knowledge of Pharaoh, and then the interpretation of Pharaoh's dream alſo, revealed unto him by God, perfectly purged him from the crime of incontinence falſely charged againſt him, this being an evidence of his integrity and perfect innocence, that God would vouchſafe thus to inſpire him.

19. Untill the time that his † word [f] came, the word of the Lord * tried him.

† ſaying came to paſs
* purged

20,21,22. Hereupon therefore Pharaoh not onely ſet him free from his reſtraint, but withall advanced him to be next himſelf, in a moſt ſupereminent power over the whole nation, to controll and do whatſoever he pleaſed.

20. The King ſent and looſed him, even the ruler of the people, and let him go free.

21. He made him Lord of his houſe, and ruler of all his ſubſtance,

g. 22. To || bind his Princes * at his pleaſure, and † teach his ſenators wiſedom.

|| command
† judge

23. By this means, joyned with the occaſion forementioned v. 16. the famine in Canaan, upon which Jacob ſent down his ſons unto Ægypt (where alone by Joſeph's providence it was to be had) to buy food, Joſeph by degrees made himſelf known to his brethren, and at length invited his father Jacob to come and bring all his family with him into Ægypt, providing him a part of the countrey, where they might live by themſelves, and uſe their own rites and cuſtoms, as they pleaſed; and accordingly Jacob, overjoyed to hear that his beloved ſon, whom he thought devoured by wild beaſts, was yet alive, accepted the offer, and came, and dwelt in Ægypt, Gen. 46.

23. Iſrael alſo came into Ægypt, and Jacob ſojourned in the land of Ham.

24. And in his journey at Beerſheba, God appeared to him, Gen. 46. 1. and incouraged him in his journey to Ægypt, and promiſed to make of him a great nation there, v. 3. And according to that promiſe ſo it was. For there being but a ſmall number of perſons in this family when they came down, but ſeventy reckoned in all, Gen. 46. 27. whereof ſome alſo were born after their coming into Ægypt (ſee note on Act. 7. b.) they were within few years increaſed to a multitude, and waxed exceeding mighty, and the land was filled with them, Exod. 1. 7. and the King of Ægypt entred into conſultation about them, taking notice to his people, v. 9. that the children of Iſrael were more and mightier than the Ægyptians.

24. And he increaſed his people greatly, and made them ſtronger than their enemies.

25. This great and ſignal goodneſs of God to the poſterity of Jacob, in multiplying them ſo exceedingly, was a means to provoke the Ægyptians jealouſie; and from fear they turned ſoon to hatred, and miſchievous machinations againſt them, giving order firſt for the oppreſſing them by burthens and hard labour, Exod. 1. 11. and when that did not prevail to the leſſening, but increaſing of them, v. 12. then inhanſing the rigor of their ſervitude, v. 13, 14. and at length appointing all their male children to be killed as ſoon as they were born.

25. He turned their heart to hate his people, to deal ſubtily with his ſervants.

26. In this point of time was Moſes ſeaſonably born, and preſerved by Gods providence miraculouſly: and when he was 40 years old, it came into his heart to viſit his brethren in Ægypt, but he was ſoon forced to fly thence, and ſojourn in Madian, Act. 7. 23, 29. and about fourty years after, v. 30. he was called by God, and ſent as his impowred commiſſioner to Pharaoh, his brother Aaron being joyned with him, to negotiate the delivery and departure of this whole people out of the bondage of Ægypt:

26. He ſent Moſes his ſervant, and Aaron whom he had choſen.

h. 27. To that end God gave them power of working miracles, to gain belief both from the Iſraelites themſelves, that they were ſent from God to deliver them, and from Pharaoh alſo, and particularly directed them from time to time what miracles they ſhould work, and they performed exactly according to direction.

27. They ſhewed || his [h] ſigns among them, and wonders in the land of Ham.

|| the words of his ſigns

i. 28. For example, when many of the miracles preſcribed by God had been ſucceſsleſs, and but inraged, and not melted or perſwaded Pharaoh, and withall now after the time that God had told Moſes that he would ſend all his plagues upon Pharaoh's heart, ch. 9. 14. and that he is ſaid expreſly to have hardened Pharaoh's heart, v. 12. after which Moſes was in reaſon to expect he would be more inraged by his ſigns, yet putting off all fear of Pharaoh's wrath and cruelty, as ſoon as God, Exod. 10. 21. commanded Moſes to ſtretch out his hand to heaven, that there might be darkneſs over the land of Ægypt, even darkneſs that might be felt, Moſes immediately obeyed, ſtretched forth his hand to heaven, and there was a thick darkneſs in all the land of Ægypt three days, v. 23.

28. He ſent darkneſs and † made it dark, [i] and they rebelled not againſt his word.

† he made

29. Before this, God had begun with Pharaoh with variety of other plagues; by Aaron's ſtriking his rod upon the waters, the waters of all the land of Ægypt were preſently turned into blood, Exod. 7. 20. and the fiſh that was in the river died, v. 21.

29. He turned their waters into blood, and ſlew their fiſh.

k. 30. Then after that, he ſmote all their borders with frogs, Exod. 8. 2. upon Aaron's ſtretching out his rod over the ſtreams, v. 5. and the frogs came and covered the whole land of Ægypt, and came into Pharaoh's houſe, and into his bed-chamber, and upon his bed, v. 3.

30. * The land || [k] brought forth frogs in abundance, in the chambers of their Kings.

31. He ſpake, and there came divers ſorts of flyes, and lice in all their coaſts.

31. After this at Gods appointment, Aaron with his rod ſmote the duſt of the earth, and it became lice in man and beaſt, Exod. 8. 17. a judgment wherein the Magicians themſelves acknowledged the finger of God, all their skill in ſorcery being not able to arrive to this: Then, when that would not work, great ſwarms of flyes, Exod. 8. 24. came upon Pharaoh, and all the Ægyptians, the Iſraelites onely being free from them.

32. He gave them hail for rain, and flaming fire in the land.

33. † He ſmote their vines alſo and their figg-trees, and * brake the trees of their coaſts.

† and ſmote their vines and—

* ſhiverd

32, 33. Then after two other plagues, the murrein and the blains, Exod. 9. 3. and 9. God ſent a moſt grievous hail, v. 18. and with it thunder, and fire running along upon the ground, v. 23. and theſe brake to ſmall pieces all ſorts of trees in the field, and ſmote all ſorts of plants, v. 25.

34. He ſpake, and the locuſts came, and caterpillars and that without number,

35. And did eat up all the herbs in their land, and devoured the fruit of their ground.

34, 35. Then what was left undeſtroyed by the hail, of their plants and corn and trees, an innumerable multitude of locuſts, Exod. 10. 4. came and ſwept utterly away, v. 5.

36. He ſmote alſo the firſt-born in their land, the chief of all their ſtrength.

36. In the laſt place, he ſent his deſtroying Angels, in the depth of the night, to kill every firſt-born, the prime, and ſtouteſt, and moſt valued both of man and beaſt, through all the land, from Pharaoh to the meaneſt perſon in Ægypt, ch. 11. 5. and 12. 29.

37. He brought them forth alſo with ſilver and gold, and there was not one feeble perſon among their tribes.

37. And upon this laſt judgment they were urgent and importunate to have them gone, Exod. 12. 31, 33. And the children of Iſrael took all the houſhold-ſtuff that they had, and God gave them favour in the ſight of the Ægyptians, Exod. 11. 3. and 12. 36. ſo that they lent them many rich jewels, and denied them nothing that they required, Exod. 12. 35, 36. And one circumſtance more there was very conſiderable, that at this time of their going out in this haſte, there was not one ſick or weak perſon among all the people of Iſrael, not one by impotence or ſickneſs diſabled for the march, but all together, and in one hoſt or army, went out from the land of Ægypt (which ſtrange remark of Gods providence, though it be not expreſt in the ſtory, is yet intimated, Exod. 12. 41.)

38. Ægypt was glad when they departed, for the fear of them fell upon them.

38. And now the Ægyptians were inſtructed by their plagues, not onely to be content to loſe theſe their ſo profitable ſervants, but even rejoyced, and lookt upon it as a deliverance to themſelves, that they were thus rid of them, and ſo, as they hoped, of the ſufferings, which the deteining them againſt Gods command had brought upon them. So terribly were they amated at the death of their firſt-born, that they cryed out, they were all but dead men, if they did not preſently atone God by diſmiſſing them, Exod. 12. 33.

39. He ſpread a cloud for a covering, and fire to give light in the night.

39. In their march God conducted them in a moſt eminent manner, by his Angels in a cloud encompaſſing their hoſts, and that cloud ſo bright and ſhining, that in the dark of the night it lighted them, and gave them an eaſie paſſage, Exod. 13. 21, 22.

40. The people asked, and he brought quails, and ſatisfied them with the bread of heaven.

40. As they paſt through the wilderneſs of Sin, and wanted food, and murmured, God pardoned their murmuring, and furniſhed them with quails, a moſt delicious ſort of fleſh; and inſtead of corn for bread, he ſent them down, in a ſhowre from heaven bread ready dreſt or prepared (and thence called Manna) and that in ſuch plenty that every man had enough, Exod. 16. 16.

41. He opened the rock, and the waters guſhed out; || they ran in the dry places like a river.

|| they went along a river in— הָלְכוּ נָהָר

41. At Rephidim, when they murmured for water, Exod. 17. God appointed, Moſes to ſtrike the rock in Horeb, v. 6. and there came out water in ſuch plenty, that it ran along (ſee Pſal. 78. 20.) and as the Jews relate, attended them in a current or ſtream through the drought of the deſart, (ſo that we hear no more of their want of water till they came to Cadeſh (ſee note on Cor. 10. b.) and then took a contrary way in their journeying.)

42. For he remembred † his holy promiſe, [k] and Abraham his ſervant.

42. And all this an effect of his own free mercy, in diſcharge of his promiſe made to Abraham, whoſe fidelity to him God was pleaſed thus to reward upon his poſterity. k.

43. And he brought forth his people with joy, and his choſen with gladneſs,

44. And gave them the lands of the heathen, and they inherited the labour of the people, 43, 44. And ſo at length having brought out his people with ſo much glory, victorious and triumphant, out of Ægypt, he poſſeſt them of the promiſed Canaan, caſt out the old inhabitants before them for their pollutions and idolatries, and planted this his peculiar people in their ſtead.

45. That they might obſerve his ſtatutes, and keep his laws. Praiſe ye the Lord.

45. And all this, not that they ſhould indulge to riot, and imploy their plenty in luſts and pleaſures, or grow fat and wanton, but that being thus richly ſupplied, wanting no manner of thing that is good, having nothing of encumbrance or diverſion, but on the contrary, all kinds of encouragements to piety, they ſhould therein conſtantly exerciſe themſelves, according to the ingagements and obligations incumbent on thoſe that had received ſuch a ſucceſſion of miracles of mercies from God, (a type of that duty now incumbent on us Chriſtians, upon far greater and more conſiderable obligations, that eſpecially of our redemption by Chriſt from the power, as well as the guilt of ſin) and return him the tribute of ſincere obedience for ever after, approve themſelves an holy peculiar people to him, zealous of good works. And in ſo doing, let us all indeavour uniformly to praiſe, and magnifie, and glorifie the name of God. Hallelujah.

Annotations on Pſal. CV.

a. הִתְהַלְלוּ

V. 3. Glory ye—] That הִתְהַלְלוּ in the reciprocal conjugation, is yet to be here rendred in the active ſenſe, is agreed on both by the Chaldee and Syriack; שַׁבְּחוּ בְּשֵׁם ſaith the former, praiſe in his name, and the other ܫܒܚܘ ܒܫܡܗ praiſe to his name, where as ב in, ſo ל to is certainly a Pleonaſme (as v. 15. both ב and ל are, in בִּמְשִׁיחָי and לִנְבִיאָי, his anointed and his prophets:) and the whole phraſe ſignifies no more than the Latin of the Syriack expreſſes, Laudate nomen ſanctitatis ejus, praiſe the name of his holineſs, juſt as ܫܒܚܘ ܫܡܗ and ܒܐ ܐܠܗܐ, believing God and in God, are all one, the prepoſition being abundant very frequently. The LXXII. indeed and the Latin reade it in the paſſive ſenſe, ἐπαινεῖσθε ἐν, Laudamini in nomine ſancto, be ye praiſed in his holy name: but this certainly without any propriety of expreſſion, the praiſes of God, and not of our ſelves, being the duty to which we are invited in this Pſalm.

b. עֻזּוֹ

V. 4. His ſtrength] For עֻזּוֹ his ſtrength, the LXXII. ſeem to have read עֻזּוּ be ſtrengthened, and accordingly render it κραταιώθητε, the Latin confirmamini, be confirmed, and ſo the Syriack ܬܬܬܩܦܘ be ſtrengthened; and ſo the ſenſe would well bear, ſeek the Lord, and be confirmed, let all your ſtrength be ſought from him; ſo the Jewiſh Arab, Seek the Lord, and ſeek that he would ſtrengthen you, or ſtrength from him, or, you ſhall certainly be ſtrengthened, if by prayer you diligently ſeek him. But we need not change the reading, for the gaining this ſenſe. This Pſalm was compoſed for the conſtant uſe of the Sanctuary; and then עֹז may moſt properly here denote the Sanctuary, as it doth not unuſually in ſeveral places; and ſo 'tis beſt joyned with פָּנָיו his face, the appearance and exhibition of himſelf in the Sanctuary: And ſo ſeeking his Sanctuary, is offering up our prayers to him there, as the means of obtaining all aſſiſtance and ſtrength from him. The Chaldee reade אוֹרַיְתֵיהּ his law, which we know was kept in the Sanctuary, and which all were obliged to obey that addreſt unto him there, and in obedience to that all their ſtrength conſiſted.

c. כִּמְעַט
מְתֵי
מִסְפָּר

V. 12. Few men in number] The phraſe כִּמְעַט almoſt, which is here added to מְתֵי מִסְפָּר perſons of a number, or plurality, muſt needs be a reſtraint and leſſening to it. A number or plurality we know is of no leſs than three in the Hebrew and other languages, and ſo perſons of a number almoſt, cannot ſignifie either more or leſs than two. And this a moſt exact and commodious expreſſion to ſignifie Abraham's ſtate when the promiſe of Canaan was firſt made to him, Gen. 12. 7. for then before the birth of Iſaac, nay of Iſhmael, he had certainly no other but his wife Sarai, unleſs perhaps ſome ſervant, which was not here to be numbred. This therefore will be the beſt rendring of the phraſe בִּהְיוֹתָם מְתֵי מִסְפָּר כִּמְעָט, in their being, or when they were ſcarce, or almoſt, or not ſo much as perſons of a number, or a number of perſons, i. e. diſtinctly but two of them, Abraham and his wife.

בִּהְיוֹתָם

d. V. 15. Mine anointed] That unction was a ceremony of inauguration, or advancing to any great office among the Jews, is ſufficiently known: Hence it is that the Chaldee oft renders it by making great, Pſal. 45. 7. מְשָׁחֲךָ God hath anointed thee, they render רַבִּיךְ hath advanced or dignified thee. And as there were three offices to which unction was uſed, the Regal, the Sacerdotal, the Prophetical; ſo each of theſe may not unfitly be ſtyled מְשִׁיחִי my (i. e. God's) anointed; but eſpecially the King is thus ſtyled. So 1 Sam. 24. 6. If I ſhall do this לִמְשִׁיחַ יְהוָה to the Lord's anointed, i. e. to King Saul. So of Cyrus, Iſa. 45. 1. thus ſaith the Lord לִמְשִׁיחוֹ to his anointed. And ſo the Meſſias, Dan. 9. 25. was by all that from that text expected him, looked upon as a King that ſhould come among them. And thus in this place, where of the Patriarchs Abraham and Iſaac God uſeth this double ſtyle, mine anointed, and my prophets, theſe two offices are in all reaſon to be underſtood, that as they were Prophets by God inſpired, Abraham having ſignal revelations made unto him, particularly of the captivity of his poſterity in Ægypt, and their coming out in their fourth generation, Gen. 15. 16. and again c. 17. 6. of the great dignity that ſhould befall his ſeed (and ſo Iſaac prophecyed alſo of the future eſtates of the poſterity of Jacob and Eſau, Gen. 27. 40.) ſo they were deſigned by God as the foundation of a moſt illuſtrious Monarchy, that ſhould ſpring out of their loins, I will make nations of thee, Kings ſhall come out of thee, Gen. 17. 6.) and being thus great, advanced to this dignity in God's decree, they are juſtly to be equalled to the greateſt Kings, anointed with oyle, being particularly owned by God, and warning given by him in an extraordinary manner to other Kings, Abimelech, &c. that they ſhould not dare to doe them the leaſt injury.

מְשִׁיחִי

V. 18. He was laid in irons] The phraſe בַּרְזֶל בָּאָה נַפְשׁוֹ is capable of two rendrings; either the iron entred his ſoul, or his ſoul entred the iron. The LXXII. take it in the latter ſenſe, οὗ ἦλθεν σίδηρος ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ, his ſoul paſt through iron, and ſo the Syriack ܥܒܪܬ ܢܦܫܗ &c. his ſoul went into iron, and the Jewiſh Arab, his ſoul came into iron: but the Chaldee follow the former rendring, שִׁיר דְּפַרְזֶל עָלַת בְּנַפְשֵׁהּ the chain of iron went into his ſoul. The difference of theſe is not great, as long as by the iron is underſtood, with the Chaldee, the iron chain (and to that the foregoing mention of the גֶּבֶל a gyve or chain inclines it: and if there be no mention of Joſeph's being put in chains in the ſtory, Gen. 39. yet the manner of ſecuring priſoners, being ordinary by chains, and the crime objected to Joſeph ſo great, of attempting his Miſtreſs's chaſtity, there can be no cauſe to doubt of that, eſpecially when the former part of the verſe mentions a chain expreſly) for as נַפְשׁוֹ his ſoul, frequently ſignifies no more than he, and ſo his ſoul entring into iron, is no more than that he was fettered; ſo נֶפֶשׁ oft ſignifies the ſenſitive faculty, that which is capable of pain and grief, and then the irons entring his ſoul, is no more than being painfull to him. And in this ſenſe בַּרְזֶל iron is certainly uſed, Pſal. 107. of priſoners bound in affliction וּבַרְזֶל and iron, i. e. chains or fetters. But there is another poſſible notion of the phraſe, as בַּרְזֶל iron may ſignifie a ſword or dart, other ſharp weapon made of that metal, by which in this book of Pſalms Calumny is oft poetically expreſt. So Pſal. 55. 21. their words were drawn ſwords, and Pſal. 57. 4. their teeth are ſpears and arrows, and their tongue a ſharp ſword. Thus have ſome learned men underſtood the the phraſe of Mary, Chriſt's mother, Luk. 2. 35. σοῦ τὴν ψυχὴν διελεύσεται ῥομφαία, a ſword ſhall paſs through thy ſoul, of the ſcandal and reproach of the Croſs of Chriſt, or ſome other great affliction. And the metaphor is very eaſie, and as vulgar as the phraſe of wounding ones reputation, which is conſtantly uſed of the calumniator, ſuch as Joſeph's miſtreſs certainly was, and the calumny of ſo foul a nature, that it muſt needs pierce his ſoul, grieve him more than fetters of iron could do. If this be the notion, then the former rendring muſt be reteined, the iron (that ſword of the miſtreſs's tongue) entred or pierced his ſoul. And if not this but the other be the meaning of it, iron properly taken for fetters or gyves, yet that may moſt fitly be the rendring ſtill, the ſhackles, both the pain of them, and eſpecially the reproach of them to a perſon of approved piety and chaſtity, muſt needs pierce his ſoul, and grieve him exceedingly: and ſo this may either in the literal or metaphorical ſenſe be beſt reſolved on for the rendring of it.

f. בּוֹא V. 19. His word came] Among the many uſes of בּוֹא or בָּא to come, there is one peculiar to words, or ſayings, or promiſes, which muſt therefore belong to דְּבָרוֹ his word here, viz. to come to paſs, to be performed. So Jer. 17. 15. where is the word of the Lord יָבֹא let it come to paſs, 1 Sam. 9. 6. there is a man of God, all that he ſaith בֹּא יָבֹא cometh certainly to paſs. Gen. 18. 19. לְמַעַן הָבִיא that the Lord may make come, i. e. bring to paſs, all that he hath ſpoken to him. So Ezek. 24. 24. בְּבוֹאָהּ when it ſhall come to paſs. And ſo here unqueſtionably, Joſeph was kept in priſon under that ſlander, untill his word came to paſs, i. e. till he interpreted the dreams of Pharaoh's Officers, and his prædictions came to paſs to each of them, that being the peculiar means of making him known to Pharaoh, and fetching him out of the priſon, Gen. 41. 14. And then his interpreting of Pharaoh's dream following it, which Pharaoh looked on as an evidence that the ſpirit of God was in him, v. 38. and upon which he ſaid to Joſeph, For as much as God hath ſhewed thee all this, there is none ſo diſcreet and wiſe as thou art, v. 39. this in all reaſon may be reſolved to be that which was reſpected here in the next words, אִמְרַת יְהוָה צְרָפָתְהוּ the word of the Lord (i. e. God's ſhewing him the meaning of thoſe dreams, Gen. 41. 39. God's telling him, or revealing to him the interpretation of them, τὸ λόγιον τοῦ Κυρίου, the oracle of the Lord, ſay the LXXII.) purged him (ſo צָרַף properly ſignifies to purge) as ſilver is purged in the fire, and ſo approved to be pure when it comes out thence, that which is not pure being deſtroyed there, or evidently diſcovered what metal 'tis. And in this ſenſe it moſt exactly belonged to the paſſage of Joſeph, under the calumny and ſcandal of having attempted his miſtreſſes purity, for which he was impriſoned (which by the way makes it more probable, that that calumny was meant by the iron entring his ſoul) this interpretation of Pharaoh's dream being clearly from God, who had ſent the dream, and ſo an evidence that Joſeph was a pure and pious perſon, it being not imaginable that God would vouchſafe to reveal ſuch ſecrets to an impure perſon, or to any, but a pious and truly vertuous man. And ſo this is the full importance of this verſe.

g. בְּנַפְשׁוֹ V. 22. At his pleaſure] בְּנַפְשׁוֹ in the notion of נֶפֶשׁ for will or pleaſure, is no more than at his will: The Chaldee render it with little change הֵידְ בְּנַפְשֵׁיהּ, ſo as to (i. e. as was agreeable to) his will or pleaſure; but the Syriack moſt expreſly לְרָצֹנוֹ, as he would. So the Jewiſh Arab בראיה, as he ſaw fit, ex ſententiâ ſuâ; and the Jewiſh Arab Gloſſary citing the place expounds נפש by ראי conſilium, ſententia, &c. But the LXXII. reading it ſeems בְּנַפְשׁוֹ as his ſoul, reade ὡς ἑαυτὸν, as himſelf, and ſo the Latin, ſicut ſemetipſum, without any great ſenſe in it. As for the phraſe לֶאְסֹר שָׂרָיו to, or that he might bind his Princes, the meaning of it is clear, that he might have power over the greateſt men in his Kingdom, to command or forbid the doing of any thing (ſo אָסַר alſo ſignifies) to puniſh them that doe contrary (and accordingly the LXXII. render it παιδεῦσαι, to chaſtiſe) and ſo to bind, that no body could reverſe what he did, according to the uſe of that phraſe in the inſcription of Iſis, * Ἐγὼ ἡ βασίλεια τῆς χώρας —— κἂ ὅσα ἐγὼ δήσω, οὐδεὶς δυνήσεται λῦσαι, Iſis Queen of the region —— and whatſoever I ſhall bind, no man hath power to looſe; making this power of binding to be an evidence of authority, and then power of binding the Sirs, or Lords, or Princes of Pharaoh, muſt ſignifie Joſeph's having next to the King himſelf, a ſupreme uncontrollable power. And ſo the word אָסַר generally ſignifies to oblige to obedience, and to puniſhment, to command, (ſo Dan. 6. 7, 8, 9. אֱסָרָא is rendred ῥῆγμα and διατροὸς a decree or law) and to inflict puniſhment on the diſobedient. Of this word ſee Power of the Keys, Ch. 4. §. 6, 7, 8, &c. And in the ſame ſenſe muſt the next phraſe be underſtood, וְזִקְנָיו יְחַכֵּם and he ſhall (not teach wiſedom, but, in the notion of the word now found in the Arabick dialect) judge his Senators. The word is ſo uſed, Pſal. 10. 18. ליכתם to judge the fatherleſs, and Act. 23. 3. תחאכמני judge me according to law, and frequently elſewhere in that dialect; which ſhews that this was anciently a notion of the word. And ſo ſtill that denotes the ſupereminent power that was given Joſeph, as to command the Nobles, ſo to judge the Judges, or Senators. According to what we find in the ſtory, Gen. 41. 40. Thou ſhalt be over my houſe, and according to thy word ſhall all my people be ruled, onely in the throne will I be greater than thou; and again, v. 41. ſee, I have ſet thee over all the land of Ægypt: And Pharaoh took off his ring —— v. 24. and made him ride in the ſecond chariot, v. 43. and without thee ſhall no man lift up his hand —— v. 44.

k. דִּבְרֵי אֹתוֹתָיו V. 27. His ſigns] דִּבְרֵי אֹתוֹתָיו the words of his ſigns or prodigies, דִּבְרֵי words ſeems to be ſomewhat more than a pleonaſme. God had told them what ſigns they ſhould uſe, to convince the people firſt, and then Pharaoh, of their miſſion; and ſo in each judgment God commands, and they ſhew the ſign: and God's thus telling, or ſpeaking to them, is properly דִּבְרֵי words, and the matter of theſe words expreſt by אֹתוֹתָיו ſigns or prodigies of his, viz. which as he directed, he would alſo inable them to doe among them. Accordingly not onely the LXXII. retein λόγους τῶν σημείων αὐτοῦ, the words of his ſigns, but the Chaldee alſo פִּתְגָמֵי the words of his ſigns. And v. 28. it follows, that they diſobeyed not his word, i. e. Moſes and Aaron (ſee note h.) diſobeyed not the direction of God for the ſhewing that particular miracle of the three days darkneſs upon the Ægyptians. The Jewiſh Arab ſo expreſſeth it, as may be rendred either the thing, i. e. matter, or the command of his ſigns.
